Mayor Curley's loan order for $200,000 for branch libraries brought forth "log-rolling" tactics" comment by Councilman McGrath of Dorchester. Of the Councilors 14 seek branch libraries. The library trustees declare that 13 are needed right away, and the program calls for two a year.

Although it appeared that the Council was without positive information regarding the places where the two branch libraries under the appropriation would be established, yet it is believed that East Boston will get one of them, while the Mission Hill District of Roxbury will get the other. The Roxbury location, it is said, is on city-owned land, and land speculators will have no opportunities. Concerning the East Boston section, it is said the need is greater there than any other part of the city. Councilman McGrath advised his fellow members to leave it to the trustees of the Public Library to determine where the libraries shall be established.

Order Favored

It was voted, 21 to 1, to pass the order. Councilman Peter Murray of the Jamaica Plain-Forest Hills district was the one man to stick to his guns. He insisted that Forest Hills for 35 years had been promised a branch library, but he yet to obtain it.

He favored a program of branch libraries, but said that he had been unable to learn anything about where they would be established and wanted more information for his constituents.

THE BOSTON HERALD,
TUESDAY, MARCH 4, 1930

TRUSTEES TO PLACE BRANCH LIBRARIES

City Council Votes $200,000 for Two This Year

Objection to resort to "log-rolling" to obtain branch libraries by the application of political pressure upon the trustees of the Public Library forced councilmen, other than Peter Murray of Ward 19, to surrender and vote an appropriation of $200,000 for two branch libraries to be erected this year. The selection of the districts where they will be located will be made by the library trustees.

It is certain that one branch will be established on Parker Hill, Roxbury. The committee on finance reported "ought not to pass" on the appropriation order and the council accepted the report. Otherwise, President Lynch ruled, the order would be resubmitted to the committee.

Under the rules the council must pass the order twice prior to March 14 but there must be a lapse between the readings of a loan order. No opportunity will be given the council to pass the order on a second reading and it will automatically be sent to Mayor Curley for his approval.

It was Councilman McGrath of Dorchester who admonished his colleagues to stop "log-rolling" tactics and to vote for the order on its merits. He advised allowing the trustees to determine the needs of the library. Among his supporters were Councilmen Cox, Bush, Ruby and Fitzgerald. Councilman Murray refused to concur on the ground that the Forest Hills section has awaited a branch library for 35 years and that the people are entitled to know when they can expect to have their need recognized.

Boston Transcript
TUESDAY, MARCH 4, 1930

"Log-rolling" tactics were dropped by the City Council when fourteen members fighting for the two branch libraries which will be built this year voted after an hour's debate to approve Mayor Curley's $200,000 loan order and leave the selection of sites to the library trustees.

THE BOSTON HERALD
TUESDAY, MARCH 4, 1930

NEW BRANCH LIBRARIES

Year after year, the Public Library Examining Committee,—which includes many of the foremost citizens of Boston, acts entirely independently of the Trustees, inquires into every detail of administration and has come to be an essential part of the system,—has recommended new and improved branches. Speaking for the 1928 group, of which he was a member, ex-Mayor Curley advocated a long-distance, comprehensive policy of branch building, based on a thorough survey. The Trustees made it in accordance with his ideas. The 1929 committee, headed by Judge Parmenter, again emphasized the necessity of such a program. In his recent inaugural address, the Mayor boldly advocated a twenty-year scheme of development, with an annual appropriation of $200,000 for twenty years. The City Council made the appropriation yesterday, with only a single dissenting vote, and without any pulling and hauling of playing politics. Like the Mayor, the City Council has gone at this problem as fairly and efficiently as if they were managing the affairs of a private corporation.

The need of new branches is obvious. Many sections of the city are poorly served, and the increase of branch facilities has not kept pace with the growth of the communities and the shifting of population. In various places, the children have crowded out the adults. Many of the quarters are too small, poorly equipped and so handicapped in many ways that they cannot render that service which the citizens have a right to demand. The branches at Parker Hill, Mattapan, Faneuil and Jeffries Point, to mention only four pressing cases, are entirely inadequate and unable to do the part

March 6, 1930

AMERICAN, BOSTON, MASS.

Branch Libraries

Where?

THAT fourteen members of the Boston City Council have been engaged in a polite but nevertheless earnest struggle for branch libraries should be reassuring to Mr. and Mrs. Citizen.

There ARE cities—or so we are told by sensational magazines—where aldermen fight one another for the crap game privilege, or the clearing-house pool privilege, or the handbook privilege.

OURS want nothing better than the privilege of bringing home a $100,000 branch of the Boston Public Library.

As they sing the song on School Street, it goes like this:

"We may live without poetry, music and art;

We may live without conscience and live without heart;

We may live without friends; we may live without cooks;

But no City Councillor can come back without books."

Trouble appears to be that whereas Librarian Belden had named 13 districts in which branches are needed, "Papa" Boston could not afford all of them at once.

Mayor Curley's plan is to erect TWO branch libraries annually for the next six years.

Which two THIS year?

That is what the Councillors wanted to know, especially the 14 whose districts are hungry for branch libraries.

Nor can we blame them. We can imagine few things more likely to be of help to the young man eager to be re-elected to the Council—in Boston, mind—than the right to point to a Branch Library and say, "There, see what I did!"

Still, there was the City Treasury, and there was NOT the sum needed for all of these branches at once.

The Council has solved the problem the easiest way, referring it to the Public Library Trustees, who hold THEIR places by appointment.

Boston Transcript

FRIDAY, MARCH 14, 1930

Public Library Art Treasures Not Damaged

Fire in Small Room Under Roof Checked with Relatively Small Loss

Not a particle of damage, careful inspection showed today, befell any of the books, priceless mural paintings and public art treasures in the small room.

THE KIT DECORATIONS STRIKE

ing embers, falling on the scaffolding above the ceiling of Bates Hall, would have led to serious loss. As it was, the department nipped the trouble at its source, and the only damage resulting in any of the public rooms of the library was some slight harm done by water which dripped down along the southwest-erly wall of Bates Hall.

At about eight o'clock last night, when Bates Hall was filled with scores of students and reference-readers, an attendant, entering a storage closet, smelled smoke. Prompt investigation led to discovery of the flames in the photographic room, reached by narrow iron staircases leading out of the exhibition room of the fine arts department on the third floor, and situated in a large air-space between the main roof of the building and an inner roof of metal sheathing, known as the "condensation roof," which lies just above the ceilings of the public rooms below.

When the firemen arrived, the photographic room was a mass of flames within, and the principal attack had to be made from the roof by sending streams of water through a skylight above the room. A large amount of water was used, but the overflow to floor below was reduced to comparatively small proportions, thanks to the fact that the chambers above the public floors were well equipped with wide inside gutters designed and installed for the particular purpose of draining water off in the event of fire, and carrying it safely outside of the building.

Even so, some of the Sargent paintings on the third floor and perhaps also the principal Puvion de Chavanres fresco on the second floor probably could not have escaped some damage last night had it not been for the fact that the wall on which they stand is a partition constructed of solid stone from the foundation of the library all the way up to the condensation roof. This confined the dripping water to the easterly, or Bates Hall side, of the wall, where some cleaning and repairs will now be needed, both for the marble doorway in the southwest-erly corner and the wall adjoining it. The contents of three cases of books near this corner were removed last night, while the fire was in progress, under the direction of the assistant librarian, Frank H. Chase.

The cause of the fire is believed to have been a lighted pipe or cigarette left in the photographic room either by one of the outside contractor's men who have recently been at work repairing the condensation roof, or by some employee of the library who may have entered the room. In any event, fire experts believe that the fire first began to smoulder there at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and had been gathering headway for at least three hours when discovered by an attendant.

Good discipline was observed both by the staff and the patrons of the library during all the excitement, and the director, Charles F. D. Belden, had only praise to give, when interviewed today, regarding their conduct and the competent work of the fire department.

Panic in Public Library as Blast Starts Blaze; Six Firemen Burned

1000 Are Driven Out; Two Alarms Rung In

More than 1000 persons, half of them in panic, were driven from the Boston Public Library by fire which followed an explosion in an unused photographic supply room on the third floor.

Priceless murals of John Singer Sargent and Edwin Austin Abbey in Bates Hall directly beneath the room in which the flames roared were saved from destruction by quick work of firemen and personal direction of the fight by Deputy Chief Fox.

Hundreds were saved from possible panic and injury by the calmly efficient work of the library staff under direction of Samuel Chevalier, night superintendent, which succeeded in clearing Lecture Hall of more than 500 persons and getting them to safety without their being aware of the blaze until they were beyond danger.

It was among the hundreds who had been reading in Bates Hall that panic occurred after the employees got them out of the reading rooms and started down the stairway. Then some exorable woman became hysterical and screamed. Pandemonium broke loose and the great stairway became a battleground as the hundreds fought to get out.

Fortunately, because of the width of the stairway, there was no injury to anyone and the place was cleared in very few minutes.

Six firemen were burned by bursting steam pipes during the fight, and James Kinsella, assistant superintendent of the library, was badly burned by another bursting hot water pipe. Two of the firemen were taken to City Hospital.

They are Lieut. Edward Doyle and Hoseman Flaherty of Engine 22. The other injured firemen were of the same company. They were burned in efforts to direct streams so that water would not damage the priceless murals below.

William Hickey, elevator operator at the building, carried more than 200 of the listeners at the lecture on the third floor to safety in repeated trips.

The lecture, on the Canadian Rockies, was being given by Daniel McCowan, noted lecturer, and was attended by more than 500 library officials.

STARTS WITH BLAST
Parker Kennedy, a janitor, discovered the fire after hearing the explosion. He notified the elevator operator, who in turn gave the alarm quietly to the superintendent and his aide.

The officials quickly went to the lecture hall and whispered to those in the last row, telling them to go quickly to the elevator. The listeners did as directed and were whisked downward by Hickey, who shot up at once to take down those in the second last row who had been notified meanwhile to leave the hall.

The hall had been nearly empty in this manner before Mr. McCowan, who had been aware of the blaze, but kept talking, cut short his address on the plea of being ill, and the rest went out quietly.

It was when the officers and library employees went to the big reading room to clear that in a similar manner that those leaving saw smoke and became panicky.

TWO ALARMS SOUNDED
Two alarms of the sirens were sounded and when firemen arrived the flames had burst through the roof of the above on the Blagdon st. side of the library and were lighting the whole district, in which hotels abound.

Protective companies spread rubber blankets over priceless manuscripts and rare volumes, protecting them from the water, while firemen endeavored themselves and suffered burns and discomfort to get in awkward positions from which they fought the flames without damaging the famous "Madonna," "Holy Girl" and other murals in Bates Hall.

Actual damage to the building was set at $1500 by fire officials.

(Story on Page 3)

(Daily Record Photo)

Jas. Kinsella William Hickey

was cleared in very few minutes. Six firemen were burned by bursting steam pipes during the fight, and James Kinsella, assistant superintendent of the library, and panic combined with careful fire-fighting to preserve priceless treasures made the fire which swept the Boston Public Library one of the most unusual on record. Photo shows firemen battling on Blagdon st. side.

Heroism

FRIDAY, MARCH 14, 1930

FIRE IN LIBRARY MENACES ART

Priceless art treasures and books were menaced by fire in the Boston Public Library, which forced 1200 people hastily from the building and caused injury to two firemen.

In Bates Hall, where the world-famous Holy Grail paintings are hung, water seeped through and ran down the wall opposite that holding the pictures.

When the fire was first observed by Thomas F. Brennan, an attendant, members of the service staff hastened to battle it alone until the arrival of the apparatus and others notified all those in the library to leave.

Flames shot out through the skylight above the photography room and caused the roof to crack in one or two places.

When the fire was first observed by Thomas F. Brennan, an attendant, members of the service staff hastened to battle it alone until the arrival of the apparatus and others notified all those in the library to leave.

A Side Street in Beauvais From an Etching by Samuel Chamberlain. From "Through France With a Sketchbook" by Samuel Chamberlain. (Robert M. McBride & Co.)

Of these two books, one naturally opens with special anticipation. "France: A Nation of Patriots," by Professor Carlton J. H. Hayes of Columbia University, is also interesting, although it is spun of far less subtle fiber. Subdividing his subject into such chapters as "The Government and the Bureaucracy," "The Educational System," "The Church," and so on, the author reviews France's national life. He pays all through the book special attention to the institutions which contribute to the cultivation of patriotic feelings in the French.

The volume is a little dry; it sparkles neither with great originality, nor has it great depth, but inasmuch as Professor Hayes's purpose is to inform the reader, to give him accurate and well-verified facts in books in dealing toward filling this gap by offering ample food for reflection on these topics.

France, unquestionably, is an unconquerable nation for one's self and times to be a leading nation for whom the Anglo-Saxon idea of individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent. This individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent. This individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent.

man, France, unquestionably, is an unconquerable nation for one's self and times to be a leading nation for whom the Anglo-Saxon idea of individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent. This individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent.

man, France, unquestionably, is an unconquerable nation for one's self and times to be a leading nation for whom the Anglo-Saxon idea of individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent. This individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent.

man, France, unquestionably, is an unconquerable nation for one's self and times to be a leading nation for whom the Anglo-Saxon idea of individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent. This individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent.

man, France, unquestionably, is an unconquerable nation for one's self and times to be a leading nation for whom the Anglo-Saxon idea of individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent. This individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent.

man, France, unquestionably, is an unconquerable nation for one's self and times to be a leading nation for whom the Anglo-Saxon idea of individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent. This individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent.

man, France, unquestionably, is an unconquerable nation for one's self and times to be a leading nation for whom the Anglo-Saxon idea of individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent. This individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent.

man, France, unquestionably, is an unconquerable nation for one's self and times to be a leading nation for whom the Anglo-Saxon idea of individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent. This individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent.

man, France, unquestionably, is an unconquerable nation for one's self and times to be a leading nation for whom the Anglo-Saxon idea of individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent. This individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent.

The second book under review, "France: A Nation of Patriots," by Professor Carlton J. H. Hayes of Columbia University, is also interesting, although it is spun of far less subtle fiber. Subdividing his subject into such chapters as "The Government and the Bureaucracy," "The Educational System," "The Church," and so on, the author reviews France's national life. He pays all through the book special attention to the institutions which contribute to the cultivation of patriotic feelings in the French.

The volume is a little dry; it sparkles neither with great originality, nor has it great depth, but inasmuch as Professor Hayes's purpose is to inform the reader, to give him accurate and well-verified facts in books in dealing toward filling this gap by offering ample food for reflection on these topics.

France, unquestionably, is an unconquerable nation for one's self and times to be a leading nation for whom the Anglo-Saxon idea of individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent. This individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent.

man, France, unquestionably, is an unconquerable nation for one's self and times to be a leading nation for whom the Anglo-Saxon idea of individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent. This individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent.

man, France, unquestionably, is an unconquerable nation for one's self and times to be a leading nation for whom the Anglo-Saxon idea of individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent. This individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent.

man, France, unquestionably, is an unconquerable nation for one's self and times to be a leading nation for whom the Anglo-Saxon idea of individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent. This individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent.

man, France, unquestionably, is an unconquerable nation for one's self and times to be a leading nation for whom the Anglo-Saxon idea of individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent. This individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent.

man, France, unquestionably, is an unconquerable nation for one's self and times to be a leading nation for whom the Anglo-Saxon idea of individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent. This individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent.

man, France, unquestionably, is an unconquerable nation for one's self and times to be a leading nation for whom the Anglo-Saxon idea of individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent. This individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent.

man, France, unquestionably, is an unconquerable nation for one's self and times to be a leading nation for whom the Anglo-Saxon idea of individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent. This individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent.

man, France, unquestionably, is an unconquerable nation for one's self and times to be a leading nation for whom the Anglo-Saxon idea of individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent. This individual values and of mental "objectivity" is repellent.

BOSTON TRAVELER, FRIDAY, MARCH 14, 1930

Fighting Public Library Fire

Public Library Fire
Damage Is Repaired

Most of Loss Is in Storeroom on Top Floor—Valuable Paintings Endangered, but Are Untouched
—Two Firemen Scalded

Workmen today were repairing damage done by fire in a storeroom on the top floor of the public library in Copley square.

The fire, which threatened costly paintings and murals, started in the storeroom and spread to a room used for photographic purposes. About 600 persons in the building at the time, quietly fled out when informed by attendants that there was a fire in the building.

Firemen were slightly scalded by water which turned to steam when it struck heated walls. They were Lt. Edward Doyle and Patrick Flaherty, both of Engine 22. They were treated at City Hospital and sent home.

Directly underneath the fire in the fine arts room the most valuable mural in the building, the Madonna by John Singer Sargent, hangs. Although water dripped around it, it was undamaged. Fourteen lines of hose were brought into the building but there was little water damage.

KENNEBEC JOURNAL, AUGUSTA, MAINE,
FRIDAY, MARCH 14, 1930.
Blaze in Boston
Public Library

Boston, March 13.—(AP)—The quiet of the Boston public library was disturbed by fire gongs and sirens tonight and 1600 readers and employees fled quietly out to join an already large crowd watch flames shoot up through the roof of the famous structure. The fire was more spectacular than dangerous, for it was confined to a storeroom on the top floor and was quickly extinguished with slight damage. Only a few dog-eared books of a million dollars worth of volumes were damaged by fire and water.

1200 FLEE FIRE
IN THE LIBRARY

Two Firemen Injured, Priceless Art Treasures Endangered—Throng Gathers to Watch Blaze

A fire in the Boston Public Library last night caused injuries to two firemen, forced 1200 persons to run to the street and endangered many priceless art and literary treasures.

The injured men were Lieutenant Edward Doyle and Patrick Flaherty, both of Engine 22, who were burned about the legs by live steam and bruised when a door fell on them at the entrance to the photography room, near the roof, in which the fire started, but scarcely a book was injured and many valuable paintings were unharmed. By the merest turn of chance the world-famous Holy Grail paintings escaped damage when the water, seeping through floors and ceilings, ran down the Bates Hall side of a wall, on the other side of which were the Holy Grail works of art.

A crowd of 500 was in attendance in the main lecture hall, 200 more were in Bates Hall, 100 in the issue department and several hundred more persons were scattered throughout the building when the blaze was discovered. The first intimation of a fire came when Thomas F. Brennan, an attendant in Bates Hall, smelled smoke. He reported to Parker Kennedy, janitor, and the latter sent a messenger to the lecture hall to notify Samuel Chevalier, in charge of the building.

Two Men Fight Blaze Alone

Joseph Danker, an electrician, found smoke in the Fine Arts Gallery and traced it to the photography room, which is situated almost under the eaves, at the end of a long catwalk. Danker returned for a fire extinguisher and with James Kinsella, also an electrician, started for the room. Kinsella penetrated the smoke cloud for 200 feet along the narrow platform and opened an exhaust which set the fans going at full speed. He also got a door open, which let the smoke out. With an extinguisher, Kinsella and Danker fought the blaze, which apparently was centered in a clothes closet, until they were forced out by smoke.

They just managed to reach the Fine Arts gallery when the firemen arrived. Engine 22 was first on the scene and Doyle and Flaherty reached the room with the first group. They were nearly knocked down when the door fell and the lower parts of their legs were burned by a blast of live steam. Deputy Chief Henry Fox arrived on the first alarm and immediately ordered a second alarm turned in.

Rush to Protect Books

The flames, breaking through the skylight, flared against the sky and could be seen the length of Stuart and Boylston streets. One ladder was set up against the eaves in front of the building, and two more were lifted on the Bragdon street side. Chief Sennott, upon his arrival, ordered a water tender made ready, but it was not used. Fifteen lines of hose were run into the main entrance and carried up through the delivery room and thence upstairs to the Fine Arts gallery, where the rest of the journey to the scene of the fire was made along the narrow catwalk.

The firemen attacked the blaze, members of the protective department, under the direction of Superintendent

William Downey, hastily threw rubber blankets over the books and shelves. Frank A. Chase, assistant librarian who saw the blaze as he was returning from St. Paul's Church, where he had lectured, directed the placing of rubber coverings where they would protect the most valuable sections.

In the meantime Superintendent Chase, after had quelled the word among the audience in the lecture hall, where Dan McGowan was speaking on "A Naturalist in the Canadian Rockies," in the lecture hall, when last night's fire was discovered.

DIDN'T KNOW WHY
HIS AUDIENCE QUIT

Imagine the plight of Dan McGowan when he saw a crowd of 500 Bostonians slowly walking out in the middle of his lecture in the Public Library. Mr. McGowan, with the aid of lantern slides, was giving a talk on "A Naturalist in the Canadian Rockies," in the lecture hall, when last night's fire was discovered. Superintendent Samuel Chevalier, without telling the lecturer, quietly asked the audience to leave by a rear door. Mr. McGowan, watching the audience slowly melt away, scratched his head and thought furiously. "Now, what have I said that could offend them?" he asked himself. The situation was soon explained to him.

list in the Canadian Rockies," Chevalier ordered the audience out, and they filed through a rear door, the last row going first. McGowan continued with his lecture, although he did not know what was wrong, and the lights were turned on by Chevalier.

The blaze, which was in one of the most vulnerable parts of the huge building, was easy to handle once the firemen were able to reach it, and was confined to that room and a smaller dark room adjoining. Although the flames shot out through the skylight and did not break through the roof, the heat caused the roof to crack in one or two places.

It was some time after the fire was out before the water started to rain on the lower floors. All the books in the Fine Arts section were adequately protected with rubber spreads and remained undamaged. Directly under the skylight is Bates Hall, a reading room, and the issue department, which bears the Edwin Austin Abbey paintings of the Holy Grail.

As the water reached a point above these rooms, it was turned aside by a curved retaining wall, which is back of the Holy Grail works, and passed down the Bates Hall side of the wall. At this point, it was discovered that the water was working into the shelves, which held a library of books on heraldry. Assistant Librarian Chase saw the situation, and put a crew of attendants to work removing the books. Only about 50 of the books were wet.

The famous Sargent murals, depicting the History of Religion, are in another part of the building, and were not in danger. Other noteworthy art and literary collections were also safe. The fire was discovered about 8:30 o'clock, the peak of the night attendance at the library. Officials said that if the fire had not been detected until after 10 o'clock, closing hour, there is no way of figuring what the damage might have been. The employees are credited with saving the situation with their remarkable handling of an emergency.

Boston Daily Globe

FRIDAY, MARCH 14, 1930

LIBRARY FLAMES
IMPERIL RARE ART

Paintings Are Endangered in Copley Square Fire

1200 Quietly Leave Building as Panic Is Averted

Priceless paintings by John Singer Sargent and Edwin Austin Abbey, proudest possessions in the Boston Public Library, were endangered by fire last night, when flames started in a small room directly above the paintings, causing the hurried exit of more than 1200 people, including 150 employees, several hundred seated in the various library rooms and nearly 500 in the lecture hall.

That a panic did not result was due to the rare presence of mind of employees, who quietly spread the word of the fire and succeeded in having everybody on their way out of the big building in Copley Sq before fire apparatus arrived.

The fire necessitated the sounding of two alarms, and for a while proved spectacular as flames broke through the skylight at the corner end of the roof at Copley sq and Bragdon st.

Thousands of people thronged Copley sq to watch the firemen fight the blaze and received added thrills as two firemen, burned by steam, were hurried to the City Hospital in Fire Department cars.

The injured firemen were Lieut Edward Doyle and engineman Patrick Flaherty, both of Engine 22, Warren st, the first piece of apparatus to arrive on the scene. They were scalded when a hot-water pipe broke in the room where the fire started, causing painful burns.

The hero of the fire, James Kinsella, an electrician employed in the library, was also affected by the scalding water after battling the blaze with fire extinguishers until the firemen arrived.

Despite the seriousness of the fire and its spectacular features, the damage is not expected to exceed $1500, according to the estimate of Deputy Chief Downey, in charge of the fire-fighting inside the building.

However, there was considerable fear for some time that the paintings of Sargent and Abbey would be destroyed by water, if not by flames, and it was considered miraculous that they were not touched. Thousands of valuable books in Bates Hall, Fine Arts Library and the other rooms were also threatened by fire, smoke and water, but there was hardly a book damaged.

The fire was discovered about 8:30 o'clock, the peak of the night attendance at the library. Officials said that if the fire had not been detected until after 10 o'clock, closing hour, there is no way of figuring what the damage might have been. The employees are credited with saving the situation with their remarkable handling of an emergency.

Detects Smoke

Thomas Frank Brennan, who was in charge of Bates Hall, directly beneath the room where the fire started, detected the odor of smoke as he was working in the catalogue room. Without alarming anyone, he called Parker Kennedy, who was in charge of the elevator on the second floor, and told him of his suspicions.

Kennedy climbed up the winding iron stairs to the roof of the building and saw smoke issuing from an unused photographer's room, a small place of nine yards by four yards. He immediately returned and told Brennan that his suspicions were correct and they began to warn everyone in the building of the situation.

Kennedy first sounded the fire alarm and then sent an attendant over to the lecture hall, while Brennan informed the 200 or more men and women in Bates Hall that they would have to cut short their stay at the library and depart quietly and quickly. Although many sensed the situation, there was no panic and all rose quietly and started for the stairs, not bothering with the elevator.

In the meantime the messenger reached the lecture hall on the other end of the big building and informed Samuel Chevalier, night man in charge of the building, that a fire was in progress in the roof of the building.

In the lecture hall was a capacity gathering of 500 men and women listening to a talk by Dan McGowan on "A Naturalist in the Canadian Rockies." His lecture was illustrated and the room was in darkness at the time. Instead of informing McGowan to cut short his lecture, Chevalier ordered the attendants to put on the lights gradually, keep the slides working and usher out the audience from the rear seats.

Keeps Lecturing

McGowan soon became aware that an unusual situation had arisen and kept lecturing until only a few rows remained filled. He then stopped and the others left the hall without undue excitement and Chevalier and other employees hurried to the scene of the fire to give what assistance they could. Up in the fine arts section of the library, known as the Special Library, where William Hickey was in charge, there were about 100 men and women seated about the tables. Hickey was told of the fire by Kennedy and immediately informed everyone that they must leave.

He then took charge of the elevator and took all to the street floor and had the place cleared in time to carry arriving firemen up to the top of the building again.

Previously, James Kinsella, the electrician, was notified of the blaze and he rushed to the source. He climbed up the winding stairs and went through a small passageway for about 200 feet in order to fix the exhaust pipes to free the air for firemen. He then grabbed fire extinguishers until firemen arrived.

THEY STUCK TO THEIR POSTS
DURING PUBLIC LIBRARY FIRE

PUBLIC LIBRARY EMPLOYEES WHO DID VALIANT WORK IN FIRE

Left to Right—James Kinsella, electrician, who fought the fire until firemen arrived; William Hickey, who handled elevator, and Joseph Danker, also electrician.

A hot-water pipe burst as the first firemen arrived and Doyle and Flaherty were scalded. Kinsella was on his way down the stairs at the time and the hot water slightly scalded his shoulder and back but he did not require medical treatment.

The firemen placed one ladder truck against the Copley-sq side of the building and two on the Bragdon-st side, and had a water tower in readiness for use. Nearly 12 heavy ladders were taken in through the front door by firemen but all were needed because of the quick work of the early firemen in handling the blaze.

The second alarm was sounded when flames broke through the skylight, indicating that flames had eaten through the roof.

Cover Bookcases

The firemen from the Protective Department carried rubber coverings to Bates Hall and had each bookcase and desk covered before the fire was extinguished. After the water began dripping through it was discovered that it was touching the case of books on heraldry and a hurry call from Frank C. Chase, assistant librarian, brought a dozen attendants to remove 50 or 60 books to safer quarters.

The valuable paintings are located just below the spot where the fire was in progress. In Sargent Hall are his murals on the history of religion, while in the delivery department are Abbey's paintings on the Holy Grail.

The water dripped down from the floor above to Bates Hall on the other side of the wall holding the paintings. A retaining wall, specially constructed, makes the two rooms absolutely separate, however, and the water did not go through to the paintings, although employees and firemen were fearful that a crack in the wall might affect the paintings.

Other employees who assisted in handling the situation at the time on the discovery of the fire were Joseph Danker, who was in the lecture hall and rushed to the aid of Kinsella; Thomas Manning and Harry Matthews, assistants in the Fine Arts Library, beneath the room where the blaze started; Patrick Murphy, police officer on duty at the lecture hall, and Robert F. Dixon, assistant to Mr. Brennan in Bates Hall, who supervised the departure of 200 persons from that section.

The exact cause of the fire was not determined, although employees said that it seemed to have started among clothes of workmen left in the unused photographer's room.

64
March 14, 1930

The Boston Post 1200 FLEE BRISK FIRE AT LIBRARY

Two Firemen Injured
at Blaze—Loss
Only $1500

A fire in the Boston Public Library last night caused injuries to two firemen, forced 1200 persons to run to the street and endangered many priceless art and literary treasures.

The injured men were Lieutenant Edward Doyle and Patrick Flaherty, both of Engine 22, who were burned about the legs by live steam and bruised when a door fell on them at the entrance to the photography room, near the roof, in which the fire started.

Although the actual damage was not more than $1500, the blaze was spectacular because of its flare against the sky, and its threat to the treasures. It attracted thousands of people to Copley square. Two alarms were sounded.

Most of the damage was caused by water, which ran down through the fine arts gallery and into Bates Hall, but scarcely a book was injured and many valuable paintings were unharmed. By the merest turn of chance the world-famous Holy Grail paintings escaped damage when the water, seeping through floors and ceilings, ran down the Bates Hall side of a wall, on the other side of which were the Holy Grail works of art.

A crowd of 500 was in attendance in the main lecture hall, 200 more were in Bates Hall, 100 in the issue department and several hundred more persons were scattered throughout the building when the blaze was discovered. The first alarm of a fire came when Thomas F. Brennan, an attendant in Bates Hall, smelled smoke. He reported to Parker Kennedy, janitor, and the latter sent a messenger to the lecture hall to notify Samuel Chevalier, in charge of the building.

Joseph Danker, an electrician, found smoke in the Fine Arts Gallery and traced it to the photography room, which is situated almost under the eaves, at the end of a long "walkway." Danker returned for a fire extinguisher and with James Kinsella, also an electrician, started for the room. Kinsella penetrated the smoke cloud for 200 feet along the narrow passageway and opened an exhaust which set the fans going at full speed. He also got a door open, which let the smoke out. With an extinguisher, Kinsella and Danker fought the blaze, which apparently was centered in a clothes closet, until they were forced out by smoke.

They just managed to reach the Fine Arts Gallery when the firemen arrived. Engine 22 was first on the scene and Doyle and Flaherty reached the room with the first group. They were nearly knocked down when the door fell and the lower parts of their legs were burned by a blast of live steam. Deputy Chief Henry Fox arrived on the first alarm and immediately ordered a second alarm turned in.

The flames, breaking through the skylight, flared against the sky and could be seen the length of Stuart and Boylston streets. One ladder was set up against the eaves in front of the building, and two more were lifted on the Bragdon street side. Chief Senholt, upon his arrival, ordered a water tower made ready, but it was not used.

Fifteen lines of hose were run into the main entrance and carried up through the delivery room and thence upstairs to the Fine Arts gallery, where the rest of the journey to the scene of the fire was made along the narrow catwalk.

While firemen attacked the blaze, members of the protective department, under the direction of Superintendent William Downey, hastily threw rubber blankets over the books and shelves. Frank A. Chase, assistant librarian, who saw the blaze as he was returning from St. Paul's Church, where he had lectured, directed the placing of rubber coverings where they would protect the most valuable sections.

THE BOSTON HERALD FRIDAY, MARCH 14, 1930

FIRE THREATENS PUBLIC LIBRARY; 600 FLEE HALLS

Valuable Paintings Are Slightly Damaged by Smoke and Water

BLAZE DISCOVERED
IN STORE ROOM

Fireman Hurt—Loss Estimated at $2000—Crowd Attracted to Scene

Nearly 600 persons in the reading rooms and lecture halls of the Public Library in Copley square fled quietly out of the building early last evening when fire, which threatened many valuable paintings and murals, started in a store room on the top floor.

Two alarms were ordered by Assistant Chief Henry Fox who, fearing serious damage would be done to paintings and to books, sent in the extra alarm before he entered the building to find out the extent of the blaze. At that time smoke was curling from the third floor windows and the hundreds of men and women were filing out.

Two firemen were slightly scalded during the height of the fire when water, almost turned into steam from the heat, fell on their necks and faces. They were Lt. Edward Doyle and Patrick Flaherty, both of engine 22. At the City Hospital they were treated and sent home. Damage was estimated at $2000.

Before the firemen could bring their lines of hose up the marble stairs and over ladders put up on the Bragdon street side of the structure, the flames broke through the roof. Copley square was virtually choked with people who poured from the hotels and who saw the flames from along Boylston street and Huntington avenue. Many were in the windows of the Copley-Plaza and the Hotel Lenox.

At no time was there the slightest evidence of panic. In a room on the second floor, more than 150 persons were attending a lecture by Daniel McCowan, naturalist. Those in the back of the room were told to leave by William Hickey, the elevator operator.

FIGHTING PUBLIC LIBRARY FIRE

Parker Kennedy, the janitor on the second floor, went in through a side door and spread the word nearly at the same time as Hickey. Soon all knew it, and hats and coats were picked up and put on and the march out started. No attempt was made to fool any one in the building. All were told there was fire in the building, and that it would be best to get out before the arrival of the firemen.

The blaze was discovered by Thomas H. Brennan, who was in charge of the reading room in Bates hall on the second floor. He went to the back of the hall, to a room known as the catalogue room, and was just about to leave when he smelled smoke. He noticed smoke seeping through the partitions at the ceiling. He ran into the corridor and met Kennedy, and they raced up the stairs to the top floor. The store room at the rear, used as a photographing room, was a mass of flames.

Kennedy ran back to the second floor, sounded the alarm and then went to the side door of the lecture hall. Brennan returned to his reading room and notified his charges, most of them students from Boston University and near-by schools.

Hickey, the elevator operator, made dozens of trips with his lift, carrying the persons out and also bringing firemen to the top of the building with blankets to cover books and paintings. An attempt to put out the fire before arrival of firemen was made by James Kinsella, the electrician. He battled the smoke and heat trying to get into the room with an extinguisher, but without success. He helped ventilate the building for firemen, however, by crawling to the switch controlling the electric blower.

Although 14 lines of hose were brought into the building and water passed through most of them, there was but little water damage. Directly underneath the fire, on the second floor in the fine arts room, hangs the most valuable mural in the building, that of the Madonna, by John Singer Sargent. Although the heat was severe and water dripped around it, officials at the library say there is no damage done to it.

Other portraits in the fine arts room which were for a time threatened with irreparable damage included 10 by Edwin Osborne Abbey. They were the famous works, "The Quest of the Holy Grail."

Boston Transcript SATURDAY, MARCH 15, 1930

Special Mercies of the Library Fire

With costly and extremely handsome improvements on the third floor of the Boston Public Library just now at the verge of completion, a peculiarly ironic and mocking turn of events it would have been surely if the library fire on Thursday evening had done serious damage, offsetting the building's new beauties and merits by the destruction of some of its older, more familiar good features and cherished treasures. Even as it was, serious harm was averted by the narrowest of margins. Had discovery of the fire been delayed for five more minutes, the floor of the gutted photographic room above the ceiling of Bates Hall would have burst into a sheet of flame, for the wooden flooring of this room had just begun to burn through when the firemen reached it. If the fire had been allowed even a few minutes more to get this floor well in its grip, the embers falling from it upon the scaffolding and the great arched ceiling above Bates Hall would have led, it seems certain, to quite a widespread conflagration there, with much harm resulting to the noble reading room beneath.

But a kindly fate—aided by a watchful staff, the skill of Fire Chief Fox, and a competent Protective Department—prevented such disaster. The slight harm done, nearly all in under-floor chambers never visited by the public, happily makes no offset against the excellent new improvements recently achieved on the third main floor. Within a month the reconstruction of the old music library room for use as a treasure room will have been completed. When it is opened, Bostonians will have immeasurably better opportunity to view and to study the library's rich store of special treasures than it has ever had before. Meanwhile, the transfer of the music collection to the old Barton-Ticknor room, extensively reconstructed and newly equipped, is already finished.

Not only in this room, but throughout the adjoining rooms of the North Gallery, the special collections of the Boston Public Library are now housed under conditions one hundred per cent more attractive, more serviceable and more fitting than at any time in the past. It is much to be hoped that the money can be found to reconstruct the Fine Arts rooms in the same way and to the same standard. When this is attained, the crowning floor of the library will be at last a goodly crown, and not, as a large part of it has been heretofore, an inadequate and somewhat shabby top-piece to the two floors below which comprise some of the most beautiful halls and rooms which exist in all of the United States.

Boston Transcript SATURDAY, MARCH 15, 1930

Special Mercies of the Library Fire

With costly and extremely handsome improvements on the third floor of the Boston Public Library just now at the verge of completion, a peculiarly ironic and mocking turn of events it would have been surely if the library fire on Thursday evening had done serious damage, offsetting the building's new beauties and merits by the destruction of some of its older, more familiar good features and cherished treasures. Even as it was, serious harm was averted by the narrowest of margins. Had discovery of the fire been delayed for five more minutes, the floor of the gutted photographic room above the ceiling of Bates Hall would have burst into a sheet of flame, for the wooden flooring of this room had just begun to burn through when the firemen reached it. If the fire had been allowed even a few minutes more to get this floor well in its grip, the embers falling from it upon the scaffolding and the great arched ceiling above Bates Hall would have led, it seems certain, to quite a widespread conflagration there, with much harm resulting to the noble reading room beneath.

But a kindly fate—aided by a watchful staff, the skill of Fire Chief Fox, and a competent Protective Department—prevented such disaster. The slight harm done, nearly all in under-floor chambers never visited by the public, happily makes no offset against the excellent new improvements recently achieved on the third main floor. Within a month the reconstruction of the old music library room for use as a treasure room will have been completed. When it is opened, Bostonians will have immeasurably better opportunity to view and to study the library's rich store of special treasures than it has ever had before. Meanwhile, the transfer of the music collection to the old Barton-Ticknor room, extensively reconstructed and newly equipped, is already finished.

Not only in this room, but throughout the adjoining rooms of the North Gallery, the special collections of the Boston Public Library are now housed under conditions one hundred per cent more attractive, more serviceable and more fitting than at any time in the past. It is much to be hoped that the money can be found to reconstruct the Fine Arts rooms in the same way and to the same standard. When this is attained, the crowning floor of the library will be at last a goodly crown, and not, as a large part of it has been heretofore, an inadequate and somewhat shabby top-piece to the two floors below which comprise some of the most beautiful halls and rooms which exist in all of the United States.

Boston Transcript MONDAY, MARCH 17, 1930

Chamber Music For the People Mrs. Coolidge at the Library Experiments for Better And for Worse

FOR some years past it has been the custom of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge to provide, free of cost, various series of concerts of music for string quartet, at the lecture room of the Boston Public Library. The schemes for the various seasons have been many, always interesting and well thought out, and less eminent, but has been virtually impossible to secure admission to the hall without going at least a half hour before the appointed time.

With the success of these concerts in mind, as well as in part to attempt to lessen the congestion—and the disappointment—attend every concert, and in part to extend the influence of the good work, it has been planned this year to give each concert three times instead of only once. One of these was planned for the central library, the other two at branches. Report at the Central Library last evening had it that the concert of Saturday evening at the South End, was in fact reasonably well attended. But the same report also had it that the Sunday afternoon concert projected for South Boston drew so small a group that it could not be given. Last night, when the reviewer arrived at the iron gates very shortly after seven, he found them closed, with a large crowd standing before them and many people hurrying anxiously from many directions hoping to avoid being turned away. Among those who crowded the Central Library there must surely be some who could as well go to one of the other places, where they could be assured of hearing the music.

The program planned for this year is a historical sequence of string quartet music from Haydn to Debussy and Hindemith. The London String Quartet is to play all four of the programs. Not for some years have we Americans heard two of the remembered four remain. The first violinist, Mr. James Levy, has been replaced by Mr. John Pennington; the viola, Mr. H. Waldo Warner, by Mr. Philip Sainton. The second violinist,

Mr. Thomas Petre, and the cellist, Mr. C. Warwick Evans, remain. One cannot feel that this change has in any wise diminished the achievements of the quartet. Mr. Pennington is a violinist of sensibility and of fine, discriminating musicianship; he is a leader able to project his own keen sense of musical values into the foursome, to fuse his players into an ensemble. It is one thing to achieve such ensemble within a limited range of effect; it is another thing to achieve it when the range of that effect runs the whole gamut of emotions possible for four frail shells of wood spanned with string of wire or "gut." The new Londoners achieve the latter, finer course. One can especially enliven over this great variety of effect when one remembers that the program was not one which would seem to invite such variety. More than one evening of dull quartet playing has been excused by the plea that the players were playing Haydn, Mozart, or Beethoven, a trio remarkable for its similarity rather than divergence of style. Historical course inevitably brings three such quartets together. One cert—that so fine a quartet as that of the Londoners should be compelled to play within so confined a stylistic range. One heard nothing of such regrets after-

The quartets played were Haydn in B-flat major, Op. 64, No. 5; Mozart in D minor, K. 421; Beethoven in G major, Op. 18, No. 2. If historical exposition is the aim, the Londoners are an ideal quartet for the purpose. There was no mistaking the similarity of style in the three quartets. There also was no lumping them together as if they had been written by a single composer; the naive Haydn, the polished and more intense Mozart, the cub Beethoven, proclaimed of larger things, all stood revealed, and how clearly revealed, in this evening's playing. But there were those present, beyond a doubt, more for the joy and pleasure of the evening than for historical and stylistic comparisons. They too had their reward in equal degree with the more studiously inclined. They found it in the transparent, shimmering tones of the four players, in their buoyancy and lightness, in the darkening quality which now and then a deeply emotional melody threw into the ensemble, in the sensibleness of nuance which characterized every phrase and every period, in the flexibility which gave life and reality to every turn of melody or rhythm, in the persuasive just-rightness of every note that was played. Small wonder that these listeners were reluctant to leave when the last note of Beethoven had sounded.

A. H. M.

Boston Transcript March 19, 1930

Two timely and serviceable brochures come from the Music Room of the Public Library where they may be had for the asking. One prepares the way for the Brahms Festival, printing the five programs and reference-lists of books and critical articles. In the Library about Brahms in general and about the particular pieces to be heard. Scores and phonographic recordings are also included. The whole makes eleven pages of thorough compilation easy to consult. Last Thursday at the Library Mr. Wallace Woodworth of Harvard and Radcliffe lectured on the choral pieces announced for the festival. Tomorrow afternoon at 5.15, Mr. Appel of the Brown Music Library will discuss the symphonies, concertos and other instrumental pieces on the programs.

The other brochure traverses the series of concerts to illustrate the course of chamber music, now in progress at the Library. A general introduction begins it. Then follow program-notes for each of the four concerts, ranging over Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, Schumann, Brahms, Chalkovsky, Debussy, Hindemith. Reference-lists of books, critical articles, scores and recordings to be found in the Library fill seven more pages. Again the work praises the compiler.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY, MARCH 15, 1930

Sir Archibald Flower to Lecture at Public Library

On Monday, at 4 P. M., in the Boston Public Library an illustrated lecture on "Stratford and the Shakespeare Players," will be delivered by Sir Archibald Flower, chairman of the board of governors of the Shakespeare Memorial Theatre of Stratford-upon-Avon, England. The lecture announced to be given in the library by William Trufant Foster on Monday, March 23 has been postponed to Sunday, March 30. The talk scheduled to be given by B. F. Lison on March 30 has been moved forward to take the place of Mr. Foster's lecture.

Free Lecture Next Monday at the Public Library

A free lecture on "Dorothy Quincy and John Hancock," will be given at the Boston Public Library next Monday evening at eight o'clock by Rev. Carroll Perry. It is sponsored by the Massachusetts Society of the Colonial Dames of America.

Boston Transcript

FRIDAY, MARCH 21, 1930

Commends Firemen's Work at Library Fire

Charles Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, has commended the work of the fire department for the masterful handling of the fire on the upper floor of the library building a week ago. The letter from Mr. Belden was incorporated in a general order by Fire Commissioner Edward F. McLaughlin, which was read in every firehouse at roll call last night and this morning. The letter follows:

"Permit me to express the warm appreciation of the trustees of the Boston Public Library and of myself as director for the intelligent work of the department on the occasion of the fire in the library last Thursday night. The arrival of the machines was very speedy and the men in charge showed admirable judgment and care in their handling of the situation. They took great pains not to damage the building in any way, by their hose or other material they used the minimum amount of water necessary to extinguish the fire and they were most patient and courteous at every stage of the affair. I do not see how their work could have been handled better, and I hope you will transmit to them the thanks of the library for their efficient work."

Since South Boston refused an audience to the chamber-concert of the London String Quartet, announced last Sunday afternoon at the branch of the Public Library, the series has been transferred to the Branch Library at Roslindale. There the Londoners will be heard at 8.30 next Sunday, again on Sundays, April 6 and 13. On the preceding Saturday evenings, they will also play at the South End Branch. For the third series, on Sunday evenings at the Central Library, hundreds, literally, are turned away, because all the seats are taken long before the hour of beginning. At Roslindale or at the South End there is no such crowd. There also the same pieces are played and admission is free.

THE BOSTON HERALD

SATURDAY, MARCH 22, 1930

OUR PUBLIC LIBRARY GOD

"The Autobiography of God," by Ernest R. Tristram (Charles Scribner's Sons), is not a satire or a work of irreverence. Quite the contrary. True, it is unconventional, challenging, stimulating and altogether disturbing to some well established ideas. For example, this passage, which has a special Boston interest: "Those artists who have presented me under the appearance of an old man have done a grave injustice to the radiant and immortal spirit of reality. It is really curious how medieval ideas still cling. There is nothing more strange in modern art than that fresco in the Boston Public Library, where the painter, Mr. John S. Sargent, has attempted to portray me in living colors as an aged man of ineffable dignity seated upon a huge throne. He has made my appearance gloomy and forbidding, a typical medieval Jehovah."

Herald, 23 March 30

LONDON STRING QUARTET

It is estimated that over 700 persons were turned away at the concert given by the London String Quartet in the lecture hall of the Boston Public Library last Sunday evening. Three more concerts will be given by this organization, which has been brought to this country for the pleasure of American music lovers by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge. In order that these concerts may be accessible to a larger number of persons, the program will be repeated in the auditoriums connected with the Roslindale branch library, Washington and Ashland streets (take Roslindale or West Roxbury car from Forest Hills station) and the South End branch, at Shawmut avenue and West Brookline street (near Northampton street station). The Roslindale series will be given at 8:30 on Sunday afternoons, March 23, April 6 and April 13; the South End series at 8 o'clock on Saturday evenings, March 22, April 5 and April 12.

APR 5 - 1930

BUSINESS MEN'S LIBRARY TO BE READY FOR PUBLIC IN MAY

ROOM ON TOP FLOOR OF EDWARD KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL LIBRARY

Artisans are now putting the finishing touches on the three chambers of the Edward Kirstein Memorial Library, in Court sq. and the hope is that the structure will be ready for dedication about May 1.

With the primary idea of providing a library for business men, handy to the downtown district, containing a comprehensive collection of literature, facts, figures and other data pertaining to commercial and industrial pursuits, Vice Pres. Louis E. Kirstein of the William Filene's Sons Company gave the $125,000 for building and equipping the library. It is named in honor of his father, identified in life with the optical business.

The businessmen's branch of the Central Public Library, which has slowly been built up through the years, will be removed to this new downtown home.

Mrs. Mary Watkins Dietrichson, now in charge of the businessmen's branch at Copley sq. headquarters, will take charge of the Kirstein branch. The library trustees, of which Mr. Kirstein, the donor, has been a member since 1919, will continue to administer this branch and it will be budgeted with Boston taxpayers' funds. The structure stands on city-owned land, the former site of Station 2.

The building, which is in general character a duplication of Boston's first Public Library in Arch st., designed by Bulfinch, contains three spacious chambers.

In the first-floor chamber will be the reference library. This bureau will have telephone service by which brevities about commerce or industry can be transmitted, but of course, the bulk of the service will be furnished to those who come in person.

On the second floor will be the reading room. Here one may at leisure and in quiet environment consult various authoritative volumes on all lines of business.

The collection numbers more than 3000 volumes. This library will be equipped to answer almost any imaginable kind of question about business or industry.

There will be available American city and trade directories, cable codes, maps, atlases, investment services, business magazines, Government reports and other ready references.

The standard volumes in every department of business will be available for consultation in the upstairs reading room, and the whole will be organized so as to be available with a minimum of delay.

But the general public, apart from the strictly business world, will not be neglected in this new downtown plant. The large chamber on the third floor will be given over to the general public and conducted as a regular branch library. In it, however, there will be no children's books.

SCIENCE MONITOR, BOS

London String Quartet

Last night, in the Boston Public Library, the London String Quartet gave its third concert in the present series, with William Primrose replacing Mr. Saindon as viola player. The program comprised quartets of Brahms in C minor, Op. 51, No. 1; Schubert in D minor and Schumann in A major, Op. 41, No. 3.

Playing again to a capacity audience, this group of artists again won the warmest sort of welcome. Through an unforeseen circumstance it became necessary for them to seek the first climax of their program in the Brahms, thus making, as it were, an anti-climax of Schubert and Schumann. That the performance of the last two numbers in no wise fell short of the pace set by the Brahms, speaks well for the virtuosity of the performers, for of course, the gigantic

Brahms quartet is an extraordinary blending of the elemental with the refined. Although the first movement carries no large appeal, musically, the second movement cannot fail to convey a direct message, especially as interpreted last night. With the finest sort of feeling for melodic line, the quartet played this Romance in a manner which obviously delighted the audience. So also, did they perform the Allegretto, with its curious little chromatic downward sweep, finishing the quartet with a thoroughly rugged, almost savage performance of the sweeping Finale.

In the Schubert this quartet swung into the opening measures with a touch both sure and sympathetic. The Andante con variazioni was colorful and unhackneyed, while the Presto was played with unusual vitality. A superb performance, followed by an equally excellent performance of the Schumann quartet. G. M. S.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, APRIL 7, 1930

As the Coolidge Plan Continues

THIS week-end the chronicler who records the progress of Mrs. Coolidge's experiment with chamber music in popular centers betook himself both to the South End Branch Library at the corner Shawmut avenue and West Brookline street, and for a part of the program, to the Roslindale Branch at the corner of Washington and Ashland streets on Sunday afternoon. Saturday evening he found a group of listeners much the same as two weeks ago, except that there were many more of them. He recognized faces seen there at the earlier concert. Again he heard them discussing the music—a group immediately in front of him, Fingal's Cave, and Schumann, and the supposedly difficult style of Brahms; immediately to the rear, a lively argument about some of Beethoven's overtures. It is obvious at least, that not all the wisdom about and love for music resides in the habitues of our established concert halls. For on two Saturday evenings, now, one has found respect for and intelligence about the playing of the London String Quartet, and what is more important, for the music it played. One saw at a glance on Saturday evening also, that the audience had increased materially in size. An attendant gave information that by actual count the number of those present had almost doubled. Sunday afternoon three movements of Schumann's quartet sufficed to take one's bearings at the Roslindale Branch. Again one found a pleasant and roomy hall, somewhat smaller than the hall at the South End Branch. Again one found an attentive and interested company. Again one learned from the attendant that there were present almost twice as many as at the previous concert. All of these statistical matters give weight to remarks heard on Saturday evening, that there had not been sufficient publicity given to the concerts at these branches, but with more thorough-going advance notice these halls might easily have been filled. (This from a chronicler at a concert giving who chose Saturday evening to hear this particular program.) If this contention be true, possibly even City Point deserves another chance.

The observer was further interested to find at the Sunday afternoon concert at least one listener apparently not a Symphony-goer who had been present Saturday evening at the South End Branch. This leads to the reflection that the repetitiousness of these concerts give excellent opportunity for listeners to become more than casually acquainted with the music. For each one so inclined there is at least the potential possibility of hearing the program three times! What an opportunity!

To return to one's latest experience. The hall at Roslindale is exceedingly resonant. Without a doubt, sometimes the four slight strings produced a sound of a sort which is not to be compared with that of a full string orchestra in a normal hall. The various incidents and noises of performance which usually do not penetrate even to the first row of seats, were almost as evident near the back of the hall as on the platform itself. More, the players did not temper their playing to the wind. As lustily they attacked their strings as ardently bowed upon them as though the hall had been heavily draped and carpeted. I Schumann has ever had to answer to the charge of being orchestral in his quartet, yesterday was the time.

The course which Mrs. Coolidge through the London String Quartet and the Boston Public Library is giving, is historical in plan. At previous concerts Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven have been heard, Saturday and Sunday quartets of Schubert, Schumann, Brahms were played. Again the London Four gave only that in Roslindale they showed more valor than discretion gives evidence of the possession of all the arts of quartet playing. They are sensitive to qualities of balance and proportion, they choose a pace which always seems the best possible; they allow their instruments to sing lyrically; they distinguish between the styles of their several composers. Excellent in detail they build each movement and each quartet with a view to the whole rather than to its several parts, and hearers, no matter what the music in hand, small wonder that there was a doubling, for each concert is best publicity for the one to follow. But the concert of the next week-end concludes the series. A. H. M.

THE BOSTON HERALD

TUESDAY, APRIL 8, 1930

NEGRO ARTISTS SHOW ABILITY

Paintings and Sculptures Of Black Race Exhibited At Public Library

WORK REFLECTS MODERN INFLUENCE

By F. W. COBURN

Paintings and sculptures by Negro artists, circulated among American art museums and galleries by co-operation of the Harmon Foundation, New York, and the Commission of Race Relations of the Federal Council of Churches, were hung yesterday at the Boston Public Library, in the fine arts room. It is the third exhibition of its kind to be routed through the United States; the second to be shown in Boston. It will be here a fortnight.

This might be called "Negro Art Week in Boston," the current exhibitions of the town including the continuing shows of colored dancers of Harlem by Stella Bloch (Mrs. Ananda Coomaraswamy) at Doll & Richards and of Negro portrait heads by Louise Winsor Brooks at the Allied Arts Center. Likewise has been opened at Grace Horne's gallery a collection of pastels of Sumatra by Virginia Lee Welch—little pictures from an island where negroid and Malay are intermingled.

Only a few good examples in some convenient gallery of ancient Negro sculpture are needed to give Boston a convincing demonstration of the artistic capacities of black folk. This lack is important. The very wonderful carvings from Senegal and its hinterland which have aroused fervent enthusiasm in Paris these past 20 years seem hardly to be known as yet to New England collectors and museum directors. Yet without them, without fine specimens of the racial art which Christianity and the slave trade and New England rum killed utterly, correct assessment of the Negro's natural place in artistic culture is difficult if not impossible.

NEGROES LEARN TO PAINT
The Negro art show at the Public

Library merely explains to the initiated that a few young Americans of Negro blood are learning to paint after the fashion of this time. Except for the contributions of two local artists, hereinafter to be specifically mentioned, the exhibition looks much like any modernistic collection that might come hither from New York. In this respect it presumably represents the taste and choice of the jury, composed of Meta Warrick Fuller, Negro sculptor, George Hellman, Karl Ilava, George Luks and Victor Perard.

Of the Boston Negro colony are Celestine Johnson, pupil and prize winner in the Boston University School of Art, who has at the library her sober and discreet portrait of Virginia Tucker, one of the colored players of the Allied Arts dramatic group, and Lois M. Jones, presumably a museum school alumna, for she shows a charcoal portrait of the popular model "Andy."

There is also expected, though it had not arrived yesterday, a large sculpture by a New England Negro girl who has been winning honors abroad: Elizabeth Prophet, a former pupil of the Rhode Island School of Design, Providence, who has studied two years in Paris and of whom great things are expected.

Among the modernist offerings from New York may be noted Henry B. Jones' "Caves of the Trolls," these being idealized and stylized New York skyscrapers; a group of simple and smoothly rendered decorative paintings by Mary Lee Tate; the pretty and coquettish "Girl in Pink," by Henry Stubbs; "Unloading Ice," by A. R. Freeman, who paints much in the manner of the older French impressionists, and applies on a table of distorted perspective the fruits painted after the fashion of Cezanne formula. It is an exhibition for gallery-goers not to miss even though, as before said, it would be more exciting if with it could be shown some of the antique Negro art which Dr. Du Bois describes graphically in his cameo-like tales on Africa.

One of the effective modernist sculptures is "Anderson," by Sargent C. Johnson.

Named as sponsors for the Negro exhibition are: Charles F. D. Belden, Frank W. Benson, the Rev. Alfred V. Bliss, Charles K. Bolton, Miss Louise Winstor Brooks, Miss Frances G. Currier, Mrs. J. Mott Hallowell, Mrs. Maud Cuney-Hare, Mrs. Lawrence H. Hume Lee, Josephine Lee, Mrs. C. Douglas Mercer, Mrs. John F. Moore, Arthur H. Morse, William L. Mowll, Walter Gilman Page, the Rev. George L. Paine, Mrs. Florida R. Ridley, Paul J. Sachs, Miss Alice P. Tapley, Mrs. Eva Whiting White and Harold P. Whitney.

APRIL 12, 1930 NEWBURYPORT DAILY NEWS.

DEDICATE MEMORIAL LIBRARY TO THOMAS HOYT AT MERRIMAC

THOMAS H. HOYT MEMORIAL LIBRARY

Merrimac, Apr. 12—A large crowd, filled to capacity and many were unable to gain admission. The Thomas H. Hoyt Memorial Library last evening. The library was board of trustees was in charge of

Boston Transcript

FRIDAY, APRIL 11, 1930

Items of The Day

The Indefatigable Division of Music at the Public Library has arranged an exhibition, from April 22 through May 4, of recent musical publications by the wide-ranging and equally indefatigable Oxford University Press. In connection with it, on Wednesday afternoon, April 23, at four o'clock, Mr. Hubert Foss of London will lecture on the younger English composers. He knows their work intimately.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, APRIL 12, 1930

Public Lecture Monday in Library on Offset Printing

For the second of two public lectures on processes of printing, sponsored by the Boston Club of Printing House Craftsmen, Paul Meckert will give a talk on "Offset" on Monday in the lecture hall of Boston Public Library. He will supplement his talk with a practical demonstration of each step required to turn out a good piece of offset printing, starting with a sketch and proceeding with each step in proper sequence.

the program. H. J. Carlson, of the firm of Coolidge & Carlson architects, who designed the building, presented the keys of the building to Andrew J. Nicol, chairman of the board of selectmen. Mr. Carlson spoke very highly of the library trustees, and especially of Mr. Judkins, who he said had continually tried to have things done "Just a Little Better."

Charles F. D. Belden, chairman of the Massachusetts Free Library commission spoke next. He said that most memorial libraries were nothing but monuments, but that this was an exception, as it was a "workable" one, as well as a beautiful building. He, as did all of the speakers, asked the citizens of Merrimac to patronize this new library. The principal speaker of the evening was Judge Charles I. Pettinelli of Amesbury. Mr. Pettinelli was a personal friend of the late Thomas H. Hoyt. He talked of Mr. Hoyt's life, and lauded the character of the man. He also went back to the days of the settling of this country and spoke of the part that Mr. Hoyt's direct ancestors played in the governing and development of this section, and he showed that the forebears of Thomas H. Hoyt had always played an important part in the early history of Massachusetts, as did all of the generations down to Mr. Hoyt, and he also did his part well.

The interior was decorated with cut flowers and every part of the dedication exercises was received with great interest by the citizens of Merrimac.

DEDICATE LIBRARY

(Staff Photo)
The Thomas H. Hoyt Memorial Library at Merrimac

Thomas H. Hoyt Praised by Judge Pettingell at Merrimac Library Opening

MERRIMAC—The new Thomas H. Hoyt Memorial library was formally opened to the public at the dedication exercises last evening. The doors were opened at 7:45, and many availed themselves of the opportunity to inspect the library. Large bouquets of carnations and roses were placed at the windows and on the librarian's desk.

The library presented a most pleasing appearance, with its many soft shaded lights, and dark polished wood. One of the most interesting features seemed to be the children's corner, with its Mother Goose pictures above the cases of books and the many rows of engaging books arranged about the children's table. The library was packed to capacity before the exercises commenced.

John B. Judkins, chairman of the board of trustees, was master of ceremonies.

The Orpheus male quartet sang "Hail to Our Native Land," after which Rev. Harry S. Lowd, minister of the Pilgrim Congregational church, invoked divine blessing. "Whispering Hope" was rendered by the quartet.

The address of welcome was given by John B. Judkins.

H. J. Carlson of Coolidge & Carlson, architects, presented the key of the library to Andrew O. Nichol, chairman of the board of trustees.

Charles F. D. Belden, chairman of the Massachusetts free public library commission, greeted the citizens of Merrimac and commended the library highly as one of the most interesting and workable libraries with which he had come in contact.

The quartet rendered "In Silent Mead." Following this the dedication address was given by Charles I. Pettingell, a lifelong friend of the donor of the library. His address followed:

Judge Pettingell, in opening, declared that with the exceptions of Sargent hall and Kimball park the gift was the only sizable one that had ever come to the town from the many who associated with it by birth or residence, have achieved financial success. He said that givers, who have the ability to make such substantial gifts, frequently are not interested in the public welfare or have other and more personal motives which influence them in the disposition of their estates. "And yet, such is fame," he added, "that the name of the modest Thomas H. Hoyt will be a family byword and his gift will be remembered, when captains of industry and financiers, who achieved much greater fortunes, will be forgotten and unknown."

The speaker asserted that such a public benefaction will live forever and its donor will be, in the minds of future ages, an outstanding figure of his generation. Judge Pettingell declared that Thomas Hoyt's life was spent almost entirely in Merrimac where seven generations of his family lived and held public office.

Throughout all of its generations the Hoyt family, he related, lived the life of the Puritan community, marrying with other Puritan families, holding office, serving and worshipping in the church, its life ever controlled and governed by the Puritan philosophy and practice. Thomas Howard Hoyt, their descendant, lived and moved among you the whole span of his life. Many of you knew him intimately. There was nothing about him which was in any way different from what one might expect of a man with such an ancestry and such a heritage. He was self-contained, quiet and orderly. He was well educated and scholarly, a lover of books, and here the Puritan trait cropped out, for he was not interested in editions or bindings, but in the contents, the thoughts and ideals which the books contained.

"He was learned in his profession, highly regarded by his fellow practitioners for his knowledge and skill. In his habits he was temperate, slow of speech, both to express personal criticism or hostile opinion, charitable in his judgment of others and in his expression of his judgments. He was diligent in his practice of the law without any self-advertisement or claim of credit. He served the town loyally and efficiently, but quietly, on its school committee. When the World war came he invested heavily of his funds in the purchase of Liberty bonds and was proud that he could render such service. He lived his entire life without reproach or stain, nor did anyone hear him murmur or complain because his last years brought a burden of pain and suffering which caused him more and more to seclude and efface himself.

"He was a man of fine substantial stock who lived a fine substantial life, who, unmoved by external or extrinsic matters, pursued an even, steady course, firm in his faith, true to his ideals. In him was expressed some of the fine phases of New England character as we know it. He never aspired to public life. When he could have had a judicial appointment, he refused to have his name considered. He loved the place in which he lived. He had a great faith in the people around him and in the future of the community."

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, APRIL 14, 1930

As the Londoners End Their Series

ATTENDING the concert of chamber music in the Roslindale Branch of the Boston Public Library yesterday afternoon was an unusual and an altogether pleasurable experience. The occasion was the last program in the series of four concerts by the London String Quartet. The same program was given at the Branch Library in the South End Saturday evening and at the Central Library last evening. Since this series of four programs has been something of an historical exposition of chamber music, the music of this week-end fell into the latest chronological division. With Chalkovsky's Quartet in D major, Op. 11, Debussy's Quartet in G minor, Op. 10, and Hindemith's Quartet in F minor, Op. 10, No. 1, the musicians finally brought the series up-to-date.

There were many listeners, including the reviewer, who were glad of hearing so engrossing a concert. Reports of the attendance at previous concerts in the outlying districts had led one to suppose that the audience would be small. Such was not the case. Some members of the audience arrived as early as three o'clock, and by half after the hour, the rather large hall held only a sprinkling of empty seats. What is more, all signs of appreciation increased as each piece was succeeded by another of more recent composition. Applause following Chalkovsky's Quartet was sufficiently enthusiastic to elicit the prediction that the more familiar idiom of this piece would prove the most popular feature of the day. Yet at the close of the Quartet of Debussy, there was an even larger volume of applause, and after that of Hindemith, it seemed about to become a real ovation. Undoubtedly, the London players have found a most appreciative following in Roslindale, and Mrs. Coolidge's experiment in presenting the concert in places other than the always crowded Central Library has proved quite successful in this instance.

With Mr. William Primrose playing the viola in place of Mr. Philip Sainton, who is ill, the London Quartet has now experienced several changes of personnel. But the ensemble still exhibits the characteristics which originally distinguished it. That is, it plays with the same fine sympathy, the same rhythmic vigor, the same technical brilliance which have now become quite familiar to audiences in Greater Boston. There is an exhilarating snap to each attack and a glowing warmth of tone unlike that of any other group of musicians similarly constituted. We all look forward to performances by the London String Quartet with more than a little relish, because we know that our musical sensibilities will be greatly stimulated. Thus, Chalkovsky's quartet sounded not a whit older than it might be imagined to have sounded when first produced. For the folk-like flavors of the last two movements, the musicians were rhythmically quick and engagingly robust of one and accent. In the Andante Cantabile, they played with as much devoted solitude as though the melody had never found its way into the repertoire of popular violinists and musicians of phonograph fame. In the quartet of Debussy, their delicacy of discernment and readiness of technique stood them in good stead. They produced no wishy-washy tone-tints after the manner of experimenters in Debussyism, but vigorous and arresting patterns of color in movement. What a splendid piece Hindemith's Quartet is! How rich in color the second movement: how luxuriant in vital material the third! The brilliant performance which the Londoners accorded this work surely deserved the applause it received.

N. M. J.

April 7, 1930

TRANSCRIPT, MONDAY.

As the Coolidge Plan Continues

THIS week-end the chronicler who records the progress of Mrs. Coolidge's experiment with chamber music in popular centers betook himself both to the South End Branch Library at the corner Shawmut avenue and West Brookline street, and, for a part of the program, to the Roslindale Branch at the corner of Washington and Ashland streets on Sunday afternoon. Saturday evening he found a group of listeners much the same as two weeks ago, except that there were many more of them. He recognized faces seen there at the concert. Again he heard them discussing the music—a group immediately in front of him, Fingal's Cave, and Schumann, and the supposedly difficult style of Brahms; immediately to the rear, a discussion about some of Beethoven's overtures. It is obvious at least, that not all the wisdom about and love for music resides in the habitues of our established concert halls. For on two Saturday evenings, now, one has found the playing of the London String Quartet, and what is more important, for the music it played. One saw at a glance on Saturday evening also, that the audience had increased materially in size. An attendant gave information that by actual count the number of those present had almost doubled. Sunday afternoon three movements of Schumann's quartet sufficed to take one's bearings at the Roslindale Branch. Again one found a pleasant and roomy hall, somewhat smaller than the hall at the South End Branch. Again one found an attentive and interested company. Again one learned from the attendant that there were present almost twice as many as at the previous concert. All of these statistical matters give weight to remarks heard on Saturday evening, that there had not been sufficient publicity given to the concerts at these branches, that with more thorough-going advance notice these halls might easily have been filled. (This from a veteran at concert going who chose Saturday evening to hear this particular program.) If this contention be true, possibly even City Point deserves another chance.

The observer was further interested to find at the Sunday afternoon concert at least one listener (apparently not a Schumann Quartet devotee) who had been present Saturday evening at the South End Branch. This leads to the reflection that the repetitions of these concerts give excellent opportunity for listeners to become more than casually acquainted with the music, for each one so inclined there is at least the potential possibility of hearing the program three times! What an opportunity!

To return to one's latest experience. The hall at Roslindale is exceedingly resonant. Without a doubt too much so. The four slight strings produced in it a sonority often comparable, sometimes exceeding that of a full string orchestra in a normal hall. The various incidents and noises of performance which usually do not penetrate even to the first row of seats, were almost as evident near the back of the hall as on the platform itself. Again, the players did not temper their playing to the wind. As lustily they attacked their strings, as ardently they bowed upon them as though the hall had been heavily draped and carpeted. If Schumann has ever had to answer to the charge of being orchestral in his quartet, yesterday was the time.

The course which Mrs. Coolidge through the London String Quartet and the Boston Public Library is giving, is historical in plan. At previous concerts Liszt, Mozart, Beethoven have been heard Saturday and Sunday quartets of Schubert, Schumann, Brahms were played. And the London Four (save only that in Roslindale they showed more valor than did the quartet of Debussy) gives evidence of the use of all the arts of quartet playing. They are sensitive to qualities of balance and proportion, they choose a pace which always seems the best possible, they allow their instruments to sing freely, they distinguish between the scales of their several composers. Excellent in detail they build each movement as each quartet with a view to the whole rather than to its several parts and above all, they hold the interest of hearers, no matter what the music is.

Small wonder that attendance is doubling, for each concert is best publicity for the one to follow. But the concert of the next week-end concludes the series.

A. H. M.

APRIL 23, 1930

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT,

Fountain Planned for Statler Park

The Boston Art Commission has approved the design by Ulysse S. Ricci, also a sample in bronze, for a fountain to be erected in the triangular plot known as Statler Park. The land was donated by the city at the time the hotel was erected, being negotiated for by E. M. Statler himself. Mayor Curley was then in office for his second term and was happy to make the improvement in view of the certainty of a 1300-room hotel. It was originally planned to locate a fountain in the center of the park, but the plans have held fire until the present. The art commission has approved the location proposed by the Park Department for two statuary groups by Daniel Chester French, formerly on the old Post Office Building; a tablet in memory of Thomas Sargent Perry, by the Birmingham Guild, for a site in the court of the Boston Public Library; and a portrait of Charles F. B. Seiden by Jacob Blinder for a position in the Public Library.

Other approvals comprise a bust of Benjamin Dean by Mrs. May L. Smith Dean, for a position in the Benjamin Dean School; also a tablet in memory of Arthur Stacey by the Thomas McGinn Company, for a site in the Francis Parkman School; and a portrait of Wallace C. Boyden by Marie Danforth Page for a position in Teachers' College.

BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN—

WEDNESDAY, MAY 7, 1930

OPEN KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL LIBRARY

Beautiful Structure Is Located in Heart of Business and Financial District

The Kirstein Memorial Library building on City Hall ave., housing the only business branch of the Boston Public Library and also a general circulating and reference branch, with several excellent collections of books, was opened today without ceremony.

Scores passed through the portals to inspect the structure and make use of its facilities throughout the day.

The site is in the heart of the business and financial district, where police station 2 formerly stood.

The building, with a striking facade of red brick and white trimmings, patterned after a design of Bulfinch, was built by Louis E. Kirstein vice president of William Filene's Sons Company and a Boston Public Library trustee, in memory of his father, Edward Kirstein.

The first and second floors are occupied by the Business Branch, and there are many volumes and periodicals with mines of information for merchants and students of business.

There is a mezzanine floor, but the third floor may well prove the most popular, for it has books on fiction, biography, fine arts, science, home gardens, sociology, philosophy, drama, religion and literature for general circulation.

Boston Transcript

THURSDAY, APRIL 24, 1930

Of Music English And Continental

As an Observer from Abroad Surveys the Younger Generation

MAKING the distinction that contemporary English music is more "human" and thus less likely to

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, MARCH 25, 1930

Bulgarian Librarian a Guest

Miss Margaret Demchevsky, on an American Tour by a Grant From Carnegie Endowment Through American Library Association, Entertained at Luncheon

MISS MARGARET DEMCHEVSKY, library organizer in the Ministry of Education, Sofia, Bulgaria, was a guest of Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, at an informal luncheon at the University Club today. She spent the afternoon visiting branches in and about Boston. During her stay here she will be a guest of the Boston Public Library and the State Free Public Library Commission.

Miss Demchevsky arrived in New York March 11, for a visit of four or five months to this country to study American library administration and

ing. It is easier in England to get a choir than to get an audience."

The remark aptly applies to the speaker's main contention; namely, that the English composers are not devoting themselves so exclusively to the experimental and intellectual side of music as the composers of Continental Europe.

"England always has been a nation of song and a nation of poetry," he explained. "The strength of English literature has not been in her novels, her plays and her critical essays, but in her poetry. Contemporary English music is more expressive and more human—less dehumanized—than the music of the continent. The interest in writing music in England is a purely musical one; there is no thought of personal gain or of being civilized as literature. There is a strong toward vocal music in England, the Continent is in instru-composers to would for a erest in vocal to a singing

side.

of so-called music being present time,

exception, is owers are not exclusively in experimental ve that the

ated schools

fter all, one master in ng."

a few Eng-

se of his lec-careers but poke of E. J.

anced (as is r composers)

lk song; Herd impeccable

d an interest

ures in Engmplicity" his

"sincere origi-

ness—Arnold

Arnold Bax,

ily" writing

of Thomas

Frederick De-

of English who should derable man thusiasm for that this com-

thus demon-upon the ex-appearing to only twenty-

no other in-plans to pro-viola and or-ross declared, that music

omething for cluded.

N. M. J.

DEDICATE LIBRARY

(Staff Photo)

The Thomas H. Hoyt Memorial Library at Merrimac

Thomas H. Hoyt Praised by Judge Pettingell at Merrimac Library Opening

MERRIMAC—The new Thomas H. Hoyt Memorial library was formally opened to the public at the dedication exercises last evening. The doors were opened at 7:45, and many availed themselves of the opportunity to inspect the library. Large bouquets of carnations and roses were placed at the windows and on the librarian's desk.

The library presented a most pleasing appearance, with its many soft shaded lights, and dark polished wood. One of the most interesting features seemed to be the children's corner, with its Mother Goose pictures above the cases of books and the many rows of engaging books arranged about the children's table. The library was packed to capacity before the exercises commenced.

John B. Judkins, chairman of the board of trustees, was master of ceremonies.

The Orpheus male quartet sang "Hail to Our Native Land," after which Rev. Harry S. Low, minister of the Pilgrim Congregational church, invoked divine blessing. "Whispering Hope" was rendered by the quartet.

The address of welcome was given by John B. Judkins. H. J. Carlson of Coolidge & Carlson, architects, presented the key of the library to Andrew O. Niehol, chairman of the board of selectmen.

Charles F. D. Belden, chairman of the Massachusetts free public library commission, greeted the citizens of Merrimac and commended the library highly as one of the most interesting and workable libraries with which he had come in contact.

The quartet rendered "In Silent Mead." Following this the dedication address was given by Charles I. Pettingell, a lifelong friend of the donor of the library. His address follows:

Judge Pettingell, in opening, declared that with the exceptions of Sargent hall and Kimball park the gift was the only sizable one that had ever come to the town from the many who associated with it by birth or residence, have achieved financial success. He said that givers, who have the ability to make such substantial gifts, frequently are not interested in the public welfare or have other and more personal motives which influence them in the disposition of their estates. "And yet, such is fame," he added, "that the name of the modest Thomas H. Hoyt will be a family byword and his gift will be remembered, when captains of industry and financiers, who achieved much greater fortunes, will be forgotten and unknown."

The speaker asserted that such a public benefaction will live forever and its donor will be, in the minds of future ages, an outstanding figure of his generation. Judge Pettingell declared that Thomas Hoyt's life was spent almost entirely in Merrimac where seven generations of his family lived and held public office.

Throughout all of its generations the Hoyt family, he related, lived the life of the Puritan community, marrying with other Puritan families, holding office, serving and worshipping in the church, its life ever controlled and governed by the Puritan philosophy and practice. Thomas Howard Hoyt, their descendant, lived and moved among you the whole span of his life. Many of you knew him intimately. There was nothing about him which was in any way different from what one might expect of a man with such an ancestry and such a heritage. He was self-contained, quiet and orderly. He was well educated and scholarly. A lover of books, and here the Puritan trait cropped out, for he was not interested in editions or bindings, but in the contents, the thoughts and ideals which the books contained.

"He was learned in his profession, highly regarded by his fellow practitioners for his knowledge and skill. In his habits he was temperate, slow of speech, both to express personal criticism or hostile opinion, charitable in his judgment of others and in his expression of his judgments. He was diligent in his practice of the law without any self-advertisement or claim of credit. He served the town loyally and efficiently, but quietly, on its school committee. When the World War came he invested heavily of his funds in the purchase of Liberty bonds and was proud that he could render such service. He lived his entire life without reproach or stain, nor did anyone hear him murmur or complain because his last years brought a burden of pain and suffering which caused him more and more to seclude and efface himself.

"He was a man of fine substantial stock who lived a fine substantial life, who, unmoved by external or extrinsic matters, pursued an even, steady course, firm in his faith, true to his ideals. In him was expressed some of the fine phases of New England character as we know it. He never aspired to public life. When he could have had a judicial appointment, he refused to have his name considered. He loved the place in which he lived. He had a great faith in the people around him and in the future of the community."

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, APRIL 14, 1930

As the Londoners End Their Series

ATTENDING the concert of chamber music in the Roslindale Branch of the Boston Public Library yesterday afternoon was an unusual and an altogether pleasurable experience. The occasion was the last program in the series of four concerts by the London String Quartet. The same program was given at the Branch Library in the South End Saturday evening and at the Central Library last evening. Since this series of four programs has been something of an historical exposition of chamber music, the music of this week-end fell into the latest chronological division. With Chalkovsky's Quartet in D major, Op. 11, Debussy's Quartet in G minor, Op. 10, and Hindemith's Quartet in F minor, Op. 10, No. 1, the musicians finally brought the series up-to-date.

There were many listeners, including the reviewer, who were glad of hearing so engrossing a concert. Reports of the audience at previous concerts in the outlying districts had led one to suppose that the audience would be small. Such was not the case. Some members of the audience arrived as early as three o'clock, and by half after the hour, the rather large hall held only a sprinkling of empty seats. What is more, all signs of appreciation increased as each piece was succeeded by another of more recent composition. Applause following Chalkovsky's Quartet was sufficiently enthusiastic to elicit the prediction that the more familiar idiom of this piece would prove the most popular feature of the day. Yet at the close of the Quartet of Debussy there was an even larger volume of applause, and after that of Hindemith, it seemed about to become a real ovation. Undoubtedly, the London players have found a most appreciative following in Roslindale, and Mrs. Coolidge's experiment in presenting the concerts in places other than the always crowded Central Library has proved quite successful in this instance.

With Mr. William Primrose playing the viola in place of Mr. Philip Sinton, who is ill, the London Quartet has now experienced several changes of personnel. But the ensemble still exhibits the characteristics which originally distinguished it. That is, it plays with the same fine sympathy, the same rhythmic vigor, the same technical brilliance which have now become quite familiar to audiences in Greater Boston. There is an exhilarating snap to each attack and a glowing warmth of tone unlike that of any other group of musicians similarly constituted. We all look forward to performances by the London String Quartet with more than a little relish, because we know that our musical sensibilities will be greatly stimulated. Thus, Chalkovsky's quartet sounded not a whit older than it might be imagined to have sounded when first produced. For the folk-like flavors of the last two movements, the musicians were rhythmically quick and engagingly robust of tone and accent. In the Andante Cantabile, they played with as much devoted solicitude as though the melody had never found its way into the repertoire of popular violinists and musicians of phonograph fame. In the quartet of Debussy, their delicacy of discernment and readiness of technique stood them in good stead. They produced no wishy-washy tone-tints after the manner of experimenters in Debussyism, but vigorous and arresting patterns of color in movement. What a splendid piece Hindemith's Quartet is! How rich in color the second movement; how luxuriant in vital material the third! The brilliant performance which the Londoners accorded this work surely deserved the applause it received.

N. M. J.

April 7, 1930

TRANSCRIPT, MONDAY.

As the Coolidge Plan Continues

THIS week-end the chronicler who records the progress of Mrs. Coolidge's experiment with chamber music in popular centers betook himself both to the South End Branch Library at the corner Shawmut avenue and West Brookline street, and, for part of the program, to the Roslindale Branch at the corner of Washington and Asylum streets on Sunday afternoon. Saturday evening he found a group of listeners much the same as two weeks ago, except that there were many more of them. He recognized faces seen there at the earlier concert. Again he heard them discussing the music—a group immediately in front of him, Fingal's Cave, and Schumann, and the supposedly difficult style of Brahms; immediately to the rear, a lively argument about some of Beethoven's overtures. It is obvious at least, that not all the wisdom about and love for music resides in the habits of our established concert halls. For on two Saturday evenings, now, one has found respect for and intelligence about the playing of the London String Quartet, and what is more important, for the music it played. One saw at a glance Saturday evening also, that the audience had increased materially in size. An attendant gave information that by actual count the number of those present had almost doubled. Sunday afternoon three movements of Schumann's quartet sufficed to take one's bearings at the Roslindale Branch. Again one found a pleasant and rosy hall, somewhat smaller than the hall at the South End Branch. Again one found an attentive and interested company. Again one learned from the attendant that there were present almost twice as many as at the previous concert. All of these statistical matters give weight to remarks heard on Saturday evening, that there had not been sufficient publicity given to the concerts at these branches, that with more thorough-going advance notice these halls might easily have been filled. (This from a veteran at concert giving, who chose Saturday evening to hear this particular program.) If this contention be true, possibly even City Point deserves another chance.

The observer was further interested to find at the Sunday afternoon concert at City Point that the London Quartet was not a symphony. Jordan-Stabler-Stelert concert phony-Jordan-Stabler-Stelert concert phony who had been present Saturday evening at the South End Branch. This leads to the reflection that the reputations of these concertists give excellent opportunity for listeners to become more than casually acquainted with the music. For each one so inclined there is at least the potential possibility of hearing the program three times. What an opportunity to return to one's latest experience, to return to one's latest experience, to return to one's latest experience.

The hall at Roslindale is exceedingly resonant. Without a doubt too much so. The four slight strings produced in it a sonority often comparable, sometimes exceeding that of a full string orchestra in a normal hall. The various incidents and noises of performance which usually do not penetrate even to the first row of seats, were almost as evident near the back of the hall as on the platform itself. More, the players did not temper their playing to the wind. As justly they attacked their strings, as ardently, not down upon them as though the hall had been heavily draped and carpeted. If Schumann has ever had to suffer in the charge of being orchestral in the quartet, yesterday was the time.

The course which Mrs. Coolidge through the London String Quartet and the Roslindale Branch is giving is historical in plan. At previous concerts Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven have been heard, Saturday and Sunday quartets of Schubert, Schumann, Brahms have only that in Roslindale they showed more valor than discretion gives evidence of the possession of all the arts of quartet playing. They are sensitive to qualities of balance and proportion, they choose a pace which always seems the best possible; they allow their instruments to sing vividly, they distinguish between the styles of their several composers. Excellent in detail they build each movement and each quartet with a view to the whole rather than to its several parts, and above all, they hold the interest of their hearers, no matter what the music is hand. Small wonder that attendance is doubling, for each concert is best publicity for the one to follow. But the concert of the next week-end concludes the series.

A. H. M.

APRIL 23, 1930

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT,

Fountain Planned for Statler Park

The Boston Art Commission has approved the design by Ulysses S. Ricci, also a sample in bronze, for a fountain to be erected in the triangular plot known as Statler Park. The land was donated by the city at the time the hotel was erected, being negotiated for by E. M. Statler himself. Mayor Curley was then in office for his second term and was happy to make the improvement in view of the certainty of a 1300-room hotel. It was originally planned to locate a fountain in the center of the park, but the plans have been changed.

The art commission has approved a location for two Chester-Francis Office Building maiden hunters to travel two and a half miles. The last event on the Racedale program will be the Blue and Red Plate mile and a sixteenth dash for three-year-olds and upward.

Nominations for the different events will show representation from all the prominent steeplechase stables of the country. This applies not only to the regular training quarters at the large tracks, but to the hunt meeting centers of Pennsylvania, Long Island, Maryland, New Jersey, Virginia, the Middle West and, of course, all parts of New England.

Miss Orcutt Shoots Second 76 Round

Leads Field by Comfortable Margin in Mid-South Women's Golf

Southern Pines, N. C., March 25 (A.P.)—Miss Maureen Orcutt, Haworth, N. J., links stylist and leader of the first round play in the mid-South women's tournament here, shot a brilliant 76 today to forge ahead of the early finishers in the second round.

Her gross score for the 36 holes was 154. She was out in 37 and back in 30 today. The card:

Orcutt, out..... 43 44 45 44 45 43
Dyer, out..... 44 45 46 47 48 46
Hart, out..... 45 46 47 48 49 47
Hart, out..... 46 47 48 49 50 48

—Perhaps those four bomb explosions in one day are to be taken as another sign of spring in Chicago. (Indianapolis News)

Old Relationship Renewed

Rabbit Maranville and Will McKechnie, Respectively Shortstop and of the Braves

A. H. M.

Boston Transcript

THURSDAY, APRIL 24, 1930

Of Music English And Continental

As an Observer from Abroad Surveys the Younger Generation

MAKING the distinction that contemporary English music is more "human" and thus less likely to lead to blind alleys of endeavor than the music of Continental Europe, Mr. Hubert J. Foss, author, composer, reviewer and contributor to Music and Letters and other journals of opinion, yesterday afternoon, in the Public Library, made out an earnest case for the English composers of today.

As manager of the music division of the Oxford University Press, Mr. Foss has contributed to the library an exhibition of the firm's musical publications, many of which illustrate the remarks of yesterday's lecture and which are now on display on the third floor of the library building.

Introduced by Mr. Richard G. Appel, musicologist of the library, Mr. Foss spoke informally to a small gathering and made occasional recourse to the German school, differentiated between present English and Continental schools and drew a few quick portraits of contemporary English composers. His remarks were characterized by a strong personal enthusiasm for the present significance and the future promise of English creative activity, and, although he mentioned the limitations of English strong points of the leading figures in England's musical life, he spoke with impartial confidence in the general outcome of their efforts.

In opening his speech, Mr. Foss explained that he disliked the idea of national distinctions in music, since one should admire good music no matter what its national derivation.

"Nevertheless," he said, "the idea of classical music has too long been identified with one particular school. No one is a more intense admirer of the great German masters from Bach to Brahms than I, yet all great music does not derive directly from this single branch of the classical tradition. In fact, the long drawn-out influence of this one school has done much to avert just recognition of others, particularly the English. You cannot draw a single parallel case in the whole field of literature and art, and you should not be able to do so in the field of music alone."

During the course of his speech, Mr. Foss made occasional statements of epigrammatic character. "People in England," he said, "prefer singing to listening. It is easier in England to get a choir than to get an audience."

The remark aptly applies to the speaker's main contention; namely, that the English composers are not devoting themselves so exclusively to the experimental and intellectual side of music as the composers of Continental Europe.

"England always has been a nation of song and a nation of poetry," he explained. "The strength of English literature has not been in her novels, her plays and her critical essays, but in her poetry. Contemporary English music is more expressive and more human—less dehumanized—than the music of the continent. The interest in writing music in England is a purely musical one; there is no thought of personal gain or of being recognized as literati. There is a strong trend toward vocal music in England. On the Continent, interest in instrumental music is leading composers to write for the voice as they would for a violin. In England, the interest in vocal music has led in some cases to a singing quality in instrumental music."

"There is not a great deal of so-called 'modernistic' or atonal music being played in England at the present time, although Stravinsky, by exception, is very popular. English composers are not interested primarily and exclusively in the 'modernistic' and purely experimental side. Personally, I believe that the Viennese and similarly minded schools are getting nowhere; for, after all, one cannot be better than one's master in what these groups are doing."

Mr. Foss mentioned only a few English composers in the course of his lectures and sketched their careers but briefly. Among others, he spoke of E. J. Morley, whose style is influenced (as is the case with several other composers) by an interest in English folk song; Herbert Howells, a "delicate and impeccable composer" who has revived an interest in the clavier; Vaughan Williams, one of the most outstanding figures in English music ("Pastoral Symphony" his finest work); a musician of "sincere originality" in that it is often gentle and unobtrusive; Arthur Bliss, whose "Serenade" is a splendid work; Arnold Bax, a man of "prodigious ability" writing in a vein similar to that of Thomas Hardy and perhaps the "best equipped" of all English composers; Frederick Delius, the "most cosmopolitan" of English composers; William Walton, "who should develop into the most considerable man since Purcell."

Mr. Foss explained his enthusiasm for Walton with the statement that this composer, better than all others, "has demonstrated an ability to build upon the experience of others without appearing to do so." A young man of only twenty-seven years, "he already has developed a personal style reflecting no other influence." Dr. Koussevitzky plans to produce his new Concerto for viola and orchestra next season, Mr. Foss declared.

"English composers believe that music should be recognized as something for daily use," the speaker concluded.

N. M. J.

Was Song Writer and Entertainer

John J. O'Brien, song writer and entertainer, and for several years an employee of the bindery department of the Boston Public Library, died yesterday afternoon at his home, 40 Vale street, South Boston, after a two-month illness. He was born in South Boston forty-one years ago and at one time was a member of the old 9th Regiment. During the World War he served with the State Guard as a captain. He was a member of the South Boston Yacht Club, the South Boston Citizens' Association and other bodies. He is survived by his wife and four children.

YOU ARE INVITED
TO AN EXHIBITION OF PAINTING AND SCULPTURE
BY AMERICAN NEGRO ARTISTS
ARRANGED IN CONNECTION WITH THE HARMON FOUNDATION
AND SPONSORED BY THE
RACE RELATIONS COMMITTEE OF THE
GREATER BOSTON FEDERATION OF CHURCHES

TO BE HELD IN THE
EXHIBITION ROOM OF THE PUBLIC LIBRARY
OF THE CITY OF BOSTON
APRIL 7-13th, 1930

9.00 A.M. TO 10.00 P.M.
12.00 M. TO 10.00 P.M. ON SUNDAY

SPONSORS

MR. CHARLES F. D. BELDEN	MRS. HANNAH HUME LEE
MR. FRANK W. BENSON	MR. JOSEPH LEE
REV. ALFRED V. BLISS	MRS. C. DOUGLAS MERCER
MR. CHARLES K. BOLTON	MRS. JOHN F. MOORS
MISS LOUISE WINSOR BROOKS	MR. ARTHUR H. MORSE
MISS FRANCES G. CURTIS	MR. WILLIAM L. MOWLL
MRS. META WARRICK FULLER	MR. WALTER GILMAN PAGE
MR. PHILIP HALE	REV. GEORGE L. PAINE
MRS. J. MOTT HALLOWELL	MRS. FLORIDA R. RIDLEY
MRS. MAUD CUNEY-HARE	MR. PAUL J. SACHS
MRS. LAWRENCE ILFELD	MISS ALICE P. TAPLEY
MR. WALTER H. KILHAM	MRS. EVA WHITING WHITE
	MR. HAROLD P. WHITNEY

METROPOLITAN STUDENT Y. W. C. A. INTER-RACE COMMITTEE

"The Banjo Player," by Hale A. Woodruff, which will be included in an exhibition of American Negro Art at the Boston Public Library throughout next week.

Exhibit of Negro Art at Boston Public Library

Three Negro artists, two of whom are from New York and one from California, were named last January to receive the awards in fine arts for 1929 of the William E. Harmon awards for distinguished achievement among Negroes. Their work, as well as sixty-five or seventy other pieces, including paintings, pastels and sculptures produced by colored men and women throughout the country, is to be exhibited under the auspices of the Harmon Foundation of New York, the Commission on Race Relations of the Federal Council of Churches and the Race Relations Committee of the Greater Boston Federation of Churches, in the exhibition room of the Boston Public Library, Copley square, beginning Monday afternoon and continuing through the following Sunday evening.

A jury consisting of George Luks, painter, Karl Ilva, sculptor, Victor Perard, painter and instructor of the Art School of Cooper Institute, George S. Hellman, art critic, and Meta Warrick Fuller, colored sculptor of Framingham, named the awards' recipients and made the selections of material to be exhibited, choosing from more than three hundred entries received. The awards are competitive within the group and are made only when the quality of the work compares favorably with other outstanding achievements in the field of art.

The award of a gold medal and $100 was granted to William H. Johnson, a native of Florence, S. C., for his oil paintings executed in the modern manner.

Albert Alexander Smith, thirty-three, of New York, now studying in Paris, and Sargent Johnson, forty-one, of Chicago, each received awards of a bronze medal and $100. Sargent Johnson has devoted to sculpture and etching the spare time he has had from his work as a painter.

Among the native cities of the artists whose work is to be on exhibition are Boston, Philadelphia, Berkeley, Washington, D. C., St. Louis, Cincinnati, Chicago, Detroit, Indianapolis, Sedalia, N. C., and Sumpter, S. C.

There will be guides at the library to show the pictures and direct the visitors and instruct them. There is no charge for admission, and the public is cordially invited. The hours are 9 A. M. to 10 P. M. On Sunday, 12 M. to 10 P. M.

Boston Daily Globe

THURSDAY, MAY 8, 1930

KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL
LIBRARY IS OPENED

Especially for Business
Men of Boston

Well Patronized on First Day—
Has Fund of Trade Data

The Edward Kirstein Memorial Library, on Court sq., was opened to the public at 9 o'clock yesterday morning. The new library, essentially for downtown business men, was well patronized during its opening day.

There was no ceremony attached to the opening. Vice Pres Louis E. Kirstein of the William Ellens Sons Company, who gave the $200,000 which built and furnished the structure, in memory of his father, was away on business. At his suggestion opening formalities were dispensed with, but it is believed dedicatory exercises may take place in the fall.

Mary Watkins Dietrichson is librarian, assisted by a staff of eight persons. The library is on the site of old Police Station 2.

Passers-by on City Hall av and Court sq stopped to note the picture through the large plate-glass windows of the first floor chamber. They admired the colonial facade of the structure, which is a duplicate of that of the first public library in Boston erected on a Bulfinch design on Franklin pl in 1794.

Statistical matter about the world's general business is available on this first floor. Here are directories of all important United States cities, maps and atlases, timetables and periodicals and the leading magazines of all branches of business and industry.

On the second floor are Government reports and bulletins covering many lines of business, volumes on general business and economic topics. On the shelves of this room are the latest authoritative volumes on practically all lines of general business in all parts of the world.

On the top floor is the room to be devoted to the general public, and its walls are lined with volumes such as are of general rather than business interest. Grace C. Brary is in charge of this room, containing popular literature and the classic authors. The telephone number for this room is Hubbard 1969, while Mrs. Dietrichson, librarian in charge of the business branches, may be telephoned at Hubbard 0960.

THE BOSTON HERALD

THURSDAY, MAY 8, 1930

KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL
LIBRARY IS OPENED

Nearly 1000 persons visited the new Kirstein memorial library at Pi alley and City Hall avenue on its opening day yesterday, and a large proportion of them made use of the statistical and directory data provided there for the use of business and professional men.

The library which is the gift to the Boston Public Library of Louis E. Kirstein as a memorial to his father, Edward Kirstein, immediately proved that it fulfilled a need yesterday when scores of downtown business houses sent to the branch for information essential to them.

One of the first acts of Miss Edith Guerrier, supervisor of branches, at the opening of the library yesterday, was to pin the portrait of the Rev. John Cotton, distributed by The Herald yesterday to the reference board on the third floor, along with the story of Cotton written by Charles Knowles Bolton and published in The Herald. A clipping of yesterday's installment of The Herald series, "People You Might

Program for the Dedication of
The Thomas H. Hoyt Memorial Library

MERRIMAC, MASSACHUSETTS

FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL 11, 1930

□ □ □ □ □

MUSIC Hail to Our Native Land Verdi
ORPHEUS MALE QUARTET

INVOCATION Rev. Harry S. Lowd, Minister of the Pilgrim
Congregational Church, Merrimac

MUSIC Whispering Hope Hazethorne
ORPHEUS MALE QUARTET

ADDRESS OF WELCOME Mr. John B. Judkins, Chairman of the Board of Trustees

SELF PORTRAIT

William H. Johnson

EXHIBIT OF FINE ARTS

by American Negro Artists

Presented by the Harmon Foundation
and
The Commission on Race Relations
Federal Council of Churches

TO BE HELD IN THE
EXHIBITION ROOM OF THE PUBLIC LIBRARY
OF THE CITY OF BOSTON
APRIL 7-13th, 1930
9.00 A.M. TO 10.00 P.M.
12.00 M. TO 10.00 P.M. ON SUNDAY

MR. CHARLES F. D. BELDEN
MR. FRANK W. BENSON
REV. ALFRED V. BLISS
MR. CHARLES K. BOLTON
MISS LOUISE WINSOR BROOKS
MISS FRANCES G. CURTIS
MRS. META WARRICK FULLER
MR. PHILIP HALE
MRS. J. MOTT HALLOWELL
MRS. MAUD CUNEY-HARE
MRS. LAWRENCE ILFELD
MR. WALTER H. KILHAM
MR. HAROLD
METROPOLITAN STUDENT Y. W.

FOREWORD

THIS Exhibit has been arranged in connection with the William E. Harmon Awards for Distinguished Achievement among Negroes, as an outgrowth of the Award in Fine Arts. It is the third year in which art productions of colored men and women have been shown under these auspices.

This presentation is made for the purpose of acquainting and interesting the public more generally in the creative accomplishments in fine arts by Negroes. It is thus hoped not only to encourage the Negro in creative expression of a high order, but to assist him to a more sound and satisfactory economic position in the field of fine art.

Because of the limitations of space and the problems of lighting, and to secure the best possible position for all pictures, the present arrangement was adopted at the recommendation of one of the judges.

Awards Jury

META WARRICK FULLER      KARL ILLAVA
GEORGE HELLMAN          GEORGE LUKS
VICTOR PERARD

INTERNATIONAL HOUSE
500 Riverside Drive, New York, N. Y.

January 7 to 19, 1930
(inclusive)

1 (00) p m (0 0), 3(0) p m

Hale A. W.
Included in can Negro
Library Th

Program for the Dedication of The Thomas H. Hoyt Memorial Library

MERRIMAC, MASSACHUSETTS

FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL 11, 1930

□ □ □ □ □

MUSIC                      Hail to Our Native Land                      Verdi
   ORPHEUS MALE QUARTET

INVOCATION Rev. Harry S. Lowd, Minister of the Pilgrim
Congregational Church, Merrimac

MUSIC      Whispering Hope      Hawthorne
ORPHEUS MALE QUARTET

ADDRESS OF
WELCOME Mr. John B. Judkins, Chairman of the Board of Trustees

FINE ARTS EXHIBIT BY NEGROES

- |    |                  |                      |
|----|------------------|----------------------|
| 1  | THE DROP FORGE   | Alison R. Freedom    |
| 2  | MIGHTY DAY       | Martin Gray Johnson  |
| 3  | GIRL IN PINK     | Jesse C. Stubbs      |
| 4  | LANDSCAPE        | William H. Johnson   |
| 5  | SELF PORTRAIT    | William H. Johnson   |
| 6  | PORTRAIT         | William H. Johnson   |
| 7  | LANDSCAPE        | William H. Johnson   |
| 8  | LANDSCAPE        | William H. Johnson   |
| 9  | PORTRAIT         | William H. Johnson   |
| 10 | ELIZABETH        | Henry B. Jones       |
| 11 | PORTRAIT STUDY   | Laura Wheeler Waring |
| 12 | PORTRAIT STUDY   | Laura Wheeler Waring |
| 13 | SUMMER           | Mary Lee Tate        |
| 14 | THE RED CLOTH    | Martin Gray Johnson  |
| 15 | THE THREE GRACES | Arthur Duggs         |
| 16 | TWILIGHT         | Mary Lee Tate        |
| 17 | PICNICKING       | Alison L. Oglesby    |
| 18 | A MOUNTAIN TRAIL | Mary Lee Tate        |
| 19 | IN A CANYON      | Mary Lee Tate        |
| 20 | THE GREEN SMOCK  | D. Norman Iltis      |

Boston Daily Globe.

THURSDAY, MAY 8, 1930

KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL LIBRARY IS OPENED

Especially for Business
Men of Boston

Well Patronized on First Day— Has Fund of Trade Data

The Edward Kirslein Memorial Library, on Court sq, was opened to the public at 9 o'clock yesterday morning. The new library, essentially for downtown business men, was well patronized during its opening day.

There was no ceremony attached to the opening. Vice Pres Louis E Kirstein of the William Filene's Sons Company, who gave the $200,000 which built and furnished the structure, in memory of his father, was away on business. At his suggestion opening formalities were dispensed with, but it is believed dedicatory exercises may take place in the Fall.

Mary Watkins Dietrichson is librarian, assisted by a staff of eight persons. The library is on the site of old Police Station 2.

Passers-by on City Hall av and Court sq stopped to note the picture through the large plate-glass windows of the first floor chamber. They admired the colonial facade of the structure, which is a duplicate of that of the first public library in Boston erected on a Bulfinch design on Franklin st. in 1794.

Statistical matter about the world's general business is available on this first floor. Here are directories of all important United States cities, maps and atlases, timetables and periodicals and the leading magazines of all branches of business and industry.

On the second floor are Government reports and bulletins covering many lines of business, volumes on general business and economic topics. On the shelves of this room are the latest authoritative volumes on practically all lines of general business in all parts of the world.

On the top floor is the room to be devoted to the general public, and its walls are lined with volumes such as are of general rather than business interest. Grace C. Brary is in charge of this room, containing popular literature and the classic authors. The telephone number for this room is Hubbard 1969, while Mrs. Dietrichson, librarian in charge of the business branches, may be telephoned at Hubbard 0980.

THE BOSTON HERALD

THURSDAY, MAY 8, 1930

KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL
LIBRARY IS OPENED

Nearly 1000 persons visited the new Kirstein memorial library at Pi alley and City Hall avenue on its opening day yesterday, and a large proportion of them made use of the statistical and directorial data provided there for the use of business and professional men.

The library, which is the gift to the Boston Public Library of Louis E. Kirstein as a memorial to his father, Edward Kirstein, immediately proved that it fulfilled a need yesterday when scores of downtown business houses sent to the branch for information essential to them.

One of the first acts of Miss Edith Guerrier, supervisor of branches, at the opening of the library yesterday, was to pin the portrait of the Rev. John Cotton, distributed by The Herald yesterday to the reference board on the third floor, along with the story of Cotton written by Charles Knowles Bolton and published in The Herald. A clipping of yesterday's installment of The Herald series, "People You Might

YOU ARE INVITED
TO AN
EXHIBITION OF PAINTING AND SCULPTURE
BY AMERICAN NEGRO ARTISTS

ARRANGED IN CONNECTION WITH THE HARMON FOUNDATION
AND SPONSORED BY THE
RACE RELATIONS COMMITTEE OF THE
GREATER BOSTON FEDERATION OF CHURCHES

TO BE HELD IN THE
EXHIBITION ROOM OF THE PUBLIC LIBRARY
OF THE CITY OF BOSTON

APRIL 7-13th, 1930

9.00 A.M. TO 10.00 P.M.

12.00 M. TO 10.00 P.M. ON SUNDAY

SPONSORS

MR. CHARLES F. D. BELDEN
MR. FRANK W. BENSON
REV. ALFRED V. BLISS
MR. CHARLES K. BOLTON
MISS LOUISE WINSOR BROOKS
MISS FRANCES G. CURTIS
MRS. META WARRICK FULLER
MR. PHILIP HALE
MRS. J. MOTT HALLOWELL
MRS. MAUD CUNNEY-HARE
MRS. LAWRENCE ILFELD
MR. WALTER H. KILHAM
MR. HAROLD
METROPOLITAN STUDENT Y. W.

Hale A. W.
Included in our Negro
Library Th

FRIENDS

Albert Alexander Smith

Program for the Dedication of
The Thomas H. Hoyt Memorial Library

MERRIMAC, MASSACHUSETTS

FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL 11, 1930

□ □ □ □ □

MUSIC Hail to Our Native Land Ferdi
ORPHEUS MALE QUARTET

INVOCATION Rev. Harry S. Lowd, Minister of the Pilgrim
Congregational Church, Merrimac

MUSIC Whispering Hope Hazethorne
ORPHEUS MALE QUARTET

ADDRESS OF
WELCOME Mr. John B. Judkins, Chairman of the Board of Trustees

FINE ARTS EXHIBIT BY NEGROES

- |   |                       |     |
|---|-----------------------|-----|
| 21 SNOWING                              | Walker W. Smith, Jr.  | ol, |
| 22 AUTUMN ROCK CREEK PARK D C           | Horace G. Anderson    |     |
| 23 MARGUERITE                           | John W. Hardbrick     |     |
| 24 MOTHER KIVANS                        | D. Norman Tillman     |     |
| 25 WASHER WOMEN                         | Hale Aspacio Woodruff |     |
| 26 OLD STREET PARIS                     | Hale Aspacio Woodruff |     |
| 27 I KNOW THE LORD LAID HIS HANDS ON ME | Melvin Gray Johnson   |     |
| 28 THE BANJO PLAYER                     | Hale Aspacio Woodruff |     |
| 29 THE COUNTRY HOME                     | Daisy Chapman Brooks  |     |
| 30 OLD WOMAN PEELING APPLES             | Hale Aspacio Woodruff |     |
| 31 BRIDGE NEAR AVALON FRANCE            | Hale Aspacio Woodruff |     |
| 32 ROAD IN ROCK CREEK PARK              | Horace G. Anderson    |     |
| 33 EVELYN DIMPLE LITTLE                 | Union Schuster Key    |     |
| 34 FINANCE AND COMMERCE                 | Allan Rohan Crite     |     |
| 35 SARAH                                | James A. Porter       |     |
| 36 A CITY OF TOWERS                     | Arthur Diggs          |     |
| 37 VIE THE STRUGGLE FOR SUPERIORITY     | Clifton Thompson Hill |     |
| 38 THE WOODOO TREE                      | Henry B. Jones        |     |
| 39 HOME AGAIN                           | Clifton Thompson Hill |     |
| 40 CAVES OF THE TROLLS                  | Henry B. Jones        |     |

Boston Daily Globe
THURSDAY, MAY 8, 1930

KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL
LIBRARY IS OPENED

Especially for Business
Men of Boston

Well Patronized on First Day—
Has Fund of Trade Data

The Edward Kirstein Memorial Library, on Court sq., was opened to the public at 9 o'clock yesterday morning. The new library, essentially for downtown business men, was well patronized during its opening day.

There was no ceremony attached to the opening. Vice Pres Louis E. Kirstein of the William Filene's Sons Company, who gave the $200,000 which built and furnished the structure, in memory of his father, was away on business. At his suggestion opening formalities were dispensed with, but it is believed dedicatory exercises may take place in the Fall.

Mary Watkins Dietrichson is librarian, assisted by a staff of eight persons. The library is on the site of old Police Station 2.

Passers-by on City Hall av and Court sq stopped to note the picture through the large plate-glass windows of the first floor chamber. They admired the colonial facade of the structure, which is a duplicate of that of the first public library in Boston erected on a Bulfinch design on Franklin pl in 1794.

Statistical matter about the world's general business is available on this first floor. Here are directories of all important United States cities, maps and atlases, timetables and periodicals and the leading magazines of all branches of business and industry.

On the second floor are Government reports and bulletins covering many lines of business, volumes on general business and economic topics. On the shelves of this room are the latest authoritative volumes on practically all lines of general business in all parts of the world.

On the top floor is the room to be devoted to the general public, and its walls are lined with volumes such as are of general rather than business interest. Grace C. Brary is in charge of this room, containing popular literature and the classic authors. The telephone number for this room is Hubbard 3669, while Mrs. Dietrichson, librarian in charge of the business branches, may be telephoned at Hubbard 0860.

THE BOSTON HERALD

THURSDAY, MAY 8, 1930

KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL
LIBRARY IS OPENED

Nearly 1000 persons visited the new Kirstein memorial library at Pl alley and City Hall avenue on its opening day yesterday, and a large proportion of them made use of the statistical and directorial data provided there for the use of business and professional men.

The library, which is the gift to the Boston Public Library of Louis E. Kirstein as a memorial to his father, Edward Kirstein, immediately proved that it fulfilled a need yesterday when scores of downtown business houses sent to the branch for information essential to them.

One of the first acts of Miss Edith Guerrier, supervisor of branches, at the opening of the library yesterday, was to pin the portrait of the Rev. John Cotton, distributed by The Herald yesterday to the reference board on the third floor, along with the story of Cotton written by Charles Knowles Bolton and published in The Herald. A clipping of yesterday's installment of The Herald series, "People You Might

YOU ARE INVITED
TO AN
EXHIBITION OF PAINTING AND SCULPTURE
BY AMERICAN NEGRO ARTISTS
 ARRANGED IN CONNECTION WITH THE HARMON FOUNDATION
 AND SPONSORED BY THE
RACE RELATIONS COMMITTEE OF THE
GREATER BOSTON FEDERATION OF CHURCHES

TO BE HELD IN THE
EXHIBITION ROOM OF THE PUBLIC LIBRARY
OF THE CITY OF BOSTON
APRIL 7-13th, 1930
9.00 A.M. TO 10.00 P.M.
12.00 M. TO 10.00 P.M. ON SUNDAY

MR. CHARLES F. D. BELDEN
 MR. FRANK W. BENSON
 REV. ALFRED V. BLISS
 MR. CHARLES K. BOLTON
 MISS LOUISE WINSOR BROOKS
 MISS FRANCES G. CURTIS
 MRS. META WARRICK FULLER
 MR. PHILIP HALE
 MRS. J. MOTT HALLOWELL
 MRS. MAUD CUNNEY-HARE
 MRS. LAWRENCE ILFELD
 MR. WALTER H. KILHAM
 MR. HAROLD
 METROPOLITAN STUDENT Y. V.

Hale A. W.
 Included in can Negro
 Library Tl

GLOUCESTER HARBOR Allain R. Freeman

THE COUNTRY HOME Darius C. Brooks

Program for the Dedication of The Thomas H. Hoyt Memorial Library

MERRIMAC, MASSACHUSETTS

FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL 11, 1930

□ □ □ □ □

MUSIC Hail to Our Native Land Verdi
 ORPHEUS MALE QUARTET

INVOCATION Rev. Harry S. Lowd, Minister of the Pilgrim
 Congregational Church, Merrimac

MUSIC Whispering Hope Hazethorne
 ORPHEUS MALE QUARTET

ADDRESS OF
 WELCOME Mr. John B. Judkins, Chairman of the Board of Trustees

FINE ARTS EXHIBIT BY NEGROES

- |                               |                            |     |
|-------------------------------|----------------------------|-----|
| 41 CAMILLA                    | S. Ellis Blount            | ol, |
| 42 FRIENDS                    | Albert Alexander Smith     |     |
| 43 MISS FRANCES WATERS        | Henry B. Jones             | on  |
| 44 DOWN HOME                  | Albert Alexander Smith     |     |
| 45 THE MARTYR                 | Albert Alexander Smith     |     |
| 46 BIRAS SPAIN                | Albert Alexander Smith     |     |
| 47 GENERATIONS                | Albert Alexander Smith     |     |
| 48 RAYMOND ROURKE             | Henry B. Jones             |     |
| 49 ELK MOUNTAIN IN SNOW STORM | Arthur G. Winslow          |     |
| 50 CONCARNEAU                 | Palmer Hayden              |     |
| 51 PORT LOUIS                 | Palmer Hayden              | zho |
| 52 THE DANCERS                | Mabel Randolph Brooks      | lic |
| 53 THE PARADE                 | Sargent Johnson            | ose |
| 54 ANDE                       | Lois M. Jones              | es- |
| 55 FLOTTI DE PÉCHE            | Palmer Hayden              | ity |
| 56 LE MATIN                   | Palmer Hayden              | s a |
| 57 DR. WM. H. HUDNUT          | D. Norman Tillman          | ir- |
| 58 KING THE BOATS             | Allain R. Freeman          | ent |
| 59 OWONOCO                    | Simoni, Sir Henry Williams | ing |
| 60 PLANTATION SCENE           | C. A. Robinson             | ade |

Boston Daily Globe

THURSDAY, MAY 8, 1930

KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL LIBRARY IS OPENED

Especially for Business
 Men of Boston

Well Patronized on First Day—
 Has Fund of Trade Data

The Edward Kirstein Memorial Library, on Court sq., was opened to the public at 9 o'clock yesterday morning. The new library, essentially for downtown business men, was well patronized during its opening day.

There was no ceremony attached to the opening. Vice Pres. Louis E. Kirstein of the William Filene's Sons Company, who gave the $200,000 which built and furnished the structure, in memory of his father, was away on business. At his suggestion opening formalities were dispensed with, but it is believed dedicatory exercises may take place in the fall.

Mary Watkins Dietrichson is librarian, assisted by a staff of eight persons. The library is on the site of old Police Station 2.

Passers-by on City Hall av. and Court sq. stopped to note the picture through the large plate-glass windows of the first floor chamber. They admired the colonial facade of the structure, which is a duplicate of that of the first public library in Boston erected on a Bullfinch design on Franklin pl. in 1794.

Statistical matter about the world's general business is available on this first floor. Here are directories of all important United States cities, maps and atlases, timetables and periodicals and the leading magazines of all branches of business and industry.

On the second floor are Government reports and bulletins covering many lines of business, volumes on general business and economic topics. On the shelves of this room are the latest authoritative volumes on practically all lines of general business in all parts of the world.

On the top floor is the room to be devoted to the general public, and its walls are lined with volumes such as are of general rather than business interest. Grace C. Brary is in charge of this room, containing popular literature and the classic authors. The telephone number for this room is Hubbard 1969, while Mrs. Dietrichson, librarian in charge of the business branches, may be telephoned at Hubbard 0960.

THE BOSTON HERALD

THURSDAY, MAY 8, 1930

KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL LIBRARY IS OPENED

Nearly 1000 persons visited the new Kirstein memorial library at Pi alley and City Hall avenue on its opening day yesterday, and a large proportion of them made use of the statistical and directorial data provided there for the use of business and professional men.

The library which is the gift to the Boston Public Library of Louis E. Kirstein as a memorial to his father, Edward Kirstein, immediately proved that it fulfilled a need yesterday when scores of downtown business houses sent to the branch for information essential to them.

One of the first acts of Miss Edith Guerrier, supervisor of branches, at the opening of the library yesterday, was to pin the portrait of the Rev. John Cotton, distributed by The Herald yesterday to the reference board on the third floor, along with the story of Cotton written by Charles Knowles Bolton and published in The Herald. A clipping of yesterday's installment of The Herald series, "People You Might

YOU ARE INVITED
TO AN EXHIBITION OF PAINTING AND SCULPTURE
BY AMERICAN NEGRO ARTISTS
ARRANGED IN CONNECTION WITH THE HARMON FOUNDATION
AND SPONSORED BY THE
RACE RELATIONS COMMITTEE OF THE
GREATER BOSTON FEDERATION OF CHURCHES

TO BE HELD IN THE
EXHIBITION ROOM OF THE PUBLIC LIBRARY
OF THE CITY OF BOSTON
APRIL 7-13th, 1930

9.00 A.M. TO 10.00 P.M.
12.00 M. TO 10.00 P.M. ON SUNDAY

SPO:

MR. CHARLES F. D. BELDEN
MR. FRANK W. BENSON
REV. ALFRED V. BLISS
MR. CHARLES K. BOLTON
MISS LOUISE WINSOR BROOKS
MISS FRANCES G. CURTIS
MRS. META WARRICK FULLER
MR. PHILIP HALE
MRS. J. MOTT HALLOWELL
MRS. MAUD CUNEY-HARE
MRS. LAWRENCE ILFELD
MR. WALTER H. KILHAM
MR. HAROLD
METROPOLITAN STUDENT Y. V.

Hale A. V.
Included i can Negro
Library T

SARAH

James A. Porter

Program for the Dedication of
The Thomas H. Hoyt Memorial Library

MERRIMAC, MASSACHUSETTS

FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL 11, 1930

□ □ □ □ □

MUSIC Hail to Our Native Land Verdi
ORPHEUS MALE QUARTET

INVOCATION Rev. Harry S. Lowd, Minister of the Pilgrim
Congregational Church, Merrimac

MUSIC Whispering Hope Hawthorne
ORPHEUS MALE QUARTET

ADDRESS OF
WELCOME Mr. John B. Judkins, Chairman of the Board of Trustees

FINE ARTS EXHIBIT BY NEGROES

- |                               |                                   |   |
|-------------------------------|-----------------------------------|---|
| 61 FUSION                     | Maudie Irene Owens         | ol,   |
| 62 BLACK AND WHITE            | Albert Alexander Smith     |   |
| 63 WASHERS IN THE SEA         | John F. Toodles            |   |
| 64 GLOUCESTER HARBOR          | Ellen R. Trevelyan         | on  |
| 65 VASE OF GERANIUMS          | Gertrude Johnson           |   |
| 66 HEAD OF BOY                | Sargent Johnson            |   |
| 67 PORTRAIT                   | Palmer Hayden              |   |
| 68 MISS VIRGINIA TUCKER       | Celestine Gustava Johnston |   |
| 69 OLD BLACK JOE              | I. C. Alston               |   |
| 70 PORTRAIT                   | Laura Wheeler Waring       |   |
| 71 A VETERAN OF THE ARGONNE   | Charles Spears, Jr.        | chodic  |
| 72 PORTRAIT                   | Laura Wheeler Waring       |   |
| 73 DORIS                      | John W. Hardrick           | osees-ostitys acir-al-entingadehisisor-nd |
| 74 THE CIVIL WAR VETERAN      | John W. Hardrick           |   |
| 75 MARIE - A CHILD'S PORTRAIT | U. S. Grant Tates          |   |
| 76 NEGRO IN CONGRESS          | Robert Sutton Pines        |   |
| 77 VIRGINIA                   | William F. Grant           |   |
| 78 THE GARDENERS CART         | King Daniel Gamuacay       |   |
| 79 IN TOW ON CHICAGO RIVER    | King Daniel Gamuacay       |   |

Boston Daily Globe

THURSDAY, MAY 8, 1930

KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL
LIBRARY IS OPENED

Especially for Business
Men of Boston

Well Patronized on First Day—
Has Fund of Trade Data

The Edward Kirstein Memorial Library, on Court sq., was opened to the public at 9 o'clock yesterday morning. The new library, essentially for downtown business men, was well patronized during its opening day.

There was no ceremony attached to the opening. Vice Press Louis E. Kirstein of the William Filene's Sons Company, who gave the $200,000 which built and furnished the structure, in memory of his father, was away on business. At his suggestion opening formalities were dispensed with, but it is believed dedicatory exercises may take place in the fall.

Mary Watkins Dietrichson is librarian, assisted by a staff of eight persons. The library is on the site of old Police Station 2.

Passers-by on City Hall av and Court sq stopped to note the picture through the large plate-glass windows of the first floor chamber. They admired the colonial facade of the structure, which is a duplicate of that of the first public library in Boston erected on a Bulfinch design on Franklin pl in 1794.

Statistical matter about the world's general business is available on this first floor. Here are directories of all important United States cities, maps and atlases, timetables and periodicals and the leading magazines of all branches of business and industry.

On the second floor are Government reports and bulletins covering many lines of business, volumes on general business and economic topics. On the shelves of this room are the latest authoritative volumes on practically all lines of general business in all parts of the world.

On the top floor is the room to be devoted to the general public, and its walls are lined with volumes such as are of general rather than business interest. Grace C. Brary is in charge of this room, containing popular literature and the classic authors. The telephone number for this room is Hubbard 9860, while Mrs. Dietrichson, librarian in charge of the business branches, may be telephoned at Hubbard 0860.

THE BOSTON HERALD

THURSDAY, MAY 8, 1930

KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL
LIBRARY IS OPENED

Nearly 1000 persons visited the new Kirstein memorial library at Pi alley and City Hall avenue on its opening day yesterday, and a large proportion of them made use of the statistical and directorial data provided there for the use of business and professional men.

The library, which is the gift to the Boston Public Library of Louis E. Kirstein as a memorial to his father, Edward Kirstein, immediately proved that it fulfilled a need yesterday when scores of downtown business houses sent to the branch for information essential to them.

One of the first acts of Miss Edith Guerrier, supervisor of branches, at the opening of the library yesterday, was to pin the portrait of the Rev. John Cotton, distributed by The Herald yesterday to the reference board on the third floor, along with the story of Cotton written by Charles Knowles Bolton and published in The Herald. A clipping of yesterday's installment of The Herald series, "People You Might

YOU ARE INVITED
TO AN EXHIBITION OF PAINTING AND SCULPTURE
BY AMERICAN NEGRO ARTISTS
ARRANGED IN CONNECTION WITH THE HARMON FOUNDATION
AND SPONSORED BY THE
RACE RELATIONS COMMITTEE OF THE
GREATER BOSTON FEDERATION OF CHURCHES

TO BE HELD IN THE
EXHIBITION ROOM OF THE PUBLIC LIBRARY
OF THE CITY OF BOSTON
APRIL 7-13th, 1930
9.00 A.M. TO 10.00 P.M.
12.00 M. TO 10.00 P.M. ON SUNDAY

SPONSORS

MR. CHARLES F. D. BELDEN
MR. FRANK W. BENSON
REV. ALFRED V. BLISS
MR. CHARLES K. BOLTON
MISS LOUISE WINSOR BROOKS
MISS FRANCES G. CURTIS
MRS. META WARRICK FULLER
MR. PHILIP HALE
MRS. J. MOTT HALLOWELL
MRS. MAUD CUNEY-HARE
MRS. LAWRENCE ILFELD
MR. WALTER H. KILHAM
MR. HAROLD
METROPOLITAN STUDENT Y.

Hale A. W.
Included in Negro
Library Tl

- |    |                               |   |
|----|-------------------------------|---|
| 10 | FINE ARTS EXHIBIT BY NEGROES  |   |
| 80 | THE SPIRIT OF CHICAGO         | King Daniel Gamaray   |
| 81 | THE SPIRIT OF TRANSPORTATION  | King Daniel Gamaray   |
| 82 | AN ARTIST                     | Ellis Wilson  |
| 83 | BANKS OF CHALLOON             | Henry B. Jones  |
| 84 | ESTER CHARCOM                 | Sargent Johnson   |
| 85 | MRS. HENRY BUTLER             | D. Norman Fillman   |
| 86 | MRS. G                        | William E. Grant  |
| 87 | CLIMBING UP THE MOUNTAIN      | Malvin Gray Johnson   |
| 88 | HEAD OF A NEGRO               | Elizabeth Prophet   |
| 89 | SILENCE                       | Elizabeth Prophet   |
| 90 | ANDERSON                      | Sargent Johnson   |
| 91 | BOUND                         | Sargent Johnson   |
| 92 | ESTER (SCULPTURE)             | Sargent Johnson   |
| 93 | GAMIN                         | Augusta Savage  |
| 94 | KUTTER                        | H. Edward Marshall  |
| 95 | HEAD OF A SOLDIER             | H. Edward Marshall  |
| 96 | PORTFOLIO OF UNFRAMED WORK BY | W. M. FarrowAllan R. FreedsonPalmer HaydenSargent Johnson |

Program for the Dedication of
The Thomas H. Hoyt Memorial Library

MERRIMAC, MASSACHUSETTS

FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL 11, 1930

□ □ □ □ □

- |                       |  |           |
|-----------------------|--|-----------|
| MUSIC                 | Hail to Our Native Land  | Verdi     |
|                       | ORPHEUS MALE QUARTET   |           |
| INVOCATION            | Rev. Harry S. Lowd, Minister of the PilgrimCongregational Church, Merrimac |           |
| MUSIC                 | Whispering Hope  | Hawthorne |
|                       | ORPHEUS MALE QUARTET   |           |
| ADDRESS OFWELCOME | Mr. John B. Judkins, Chairman of the Board ofTrustees                      |           |

THE BANJO PLAYER

Hale A. Woodruff

BILBAS - SPAIN

Albert Alexander Smith

Boston Daily Globe

THURSDAY, MAY 8, 1930

KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL
LIBRARY IS OPENED

Especially for Business
Men of Boston

Well Patronized on First Day—
Has Fund of Trade Data

The Edward Kirstein Memorial Library, on Court sq., was opened to the public at 9 o'clock yesterday morning. The new library, essentially for downtown business men, was well patronized during its opening day.

There was no ceremony attached to the opening. Vice Pres Louis E. Kirstein of the William Filene's Sons Company, who gave the $200,000 which built and furnished the structure, in memory of his father, was away on business. At his suggestion opening formalities were dispensed with, but it is believed dedicatory exercises may take place in the Fall.

Mary Watkins Dietrichson is librarian, assisted by a staff of eight persons. The library is on the site of old Police Station 2.

Passers-by on City Hall av and Court sq stopped to note the picture through the large plate-glass windows of the first floor chamber. They admired the colonial facade of the structure, which is a duplicate of that of the first public library in Boston erected on a Bulfinch design on Franklin pl in 1784.

Statistical matter about the world's general business is available on this first floor. Here are directories of all important United States cities, maps and atlases, timetables and periodicals and the leading magazines of all branches of business and industry.

On the second floor are Government reports and bulletins covering many lines of business, volumes on general business and economic topics. On the shelves of this room are the latest authoritative volumes on practically all lines of general business in all parts of the world.

On the top floor is the room to be devoted to the general public, and its walls are lined with volumes such as are of general rather than business interest. Grace C. Brary is in charge of this room, containing popular literature and the classic authors. The telephone number for this room is Hubbard 1909, while Mrs. Dietrichson, librarian in charge of the business branches, may be telephoned at Hubbard 0900.

THE BOSTON HERALD

THURSDAY, MAY 8, 1930

KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL
LIBRARY IS OPENED

Nearly 1000 persons visited the new Kirstein memorial library at Pi alley and City Hall avenue on its opening day yesterday, and a large proportion of them made use of the statistical and directorial data provided there for the use of business and professional men.

The library, which is the gift to the Boston Public Library of Louis E. Kirstein as a memorial to his father, Edward Kirstein, immediately proved that it fulfilled a need yesterday when scores of downtown business houses sent to the branch for information essential to them.

One of the first acts of Miss Edith Guerrier, supervisor of branches, at the opening of the library yesterday, was to pin the portrait of the Rev. John Cotton, distributed by The Herald yesterday to the reference board on the third floor, along with the story of Cotton written by Charles Knowles Bolton and published in The Herald. A clipping of yesterday's instalment of The Herald series, "People You Might

YOU ARE INVITED
TO AN
EXHIBITION OF PAINTING AND SCULPTURE
BY AMERICAN NEGRO ARTISTS
ARRANGED IN CONNECTION WITH THE HARMON FOUNDATION
AND SPONSORED BY THE
RACE RELATIONS COMMITTEE OF THE
GREATER BOSTON FEDERATION OF CHURCHES

TO BE HELD IN THE
EXHIBITION ROOM OF THE PUBLIC LIBRARY
OF THE CITY OF BOSTON
APRIL 7-13th, 1930
9.00 A.M. TO 10.00 P.M.
12.00 M. TO 10.00 P.M. ON SUNDAY

MR. CHARLES F. D. BELDEN
MR. FRANK W. BENSON
REV. ALFRED V. BLISS
MR. CHARLES K. BOLTON
MISS LOUISE WINSOR BROOKS
MISS FRANCES G. CURTIS
MRS. META WARRICK FULLER
MR. PHILIP HALE
MRS. J. MOTT HALLOWELL
MRS. MAUD CUNEY-HARE
MRS. LAWRENCE ILFELD
MR. WALTER H. KILHAM
MR. HAROLD
METROPOLITAN STUDENT Y.

MISS FRANCES WATERS
Henry B. Jones

ESTER
Sargent John

Hale A
Include can Ne
Library

WASHER WOMEN
Hale A Woodruff

Program for the Dedication of
The Thomas H. Hoyt Memorial Library
MERRIMAC, MASSACHUSETTS

FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL 11, 1930

- MUSIC Hail to Our Native Land Verdi
ORPHEUS MALE QUARTET
- INVOCATION Rev. Harry S. Lowd, Minister of the Pilgrim
Congregational Church, Merrimac
- MUSIC Whispering Hope Hawthorne
ORPHEUS MALE QUARTET
- ADDRESS OF WELCOME Mr. John B. Judkins, Chairman of the Board of Trustees

GENERATIONS
Albert Alexander Smith

PICNICKING
Allison I. Ogilvie

A CITY OF TOWERS
Arthur Duggs

Boston Daily Globe
THURSDAY, MAY 8, 1930

KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL
LIBRARY IS OPENED

Especially for Business
Men of Boston

Well Patronized on First Day—
Has Fund of Trade Data

The Edward Kirstein Memorial Library, on Court sq, was opened to the public at 9 o'clock yesterday morning. The new library, essentially for downtown business men, was well patronized during its opening day. There was no ceremony attached to the opening. Vice Pres Louis E. Kirstein of the William Filene's Sons Company, who gave the $200,000 which built and furnished the structure, in memory of his father, was away on business. At his suggestion opening formalities were dispensed with, but it is believed dedicatory exercises may take place in the Fall.

Mary Watkins Dietrichson is librarian, assisted by a staff of eight persons. The library is on the site of old Police Station 2.

Passers-by on City Hall av and Court sq stopped to note the picture through the large plate-glass windows of the first floor chamber. They admired the colonial facade of the structure, which is a duplicate of that of the first public library in Boston erected on a Bulfinch design on Franklin pl in 1794.

Statistical matter about the world's general business is available on this first floor. Here are directories of all important United States cities, maps and atlases, timetables and periodicals and the leading magazines of all branches of business and industry.

On the second floor are Government reports and bulletins covering many lines of business, volumes on general business and economic topics. On the shelves of this room are the latest authoritative volumes on practically all lines of general business in all parts of the world.

On the top floor is the room to be devoted to the general public, and its walls are lined with volumes such as are of general rather than business interest. Grace C. Brary is in charge of this room, containing popular literature and the classic authors. The telephone number for this room is Hubbard 1969, while Mrs Dietrichson, librarian in charge of the business branches, may be telephoned at Hubbard 0860.

THE BOSTON HERALD

THURSDAY, MAY 8, 1930

KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL
LIBRARY IS OPENED

Nearly 1000 persons visited the new Kirstein memorial library at Pi alley and City Hall avenue on its opening day yesterday, and a large proportion of them made use of the statistical and directory data provided there for the use of business and professional men.

The library, which is the gift to the Boston Public Library of Louis E. Kirstein as a memorial to his father, Edward Kirstein, immediately proved that it fulfilled a need yesterday when scores of downtown business houses sent to the branch for information essential to them.

One of the first acts of Miss Edith Guerrier, supervisor of branches, at the opening of the library yesterday, was to pin the portrait of the Rev. John Cotton, distributed by The Herald yesterday to the reference board on the third floor, along with the story of Cotton written by Charles Knowles Bolton and published in The Herald. A clipping of yesterday's installment of The Herald series, "People You Might

YOU ARE INVITED
TO AN EXHIBITION OF PAINTING AND SCULPTURE
BY AMERICAN NEGRO ARTISTS
ARRANGED IN CONNECTION WITH THE HARMON FOUNDATION
AND SPONSORED BY THE
RACE RELATIONS COMMITTEE OF THE
GREATER BOSTON FEDERATION OF CHURCHES

TO BE HELD IN THE
EXHIBITION ROOM OF THE PUBLIC LIBRARY
OF THE CITY OF BOSTON
APRIL 7-13th, 1930

9.00 A.M. TO 10.00 P.M.
12.00 M. TO 10.00 P.M. ON SUNDAY

MR. CHARLES F. D. BELDEN
MR. FRANK W. BENSON
REV. ALFRED V. BLISS
MR. CHARLES K. BOLTON
MISS LOUISE WINSOR BROOKS
MISS FRANCES G. CURTIS
MRS. META WARRICK FULLER
MR. PHILIP HALE
MRS. J. MOTT HALLOWELL
MRS. MAUD CUNNEY-HARE
MRS. LAWRENCE ILFELD
MR. WALTER H. KILHAM
MR. HAROLD METROPOLITAN STUDENT Y.

Hale A.
Included can Negt
Library

ANDERSON

Sargant Johnson

Program for the Dedication of
The Thomas H. Hoyt Memorial Library

MERRIMAC, MASSACHUSETTS

FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL 11, 1930

□ □ □ □ □

- |                       |  |                   |
|-----------------------|--|-------------------|
| MUSIC                 | Hail to Our Native LandORPHEUS MALE QUARTET  | Verdi      |
| INVOCATION            | Rev. Harry S. Lowd, Minister of the PilgrimCongregational Church, Merrimac   |                   |
| MUSIC                 | Whispering HopeORPHEUS MALE QUARTET  | Hasethorne |
| ADDRESS OFWELCOME | Mr. John B. Judkins, Chairman of the Board ofTrustees  |                   |
| DEDICATION            | Presentation of the keys by Mr. H. J. Carlson ofCoolidge & Carlson, the ArchitectsAcceptance of the keys by Mr. Andrew O. Nicol,Chairman of the Board of Selectmen |                   |
| GREETINGS             | Mr. Charles F. D. Belden, Chairman of the Mass-achusetts Free Public Library Commission  |                   |
| MUSIC                 | In Silent MeadORPHEUS MALE QUARTET   | Emerson    |
| ADDRESS               | The Puritan BenefactorHON. CHARLES I. PETTINGELL   |                   |
| MUSIC                 | The Star Spangled Banner   |                   |

May 7, 1930

The Boston Post

THE KIRSTEIN LIBRARY

Today sees the opening of the Kirstein Memorial Library in City Hall avenue. As it is intended as a business man's reference library, so it is merely opened, without any fuss and feathers. At 9 o'clock it will be ready for work—and it expects to do work of a very practical and useful kind. Some concession to the general run of readers will be made, however, for on the third floor will be found current works of fiction, books relating to old Boston, encyclopedias and a considerable number of weekly and monthly magazines. It will be a grand place for the "tired business man" to browse in. The whole library will be in charge of Mr. Dietrichson, who was formerly connected with a public library system in Minneapolis.

This beautiful structure, a close copy of Bulfinch's "Lionel Crescent," built in 1794, is, as almost everybody knows, a gift to the city of Boston by Louis E. Kirstein as a memorial to his father, Edward Kirstein. It is a discriminating and valuable present, as well as a permanent and gracious monument. In building it Mr. Kirstein shows his gratitude to the city and his affection for his parent, at the same time. It is rarely that a man has such an opportunity and uses it so effectively and well.

Boston Daily Globe

THURSDAY, MAY 8, 1930

KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL
LIBRARY IS OPENED

Especially for Business
Men of Boston

Well Patronized on First Day—
Has Fund of Trade Data

The Edward Kirstein Memorial Library, on Court sq, was opened to the public at 9 o'clock yesterday morning. The new library, essentially for downtown business men, was well patronized during its opening day.

There was no ceremony attached to the opening. Vice Pres Louis E. Kirstein of the William Filene's Sons Company, who gave the $200,000 which built and furnished the structure, in memory of his father, was away on business. At his suggestion opening formalities were dispensed with, but it is believed dedicatory exercises may take place in the Fall.

Mary Watkins Dietrichson is librarian, assisted by a staff of eight persons. The library is on the site of old Police Station 2.

Passers-by on City Hall av and Court sq stopped to note the picture through the large plate-glass windows of the first floor chamber. They admired the colonial facade of the structure, which is a duplicate of that of the first public library in Boston erected on a Bulfinch design on Franklin pl in 1794.

Statistical matter about the world's general business is available on this first floor. Here are directories of all important United States cities, maps and atlases, timetables and periodicals and the leading magazines of all branches of business and industry.

On the second floor are Government reports and bulletins covering many lines of business, volumes on general business and economic topics. On the shelves of this room are the latest authoritative volumes on practically all lines of general business in all parts of the world.

On the top floor is the room to be devoted to the general public, and its walls are lined with volumes such as are of general rather than business interest. Grace C. Brary is in charge of this room, containing popular literature and the classic authors. The telephone number for this room is Hubbard 1969, while Mrs. Dietrichson, librarian in charge of the business branches, may be telephoned at Hubbard 0960.

THE BOSTON HERALD

THURSDAY, MAY 8, 1930

KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL
LIBRARY IS OPENED

Nearly 1000 persons visited the new Kirstein memorial library at Pi Alley and City Hall avenue on its opening day yesterday, and a large proportion of them made use of the statistical and directory data provided there for the use of business and professional men.

The library, which is the gift to the Boston Public Library of Louis E. Kirstein as a memorial to his father, Edward Kirstein, immediately proved that it fulfilled a need yesterday when scores of downtown business houses sent to the branch for information essential to them.

One of the first acts of Miss Edith Guerrier, supervisor of branches, at the opening of the library yesterday, was to pin the portrait of the Rev. John Cotton, distributed by The Herald yesterday to the reference board on the third floor, along with the story of Cotton written by Charles Knowles Bolton and published in The Herald. A clipping of yesterday's instalment of The Herald series, "People You Might

BANKER &amp; TRADESMAN

PART II

REAL ESTATE NEWS SECTION

BOSTON, APRIL 16, 1930

Kirstein Library Will Give Valuable Service to Real Estate Interests

REAL estate dealers, real estate owners, and persons generally who have to do with real estate while in or near the central business district of Boston will find of great convenience the Kirstein Memorial Library, the building for which, in Court square, close to City Hall, will be completed in the coming summer.

Inquiries made of Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, and Arthur H. Cole, administrative curator of the Baker Library of the Harvard University Graduate School of Business Administration, which are collaborating in the development of the Kirstein Library, has satisfied REAL ESTATE NEWS that the new downtown institution will supply a definite need and will come to be greatly appreciated by real estate men and business people generally.

Assurance is given that all the essential material will be found on the shelves of the new library. While the list is not yet completed, it is learned that the material will be largely current. For research and related information the other libraries will be freely called upon. At the Kirstein Library there will be, for instance, atlases of Boston, atlases giving valuations of downtown districts of a hundred or more other large cities, street maps of Massachusetts and New England cities, of a hundred or so principal American cities outside New England, detailed large maps of Boston, New York and Chicago, and maps of at least six Canadian and eight other foreign cities.

There will also be commercial atlases of the United States, United States Geological Survey topographical maps of New England, oil and gas maps, power maps showing the location of power stations and giving transmission laws, etc., and maps showing coal regions. Also circulating books on real estate selling, real estate law, real estate financing, appraising, management of buildings, etc., which can be borrowed. Likewise numerous magazines which deal with real estate and building matters, pamphlets and reports by state and city departments and by chambers of commerce, and reports of services supplying information to real estate and building interests.

May 8, 1930

POST, BOSTON, MASS.

Hundreds of Hub Folk Visit Kirstein Library

PHILIPS PETROLEUM CO. has formed a new company, capitalized at $100,000, to develop and operate oil properties in the Philippines. The new company is a subsidiary of the Phillips Petroleum Co. and is to be organized under the laws of the Philippines. The new company is to be organized under the laws of the Philippines. The new company is to be organized under the laws of the Philippines.

PHILIPS PETROLEUM CO. has formed a new company, capitalized at $100,000, to develop and operate oil properties in the Philippines. The new company is a subsidiary of the Phillips Petroleum Co. and is to be organized under the laws of the Philippines. The new company is to be organized under the laws of the Philippines. The new company is to be organized under the laws of the Philippines.

PHILIPS PETROLEUM CO. has formed a new company, capitalized at $100,000, to develop and operate oil properties in the Philippines. The new company is a subsidiary of the Phillips Petroleum Co. and is to be organized under the laws of the Philippines. The new company is to be organized under the laws of the Philippines. The new company is to be organized under the laws of the Philippines.

March 30, 1930
MORNING GLOBE, BOSTON, MASS.

FEW QUESTIONS THIS MAN CANNOT ANSWER

Pierce Buckley, Bates Hall Custodian, Has For 39 Years Been a Mine of Information to Public Library Seekers of Knowledge

PIERCE BUCKLEY

Probably no one in Boston has such a queer assortment of questions to answer in the course of a day's work as Pierce Buckley, custodian of Bates Hall at the Boston Public Library.

One minute he's helping a proud parent name a baby. The next he's telling a sweet young thing married to a big brute of a husband where she can find the divorce laws of the State of Massachusetts.

Again he's acting as a sort of consulting editor for a college professor writing a book, or digging up a picture of a long since destroyed colonial building of which someone wants to construct a replica, or telling someone how he can find out who his great-grandfather was.

First Aid to the Public

There are few questions for which he can't provide some sort of answer, for of all the library officials who have direct contact with the public at the central library, he has the longest experience. April 6 he will have completed his 39th year as an employee of the Boston Public Library.

He came into the library as a youngster in his teens four years before the Stanford White building was built at Copley sq. His life-work began in the old building on Boylston st.

Entering with only a grammar school education behind him, he has since made himself a linguist, a widely recognized authority on colonial clocks in particular and antiques in general, and so expert a librarian in every branch of the subject that he is a consultant of experts, a first aid to college professors and editors.

"Memory is the most important element in the make-up of a successful librarian," says he.

"I don't mean that you should give yourselves up to indiscriminate memorizing. They must train their memory intelligently, selectively. They must remember not only the names of books and authors, but information inside books that is often not listed in the indices.

Little Trick of Memory

"Frequently some little trick of memory will save a librarian hours or possibly even days of research. Recently I was asked to find a picture of the library that once stood at what was called Tontine's Crescent at the corner of Franklin and Arch sts. It was needed to serve as model in designing the new Kirstein Memorial Library near City Hall.

"No such picture was listed in the catalogues. But fortunately I had once, years ago, seen one in a collection of other pictures of bygone Boston. Within a few minutes I was able to produce it, saving myself what might have been as hopeless a job as hunting a needle in a haystack.

"Not that we don't often hunt needles in haystacks and like it. No librarian ever gets quite such a horn out of life as when he gets a

In every great library there are odd characters who come day after day and even year after year to pursue some obscure line of investigation. Some of them report eight or 10 hours a day, studying interminably behind heaped-up books, making intricate notes, piling up countless pages of manuscripts.

Most of such manuscripts are probably left to yellow in some dusty attic, but real books that live to find real live publishers get written there, too, with the tireless assistance of Mr. Buckley and his cohorts.

Winston Churchill, author of "The Crisis," has done much research recently he wrote up the genealogies of the founders of Walpole) he holds the cult of ancestor worship in general derision and is pitilessly efficient in wrecking illusions that have no foundation on fact.

Longest Name in the Language

If you think you're descended from William the Conqueror or one of the brothers of Joan of Arc, but have never checked up for sure, perhaps it's just as well not to approach Mr. Buckley on the subject, for expert that he is (recently he wrote up the genealogies of the founders of Walpole) he holds the cult of ancestor worship in general derision and is pitilessly efficient in wrecking illusions that have no foundation on fact.

"Personally, so long as I know who my grandfather was, I'd rather let my ancestors rest," says he. "You start digging back into family origins and you dig up too many family skeletons, no matter who you are. They happen in the very best families."

People who take the naming of their offspring very seriously, wanting to know the full meaning and history of a name before they bestow it, come to him to get directed to books on that subject.

"People often ask for something different in a name, something not heard every day. I like to suggest the name of the brother of Praisegod Barebone of Cromwell's day. It is If-Christ-Had-Not-Died-For-Thee-Thou-Wouldst-Have-Been-Damned Barebone.

"It's one of the longest names in the English language. Probably they called the boy something for short, but I won't venture to say that."

Rich and interesting as are his library experiences, it's all in the matter of a day's work, and Mr. Buckley would rather talk about something else. He has two major hobbies. One is Boston streets, the other old clocks.

Old Clocks His Hobby

Old Boston streets, their names and histories, have long been a major passion with Mr. Buckley. He used to spend all his spare time exploring them, running down their past. He can direct you to Broad at and Rat alley, tell you why Temple pl was once called Turnagain alley and why well-groomed Boylston at once presented itself as Frog lane.

When he isn't collecting rare and exotic Boston streets he's collecting clocks—banjo, Wilford, Curtis clocks. He's a past master of their names, makes and histories. His home, he says, is in the Holy

SPECIAL LIBRARIES

Vol. 21

April, 1930

No. 4

How The Public Library Serves The Business Man

THE EDWARD KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL LIBRARY.
The New Business Branch of the Boston Public Library

nearly 10 cities in the United States which are giving business library service, but not more than a dozen give this service through a separate business branch.

John Cotton Dana who started that first business branch library, was a believer in the great value of that sort of information and he started the business branch library in Newark in the face of severe criticism from many of the old-type librarians. But he became in a few years the most valuable librarian in this country, if not in the world, if value is to be measured by salary received, for he was given the largest salary ever paid at that time to a librarian.

The Edward Kirstein Memorial Library will include the best features of all the other business branch libraries in this country, and will have other additional distinctive advantages. For some years the Boston Public Library, under the direction of Charles F. D. Belden, has had a working arrangement with the great Harvard Business Library by which the books of that collection are made available to the Boston Public Library. By another arrangement the books of the Harvard University Library, the third largest collection in America, are made available. Mr. Belden also hopes to make an arrangement with the many special libraries in Boston for co-operation in

May 8, 1930
AMERICAN, BOSTON, MASS.

OPEN KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL LIBRARY

Beautiful Structure Is Located in Heart of Business and Financial District

The Kirstein Memorial Library building on City Hall ave., housing the only business branch of the Boston Public Library and also a general circulating and reference branch, with several excellent collections of books, was opened to-day without ceremony.

Scores passed through the portals to inspect the structure and make use of its facilities throughout the day.

The site is in the heart of the business and financial district, where police station 2 formerly stood.

The building, with a striking facade of red brick and white trimmings, patterned after a design of Bulfinch, was built by Louis E. Kirstein vice president of William Filene's Sons Company and a Boston Public Library trustee, in memory of his father, Edward Kirstein.

The first and second floors are occupied by the Business Branch, and there are many volumes and periodicals with mines of information for merchants and students of business.

There is a mezzanine floor, but the third floor may well prove the most popular, for it has books on fiction, biography, fine arts, science, home gardens, sociology, philosophy, drama, religion and literature for general circulation.

Friday, May 9, 1930

Edward Kirstein Memorial Library Is Opened

No Pomp or Ceremony — Louis Kirstein Donor of Building—New Branch of Boston Public Library for Business Men Particularly

The Edward Kirstein Memorial Library at 20 Court square was opened to the public at 9 o'clock on Wednesday morning with no pomp or ceremony. At the suggestion of Louis Kirstein, the donor of the building, opening formalities were dispensed with, and the new branch of the Boston Public Library in the heart of the downtown district will simply declare itself open with a minimum of preliminary ceremony.

The new branch, a three-story building, is located on the site of the old Police Station No. 2. In its facade the architects have followed closely the design of the "Tontine Crescent," by Charles Bulfinch, erected in 1794 in Franklin place and occupied by the Boston Library, the only collection of books at that time open to public use in Boston.

On the first two floors of the new building the business branch is situated, while the third floor is occupied by a unit of the Public Library's regular branch system, which will be known as the Kirstein Branch.

Each floor is equipped with tables for reading, with additional space on a balcony on the second floor. The interior, as a whole, is restful and unassuming and without any evidence of a striving for a "period" effect.

Consulting Means

The outstanding feature of the new branch, considering its purpose as a downtown utility, is the fact that it represents an almost effortless means of obtaining consulting books. It is only a step or two from one classification to another or from one department to another. There are no mile-long corridors to tramp, and a man can browse through the shelves themselves, instead of trying to do his browsing over a pneumatic tube, leading to remote and invisible stacks.

The building is conveniently situated, yet admirably secluded from the din of traffic, and should prove equally enticing for the person who wants his books in a hurry or one who has an hour or two to spare for reading in a pleasant atmosphere of isolation from the downtown hubbub.

The library will be open from 9 to 6 each day and will be closed on Sundays. It offers telephonic service on many questions which can be handled in this way for seekers of statistical information. The number of the business branch is Hubbard 0860.

Varied Information

Statistical matter about the world's general business is available on this first floor. Here are directories of all important United States cities, maps and atlases, timetables and periodicals and the leading magazines of all branches of business and industry.

On the second floor are government reports and bulletins covering many lines of business, volumes on general business and economic topics. On the shelves of this room are the latest authoritative volumes on practically all lines of general business in all parts of the world.

On the top floor is the room to be devoted to the general public, and its walls are lined with volumes such as are of general rather than business interest. Grace C. Barry is in charge of this room, containing popular literature and the classic authors. Mrs. Dietrichson is librarian in charge of the business branches.

downtown business branch will supply a service which will be greatly appreciated by real estate men and business people generally.

Assurance is given that all the essential material will be found on the shelves of the new library. While the list is not yet completed, it is known that the material will be largely current. For research and related information the other libraries will be freely called upon. At the Kirstein Library there will be, for instance, atlases of Boston, atlases giving valuations of downtown districts of a hundred or more other large cities, street maps of Massachusetts and New England cities, of a hundred or so principal American cities outside New England, detailed large maps of Boston, New York and Chicago, and maps of at least six Canadian and eight other foreign cities.

There will also be commercial atlases of the United States, United States Geological Survey topographical maps of New England, oil and gas maps, power maps showing the location of power stations and power transmission lines, etc., and maps showing coal regions. Also circulating books on real estate selling, real estate law, real estate financing, appraising, management of buildings, etc., which can be borrowed. Likewise numerous magazines which deal with real estate and building matters, pamphlets and reports by state and city departments and by chambers of commerce, and reports of surveys supplying information to real estate and building interests.

May 8, 1930

POST, BOSTON, MASS.

Hundreds of Hub Folk Visit Kirstein Library

INTERIOR OF KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL LIBRARY

The pleasant reading room of the Kirstein Memorial Library, donated by Louis Kirstein for the use of business men. The library is located on City Hall avenue, opposite City Hall.

Opening of the Kirstein Memorial Library at City Hall avenue and Williams court, yesterday, attracted hundreds of visitors despite the fact that the downtown business branch started to operate without official services or ceremony. At the request of Louis E. Kirstein, who contributed the beautiful new building to the city as a memorial to his late father, the Board of Library Trustees of which he is a member, arranged an opening programme, but simply made the gift available for the public in a business-like way. Scores of readers took advantage of the new opportunity to select business books and magazines on the first two floors of the building, while others made use of the third floor which will be operated as a regular branch library where residents of the city may obtain books of every character without the necessity of going to the central library or the branches in the residential districts.

PIERCE BUCKLEY

Probably no one in Boston has such a queer assortment of questions to answer in the course of a day's work as Pierce Buckley, custodian of Bates Hall at the Boston Public Library.

One minute he's helping a proud parent name a baby. The next he's telling a sweet young thing married to a big brute of a husband where she can find the divorce laws of the State of Massachusetts.

Again he's acting as a sort of consulting editor for a college professor writing a book, or digging up a picture of a long since destroyed colonial building of which someone wants to construct a replica, or telling someone how he can find out who his great-grandfather was.

First Aid to the Public

There are few questions for which he can't provide some sort of answer, for of all the library officials who have direct contact with the public at the central library, he has the longest experience. April 6 he will have completed his 39th year as an employee of the Boston Public Library.

He came into the library as a youngster in his teens four years before the Stanford White building was built at Copley sq. His life-work began in the old building on Boylston st.

Entering with only a grammar school education behind him, he has since made himself a linguist, a widely recognized authority on colonial clocks, in particular and antiques in general, and so expert a librarian in every branch of the subject that he is a consultant of experts, a first aid to college professors and editors.

"Memory is the most important element in the make-up of a successful librarian," says he. "I don't mean that librarians should give themselves up to indiscriminate memorizing. They must train their memory intelligently, selectively. They must remember not only the names of books and authors, but information inside books that is often not listed in the indices."

Little Trick of Memory

"Frequently some little trick of memory will save a librarian hours or possibly even days of research. Recently I was asked to find a picture of the library that once stood at what was called Tontine's Crescent at the corner of Franklin and Arch sts. It was needed to serve as a model in designing the new Kirstein Memorial Library near City Hall.

"No such picture was listed in the catalogues. But fortunately I had once, years ago, seen one in a collection of other pictures of bygone Boston. Within a few minutes I was able to produce it, saving myself what might have been as hopeless a job as hunting a needle in a haystack."

"Not that we don't often hunt needles in haystacks and like it. No born librarian ever gets quite such a thrill out of life as when he gets a difficult assignment, something that takes him hours of first-class detective work to sleuth down."

Mr. Buckley probably knows every classification number in the Boston Public Library. He never deliberately memorized them. They just oozed into his mind in the course of 39 years of dealing with them.

They make him a shark at remembering people's telephone numbers. He doesn't remember yours as Waltham 2500, you're Waltham, French history to him. Or Hancock, American history. Or Aspinwall, biochemistry.

Library's Odd Characters

Sitting at his desk in the center of Bates Hall, opposite that little stone balcony where visitors to Boston like to pause and muse under the gray barrel vault, he has a pantherish way of sliding his dark eyes about the hall now and then, sizing up the house, as it were, seeing how many of the regulars are there.

In every great library there are odd characters who come day after day, and even year after year to pursue some obscure line of investigation. Some of them report eight or 10 hours a day, studying intently, behind heaped-up books, making intricate notes, piling up countless pages of manuscripts.

Most of such manuscripts are probably left to yellow in some dusty attic, but real books that live to find real publishers get written there, too, with the tireless assistance of Mr. Buckley and his cohorts. Winston Churchill, author of "The Crisis," has done much research there. Pancoast's "American Literature" was written in Bates Hall and Kuno Francke's "Social Forces in German Literature," Caroline Dicknor, armed by special dispensation with scissors and paste pot, put together "The World's Best Literature" under Mr. Buckley's nose.

Longest Name in the Language

If you think you're descended from William the Conqueror or one of the brothers of Joan of Arc, but have never checked up for sure, perhaps it's just as well not to approach Mr. Buckley on the subject, for expert that he is (recently he wrote up the genealogies of the founders of Walpole) he holds the cult of ancestor worship in great derision and is pitilessly efficient in wrecking illusions that have no foundation on fact.

"Personally, so long as I know who my grandfather was, I'd rather let my ancestors rest," says he. "You start digging back into family origins and you dig up too many family skeletons, no matter who you are. They happen in the very best families."

People who take the naming of their offspring very seriously, wanting to know the full meaning and history of a name before they bestow it, come to him to get directed to books on that subject.

"People often ask for something different in a name, something not heard every day. I like to suggest the name of the brother of Praisegod Barbone of Cromwell's day. It is If-Christ-Had-Not-Died-For-Thee-Thou-Wouldst-Have-Been-Damned Barbone."

"It's one of the longest names in the English language. Probably they called the boy something for short, but I won't venture to say that."

Rich and interesting as are his library experiences, it's all in the matter of a day's work, and Mr. Buckley would rather talk about something else. He has two major hobbies. One is Boston streets, the other old clocks.

Old Clocks 225 Hobby

Old Boston streets, their names and histories, have long been a major passion with Mr. Buckley. He used to spend all his spare time exploring them, running down their past. He can direct you to Broad st and East alley, tell you why Temple pl was once called Turnagain alley and why well-groomed Boylston st once presented itself as Frog lane.

When he isn't collecting rare and exotic Boston streets he's collecting clocks—banjo, Willard, Curtis clocks. He's a past master of their names, makes and histories.

His home, he says, is "in the Holy Land," in Egypt, and if you happen past his house on the stroke of the hour you will be impressed, for there will be no less than 25 clocks all chiming the hour, each in his own tongue.

Not that they all hit it exactly on the same stroke. To synchronize 25 pedigreed colonial clocks so that they will hit 12 noon on the same tick is beyond human ingenuity. So from five of to five after there is sweet clamor, and after you think the chorus is over and done with, some lovely old grandfather's clock sets up a mellow tolling all alone.

And by that time it's nearly time to strike the half-hour.

One would think there would never be any doubt as to the time of day in the Buckley menage. But in spite of his 25 timepieces, Mr. Buckley, who has a clear conscience and sleeps soundly, overslept regularly until last Christmas, when his sister came to the rescue by presenting him an alarm clock.

THE EDWARD KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL LIBRARY.
The New Business Branch of the Boston Public Library

nearly 70 cities in the United States which are giving business library service, but not more than a dozen give this service through a separate business branch.

John Cotton Dana who started that first business branch library, was a believer in the great value of that sort of information and he started the business branch library in Newark in the face of severe criticism from many of the old-type librarians. But he became in a few years the most valuable librarian in this country, if not in the world, if value is to be measured by salary received, for he was given the largest salary ever paid at that time to a librarian.

The Edward Kirstein Memorial Library will include the best features of all the other business branch libraries in this country, and will have other additional distinctive advantages. For some years the Boston Public Library, under the direction of Charles E. D. Belden, has had a working arrangement with the great Harvard Business Library by which the books of that collection are made available to the Boston Public Library. By another arrangement the books of the Harvard University Library, the third largest collection in America, are made available. Mr. Belden also hopes to make an arrangement with the many special libraries in Boston for co-operation in

May 8, 1930

AMERICAN, BOSTON, MASS.

OPEN KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL LIBRARY

Beautiful Structure Is Located in Heart of Business and Financial District

The Kirstein Memorial Library building on City Hall ave., housing the only business branch of the Boston Public Library and also a general circulating and reference branch, with several excellent collections of books, was opened today without ceremony.

Scores passed through the portals to inspect the structure and make use of its facilities throughout the day.

The site is in the heart of the business and financial district, where police station 2 formerly stood.

The building, with a striking facade of red brick and white trimmings, patterned after a design of Bulfinch, was built by Louis E. Kirstein, vice president of William Filene's Sons Company and a Boston Public Library trustee, in memory of his father, Edward Kirstein.

The first and second floors are occupied by the Business Branch, and there are many volumes and periodicals with mines of information for merchants and students of business.

There is a mezzanine floor, but the third floor may well prove the most popular, for it has books on fiction, biography, fine arts, science, home gardens, sociology, philosophy, drama, religion and literature for general circulation.

of preliminary ceremony.

The new branch, a three-story building, is located on the site of the old Police Station No. 2. In its facade the architects have followed closely the design of the "Tontine Crescent" by Charles Bulfinch, erected in 1794 in Franklin place and occupied by the Boston Library, the only collection of books at that time open to public use in Boston.

On the first two floors of the new building the business branch is situated, while the third floor is occupied by a unit of the Public Library's regular branch system, which will be known as the Kirstein Branch.

Each floor is equipped with tables for reading, with additional space on a balcony on the second floor. The interior, as a whole, is restful and unassuming and without any evidence of a striving for a "period" effect.

Consulting Means

The outstanding feature of the new branch, considering its purpose as a downtown utility, is the fact that it represents an almost effortless means of obtaining or consulting books. It is only a step or two from one classification to another or from one department to another. There are no mile-long corridors to tramp, and a man can browse through the shelves themselves, instead of trying to do his browsing over a pneumatic tube, leading to remote and invisible stacks.

The building is conveniently situated, yet admirably secluded from the din of traffic, and should prove equally enticing for the person who wants his books in a hurry or one who has an hour or two to spare for reading in a pleasant atmosphere of isolation from the downtown hubbub.

The library will be open from 9 to 6 each day and will be closed on Sundays. It offers telephonic service on many questions which can be handled in this way for seekers of statistical information. The number of the business branch is Hubbard 0860.

Varied Information

Statistical matter about the world's general business is available on this first floor. Here are directories of all important United States cities, maps and atlases, timetables and periodicals and the leading magazines of all branches of business and industry.

On the second floor are government reports and bulletins covering many lines of business, volumes on general business and economic topics. On the shelves of this room are the latest authoritative volumes on practically all lines of general business in all parts of the world.

On the top floor is the room to be devoted to the general public, and its walls are lined with volumes such as are of general rather than business interest. Grace C. Barry is in charge of this room, containing popular literature and the classic authors. Mrs. Dietrichson is librarian in charge of the business branches.

BANKER & TRADESMAN

PART II

REAL ESTATE NEWS SECTION

BOSTON, APRIL 16, 1930

Kirstein Library Will Give Valuable Service to Real Estate Interests

REAL estate dealers, real estate owners, and persons generally who have to do with real estate while in or near the central business district of Boston will find of great convenience the Kirstein Memorial Library, the building for which, in Court square, close to City Hall, will be completed in the coming summer.

Inquiries made of Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, and Arthur H. Cole, administrative curator of the Baker Library of the Harvard University Graduate School of Business Administration, which are collaborating in the development of the Kirstein Library, has satisfied REAL ESTATE NEWS that the new downtown institution will supply a definite need and will come to be greatly appreciated by real estate men and business people generally.

Assurance is given that all the essential material will be found on the shelves of the new library. While the list is not yet completed, it is learned that the material will be largely current. For research and related information the other libraries will be freely called upon. At the Kirstein Library there will be, for instance, atlases of Boston, atlases giving valuations of downtown districts of a hundred or more other large cities, street maps of Massachusetts and New England cities, of a hundred or so principal American cities outside New England, detailed large maps of Boston, New York and Chicago, and maps of at least six Canadian and eight other foreign cities.

There will also be commercial atlases of the United States, United States Geological Survey topographical maps of New England, oil and gas maps, power maps showing the location of power stations and giving transmission laws, etc., and maps showing coal regions. Also circulating books on real estate selling, real estate law, real estate financing, appraising, management of buildings, etc., which can be borrowed. Likewise numerous magazines which deal with real estate and building matters, pamphlets and reports by state and city departments and by chambers of commerce, and reports of services supplying information to real estate and building interests.

May 8, 1930

POST, BOSTON, MASS.

Hundreds of Hub Folk Visit Kirstein Library

INTERIOR OF KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL LIBRARY

The pleasant reading room of the Kirstein Memorial Library, donated by Louis Kirstein for the use of business men. The library is located on City Hall avenue, opposite City Hall.

Opening of the Kirstein Memorial Library at City Hall avenue and Williams court, yesterday, attracted hundreds of visitors despite the fact that the new downtown business branch started to operate without official services or ceremony.

At the request of Louis E. Kirstein, who contributed the beautiful new building to the city as a memorial to his late father, the Board of Library Trustees of which he is a member, arranged no opening programme, but simply made the gift available for the public in a business-like way.

Scores of readers took advantage of the new opportunity to select business books and magazines on the first two floors of the building, while others made use of the third floor which will be operated as a regular branch library where residents of the city may obtain books of every character without the necessity of going to the central library or the branches in the residential districts.

March 30, 1930

MORNING GLOBE, BOSTON, MASS.

NEW QUESTIONS FOR SPECIAL LIBRARIES

1909 Special Libraries Association 1930

Executive Board

PRESIDENT William Alcott, Librarian, Boston Globe, Boston, Mass.
FIRST VICE PRESIDENT Miss Florence Bradley, Librarian, Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., New York, N. Y.
SECOND VICE PRESIDENT Miss Margaret Reynolds, Librarian, First Wisconsin National B., Milwaukee, Wisconsin.
TREASURER Miss Elizabeth O. Cullen, Reference Librarian, Bureau of Railway Economics, Washington, D. C.
DIRECTORS Francis E. Cady, Cleveland, Ohio; Miss Eleanor S. Cavanaugh, Librarian, Standard Statistics Co., New York City; Arthur E. Bostwick, Librarian, Public Library, St. Louis, Mo.; Angus Fletcher, Librarian, British Library of Information, New York, N. Y.

General Office

EXECUTIVE SECRETARY Mrs. Mary H. Brigham, 11 Nisbet Street, Providence, R. I. Phone, Plantations 0789.

Convention Committees

General Committee

Mr. Thomas Cowles, Chairman; Miss K. Dorothy Ferguson, Acting Chairman; Miss C. Webber, Mrs. L. C. Williams.

Hospitality Committee

San Francisco, Mrs. A. M. Cava, Chairman; Mrs. Lundgren, Virginia Rucker, Ruth Snider, Sexton, Bonnie B. Strong; Los Angeles, Mrs. Anne Loidendeker, Ruth E. Jones, Anna E. New York, Eleanor S. Cavanaugh, Florence Bradley, Florence Wagner, Chicago, I. Morrison, Pittsburgh, Henrietta Kornhauser, Cleveland, Rose L. Vonnacker.

Program Committee

San Francisco, Thomas Cowles, Chairman; Miss Hadden, Miss Thomas.

Hosts and Hostesses

San Francisco, Miss Margaret Hatch, Annette Winkler, Dorothy Kisher, William A. Weston, Mrs. Ames Romero, Los Angeles, Gay E. Morton, Byron E. Edwards, Easton, Longworth, New York, Mary Louise Alexander, Margaret Burdett.

Registration Committee

San Francisco, Mrs. M. G. Robertson, Los Angeles, Mrs. M. G. Robertson.

to answer in the course of a day's work as Pierce Buckley, custodian of Bates Hall at the Boston Public Library.

One minute he's helping a proud parent name a baby. The next he's telling a sweet young thing married to a big brute of a husband where she can find the divorce laws of the State of Massachusetts.

Again he's acting as a sort of consulting editor for a college professor writing a book, or digging up a picture of a long since destroyed colonial building of which someone wants to construct a replica, or telling someone how he can find out who his great-grandfather was.

First Aid to the Public

There are few questions for which he can't provide some sort of answer, for of all the library officials who have direct contact with the public at the central library, he has the longest experience. April 6 he will have completed his 39th year as an employee of the Boston Public Library.

He came into the library as a youngster in his teens four years before the Stanford White building was built at Copley sq. His life-work began in the old building on Boylston st.

Entering with only a grammar school education behind him, he has since made himself a linguist, a widely recognized authority on colonial clocks in particular and antiques in general, and so expert a librarian in every branch of the subject that he is a consultant of experts, a first aid to college professors and editors.

"Memory is the most important element in the make-up of a successful librarian," says he.

"I don't mean that librarians should give themselves up to indiscriminate memorizing. They must train their memory intelligently, and selectively. They must remember not only the names of books and authors, but information inside books that is often not listed in the indices.

Little Trick of Memory

"Frequently some little trick of memory will save a librarian hours or possibly even days of research. Recently I was asked to find a picture of the library that once stood at what was called Tontine's Crescent at the corner of Franklin and Arch sts. It was needed to serve as a model in designing the new Kirstein Memorial Library near City Hall.

"No such picture was listed in the catalogues. But fortunately I had once, years ago, seen one in a collection of other pictures of bygone Boston. Within a few minutes I was able to produce it, saving myself what might have been a hopeless job as hunting a needle in a haystack.

"Not that we don't often hunt needles in haystacks and like it. No born librarian ever gets quite such a thrill out of life as when he gets a difficult assignment, something that takes him hours of first-class detective work, some obscure line of investigation. Some of them report eight or 10 hours a day, studying interminably behind heaped-up books, making intricate notes, piling up countless pages of manuscripts.

Most of such manuscripts are probably left to yellow in some dusty attic, but real books that live to find real live publishers get written there, too, with the tireless assistance of Mr. Buckley and his cohorts.

Winston Churchill, author of "The Crisis," has done much research there. Pancoast's "American Literature" was written in Bates Hall and Runo Francke's "Social Forces in German Literature," Caroline Ticknor, armed by special dispensation with scissors and paste pot, put together "The World's Best Literature" under Mr. Buckley's nose.

Longest Name in the Language

If you think you're descended from William the Conqueror or one of the brothers of Joan of Arc, but have never checked up for sure, perhaps it's just as well not to approach Mr. Buckley on the subject, for expert that he is (recently he wrote up the genealogies of the founders of Walpole) he lodges the cult of ancestor worship in gnat derision and is pitilessly efficient in wrecking illusions that have no foundation on fact.

"Personally, so long as I know who my grandfather was, I'd rather let my ancestors rest," says he. "You start digging back into family origins and you dig up too many family skeletons, no matter who you are. They happen in the very best families."

People who take the naming of their offspring very seriously, wanting to know the full meaning and history of a name before they bestow it, come to him to get directed to books on that subject.

"People often ask for something different in a name, something not heard every day. I like to suggest the name of the brother of Prælogod Barebone of Cromwell's day. It is Le-Christ-Had-Not-Died-For-Thee-Thou-Wouldst-Have-Been-Damned Barebone.

"It's one of the longest names in the English language. Probably they called the boy something for short, but I won't venture to say that."

Rich and interesting as are his library experiences, it's all in the matter of a day's work, and Mr. Buckley would rather talk about something else. He has two major hobbies. One is Boston streets, the other old clocks.

Old Clocks and Hobby

Old Boston streets, their names and histories, have long been a major passion with Mr. Buckley. He used to spend all his spare time exploring them, running down their past. He can direct you to Broad st. and Kat alley, tell you why Temple pl. was once called Turnagain alley and why well-groomed Boylston at once presented itself as Frog lane.

When he isn't collecting rare and exotic Boston streets he's collecting clocks—banjo, Willard, Curtis clocks. He's a past master of their names, makes and histories.

His home, he says, is in the Holy Land, in Egypt, and if you happen past his house on the stroke of the hour, you will be impressed for there

110

SPECIAL LIBRARIES

April, 1930

Boston's New Business Library

By William Alcott, President, Special Libraries Association

FOR many years little attention was paid by librarians to the business man who wanted help in his business or to the individual who desired information not contained in books of fiction. Of late however, conditions have changed.

The importance in which business as such is held today is shown by the great business schools which have been established in recent years. The most conspicuous of these is the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration, a cause to which George E. Baker has given $6,000,000.

The latest addition in Boston in a similar field of service will be the Edward Kirstein Memorial Library, whose building is now approaching completion. It is located on City Hall Avenue, in the rear of Boston's City Hall, and comes as a gift to the city from Louis E. Kirstein, one of Boston's outstanding business men, and a trustee of the Boston Public Library. The memorial is named for his father.

This Edward Kirstein Memorial Library building is the second building in America to be erected for a business library, the first being in Newark, N. J. But the Edward Kirstein Memorial Library is the first business library building to be erected in the United States as a gift of a business man. There are nearly 70 cities in the United States which are giving business library service, but not more than a dozen give this service through a separate business branch.

John Cotton Dana who started that first business branch library, was a believer in the great value of that sort of information and he started the business branch library in Newark in the face of severe criticism from many of the old-type librarians. But he became in a few years the most valuable librarian in this country, if not in the world, if value is to be measured by salary received, for he was given the largest salary ever paid at that time to a librarian.

Fifteen years ago, while James M. Curley was Mayor of Boston, he undertook to provide a business library for Boston. The Aldermanic chamber in City Hall was available for that purpose and he commissioned one of the trustees of the Boston Public Library to visit other cities for the purpose of studying the business library situation. The trustee selected for this work was William E. Kenney, day editor of the Boston Globe. Mr. Kenney visited Newark and New York. He found that 200,000 people used the business branch in Newark, that 20,000 used the city, state and telephone directories; that 15,000 used the maps and atlases; that 10,000 consulted the reference books; and that 1,000 persons used the typewriter provided for the public.

Mr. Kenney reported in favor of establishing a business branch library in Boston, but that was in October, 1914, when Europe was ablaze with war, and it blocked all plans for the time being. At that time, as Lincoln said of another war, "neither party expected for the war the magnitude or the duration which it attained." So not until Mr. Kirstein came forward with his generous offer to provide a building to contain a business branch library was it possible for Boston to proceed with its long cherished plan for a business library.

The Edward Kirstein Memorial Library will include the best features of all the other business branch libraries in this country, and will have other additional distinctive advantages. For some years the Boston Public Library, under the direction of Charles F. D. Belden, has had a working arrangement with the great Harvard Business Library by which the books of that collection are made available to the Boston Public Library. By another arrangement the books of the Harvard University Library, the third largest collection in America, are made available. Mr. Belden also hopes to make an arrangement with the many special libraries in Boston for co-operation in

May 8, 1930

AMERICAN, BOSTON, MASS.

OPEN KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL LIBRARY

Beautiful Structure Is Located in Heart of Business and Financial District

The Kirstein Memorial Library building on City Hall ave., housing the only business branch of the Boston Public Library and also a general circulating and reference branch, with several excellent collections of books, was opened today without ceremony.

Scores passed through the portals to inspect the structure and make use of its facilities throughout the day.

The site is in the heart of the business and financial district, where police station 2 formerly stood.

The building, with a striking facade of red brick and white trimmings, patterned after a design of Bulfinch, was built by Louis E. Kirstein vice president of William Filene's Sons Company and a Boston Public Library trustee, in memory of his father, Edward Kirstein.

The first and second floors are occupied by the Business Branch, and there are many volumes and periodicals with mines of information for merchants and students of business.

There is a mezzanine floor, but the third floor may well prove the most popular, for it has books on fiction, biography, fine arts, science, home gardens, sociology, philosophy, drama, religion and literature for general circulation.

THE JEWISH ADVOCATE 73

Friday, May 9, 1930

Edward Kirstein Memorial Library Is Opened

No Pomp or Ceremony — Louis Kirstein Donor of Building—New Branch of Boston Public Library for Business Men Particularly

The Edward Kirstein Memorial Library at 20 Court square was opened to the public at 9 o'clock on Wednesday morning with no pomp or ceremony. At the suggestion of Louis Kirstein, the donor of the building, opening formalities were dispensed with, and the new branch of the Boston Public Library in the heart of the downtown district will simply declare itself open with a minimum of preliminary ceremony.

The new branch, a three-story building, is located on the site of the old Police Station No. 2. In its facade the architects have followed closely the design of the "Tontine Crescent," by Charles Bulfinch, erected in 1794 in Franklin place and occupied by the Boston Library, the only collection of books at that time open to public use in Boston.

On the first two floors of the new building the business branch is situated, while the third floor is occupied by a unit of the Public Library's regular branch system, which will be known as the Kirstein Branch.

Each floor is equipped with tables for reading, with additional space on a balcony on the second floor. The interior, as a whole, is restful and unassuming and without any evidence of a striving for a "period" effect.

Consulting Means

The outstanding feature of the new branch, considering its purpose as a downtown utility, is the fact that it represents an almost effortless means of obtaining or consulting books. It is only a step or two from one classification to another or from one department to another. There are no mile-long corridors to tramp, and a man can browse through the shelves themselves, instead of trying to do his browsing over a pneumatic tube, leading to remote and invisible stacks.

The building is conveniently situated, yet admirably secluded from the din of traffic, and should prove equally enticing for the person who wants his books in a hurry or one who has an hour or two to spare for reading in a pleasant atmosphere of isolation from the downtown hubbub.

The library will be open from 9 to 6 each day and will be closed on Sundays. It offers telephonic service on many questions which can be handled in this way for seekers of statistical information. The number of the business branch is Hubbard 0860.

Varied Information

Statistical matter about the world's general business is available on this first floor. Here are directories of all important United States cities, maps and atlases, timetables and periodicals and the leading magazines of all branches of business and industry.

On the second floor are government reports and bulletins covering many lines of business, volumes on general business and economic topics. On the shelves of this room are the latest authoritative volumes on practically all lines of general business in all parts of the world.

On the top floor is the room to be devoted to the general public, and its walls are lined with volumes such as are of general rather than business interest. Grace C. Barry is in charge of this room, containing popular literature and the classic authors. Mrs. Dietrichson is librarian in charge of the business branches.

Charles F. D. Belden, Director of Boston Public Library and Mayor Roy K. Patch Give Interesting Addresses—Many North Shore Librarians Represented at Group Meeting

"At the end of the eighteenth century there was a circulating library here, kept by Mr. Perry, and after him, another kept by Ebenezer Beckett. This latter library contained about four hundred volumes, the titles of which offer an excellent choice of good literature of that time as could be desired, the eighteenth century novelists, the contemporary poetry of Moore and Byron, the best travels of the time, and histories of many lands. These circulating libraries, however, were not enough. In 1802 the Social Library was formed. This Social Library was a stock company in which the leaders of that time had subscribed. The town gave the use of the school-committee room in the old town hall, which building is now used for a grammar school, for the storage of the books.

Circulation in Beverly Library
 "The circulation of this main building for 1929 was 260,818, an increase of 21,142 over 1928 and a per capita circulation of 11.49. In addition to this, we have a branch library at Beverly Farms and two smaller deposits located at North Beverly and Iyal Side besides certain books in eleven school buildings."

Address by Director Belden.

Director Belden of the Boston Library honored by the King of Italy by being made a Cavaliere of the Order of the Crown of Italy in recognition of his services to the appreciation of art, Italian art and letters and his promotion of better understanding between the United States and Italy, honored by the city of Genoa in Italy by the Dure medal and the medals of the city of Rome by the Cassa di Risparmio and recipient of honors from many other governments and cities for his services in library work have a notable address. He extended his congratulations to the Beverly Library on the observance of its centennial anniversary and in his address touched upon the millions which have a particular local interest in view of the growth of the Beverly library.

"As director of the Public Library of the City of Boston, the oldest public city library supported by taxation, am most happy to extend to you greetings and congratulations on this auspicious occasion when you celebrate the seventy-fifth birthday of the Beverly Public Library," said Mr. Belden. "It was three years ago that the Boston Public Library modestly celebrated its own similar anniversary, so we know what your experience looks like. We in Conley Square, think that our long past has done us no harm and I feel sure that you, too, have reached your present age in perfectly good health.

"John Adams, the second President of the United States, writing to his friend and life-long rival, Thomas Jefferson solemnly remarked: 'When was your age, young man . . . John Adams was then eighty years old, and the 'young man,' John Jefferson, scarcely two.' John Adams was thus, of course, a thoroughly old man. His experienced friend soon useful admonition about the more weighty questions of life. Just then they were discussing the true nature of Virtue and Happiness. Now I might use this example as an excuse for giving you similar admonishments, but I promise not to do so. You, without doubt know your own problems best and you know best how to solve them. Personally, I doubt whether I can give any outside help, even were I competent to do so. I am glad to you, therefore, about certain problems of yours, I do so because I believe that these problems are generally common to us all. Speaking of your problems, I may be thinking of ours.

Growth of Libraries

"As it seems to me, the greatest difficulty with which American libraries have to contend is not having sufficient room. Most of the modern library buildings have been erected during the last thirty or forty years, yet they all are now too small. I am very far from the truth if I assume that lack of room must be one of your major troubles, too. Here you have a most attractive library building designed by one of the master builders of America and dedicated only seventeen years ago. At present you find that room is not enough for your juvenile readers. If you insist that readers have a way of insisting on having their place in the sun, there is not room enough for the staid adult readers. In so brief a time your institution has outgrown its habitation. It is a sad fact, but as I have said, it is not an uncommon one among other American libraries or for that matter among American institutions in general.

"There is, for instance, the Woolworth building, one of the other well-known creations of Cass Gilbert, your distinguished architect. Only a few years ago the Woolworth building was said to be the greatest building in the world—it was regarded with pride by the natives of Manhattan and with unbounded satisfaction by both visitors from the hinterland and from foreign parts. Today, surrounded by a dozen other skyscrapers, the Woolworth building is a much more modest place. Viewed from a distance, especially along the Babylonian mode of the Bell Telephone building, it has merely the appearance of a handsome tower. You have here something to console yourselves with.

Need of Children's Library
 "At the age of seventy-five, you are still experiencing growing pains. Do everything you can to alleviate them, for life insists on the fulfillment of its desires. Build if necessary another library for the children, a thing of course much more easily said than realized, but as I understand, you have contemplated the matter for some years past. I hope you will be able to find a solu-

"This age of ours has been called, and quite justly, so many names that it is difficult to pick one as the most apt. This age may be the age of the radio, the age of the aeroplane, the age of television, or the age of the talkies, but more than anything else it is the age of the children. Never before in history have children, their care and education, received so much attention as they do today. We grown-ups may go without many things we want, but our children must have their toys and their books, their sports and their amusements, yes, even their freedom and self-expression. New and ever-new methods, 'techniques' they are called, are devised daily in the interest of the bodily and mental health of the child. It would seem at times that all this concentration upon the young is not a little overdone; that the attention would be conducive to the development of greater sturdiness, to the preservation of native vigor and initiative. Things are really made too easy for our children. Of the many lessons they are taught, a very important one is usually left out, they do not learn that the better part of the joy is not the possession of the thing, but the aim and the effort of getting it.

This increasing attention to the needs of the child none the less has brought forth many salutary changes. The child is the father of the man said Wadsworth and the saying translated into everyday language means, of course, that the child does not remain for always a child; in his manhood he will become a father, too. In other words, he is the future citizen upon whom rests the welfare of our community. Parents, according to their knowledge and ability, will always take the best care of their offspring, but aside from this, the right bringing-up of children is a matter of public policy.

Changes in Dealings With the Child—“So one of the changes which have come about in our dealings with the child is the assurance of the right of the child in the public library, a right, it is interesting to note, that was thinly denied even a generation ago. That it is now the duty of the library to make suitable provision for the children has become generally accepted. It is hard to believe that the Boston Public Library only thirty years ago, no books were allowed to go out to children; today half of the general annual circulation, about two million volumes, are issued to readers under the age of sixteen. The proportion may be the same in your case. You can see now, if I am rightly informed, about fifty children in your library. During the evening hours particularly, often as many as three hundred children storm your doors. The result is that the children invade the quarters of the adult, or would if they were not kept out. Here, certainly is a potent source for trouble. Now, the world may be divided into two camps, the camp of the adults and the camp of the children, but they should not be hostile camps. In order to establish permanent peace you should provide room for the children. In so doing you will benefit them in more than one way. You will find that attracting and keeping the child in the library is, perhaps, one of the most effective methods of keeping him out of mischief.

Commends Work of Beverly Library
 "It is not inappropriate at this point to commend the trustees, the librarian, and the assistants of the Beverly Public Library for the admirable work, in great variety, that has been given in the interest to children. Few libraries in the Commonwealth have equaled your zeal, earnestness and success in meeting their problems in relation to the library."

"This need, of which I have spoken for more room is the natural result of your growth, which in recent years has been astonishing. During the last ten years the number of volumes on your shelves, as I find in the reports of the State Public Librarian, Commissioners, has more than doubled from a little over thirty thousand to the circulation of books has made it even a greater leap from eighty thousand to one hundred and thirty thousand. The great advantage we have in your library three volumes for every resident of your city and that the circulation of books "per capita" is between eleven and twenty. There are twelve libraries in Massachusetts, or for that matter in the country, which can boast of a similar ratio. I am not here to bestow praise or blame, but these numbers speak for themselves regarding the efficiency of your service. Now, since I have founded consider the two basic elements of an efficient library service: the first is the availability of a good collection of sound, readable books, and the second is the presence of an intelligent, helpful personnel.

Book Selection Difficult Problem. The question of more book selection is becoming a more and more difficult problem in every library. In spite of the radio and the talks, people do continue to read. It is significant that librarians throughout the country report that more books in greater variety are being read than ever before. As a natural result, libraries continue to be published in an ever-increasing number. According to the most recent Census of Manufactures, the number of copies of books printed in America in 1927 was over two hundred and twenty-seven million; the number of copies of pamphlets was over two hundred and forty millions, thus making a total of 470 odd million copies. Surely there is no doubt of the flow of printers' ink if we don't watch out the tides of this Black Sea, will spell disaster for us. Reduced of course to the separate titles, the number books less astronomical, perhaps not even so it is formidable enough. Last year in America 10,187 books were published, as against 9,776 in 1928. In Great Britain, where librarians naturally have some special interests, 14,085 books were published during 1929, thus making the published total production of separate titles in Great Britain and America in a single year somewhat over 24,000 minus those titles which have paralleled publication in both countries. In 1928, the latest year for which data is available, 11,392 books were produced in France and 27,794 in Germany. The total book production of the world is nearly a hundred thousand titles during a year. How should the librarians of this enormous output, especially where many books a number of copies are desired?

Growing Demand for Non-fiction.
 "With the growing demand for non-fiction on the part of library readers, it has been urged that libraries buy more non-fiction books. It is, indeed, a pity that the circulation of fiction is not being lent to public libraries. Some of the larger public libraries are giving serious consideration to this suggestion, though it cannot be questioned that good fiction is a responsible and, at least, must find its place in public libraries. In the smaller libraries, the question is doubtless of greater importance, since the interest of the patrons usually centers about fiction. Further, the reading of current novels, wisely chosen, may stimulate the desire for reading along various lines, but it is not the smaller libraries may have the best books of non-fiction which or not these books are in the 'Best-Seller' class.

"The books are many and the book appropriation, alas and alack, is most limited. The wise librarian, none the less, is impelled to hold to his ideal, that 'no person should leave the library unsatisfied.' How many one secures this state of bliss? I believe that even in a small library, books should always be held in reserve for the purchase of books suggested by individual readers, whose study deserves made within reasonable limits, and as when the book has an intrinsic value, and the price is not exorbitant, it is the price is altogether forlorn, recent should be made to the inter-library loan system so successfully developed in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

If the book cannot be procured either by purchase or by borrowing, the information should be given to the prospective reader as to where the desired volume may be found.

Tribute to Prof. Woodbury.

"Behold, I find myself heretofore near to giving you advice in spite of my promise to the contrary: It is well for me, therefore, to remember the fine tribute which the late Dr. George E. Woodbury, illustrious son of this community, paid on this very subject at the time of the opening of our new library building in 1912. In his distinguished address he mentioned again and again what 'an unusually excellent collection of sound literature' you possess here. The excellence of your collection, he said, was "not exceeded by any library of his size and scope anywhere to be found." His friend, Professor Woodberry, wrote on a mutilated note from Virgil to Milford and from Horace to Chelmsford a competent critique. The Admirer by him constitute in themselves "a mutually excellent collection of some literature." It was his custom to gather his information for literary judgment from the best sources. George A. Woodberry, he has told me, was a page in the Beverly Public Library at the age of twelve. It was here that he really began his literary career; then, made the final discoveries of the life, Bacon and Carlyle, and what he called the "three great English writers," George A. Woodberry, and Woodberry referred to Virgil in a poster, now in the library of the Providence Public Library. After looking over the old catalogue of the Beverly Public Library, once more at your request, I was greatly astonished to find that Virgil in an edition of the year 1800 was not listed. In the next years were listed, among the acquisitions, a fine new set of Virgil of the Beverly Public Library.

Where the list of other donors is names included such as Mrs. J. C. is expected that the list of donors of the library will be a long one.
names would be a long one.
It is enough to mention Mrs.
Benjamin Osgood Pease, Chairman of the Public Library Commission, first named filling the office of Librarian for thirty years. On June 1st, 1871, Elizabeth P. Pease, the first Librarian of our trustees, and the first woman to hold that position.
The association of the Board of the Public Library Commission, 2 ould last for long. And I would be long in the present of our Board of the Katherine P. Loring. We had had that she would present any plan however observed. You are told to have as your Librarian Miss Mary Stanton, a member of good standing, and a woman of good character. Your are in good hands now.

Importance of Library Personnel. "What could I tell you, then, about the importance of a well-qualified personnel in the life of a library? The personnel, in its constant contact with the public, represents the human content of the institution. Through many opportunities for suggestion, library assistants can potently influence the selection policy of the reader to the library; not that the assistants should interfere with the readers' choice of books, but may a reader, not knowing what to read, entirely welcomes the help of some one whom he recognizes as a better-informed person than himself. This is the reason why in the more recent years many large public libraries have appointed a Readers' Adviser. In a library like yours there is no reason for the appointment of a similar office. The present problem is child education, wherever of public libraries is concerned, which is just beginning to come into its own, has no direct concern for you either. Though you may not realize it, you are doing considerable work, in a commendable way, in this field. Your senior assistants are unofficial Readers' Advisers. This is one of the chief joys in working in a small library. Of course the duties must be realized here, too, yet there is still place for human contact and diversity in everybody's services.

Public Libraries

The Librarian and all of the Evening Public Library assistants are more or less in direct contact with the whole public; with men and women and boys and girls of all ages and all stations. Yours is a public library. It was built for the public and it was the public that built it, and in this your library is American in the best sense of the word. In no other country have public libraries attained such a high mark of development as in America. Nowhere are they given such devoted attention and so much sacrifice in money and in useful life and effort. Next to us, though, are behind come Great Britain, Germany and Latin countries, the American conception of the modern public library is almost unknown. Those countries as other old world countries, have their great scholarly libraries reserved for the initiated few.

"We recognize the immense importance of such libraries and look upon them with the greatest respect and with no little envy. In our great university libraries we are trying to build up similar collections, but their purposes and our purposes, with but few exceptions, are not the same. It is just as well to recognize this and hold to it as our ground. We fulfill a different function; we minister to different aspirations." "We try to satisfy different

Is our society founded upon different views and concepts of life. Americans we want all the scholarship in the most unselfish applications, but, as Americans, we also want to keep before our eyes the social responsibilities of our whole people. I am again quoting Dr. Woodberry who reminded us that "Culture is of the individual, civilization is of the community. There may be more individuality of culture among private libraries and scholars in a city, but a city is more fully civilized until it provides for the common welfare from the common wealth of the state, all that is essential to the common good, the workings of the higher life, including

Miss Helen Aylward of the local library staff gave a most interesting series of illustrative stories. The delightful presentation won the commendation of all those in attendance, and added much to the pleasure of the afternoon.

FRIDAY, MAY 16, 1930

BEVERLY LIBRARY 75 YEARS OLD
The 75th anniversary of the Beverly public library was celebrated yesterday with exercises in the library hall. Miss Marjorie H. Stanton, librarian, presided. The chief speaker was Charles F. Belden, librarian of the Boston public library.

Keep Them Unlessened May 30 Pan
With the end of the Symphony Concert season ahead, for the while, the weekly lectures at the Central Library about the programs. They will resume next autumn; but it is not certain that the accompanying "reference lists" will again be printed and distributed for available appropriation for such purposes. It is possible they may be applied elsewhere. If so, there will be general regret among the frequenters of the lectures, the studios at the conservatories and the private persons in other cities, who regularly received these lists. The prestige of the Brown Music Library as a source of information and encouragement has risen high since the advent of the present curator, Mr. Richard Appleton. His capacity to have it diminished by the abandonment of these bibliographies, in their kind, is a considerable compilation.
Perhaps a summarizing note on the eve of the last was written with a thought of this possibility. It runs:

This lecture marks the conclusion of the sixth season of the lectures on the programs of the Boston Symphony Concerts. Begun in the year that marked the beginning of the Koussevitzky conductorship, these lectures have sought to fill a long-felt need in making familiar to the ever changing public the glories of symphonic music. Twenty-seven different instructors have co-operated in explaining the one hundred and twenty-four concerts. This does not count the eighteen composers who have presented their own works and some fourteen artists who have assisted.

The biographies listing the editions of the works to be played and criticisms thereon, together with a list of phonograph recordings and player-piano rolls have been prepared each week and distributed both at the library and by mail to all members of the class as well as to other libraries and interested individuals. . . . The number of enrollments for the six years was 2132.

SATURDAY, APRIL 5, 1930

A lecture on water-color printing, on Monday, at 7 P. M., in the lecture hall of the Boston Public Library, will be the first of the annual public educational meetings on various processes of printing held under the auspices of the Boston Club of Printing House Craftsmen. The demonstration will be in the hands of William J. Orchard, president of Wallace & Tlernan Products, Inc., and F. A. Hacker, manager of the Jean Berte department of that firm. Philip J. McIntire, chairman of the educational committee of the craftsmen's club, will preside at the lecture. The talks will be illustrated.

In the announcement of the demonstration, it is stated that "water-color printing has solved the problem of achieving pictorial and decorative work with true similarity in brightness and technique to water-color sketches. In France such effects have been achieved by the application of water colors by hand, through stencils, but the expense was far too great for most commercial purposes. The results that are indistinguishably given by water-color mechanically applied gives the artist the freedom of hand coloring. No limitations are set on the texture of paper to be used. Printing plates of special composition have perfected the coverage of solid tints regardless of the surface of the paper."

TUESDAY, MARCH 25, 1930

Museum of Fine Arts Also Included by Miss Gould

Special Dispatch to the Globe
BARNSTABLE, March 24.—The Boston Public Library and the Museum of Fine Arts are remembered in the will of Miss Kate A. Gould of Chatham, filed in probate here today.

To the library she gives "the primer with board covers," which belonged to her grandmother, Mehitable Nickerson Smith; a manuscript book, "The Preacher," with carved wood covers, and other books.

The Art Museum is left among other horrors a blue and white coverlet spun and woven by a great-great-grandmother; a carved mahogany sofa with pineapple pattern and claw feet; a sandwich glass, hand-blown, and a sandwichee blue Dolphin candlestick. The museum is also given a Windsor chair, brought to the States by Rev. Huples, once a well-known Methodist minister in Boston.

There are also, of the kind of things that are so-called "antiques," many individuals who had examinations revealed normal. Furthermore, it was found that many of the things were in the construction quite simple in the stomach to be a bulky mass of organs as only Science can work on the stomach. It is

Meanwhile, Scientific Investigation to modern conditions.

JEWISH BOOK WEEK
MAY 11-18, 1930A Suggested Tercentenary Feature for the Jews of the Commonwealth

By FANNY GOLDSTEIN

Librarian, West End Branch, Boston Public Library

The Jew, always a great reader and discriminating lover of books, has chosen Lag B'Omar, often referred to as the Scholar's Festival, as an appropriate time to revive a nation-wide interest in Jewish literature, especially that which is available in English.

"We Jews," says Rabbi Felix Mendelssohn of Chicago, who first originated the idea in 1927, "are known as the People of the Book. We have given to the world its greatest book, the Bible, and the genius of our people has always expressed itself in the writing of and love for books. In the Ghetto, a Jewish home without a collection of representative books was unthinkable. . . . Judaism is a philosophy of learning and knowledge. No one can get to understand and appreciate the Jew and his faith without careful and devoted study. If Judaism in this country no longer has a strong hold upon the masses of our people it is primarily due to the fact that we do not any more cherish sacred feelings about books. We have preached and appealed to our people in behalf of anything and everything, but we have neglected to popularize the Jewish book. There was a time when the complaint was made that we do not have a Jewish literature in the English language, but this complaint no longer holds true today. Good books in English are published annually."

We desire to call attention here to Jewish Book Week which has now become a fixed annual event in the United States and which will be observed this year from May 11 to May 18. Attention is being focused during the week by pulpit and press on the outstanding and most worthwhile books written during the year either by Jews or Jewish in content. In addition to the new it provides an opportunity to call attention again to valuable literary achievements and contributions of a Jewish nature written throughout the ages which have enriched our present-day life and should be familiar to Jews everywhere.

A concentrated effort is being made for an appropriate observance of Jewish Book Week in libraries, synagogues, religious schools, book stores, and study groups, and an appeal is being made to the Anglo-Jewish press throughout America to lay special stress at this period on the "Gospel of the Jewish Book." It is hoped that the slogan which is particularly fitting and timely:

"A Jewish Book Shelf in Every Jewish Home" will stress the importance of reading Jewish books, and the building of permanent home libraries. If the spirit of Judaism is to be kept alive in this country, the thoughts of our people must be guided through both the spoken and the written word with significant contributions that will at least keep alive the lessons and the wisdom of our Sages. With this in mind the idea of Jewish Book Week first conceived as an attempt to awaken race consciousness through literature, will then result in helping to promote better racial understanding, tolerance, and American citizenship.

The Boston Public Library, recognizing the Jew's contribution to the culture of the world through literature, is probably the first library in America to conceive the idea of emphasizing books of Jewish interest as a distinct group. The library has now for several years prepared a special annual exhibition of books suitable for Jewish readers.

The success of these displays has been most gratifying. Many have been interested in the novelty of the idea, and The Jewish Advocate commenting on a recent exhibit said, "To this library falls the credit of having been the first to inaugurate such a plan, and the Jewish community of Boston in general, as well as the West End in particular, owes the librarian a genuine debt of gratitude not only for the splendid exhibition at the library but also for compiling a list of several hundred titles of good Jewish books in English."

The library feels that these annual exhibits have stimulated much interest in the reading and purchasing of Jewish books by library users, and have provoked good will and better racial understanding on the part of non-Jews. Questions on many phases of Jewish life, both ancient and modern, have since been received and are answered by the library throughout the year.

Lag B'Omar is celebrated as a Jewish holiday for many reasons. This season has therefore been chosen as a fitting time for the observance of Jewish Book Week. "It is often referred to as the 'Scholar's Festival.' The Cabalists attach a peculiar importance to Lag B'Omar. It is a tradition with them that Simon ben Yohai, the alleged author of the Zohar, died on that day, and at his death revealed to his pupils many secrets which were subsequently incorporated into the Zohar." Since the mysteries of the Zohar are not easily understood by the average Jew of today, it seems a fitting time to introduce him to simpler narratives of the race. An educational and cultural contact is thus established with both past and future through literature, and through emphasis on a better and more alert racial consciousness. The observance also offers the possibility of a better link of understanding between Jew and non-Jew. In days gone by, American tradition has presented courses in Hebrew and Aramaic to non-Jews in its colleges and academies; a strong scholarly interest in Hebrew studies is consequently to be found among educated people. Many large libraries and private collections are rich in material relating to the Bible and to Hebrew scholarship.

The Boston Public Library is again planning this year to observe Jewish Book Week by arranging special exhibits of its rare treasures, of other suitable books, photographs, clippings, periodicals, and ceremonial objects, in all of its branches that serve Jewish communities. Books in Hebrew, Yiddish, English and other languages will be displayed. The library has found it expedient to emphasize a single phase of Jewish life, art, or culture at each branch, rather than to duplicate the exhibit at all. A mimeographed list especially prepared may be had upon request.

Photographs

The West End Branch exhibit of last year was especially striking and educational. The display of books and periodicals was concentrated in the center of the main reading room around a case containing the Scroll or Holy Law. This arrangement gave the impression of the Ark or "Holy of Holies" in the synagogue, when it is open for devout worship. With it were grouped ceremonial objects, both obsolete and still in use, for home and synagogue, all appropriately labeled. Photographs of Jewish life and mounted clippings on famous books or writers were hung on the walls to carry out the idea. The Scroll and other ceremonial objects were lent for the occasion by Temple Israel and individuals in the community.

This library feels that its efforts in helping to promote the idea of Jewish Book Week in the past has been entirely justified, for it has created a new interest in the subject and promoted the circulation and purchase of the books recommended and displayed. The coming Massachusetts Bay Tercentenary seems a very fitting time this year with which to launch Jewish Book Week in Boston and other Jewish communities throughout the State.

It has been suggested that the rabbis of the various Jewish communities of the Commonwealth be requested to preach at least one sermon on Jewish literature or some current book of Jewish interest during Book Week.

The Council of Jewish Women, Hadassah and culture study groups, as well as religious schools might have special programs on Jewish literature during the week.

Book talks over the radio by well known literary people on "Current Books of Jewish Interest" or the "Jew in American Literature" will be particularly timely.

It might be suggested that book stores display books of Jewish interest featuring the idea of a "Jewish book shelf in every Jewish home."

The idea is worthy of the support of all who are interested in broadcasting the contribution of the Jew through literature as a faithful and loyal American citizen in Massachusetts and throughout the United States.

FANNY GOLDSTEIN.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, MAY 13, 1930

Not for Men Only

A pleasantly astonishing state of affairs has developed regarding the Kirstein Memorial Library. Since the new building opened last Wednesday, women and girls have hung back at the threshold, doubting whether or not they dared enter. Many have decided they were not permitted; some have written letters to high officials, asking advice concerning their privilege. What is the cause of this gentle reticence? Apparently it chiefly results from the fact that the two lower floors of the beautiful new structure contain the valuable collection of text and reference books known as the "Business Branch." There seems to have been an idea in the feminine mind that such a shrine of the higher learning of commerce and industry must be for men only.

It never entered the thought of the generous donor of the Kirstein Memorial Library that there was to be any restriction. Mr. Louis E. Kirstein, together with all his fellow-trustees of Boston Public Library and the director of the system, Mr. Charles F. D. Belden, supposed it of course understood that women were as welcome there as men. That, naturally, is the truth of the matter. Both on the floors containing the business books, and in the stately, restful room on the third floor which houses a regular branch of the city's library system, known as the Kirstein Branch, which supplies books of a general nature, a cordial reception is waiting for all, as some women, venturing there as was their right, have already found. It is a long day since 1860 when an instructive volume, entitled "Etiquette at Washington," thought it necessary to point out that "A lady may visit a public library and many other public places unattended by a gentleman, without the slightest breach of decorum."

JEWISH DAILY BULLETIN

Sunday, May 11, 1930

$200,000 Kirstein Memorial Library Opens in Boston

(Jewish Daily Bulletin)
Boston, May 9.—Louis E. Kirstein, vice-president of the William Filene's Sons Company, and president of the Associated Jewish Philanthropies of Boston, has contributed $200,000 in the memory of his father, for the erection of the Edward Kirstein Memorial Library.

The new library, which was opened Thursday, is essentially for downtown business men, and was well patronized on the opening day. Because of the absence of Mr. Kirstein from the city, no dedicatory exercises took place, but it is believed that the library will be formally dedicated some time in the fall.

THE BOSTON HERALD

WEDNESDAY, MAY 7, 1930

OPEN NEW KIRSTEIN LIBRARY TODAY

Erected by Louis E. Kirstein, library trustee as a memorial to his father, Edward Kirstein. The site is that formerly occupied by the City Hall avenue police station. The structure will house a complete reference and informative branch of the Boston Public Library serving downtown business men, principally.

Kirstein Memorial Library for Business Men Opens Today

Erected by Louis E. Kirstein as a Memorial to His Father; Occupies Site of Old City Hall Avenue Police Station

Perhaps many times in the course of a day every business and professional man in Boston is confronted by a need of learning something about some such thing as crop conditions in Bermuda, or the name of the mayor of Seattle, or the number of vacant downtown lots in Muncie, Ind.

It is to provide just such information as this that the Kirstein Memorial library at 20 City Hall avenue will be opened at 9 o'clock this morning, to remain open from 9 A. M. to 6 P. M. each day thereafter.

Situated in the heart of the business district of Boston and open to all persons who find need of its service, the new branch of the Boston public library is expected to have a large constituency from the very beginning.

There will be no formal, ostentatious opening of the branch today, in accordance with the wishes of the donor, Louis E. Kirstein, vice-president of William Filene's Sons Company and trustee of the public library. The doors simply will be opened at 9 o'clock and there will be no speech-making to cause any delay.

The three-story building and its attractive furnishings are the gift of Mr. Kirstein as a memorial to his father, Edward Kirstein, who at one time was actively engaged in business in Boston. The facade of the structure, which is on a city-owned site formerly occupied by City Hall avenue police station, closely follows the design of Charles Bulfinch for a building erected in Franklin place in 1794, in which was housed the first collection of books open for public use. Putnam & Cox are the architects for the new structure.

Great care has been taken by library officials to obtain all possible authentic data which business men might find necessary. On the first floor are hundreds of directories, reference books and maps.

Not only are real estate maps of Boston and surrounding cities included, but the latest land maps of most of the other larger cities of the United States are readily available. Business and financial directories of many large foreign cities also are on the carefully arranged shelves.

Proof that there is plenty of theory to the conduct of business is to be found on the second floor, where scores of reference books and current business magazines are placed.

On this floor are authoritative books on advertising, accounting, auditing, banking and currency, building associations, business letters, business law, commercial aviation, corporations, credits, efficiency methods, factory management, hotel management, insurance, investment trusts, labor problems, marketing merchandising, prices, purchasing, railroads, real estate, stocks and bonds, shipping and kindred subjects.

Besides receiving all the best current magazines on business, the library will have on file the voluminous reports of the various departments of the United States government, for ready reference.

Relieving the matter-of-fact air of the business library somewhat is collection of the literature most in demand on the third floor. Current novels, such as "All Quiet on the Western Front" and "Scarlet Sister Mary," occupy shelves with such old favorites as "Lorna Doone" and "Arabian Nights." The collection on this floor makes up a regular branch of the library, to be known as the Kirstein branch.

The aim of the library, as conceived by Mr. Kirstein and as executed by the director of the branch, Mrs. Mary Watkins Dietrichson, is to provide ready reference material for business men engaged downtown.

The rules of the public library as a whole will be in force at the new branch so far as the circulation of the books is concerned. Any persons may use the books within the building whether or not he is a resident of Boston.

Memorial Library Opens
on City Hall Ave. Site

Erected by Louis E. Kirstein, library trustee as a memorial to his father, Edward Kirstein. The site is that formerly occupied by the City Hall avenue police station. The structure will house a complete reference and informative branch of the Boston Public Library serving downtown business men, principally.

Kirstein's Gift to Boston in Memory of His Father Fills Long-Felt Want for Business Section of the City

The Kirstein Memorial Library at 20 City Hall avenue, erected by Louis E. Kirstein, library trustee, as a memorial to his father, Edward Kirstein, was opened officially to the public at 9 o'clock this morning. The library occupies the site of the old City Hall avenue police station.

In accordance with the wishes of the donor there was no formal ceremonies attending the opening. The doors simply opened and the crowd of about two dozen persons waiting without filed in quietly.

The two first books asked for were a dictionary and a book on office management. The librarian and director of the branch is Mrs. Mary Watkins Dietrichson.

One of the first visitors to the new branch of the Boston Public Library was Patrolman J. P. Flynn, now attached to the city health department as an inspector, and formally attached to old station 2, on which site the library now stands.

RECALLS OLD DAYS

A veteran of many years on the police department, Officer Flynn, slightly bent by his years, walked into the first floor rooms of the library, and to C. F. D. Belden, library director for the whole city, exclaimed, "My-my-my! Will wonder's never cease?" Then he began to speak of the days when he received orders from his former commander, Capt. Hemenway, and of the good times that the officers attached to that station used to have. He expressed amazement at the complete change and admired the new adjunct to the library system of Boston. He was taken on a personal tour of the building by Belden.

The three-story building and its attractive furnishings are the gift of Kirstein, vice-president, of William Filene's Sons, as a memorial to her father, who at one time was actively engaged in business in the city. The facade of the structure, which is on a city-owned site, closely follows the design of Charles Bulfinch for a building erected on Franklin place in 1794, in which was housed the first collection of books open for public use. Putnam & Cox were the architects for the new structure.

One of the first official acts of Miss Edith Guerrier, supervisor of branches, was to post the painting of the Rev. John Cotton, leader among early colonial thinkers, which was given as a supplement with The Boston Herald of today. The painting was the first article placed on the bulletin board located on the third floor, and attracted much attention.

Particular attention has been given by library authorities to secure all possible authentic data business men might find necessary. On the first floor are hundreds of directories, reference books, dictionaries and maps.

On the second floor are authoritative books on advertising, accounting, auditing, banking and currency, building associations, business letters, business law, commercial aviation, corporations, credits, efficiency methods, factory management, hotel management, insurance, investment trusts, labor problems, marketing, merchandising, prices, purchasing, railroads, real estate, stocks and bonds, shipping and kindred subjects.

On the third floor the literature department, and among the works there found are such books as "All Quiet on the Western Front" and "Scarlet Sister Mary," and such old favorites as "Lorna Doone" and "Arabian Nights." The collection on this floor makes a regular branch of the library, to be known as the Kirstein branch.

BRANCH LIBRARY WILL OPEN TODAY

Kirstein Memorial, Gift to the City,
Will Furnish Business and Professional Men Service

THE KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL LIBRARY

Sketch of the new downtown library, located at City Hall avenue and Williams court, which is to open today.

The Kirstein Memorial Library, made possible by one of the largest gifts ever received by the Boston Public Library, especially designed for the use of professional and business men, at City Hall avenue and Williams court, will open its door at 9 o'clock this morning. There will be no formal ceremony attendant to the opening.

FOR BUSINESS MEN

The first two floors are occupied by a business branch, which professional and business men, including merchants, insurance officials and many others, have been trying for many years to obtain for the downtown section. These floors will meet this want fully.

The latest and most reliable books on the following subjects will be available: Advertising, accounting, auditing, banking and currency, building associations, business letters, business law, commercial aviation, corporations, credits, efficiency methods, factory management, foreign trade, graphs, hotel management, insurance, investment trusts, labor problems, marketing, merchandising, motor transport, office practice, personnel work, prices, purchasing, railroad mergers, real estate, retail trade, salesmanship, stocks and bonds, trade associations, trusts and cartels.

In addition there are government reports, pamphlets, bulletins and magazines, among them the following: American Banker, American Lumberman, American Metal Market, Automotive Industries, Barron's Weekly,

Board of Trade Journal, Boston News Bureau, Canning Trade, Chain Store Age, Credit Monthly, Dry Goods Economist, Electrical Merchandising, Engineering News Record, Financial World, Gift and Art Shop, Hotel Management, Laundry Age, Paper Trade Journal, Radio Retailing, Shoe and Leather Reporter, United States Daily, Wall Street Journal.

Library Branch on Third

On the third floor is a regular branch of the library system. General reference works, magazines and a comprehensive collection of books for the person who has no specialized interests will be on the shelves. Regulations governing the issue of books will be the same as at other branches.

The library buildings and fittings are the gift of Louis E. Kirstein, vice-president of William Flinn's Sons Co. He has been a member of the board of trustees of the Boston Public Library for a number of years and has served twice as president of the board, being succeeded a year ago, in the regular course of rotation, by Gordon Abbott. Mr. Kirstein made the gift to the city as a memorial to his father, Edward Kirstein, who did business in Boston for a number of years and was accustomed to stay at a hotel across Williams Court from the library.

The gift is the most generous which has yet been made entirely available to the public library. The site, which was formerly occupied by Police Station 2, is owned by the city. The facade of the building, of which Putnam & Cox are the architects, follows closely the design of Charles Bulfinch for a building erected in Franklin place in 1784, at that time the only collection of books open for public use.

LIBRARY TABLET

This bronze tablet is affixed to the outside of the new Kirstein Memorial Library, at City Hall avenue and Williams court.

Hundreds of Hub Folk Visit Kirstein Library

INTERIOR OF KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL LIBRARY

The pleasant reading room of the Kirstein Memorial Library, donated by Louis Kirstein for the use of business men. The library is located on City Hall avenue, opposite City Hall.

Opening of the Kirstein Memorial Library at City Hall avenue and Williams court, yesterday, attracted hundreds of visitors despite the fact that the downtown business branch started to operate without official services or ceremony.

At the request of Louis E. Kirstein, who contributed the beautiful new building to the city as a memorial to his late father, the Board of Library Trustees, of which he is a member, arranged no opening programme, but simply made the gift available for the public in a business-like way.

Scores of readers took advantage of the new opportunity to select business books and magazines on the first two floors of the building, while others made use of the third floor which will be operated as a regular branch library where residents of the city may obtain books of every character without the necessity of going to the central library or the branches in the residential districts.

Business Is

(Transcript Photo by Warren Colby)

Kirstein
The Building in City Hall Avenue Where
He Opened to the Public on Wednesday Morning

resumed next autumn; but it is not so certain that the accompanying "reference lists" will again be printed and distributed. The available appropriation for such purposes is limited and it may be applied elsewhere. If so, there will be general regret among the frequenters of the lectures, the studios at the concerts, the libraries and the private persons in other cities who have regularly received these lists. The prestige of the Brown Music Library as a source of information and encouragement has risen high and spread wide under the present curator, Mr. Richard Appel. It would be a pity to have it diminished by the abandonment of these bibliographies, in their kind little models of compilation.

Perhaps a summarizing note on the flyleaf of the last was written with a thought of this possibility. It runs:

This lecture marks the conclusion of the sixth season of the lectures on the programs of the Boston Symphony Concerts. Begun in the year that marked the beginning of the Koussevitzky conductorship, these lectures have sought to fill a long-felt need in making familiar to the ever-changing public the glories of symphonic music. Twenty-seven different instructors have cooperated in explaining the one hundred and twenty-four concerts. This does not count the eighteen composers who have presented their own works and some fourteen artists who have assisted.

The bibliographies listing the editions of the works to be played and criticisms thereon, together with a list of phonograph recordings and player-piano rolls have been prepared each week and distributed both at the library and by mail to all members of the class as well as to other libraries and interested individuals. The number of enrollments for the six years was 2198.

As Composer and Player

The lecture room of the Boston Public Library last evening housed a concert of chamber music composed by Mr. Paul Hastings Allen, local composer. The chamber music in question was written for quartets and trios of clarinets, of strings, of strings with piano. A trio in B-flat was written for two clarinets and bass clarinet, comprised a vivace, a pastorello, an allegretto scherzando. A quartet in E-flat called for two clarinets, a bass horn and a bass clarinet. For the benefit of those to whom the bass horn may be more or less of a conundrum, he it said that it is in effect a tenor clarinet, bearing the same relation to the clarinet that an English horn bears to the oboe. (By the way, will some accommodating composer some day write something for a baritone oboe?) The players were Mr. G. Hamelin, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. R. Mazzeo, Miss R. La Glicera (bass horn), Mr. A. Hamelin (bass clarinet). Between these two numbers for clarinets stood a string quartet in A major, with the usual four movements, played by Messrs. Elmer Hansen, H. Werner, J. Barth of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Miss Alice Smith as second violin. Finally, there was a trio, also in A major, for piano, violin and cello, played by Messrs. Hansen and Barth with the composer, Mr. Allen, as pianist.

Taking one's seat and scanning the program sheet, one felt misgivings. For here were four numbers, of three or four movements each. Visiting quartets have never more, have latterly preferred to cut down the three to two, with some short work of one or two movements between. But here were listed four! Mr. Allen has undoubtedly, with the rest of mankind, heard somewhere that brevity is the soul of wit; for the four numbers took no more than the conventional hour and a half in the playing. It was interesting to hear the unusual combination of a trio or a quartet of clarinets, though one would hardly be willing to say that the experiment justified frequent repetition. The clarinet is at one of the most useful and admirable instruments in the orchestra. For solo, it

Continued on Following Page

The Longer, The Better

Musical Plays Are Bulky Because
The Public Likes Them So

Work Times

Concert-Chronicle

Execut Omnes

THE matinee public, at the final Symphony Concert of the year 1929-30, manifested (as the French have it) at every opportunity. The evening public reserved its heavy firing (to write again in figures) until the end. True, the audience of Saturday hailed the entering Koussevitzky as eagerly as had that of Friday; rose more spontaneously; clapped not a whit less long and loud. Through the first half of the concert, however, it took music, performance, conductor and orchestra rather for granted. The superlative delivery of the Overture to "Oberon" kindled it to no excitement. It was interested rather than impressed with Mr. Hill's "Lilies" and Monsieur Ravel's "Spanish Rhapsody," though the latter piece was played with more rhythmic "edge" and vivid color than on Friday. There was reason to note that, while from many of Mr. Hill's measures sound the blooming, blowing lilacs of his poet, others are finely flowered with quiet affection for this flower of New England and for the soil that bred it, because as Miss Lowell

ing absence of the old accumulations of books which frequently characterize the shelves of older libraries. There are generous duplications of current books in popular demand—four copies of "All Quiet on the Western Front," and two copies each of many of the new fiction items—and one is apt to find, even at his first glance, that for the most part the third floor offers an interesting assortment of new books that he has not read but would like to sit right down and read.

In this section, in this Tercentenary year, is a handy shelf of Old Boston's history. There is a fifteen-volume edition, illustrated, of "The Pageant of America." The new Encyclopedia Britannica is there, and the National Cyclopaedia of American Biography, Carpenter's World Travels, and a beautifully illustrated "Guide to Europe." There are books on flower gardening, aviation, the Great War, the wide open spaces, as written by Zane Grey, the intricacies of murder as seen by S. S. Van Dine; there are current collections of plays, books on the theater, and philosophical treatises. Also on this floor are some thirty-nine weekly and monthly periodicals, and a seven-day shelf of the latest books.

The third floor is in charge of Miss Grace C. Brady, and the separate telephone number of this department is HUB 1669.

There are, according to Mrs. Dietrichson, who was formerly connected with the public library system at Minneapolis, but five other "business" libraries of this type in the United States. These are at Newark, Minneapolis, Indianapolis, Providence and Hartford.

BRANCH LIBRARY WILL OPEN TODAY

Kirstein Memorial, Gift to the City,
Will Furnish Business and Professional Men Service

THE KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL LIBRARY

Sketch of the new downtown library, located at City Hall avenue and Williams court, which is to open today.

The Kirstein Memorial Library, made possible by one of the largest gifts ever received by the Boston Public Library, especially designed for the use of professional and business men, at City Hall avenue and Williams court, will open its door at 9 o'clock this morning. There will be no formal ceremony attendant to the opening.

FOR BUSINESS MEN

The first two floors are occupied by a business branch, which professional and business men, including merchants, insurance officials and many others, have been trying for many years to obtain for the downtown section. These floors will meet this want fully.

The latest and most reliable books on the following subjects will be available: Advertising, accounting, auditing, banking and currency, building associations, business letters, business law, commercial aviation, corporations, credits, efficiency methods, factory management, foreign trade, graphs, hotel management, insurance, investment trusts, labor problems, marketing, merchandising, motor transport, office practice, personnel work, prices, purchasing, railroad mergers, real estate, retail trade, salesmanship, stocks and bonds, trade associations, trusts and cartels.

In addition there are government reports, pamphlets, bulletins and magazines, among them the following: American Banker, American Lumberman, American Metal Market, Automobile Industries, Barron's Weekly,

Board of Trade Journal, Boston News Bureau, Canning Trade, Chain Store Age, Credit Monthly, Dry Goods Economist, Electrical Merchandising, Engineering News Record, Financial World, Gift and Art Shop, Hotel Management, Laundry Age, Paper Trade Journal, Radio Retailing, Shoe and Leather Reporter, United States Daily, Wall Street Journal.

Library Branch on Third

On the third floor is a regular branch of the library system. General reference works, magazines and a comprehensive collection of books for the person who has no specialized interests will be on the shelves. Regulations governing the issue of books will be the same as at other branches.

The library buildings and fittings are the gift of Louis E. Kirstein, vice-president of William Flinn's Sons Co. He has been a member of the board of trustees of the Boston Public Library for a number of years and has served twice as president of the board, being succeeded a year ago, in the regular course of rotation, by Gordon Abbott. Mr. Kirstein made the gift to the city as a memorial to his father, Edward Kirstein, who did business in Boston for a number of years and was accustomed to stay at a hotel across Williams court from the library.

The gift is the most generous which has yet been made entirely available to the Public Library. The site, which was formerly occupied by Police Station 2, is owned by the city. The facade of the building, of which Putnam & Cox are the architects, follows closely the design of Charles Bulfinch for a building erected in Franklin place in 1794, at that time the only collection of books open for public use.

Hundreds of Visit K

INTERIOR OF KIR

The pleasant reading room of Louis Kirstein for the use of City Hall at

Opening of the Kirstein Memorial Library at City Hall avenue and Williams court, yesterday, attracted hundreds of visitors despite the fact that the downtown business branch is to operate without official ceremony.

At the request of Louis E. Kirstein, donor of the building, is a simple reality intended to aid the public enlightenment and pleasure. With its establishment, any person whose days are passed in the downtown district will have easy and casual access to all manner of information valuable to his business needs, as well as to a compact library of general reading matter. He will, incidentally, be privileged to draw on the reserves of the Public Library through the new downtown branch, under the daily delivery system maintained for branches. And all of these functions, he may be assured, will be in thorough working order at one minute after nine o'clock on Wednesday morning.

"I left school when I was thirteen years old. Whatever I gained since then in the way of an education, I found in library books. Boston has done a lot for me."—Mr. Kirstein's tones are apologetic. He will feel more comfortable after the library is opened and there is no more talk of how and why. After all, his intention was simply to provide a library for the "people in these offices and

Kirstein Library—Books for Business Where Business Is

(Transcript Photo by F. E. Colby)

A Quiet Corner for Reading or Study

A Second Floor Reading Room of the Kirstein Memorial Library, Showing the Alcoves on the Balcony. The Floors are Finished in Dull Blue Through-out, and Woodwork is White, with Mahogany in Natural Finish for the Cases

ON Wednesday morning at nine o'clock, the Kirstein Memorial Library—that chaste brick structure just completed at Number 20, City Hall avenue—will open its doors to the public. The trustees of the Boston Public Library have made no plans for any formal exercises and the new branch in the heart of the downtown district will simply declare itself open with a minimum of preliminary ceremony.

For the library, as conceived by Louis E. Kirstein, donor of the building, is a simple reality intended to aid the public enlightenment and pleasure. With its establishment, any person whose days are passed in the downtown district will have easy and casual access to all manner of information valuable to his business needs, as well as to a compact library of general reading matter. He will, incidentally, be privileged to draw on the reserves of the Public Library through the new downtown branch, under the daily delivery system maintained for branches. And all of these functions, he may be assured, will be in thorough working order at one minute after nine o'clock on Wednesday morning.

"I left school when I was thirteen years old. Whatever I gained since then in the way of an education, I found in library books. Boston has done a lot for me."—Mr. Kirstein's tones are apologetic. He will feel more comfortable after the library is opened and there is no more talk of how and why. After all, his intention was simply to provide a library for the "people in these offices and stores—all these people downtown here." Why, then, that was about all. Yes, he found time for reading—biography and history, mainly—people and deeds, rather than treaties or tales. He reads occasional fiction, two New York and three Boston newspapers daily, most of the weekly and monthly reviews, and everything that pertains to Abraham Lincoln. The "opening" of the library? No, no—simply going to open. "Mrs. Dietrichson is in charge over there—she'll tell you all about the library."

The new building, commemorating Mr. Kirstein's father, Edward Kirstein, is to be called the Kirstein Memorial Library. But—no need to go into that again. "You go through the library—see what you think of it."

Mr. Kirstein's greatest satisfaction from this library, one feels certain, is still in prospect for him. He has seen his wish, first on paper and then in sturdy brick, take tangible form. But what he really is waiting for is to see his gift being used by those who need it and who will enjoy it.

The library opening, by the way, will not be the only literary occasion of the week for Mr. Kirstein and his family. On Thursday, May 8, Harcourt Brace and Company are to issue an anthology of poetry compiled by his daughter, Miss K. Curtiss, of the English department of Smith College. Mrs. Curtiss's book, which is entitled "Olive, Cypress and Palm, an Anthology of Love and Death," is drawn from the works of English and American poets born prior to 1850.

The new branch, in brief, is a three-story building. Mr. Kirstein donated the building, which is on city-owned land formerly occupied by police station 2. The building is of red brick, with white woodwork, and in its facade the architects, Putnam and Cox, have followed closely the design of the "Tontine Crescent," by Charles Bulfinch, erected in 1794 in Franklin place and occupied by the Boston Library, the only collection of books at that time open to public use in Boston. On the first two floors of the new building the business branch is situated, while the third floor is occupied by a unit of the Public Library's regular branch system, which will be known as the Kirstein Branch.

Each floor is equipped with tables for reading, with additional space on a balcony on the second floor. All bookcases are of mahogany, unstained and unvarnished, against light-colored walls of neutral shade, and the tables and chairs are of mahogany of a simple Georgian pattern. The interior, as a whole, is restful and unassuming and without any evidence of a striving for a "period" effect. There is elevator service to all floors.

Possibly the outstanding feature of the new branch, considering its purpose as a downtown utility, is the fact that it represents an almost effortless means of obtaining or consulting books. It is only a step or two from one classification to another or from one department to another. There are no mile-long corridors or lanes to tramp, and a man can browse through the shelves themselves. Instead of trying to do his browsing over a pneumatic tube leading to remote and invisible stacks. The building is conveniently situated, yet admirably secluded from the din of traffic, and should prove equally enticing for the person who wants his books in a hurry or one who has an hour or two to spare for reading in a pleasant atmosphere of isolation from the downtown hubbub.

The library will be open from nine to six each day and will be closed on Sundays. It offers telephonic service on many questions which can be handled in this way for seekers of statistical information. The number of the business branch is Hubbard 0860.

325 Periodicals for Business Men

The first floor of the new branch is given over to statistical matter: directories of all important cities of the United States, trade directories, maps and atlases, timetables and periodicals. There will be available approximately 325 magazines, bulletins and pamphlets, among which will be the following:

American Banker, American Lumberman, American Metal Market, Automobile Industries, Barron's Weekly, Board of Trade Journal, Boston News Bureau, Canning Trade, Chain Store Age, Credit Monthly, Dry Goods Economist, Electrical Merchandising, Engineering News Record, Financial World, Gift and Art Shop, Hotel Management, Laundry Age, Paper Trade Journal, Radio Retailing, Shoe and Leather Reporter, United States Daily and the Wall Street Journal.

And to illustrate the variety of data available from this first floor section, the trustees of the Public Library—of whom Mr. Kirstein is one, incidentally—have listed the following questions as typical of what the branch is expected to answer:

An address in Indianapolis?
The name of the president of the Travelers Insurance Company?
Who are the State officials of Oregon?
The size of a certain block in Dorchester?

The value of land on Fifth avenue, New York?
Who manufactures raincoats?
The names of jobbers in dairy products?

The decoded message of a cablegram?
What steamships sail for Honolulu about May 30?

Building statistics of Milwaukee?
The name of a bank in Leipzig, Germany?

Ten-year price-range on "British Aluminium"?
Business conditions in Czechoslovakia?

(Transcript Photo by Warren Colby)

Louis E. Kirstein

Who Donated to the City of Boston the Building in City Hall Avenue Where the Kirstein Memorial Library Will Be Opened to the Public on Wednesday Morning

In addition to these resources of its own shelves and those of the Public Library, close relations established by the latter institution with the Baker Library of the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration will place still further material at the disposal of Boston citizens, and it will often be possible to borrow books from the Baker Library through the new downtown branch.

On the second floor are located United States Government reports and bulletins, the Market Data Handbook of New England and also of the United States. On this floor are books of general economic and business interest, which may be borrowed on the card available to a resident of Boston, or on a "firm" card by non-residents who are in business in Boston.

On this floor will be found the latest and most authoritative books on advertising, accounting, auditing, banking and currency, building associations, business letters, business law, commercial aviation, corporations, credits, efficiency methods, factory management, foreign trade, graphs, hotel management, insurance, investment trusts, labor problems, marketing, merchandising, motor transport, office practice, personnel work, prices, purchasing, railroad mergers, real estate, retail trade, salesmanship, stocks and bonds, trade associations, trusts and cartels, etc., etc.

The Kirstein Branch

On the third floor is the Kirstein Branch, where books of a general nature are to be found. And on this floor, as in the other sections of the new branch, the visitor will notice a refreshing absence of the old accumulations of books which frequently characterize the shelves of older libraries. There are generous duplications of current books in popular demand—four copies of "All Quiet on the Western Front," and two copies each of many of the new fiction items—and one is apt to find, even at his first glance, that for the most part the third floor offers an interesting assortment of new books that he has not read but would like to sit right down and read.

In this section, in this Tercentenary year, is a handy shelf of Old Boston's history. There is a fifteen-volume edition, illustrated, of "The Pageant of America." The new Encyclopedia Britannica is there, and the National Cyclopaedia of American Biography, Carpenter's World Travels, and a beautifully illustrated "Guide to Europe." There are books on flower gardening, aviation, the Great War, the wide open spaces, as written by Zane Grey, the intricacies of murder as seen by S. S. Van Dine; there are current collections of plays, books on the theater, and philosophical treatises. Also on this floor are some thirty-nine weekly and monthly periodicals, and a second-day shelf of the latest books.

The third floor is in charge of Miss Grace C. Brary, and the separate telephone number of this department is HUB 1469.

There are, according to Mrs. Dietrichson, who was formerly connected with the public library system at Minneapolis, but five other "business" libraries of this type in the United States. These are at Newark, Minneapolis, Indianapolis, Providence and Hartford.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 7, 1930

EDWARD KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL LIBRARY IS OPENED TODAY

INTERIOR VIEW OF LIBRARY

MRS. WATKINS DIETRICHSON
Librarian

Without ceremonial fuss or feathers, the Edward Kirstein Memorial Library in Court sq. alongside City Hall, was opened to the general public at 9 this morning, embarking upon what promises to be a long and useful career of service to downtown business men and to those citizens who wish to avail themselves of the standard library branch reading room on the third floor of the structure.

Vice Pres. Louis E. Kirstein of the Wm. Filene's Sons Company, who donated the $200,000 fund which built and furnished the structure on city-owned land, formerly occupied by Station 2, in memory of his father, was away from Boston on business. At his suggestion opening formalities were dispensed with, but it is believed that exercises of a dedicatory nature may take place some time in the fall.

Mrs. Watkins Dietrichson, librarian of this branch, which is to be budgeted annually out of taxpayers' funds, simply gave the word to open the establishment this morning, just as if it had been operating for a month or a year. And she and her staff of eight persons soon busied themselves in aiding the institution's first "customers."

Passersby in City Hall av and Court sq. stopped to note the picture through the large plate-glass windows of the first floor chamber. They admired the Colonial facade of the structure, which is a duplicate of that of the first public library in Boston, that erected on a Bulfinch design on Franklin pl. in 1794.

Statistical matter about the world's general business is available on this first floor. Here are directories of all important United States cities, maps and atlases, timetables and other periodicals, and the leading magazines of all branches of business and industry. Mrs. Dietrichson gave the following sample list as typical of the kind of questions which this library is ready to answer without charge to business men and others:

An address in Indianapolis?
The name of the president of an insurance company?
Who are the State officials of Oregon?
The size of a certain block in Dorchester?
The value of land on Fifth av, New York?
Who manufactures raincoats?
The names of jobbers in dairy products?
The decoded message of a cablegram?
What steamships sail for Honolulu about May 30?
Building statistics of Milwaukee?
The name of a bank in Leipzig, Germany?
Ten-year price-range on "British Aluminum"?

Business conditions in Czechoslovakia?
On the second floor of the building are Government reports and bulletins covering many lines of business, vocational and general business and economic topics. On the shelves of this room are the latest authoritative volumes on practically all lines of general business in all parts of the world.
On the top floor is the room to be devoted to the general public, and its walls are lined with volumes such as are of general rather than business interest. Grace C. Brady is in charge of this room, containing popular literature and the classic authors. The telephone number for this room is Hubbard 1969, while Mrs. Dietrichson, librarian in charge of the business branches, may be telephoned at Hubbard 0560.

124 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 7, 1930

THE LIBRARIAN

NEVER say Boston doesn't beat her swords into ploughshares, what with the new business branch of the Boston Public Library built on the site of a police station. This very day at nine A. M. the branch was opened to the public without any formality. It appears that Louis E. Kirstein of the library board of trustees, who donated the building in memory of his father, Edward Kirstein, preferred that this should be so. Possibly at some later date the modest Mr. Kirstein may yield to the wishes of his fellow trustees and Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, and permit some form of dedication. After all, such an unusual occasion merits a few speeches and top hats.

The Kirstein Memorial Building, in City Hall avenue, is pleasantly Georgian in effect, two and a half stories high, of red brick, with white trim. In the facade the architects, Putnam & Cox, have followed closely the design of Charles Bulfinch for the central feature of the famous Tontine Crescent erected in Franklin place in 1794, which was occupied by the Boston Library, the only collection of books at that time open to public use in Boston.

One of the features of the building is the huge show window on a level with the street. Through this the passerby may stare frankly, either at the glistening rows of directories within, or at the business exhibit which is to be arranged directly behind the pane. This state of affairs is a great relief from the days when library windows were so high-pitched that only passing aviators could spy on their cloistral calm.

Mrs. Mary Watkins Dietrichson has been appointed librarian of the business branch. In addition to her experience in the statistical department of the Boston Public Library, Mrs. Dietrichson had a year in the reference division of the Harvard Business Library. Her assistants are Miss Mary McCarthy, who was for years with the Stone & Webster Library, which closed recently; and William Dana Orcutt, who has had valuable training in several departments of the central library.

Within the new library building is suggestive of the lovely restraint of the Federal period. The walls are finished in unpainted mahogany and there is a fireplace on each floor, surrounded by carved paneling. Tables and chairs are mahogany, in the manner of Sheraton—the Transcript antiquities editor tells me.

On the shelves are arranged the latest year books and directories, both technical and professional, including several foreign ones. Telephone directories of all the important cities of the United States may also be consulted here. There are innumerable business magazines, also commercial and financial papers, as well as pamphlets in vertical files. One whole section is given over to real estate maps and others of commercial interest. A set of the Commercial and Financial Chronicle, from 1908 to date, is set forth on the shelves. Later, the librarian hopes to have the complete file from the beginning. Perhaps the most important of all is the investment service. Even marginers are welcome to use this.

On the balcony are arranged shelf after shelf of business books in vivid bindings. The Librarian was somewhat overcomat seeing so many volumes in a mint state. There is no unsightly label on any of these, which somewhat startled the Librarian, the latter end of whose childhood was spent scraping off old labels from library books, firmly sticking on new ones—you had to use paste in our workroom instead of moistening them with a sponge!—then adding book numbers in ink, which generally smooched. I began at twelve and spent all my summer vacations doing this. And can you wonder that the mind is slightly warped? Nowadays, the light-hearted extra assistants simply write the number with an electric Stylus pen on a sheet of specially treated paper held against the back of the book and behold identification which is slightly and permanent.

The balcony is divided into alcoves, each furnished with a table and chairs. In one of these alcoves is a collection of the more popular of the Government documents. On this floor, too, is the employees rest room, also a work room, lavishly supplied with shelves and supply closets. Collating and labeling is all that will be done there at present, for it will be many months before any of those books require mending. All the business books on the second floor circulate. However, if you live in Winchester, or Hampton, or any town outside Boston, don't come pleading for a library card, even if you work in this city. There is a way around this, though. Any business firm in Boston may have a so-called special card, which employees may use to draw out books. This is rather generous of the city of Boston, which has a difficult time supplying her own citizens with reading matter.

If you want books other than on the subject of business, the third floor of the Kirstein Memorial Building stands ready to serve you. Here is a regular circulating branch library, for adults, containing fiction and non-fiction of all kinds. The Librarian is Miss Grace C. Brady, and her assistant is Lillian Ginsburg, both of whom have had training at the central library and other branches of the service.

There is another startling innovation in this branch library. The fiction has no labels or lettering of any kind on the outside. Except for the removal of the jackets the books are exactly as they came from the booksellers. As they are arranged on the shelves alphabetically by author, the librarians feel that the former convict-like lettering or labeling is unnecessary. Now ladies and gentlemen, I ask you—as one who spent the priceless hours of early youth verifying shelves—is this, or is this not, Utopia?

Already there is a tie-up (aren't I going business like) between the Kirstein Branch and the neighbors on the first floor and balcony. The branch has arranged a delightful and informative exhibit on "What Boston Banks Have Done for Boston History." In a large cabinet are arranged the many excellent publications published by banks in Boston. When you have finished looking through these, you will be amazed to find the extraordinary amount of historical research which these organizations are doing continually.

Along with the publications are tiny figures representing important personages in the early history of the Massachusetts Bay Colony. These are absolutely true to the period, and are the work of Hilda Baker, of the branch department. The arrangement of the figures is delightfully ingenious. For instance, Anne Bradstreet, the first New England poetess stands before a volume of "The Colonist," published by the Old Colony Trust Company, which is open to a picture of the Gutenberg Bible, illustrating an article by William Dana Orcutt, on famous book collections of bankers.

American bankers have always been the patrons of history and literature. It seems for James Savage who founded the Provident Institution for Savings, arranged the first complete edition of John Winthrop's History of New England. For many years, one of the manuscript volumes was lost and it was eventually located by Mr. Savage in the belfry of the Old South Church—of all places.

Cotton Mather, in his black gown, is calculating very excitedly toward Anne Hutchinson, who is absorbed in contemplation of a portrait of her statue which appears in one of the publications of the State Street Trust Company. William Blaxton, the first settler of Boston is calling attention to an article on School Street, from "The Eighteen Fifties and the Five Cent Savings Bank." Sir Henry Vane, very dashing in clock and plumage hat stands near "The Book of the Shawmut Bank." John Winthrop is also present, and likewise John Harvard.

One of the publications of the First National Bank, "Markets of the World," is an extremely valuable reference work for libraries, as it contains all kinds of economic maps and statistical abstracts. Also included in the display is the map of old Boston from the Boston Five Cents Savings Bank and copies of the N. C. Wyeth ship murals in the First National Bank. In addition there are publications from the Eliot Savings, North End Savings, Second National, Home Savings, Union Savings, Roxbury Institution for Savings and the Wilder Savings Banks. The librarians plan to change the exhibition every two weeks. Next comes publications of banks throughout the State, and after that a series concerning the industries of Boston and Massachusetts.

Due mainly to Mr. Kirstein's generosity, Boston now has one of the best-equipped business libraries in the country, and the downtown section of the city is being wished for a circulating branch. No longer will it be necessary for Boston business men to depend on the Harvard Business Library (that's a good one, too), now they have only to lift the telephone hook—or rather have a secretary or subordinate do it, as is the American custom—to get in immediate touch with any or trade directories, cable codes, maps, atlases, investment service, time tables and other ready reference books. The telephone number is Hubbard 0560.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT, MAY 14, 1930

THE LIBRARIAN

OUR own Boston Public Library was probably the first in the country to prepare a special annual exhibit of books suitable for Jewish readers. This has been done for several years and has stimulated an interest in the reading and purchasing of Jewish books by library patrons and brought about good will and better racial understanding on the part of non-Jews. It is particularly appropriate that Lag B'Omar, often referred to as the Scholar's Festival, which occurs this week, should likewise mark Jewish Book Week. This is being observed by the Boston Public Library, which has arranged special extension libraries. Which seems fair enough.

Recently the Middle West librarian was informed that the Boston Medical Library, to which he was indebted for many loans of scarce and valuable books, was compelled, owing to the increase in demands for interlibrary loans to confine such loans hereafter to the Middle Atlantic States and Eastern Canada. Although admitting the justice of such a rule, Mr. Walter sadly declares that Minnesota will miss the service.

Not so long ago, one of Minnesota's neighboring libraries informed the University Library that the exchange material it sent was hardly a quid pro quo for the material it had been and still is receiving as loans. A hint was given that unless certain publications of the University of Minnesota Press were sent as additional exchanges, it might seem advisable to discontinue loans. Hmm, a racket. Although these books are not

Of permanent interest are new books, and the cases are 3x5x10, 3x7x10, 3x9x10, 3x11x10, 3x13x10, 3x15x10, 3x17x10, 3x19x10, 3x21x10, 3x23x10, 3x25x10, 3x27x10, 3x29x10, 3x31x10, 3x33x10, 3x35x10, 3x37x10, 3x39x10, 3x41x10, 3x43x10, 3x45x10, 3x47x10, 3x49x10, 3x51x10, 3x53x10, 3x55x10, 3x57x10, 3x59x10, 3x61x10, 3x63x10, 3x65x10, 3x67x10, 3x69x10, 3x71x10, 3x73x10, 3x75x10, 3x77x10, 3x79x10, 3x81x10, 3x83x10, 3x85x10, 3x87x10, 3x89x10, 3x91x10, 3x93x10, 3x95x10, 3x97x10, 3x99x10, 3x101x10, 3x103x10, 3x105x10, 3x107x10, 3x109x10, 3x111x10, 3x113x10, 3x115x10, 3x117x10, 3x119x10, 3x121x10, 3x123x10, 3x125x10, 3x127x10, 3x129x10, 3x131x10, 3x133x10, 3x135x10, 3x137x10, 3x139x10, 3x141x10, 3x143x10, 3x145x10, 3x147x10, 3x149x10, 3x151x10, 3x153x10, 3x155x10, 3x157x10, 3x159x10, 3x161x10, 3x163x10, 3x165x10, 3x167x10, 3x169x10, 3x171x10, 3x173x10, 3x175x10, 3x177x10, 3x179x10, 3x181x10, 3x183x10, 3x185x10, 3x187x10, 3x189x10, 3x191x10, 3x193x10, 3x195x10, 3x197x10, 3x199x10, 3x201x10, 3x203x10, 3x205x10, 3x207x10, 3x209x10, 3x211x10, 3x213x10, 3x215x10, 3x217x10, 3x219x10, 3x221x10, 3x223x10, 3x225x10, 3x227x10, 3x229x10, 3x231x10, 3x233x10, 3x235x10, 3x237x10, 3x239x10, 3x241x10, 3x243x10, 3x245x10, 3x247x10, 3x249x10, 3x251x10, 3x253x10, 3x255x10, 3x257x10, 3x259x10, 3x261x10, 3x263x10, 3x265x10, 3x267x10, 3x269x10, 3x271x10, 3x273x10, 3x275x10, 3x277x10, 3x279x10, 3x281x10, 3x283x10, 3x285x10, 3x287x10, 3x289x10, 3x291x10, 3x293x10, 3x295x10, 3x297x10, 3x299x10, 3x301x10, 3x303x10, 3x305x10, 3x307x10, 3x309x10, 3x311x10, 3x313x10, 3x315x10, 3x317x10, 3x319x10, 3x321x10, 3x323x10, 3x325x10, 3x327x10, 3x329x10, 3x331x10, 3x333x10, 3x335x10, 3x337x10, 3x339x10, 3x341x10, 3x343x10, 3x345x10, 3x347x10, 3x349x10, 3x351x10, 3x353x10, 3x355x10, 3x357x10, 3x359x10, 3x361x10, 3x363x10, 3x365x10, 3x367x10, 3x369x10, 3x371x10, 3x373x10, 3x375x10, 3x377x10, 3x379x10, 3x381x10, 3x383x10, 3x385x10, 3x387x10, 3x389x10, 3x391x10, 3x393x10, 3x395x10, 3x397x10, 3x399x10, 3x401x10, 3x403x10, 3x405x10, 3x407x10, 3x409x10, 3x411x10, 3x413x10, 3x415x10, 3x417x10, 3x419x10, 3x421x10, 3x423x10, 3x425x10, 3x427x10, 3x429x10, 3x431x10, 3x433x10, 3x435x10, 3x437x10, 3x439x10, 3x441x10, 3x443x10, 3x445x10, 3x447x10, 3x449x10, 3x451x10, 3x453x10, 3x455x10, 3x457x10, 3x459x10, 3x461x10, 3x463x10, 3x465x10, 3x467x10, 3x469x10, 3x471x10, 3x473x10, 3x475x10, 3x477x10, 3x479x10, 3x481x10, 3x483x10, 3x485x10, 3x487x10, 3x489x10, 3x491x10, 3x493x10, 3x495x10, 3x497x10, 3x499x10, 3x501x10, 3x503x10, 3x505x10, 3x507x10, 3x509x10, 3x511x10, 3x513x10, 3x515x10, 3x517x10, 3x519x10, 3x521x10, 3x523x10, 3x525x10, 3x527x10, 3x529x10, 3x531x10, 3x533x10, 3x535x10, 3x537x10, 3x539x10, 3x541x10, 3x543x10, 3x545x10, 3x547x10, 3x549x10, 3x551x10, 3x553x10, 3x555x10, 3x557x10, 3x559x10, 3x561x10, 3x563x10, 3x565x10, 3x567x10, 3x569x10, 3x571x10, 3x573x10, 3x575x10, 3x577x10, 3x579x10, 3x581x10, 3x583x10, 3x585x10, 3x587x10, 3x589x10, 3x591x10, 3x593x10, 3x595x10, 3x597x10, 3x599x10, 3x601x10, 3x603x10, 3x605x10, 3x607x10, 3x609x10, 3x611x10, 3x613x10, 3x615x10, 3x617x10, 3x619x10, 3x621x10, 3x623x10, 3x625x10, 3x627x10, 3x629x10, 3x631x10, 3x633x10, 3x635x10, 3x637x10, 3x639x10, 3x641x10, 3x643x10, 3x645x10, 3x647x10, 3x649x10, 3x651x10, 3x653x10, 3x655x10, 3x657x10, 3x659x10, 3x661x10, 3x663x10, 3x665x10, 3x667x10, 3x669x10, 3x671x10, 3x673x10, 3x675x10, 3x677x10, 3x679x10, 3x681x10, 3x683x10, 3x685x10, 3x687x10, 3x689x10, 3x691x10, 3x693x10, 3x695x10, 3x697x10, 3x699x10, 3x701x10, 3x703x10, 3x705x10, 3x707x10, 3x709x10, 3x711x10, 3x713x10, 3x715x10, 3x717x10, 3x719x10, 3x721x10, 3x723x10, 3x725x10, 3x727x10, 3x729x10, 3x731x10, 3x733x10, 3x735x10, 3x737x10, 3x739x10, 3x741x10, 3x743x10, 3x745x10, 3x747x10, 3x749x10, 3x751x10, 3x753x10, 3x755x10, 3x757x10, 3x759x10, 3x761x10, 3x763x10, 3x765x10, 3x767x10, 3x769x10, 3x771x10, 3x773x10, 3x775x10, 3x777x10, 3x779x10, 3x781x10, 3x783x10, 3x785x10, 3x787x10, 3x789x10, 3x791x10, 3x793x10, 3x795x10, 3x797x10, 3x799x10, 3x801x10, 3x803x10, 3x805x10, 3x807x10, 3x809x10, 3x811x10, 3x813x10, 3x815x10, 3x817x10, 3x819x10, 3x821x10, 3x823x10, 3x825x10, 3x827x10, 3x829x10, 3x831x10, 3x833x10, 3x835x10, 3x837x10, 3x839x10, 3x841x10, 3x843x10, 3x845x10, 3x847x10, 3x849x10, 3x851x10, 3x853x10, 3x855x10, 3x857x10, 3x859x10, 3x861x10, 3x863x10, 3x865x10, 3x867x10, 3x869x10, 3x871x10, 3x873x10, 3x875x10, 3x877x10, 3x879x10, 3x881x10, 3x883x10, 3x885x10, 3x887x10, 3x889x10, 3x891x10, 3x893x10, 3x895x10, 3x897x10, 3x899x10, 3x901x10, 3x903x10, 3x905x10, 3x907x10, 3x909x10, 3x911x10, 3x913x10, 3x915x10, 3x917x10, 3x919x10, 3x921x10, 3x923x10, 3x925x10, 3x927x10, 3x929x10, 3x931x10, 3x933x10, 3x935x10, 3x937x10, 3x939x10, 3x941x10, 3x943x10, 3x945x10, 3x947x10, 3x949x10, 3x951x10, 3x953x10, 3x955x10, 3x957x10, 3x959x10, 3x961x10, 3x963x10, 3x965x10, 3x967x10, 3x969x10, 3x971x10, 3x973x10, 3x975x10, 3x977x10, 3x979x10, 3x981x10, 3x983x10, 3x985x10, 3x987x10, 3x989x10, 3x991x10, 3x993x10, 3x995x10, 3x997x10, 3x999x10, 3x1001x10, 3x1003x10, 3x1005x10, 3x1007x10, 3x1009x10, 3x1011x10, 3x1013x10, 3x1015x10, 3x1017x10, 3x1019x10, 3x1021x10, 3x1023x10, 3x1025x10, 3x1027x10, 3x1029x10, 3x1031x10, 3x1033x10, 3x1035x10, 3x1037x10, 3x1039x10, 3x1041x10, 3x1043x10, 3x1045x10, 3x1047x10, 3x1049x10, 3x1051x10, 3x1053x10, 3x1055x10, 3x1057x10, 3x1059x10, 3x1061x10, 3x1063x10, 3x1065x10, 3x1067x10, 3x1069x10, 3x1071x10, 3x1073x10, 3x1075x10, 3x1077x10, 3x1079x10, 3x1081x10, 3x1083x10, 3x1085x10, 3x1087x10, 3x1089x10, 3x1091x10, 3x1093x10, 3x1095x10, 3x1097x10, 3x1099x10, 3x1101x10, 3x1103x10, 3x1105x10, 3x1107x10, 3x1109x10, 3x1111x10, 3x1113x10, 3x1115x10, 3x1117x10, 3x1119x10, 3x1121x10, 3x1123x10, 3x1125x10, 3x1127x10, 3x1129x10, 3x1131x10, 3x1133x10, 3x1135x10, 3x1137x10, 3x1139x10, 3x1141x10, 3x1143x10, 3x1145x10, 3x1147x10, 3x1149x10, 3x1151x10, 3x1153x10, 3x1155x10, 3x1157x10, 3x1159x10, 3x1161x10, 3x1163x10, 3x1165x10, 3x1167x10, 3x1169x10, 3x1171x10, 3x1173x10, 3x1175x10, 3x1177x10, 3x1179x10, 3x1181x10, 3x1183x10, 3x1185x10, 3x1187x10, 3x1189x10, 3x1191x10, 3x1193x10, 3x1195x10, 3x1197x10, 3x1199x10, 3x1201x10, 3x1203x10, 3x1205x10, 3x1207x10, 3x1209x10, 3x1211x10, 3x1213x10, 3x1215x10, 3x1217x10, 3x1219x10, 3x1221x10, 3x1223x10, 3x1225x10, 3x1227x10, 3x1229x10, 3x1231x10, 3x1233x10, 3x1235x10, 3x1237x10, 3x1239x10, 3x1241x10, 3x1243x10, 3x1245x10, 3x1247x10, 3x1249x10, 3x1251x10, 3x1253x10, 3x1255x10, 3x1257x10, 3x1259x10, 3x1261x10, 3x1263x10, 3x1265x10, 3x1267x10, 3x1269x10, 3x1271x10, 3x1273x10, 3x1275x10, 3x1277x10, 3x1279x10, 3x1281x10, 3x1283x10, 3x1285x10, 3x1287x10, 3x1289x10, 3x1291x10, 3x1293x10, 3x1295x10, 3x1297x10, 3x1299x10, 3x1301x10, 3x1303x10, 3x1305x10, 3x1307x10, 3x1309x10, 3x1311x10, 3x1313x10, 3x1315x10, 3x1317x10, 3x1319x10, 3x1321x10, 3x1323x10, 3x1325x10, 3x1327x10, 3x1329x10, 3x1331x10, 3x1333x10, 3x1335x10, 3x1337x10, 3x1339x10, 3x1341x10, 3x1343x10, 3x1345x10, 3x1347x10, 3x1349x10, 3x1351x10, 3x1353x10, 3x1355x10, 3x1357x10, 3x1359x10, 3x1361x10, 3x1363x10, 3x1365x10, 3x1367x10, 3x1369x10, 3x1371x10, 3x1373x10, 3x1375x10, 3x1377x10, 3x1379x10, 3x1381x10, 3x1383x10, 3x1385x10, 3x1387x10, 3x1389x10, 3x1391x10, 3x1393x10, 3x1395x10, 3x1397x10, 3x1399x10, 3x1401x10, 3x1403x10, 3x1405x10, 3x1407x10, 3x1409x10, 3x1411x10, 3x1413x10, 3x1415x10, 3x1417x10, 3x1419x10, 3x1421x10, 3x1423x10, 3x1425x10, 3x1427x10, 3x1429x10, 3x1431x10, 3x1433x10, 3x1435x10, 3x1437x10, 3x1439x10, 3x1441x10, 3x1443x10, 3x1445x10, 3x1447x10, 3x1449x10, 3x1451x10, 3x1453x10, 3x1455x10, 3x1457x10, 3x1459x10, 3x1461x10, 3x1463x10, 3x1465x10, 3x1467x10, 3x1469x10, 3x1471x10, 3x1473x10, 3x1475x10, 3x1477x10, 3x1479x10, 3x1481x10, 3x1483x10, 3x1485x10, 3x1487x10, 3x1489x10, 3x1491x10, 3x1493x10, 3x1495x10, 3x1497x10, 3x1499x10, 3x1501x10, 3x1503x10, 3x1505x10, 3x1507x10, 3x1509x10, 3x1511x10, 3x1513x10, 3x1515x10, 3x1517x10, 3x1519x10, 3x1521x10, 3x1523x10, 3x1525x10, 3x1527x10, 3x1529x10, 3x1531x10, 3x1533x10, 3x1535x10, 3x1537x1

MRS. WATKINS DIETRICHSON
Librarian

Without ceremonial fuss or feathers, the Edward Kirstein Memorial Library in Court sq. alongside City Hall, was opened to the general public at 9 this morning, embarking upon what promises to be a long and useful career of service to downtown business men and to those citizens who wish to avail themselves of the standard library branch reading room on the third floor of the structure.

Vice Pres Louis E. Kirstein of the Wm. Filene's Sons Company, who donated the $200,000 fund which built and furnished the structure on city-owned land, formerly occupied by Station 2, in memory of his father, was away from Boston on business. At his suggestion opening formalities were dispensed with, but it is believed that excercises of a dedicatory nature may take place some time in the fall.

Mary Watkins Dietrichson, librarian of this branch, which is to be budgeted annually out of taxpayers' funds, simply gave the word to open the establishment this morning, just as if it had been operating for a month or a year. And she and her staff of eight persons soon busied themselves in aiding the institution's first "customers."

Passersby in City Hall av and Court sq stopped to note the picture through the large plate-glass windows of the first floor chamber. They admired the Colonial facade of the structure, which is a duplicate of that of the first public library in Boston, that erected on a Bulfinch design on Franklin pl. in 1794.

Statistical matter about the world's general business is available on this first floor. Here are directories of all important United States cities, maps and atlases, timetables and other periodicals, and the leading magazines of all branches of business and industry. Mrs. Dietrichson gave the following sample list as typical of the kind of questions which this library is ready to answer without charge to business men and others:

INTERIOR VIEW OF LIBRARY

EDWARD KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL LIBRARY

An address in Indianapolis?
The name of the president of an insurance company?
Who are the State officials of Oregon?
The size of a certain block in Dorchester?
The value of land on Fifth av, New York?

Who manufactures raincoats?
The names of jobbers in dairy products?
The decoded message of a cablegram?
What steamships sail for Honolulu about May 30?
Building statistics of Milwaukee?
The name of a bank in Leipzig, Germany?
Ten-year price-range on "British Aluminum"?

Business conditions in Czechoslovakia?
On the second floor of the building are Government reports and bulletins covering many lines of business, volumes on general business and economic topics. On the shelves of this room are the latest authoritative volumes on practically all lines of general business in all parts of the world.
On the top floor is the room to be devoted to the general public, and its walls are lined with volumes such as are of general rather than business interest. Grace C. Brary is in charge of this room, containing popular literature and the classic authors. The telephone number for this room is Hubbard 1969, while Mrs. Dietrichson, librarian in charge of the business branches, may be telephoned at Hubbard 0860.

pitched that only passing visitors could spy on their cloistral calm.
Mrs. Mary Watkins Dietrichson has been appointed librarian of the business branch. In addition to her experience in the statistical department of the Boston Public Library, Mrs. Dietrichson had a year in the reference division of the same library. Her assistant is Miss Mary McCarthy, who was for years with the Stone & Webster Library, which closed recently; and William Chert, who has had valuable training in several departments of the central library.

Within the new library building is suggestive of the lovely restraint of the Federal period. The walls are finished in unpolished mahogany and there is a fireplace on each floor, surrounded by carved paneling. Tables and chairs are mahogany. In the manner of Sheraton—the Transcript antiquities editor tells me.

On the shelves are arranged the latest year books and directories, both technical and professional, including several foreign ones. Telephone directories of all the important cities of the United States may also be consulted here. There are unnumbered business magazines, also, as pamphlets in vertical files. One whole section is given over to real estate maps and others of commercial interest. A set of the Commercial and Financial Chronicle, from 1908 to date, is set forth on the shelves. Later, the librarian hopes to have the complete file from the beginning. Perhaps the most important of all is the investment service. Even margin users are welcome to use this.

On the balcony are arranged shelves after shelves of business books in vivid binding. The Librarian was somewhat overcast at seeing so many volumes in a new state. There is no unsightly label on any of these, which somewhat startled the Librarian, the latter end of whose child hood was spent scraping off old labels from library books, firmly sticking on new ones—you had to use paste in your workroom instead of moistening them with a sponge—then adding book numbers in ink, which generally smooched. I began at twelve and spent all my summer vacations doing this. And can you wonder that the mind is slightly warped? Nowadays, the light-hearted extra assistant simply write the number with an electric Stylus pen on a sheet of specially treated paper held against the back of the book and behold identification which is slightly and permanent.

The balcony is divided into alcoves, each furnished with a table and chairs. In one of these alcoves is a collection of the more popular of the Government documents. On this floor, too, is the employees rest room, also a work room, lavishly supplied with shelves and supply closets. Collating and labeling is all that will be done there at present, for it will be many months before any of these books require mending. All the business books on the second floor circulate. However, if you live in Winchester, or Hampton, or any town outside Boston, don't

Along with the business branch, representing important person ages in the early history of the Massachusetts Bay colony. These are absolute ly true to the period, and are the work of Hilda Baker, of the branch depart ment. The arrangement of the figures is delectably beautiful. For instance, Anne Bradstreet, the first New England poetess, is before a volume of "The Colonist," published by the Old Colony Trust Company, which is open to a picture of the Quaker Bay. Illustrating an article by William Brewster, on famous book collections of bookers.

American bankers have always been the patrons of history and literature. It seems for James Savage who founded the President Institution for Savings, arranged the first complete edition of John Winthrop's History of New England. For many years, one of the manuscript volumes was lost and it was eventually located by Mr. Savage in the belfry of the Old South Church—of all places.

Edwin Mather, in his black gown, is gesticulating very excitedly toward Anne Hutchinson, who is absorbed in contemplation of a portrait of her statue which appears in one of the publications of the Shawmut Trust Company. William Blaxton, the first settler of Boston is calling attention to an article on School Street, from "The Eighteen Fifties and the Five Cent Savings Bank," Sir Henry Vane, very dashing in cloak and plumed hat stands near "The Book of the Shawmut Bank." John Winthrop is also present and likewise John Harvard.

One of the publications of the First National Bank, "Markets of the World," is an extremely valuable reference work for libraries, as it contains all kinds of economic maps and statistical abstracts. Also included in the display is the map of old Boston from the Boston Five Cents Savings Bank and copies of the N. C. Wyeth ship murals in the First National Bank. In addition there are publications from the Pilot Savings, North End Savings, Second National, Home Savings, Union Savings, Roxbury Institution for Savings and the Wilder Savings Banks. The librarians plan to change the exhibit every two weeks. Next comes publications of banks throughout the State, and after that a series concerning the industries of Boston and Massachusetts.

Due mainly to Mr. Kirstein's generosity, Boston now has one of the best equipped business libraries in the country, and the downtown section of the city its long wished for circulating branch. No longer will it be necessary for Boston business men to depend on the Harvard Business Library (that's a good one, too). Now they have only to lift the telephone off the hook—or rather have a secretary or subsecretary do it, as is the American custom—to get in immediate touch with maps, atlases, investment service, time tables and other ready reference books. The telephone number is Hubbard 0860.

Jewish Book Week Exhibit

West End Branch, Boston Public Library

exhibits of its rare treasures of other suitable books, photographs, clippings, periodicals, and ceremonial objects in all its branches that serve Jewish communities.

Books in Hebrew, Yiddish, English and other languages are now on display. The library has found it expedient to emphasize a single phase of Jewish life art or culture at each branch, rather than to duplicate the exhibit at all. A numbered list especially prepared may be had upon request.

One of the most striking of the exhibits in honor of Jewish Book Week is the one arranged at the West End Branch by the librarian, Frances Goldstein, whose whole-hearted enthusiasm adds to the pleasure of all festivals. West End's celebration of both the Feast of Lights and Christmas are equally charming and attractive. In the present display, books and periodicals are concentrated in the center of the main reading room around a case containing the Scroll of Holy Law. This arrangement gives the impression of the Ark, or "Holy of Holies," in the synagogue, when it is open for devout worship. With it is grouped ceremonial objects, both obsolete and still in use, and strange, in an appropriately labeled.

Photographs of Jewish life and mounted clippings on famous books of the past are hung on the walls to carry out the idea. The Scroll and other ceremonial objects are graciously lent for the occasion by Temple Israel and individuals in the community.
This library feels that its efforts in helping to promote the idea of Jewish Book Week in the past has been thoroughly justified, for it has brought about a new interest in the subject and promoted the circulation and purchase of the books recommended and displayed. The list of good Jewish books in English, which is being distributed by the Boston Public Library is extremely valuable. The arrangement, too, is excellent as the books are listed by author and title. "For the Youngest Readers," "For the Older Boys and Girls," "Jewish Life in Fiction," "Literature and Autobiography," and "Backgrounds—References to Many Subjects."

Not the grasshopper, only, but inter-library loans eventually become a burden to librarians, according to Frank K. Walter, who serves the University of Minnesota in that capacity. His light-hearted but arresting plaint appears in the latest issue of Libraries. Anyone, he declares, who has attempted frequently to borrow on interlibrary loan or who has attempted to lend on requests for such loans, will admit at once the inadequacy of results.

Dividing all libraries into the "givers" and the "get-ems," Mr. Walter explains that the former class includes the institutions with ready book collections, limited funds and high professional ideals or at least a desire to serve as many patrons as possible as well as possible at as little cost as possible. These adopt wholeheartedly the theory of library cooperation and, very logically, call on the better stocked libraries to fill temporarily the gaps in their own limited book collection.
On the other hand, he points out, the "get-ems" see difficulties in the free and unrestricted use of their collections by other libraries. In many cases, they have the books only because they have carefully saved enough surplus to buy the unusual item or because they need the most certain way need the unusual item. In other cases, he states, legal restrictions, either local or general, forbid undue generosity. In practically no case is there any actual obligation to have these volumes worn out by other institutions without due recompense.

It seems that the library the writer represents belongs to both classes. As a member of the second class in size among the university libraries of the country, his institution is often obliged to depend on the generosity of friends for the books which are really needed to complete some creditable piece of research or to improve some course of instruction. During 1925, the University Library borrowed two hundred and forty-one volumes from thirty libraries and lent three hundred and eighty-nine volumes to thirty-eight libraries, sixty-eight to private scholars and six hundred and fifty-five given the library for exchange purposes and have to be paid for before they go on the shelves, the University Library took the hint, bought the books, sent them on and are thus paying a real though disguised fee for books they borrow.

Still another library which from time to time sent technical magazines has within a few weeks, written that all future loans will be on a fee basis, much as the service of the Engineering Societies has been for some time. "The fee is to be twenty-five cents for the first fortnight loans and twenty-five cents each day after that. We find it necessary to ask this fee in order that our journals may be promptly returned. The librarian hasn't been able to find out whether the fee included the period the book is in the mail."

Up to the time of writing, the University of Minnesota has not been asked to lend its five completed British Museum Catalogue or its Official Records of the War of the Rebellion, but has, however, been asked to borrow a run of scarce British census blue books on which the librarian estimated a transportation charge alone of about $50.

In addition to the numerous requests for material from graduate students preparing theses, numerous pleas come from extension courses, correspondence courses, high school debate clubs and school activities. Less than a month ago the University library was asked to send a teacher's college nineteen current educational books for use of a class in sociology which had evidently started without giving a thought to books for assigned reading.

One of the points usually emphasized when librarians get to discussing inter-library loans, is that the public should be urged to be reasonable in the request, to be urged to be reasonable and to kind. Mr. Walter, however, believes that it is much easier to limit incoming requests than outgoing. It is possible to present a grantee from when Harvard or the Library of Congress ask for material, but it is less easy to refuse smaller, neighboring institutions.

Within college precincts some good could probably be done by putting the actual costs of loans back on the departments making them. Mr. Walter feels that many a dean would be sceptical about the value of a thesis which required the borrowing of a hundred or more books at a unit cost of from twenty-five to fifty cents, if the cost came out of his department budget. The high cost of culture.

If library extension increases, and adult education, in its present phase succeeds, greater cooperation, considered by Minneapolis librarian, is inevitable. The county library must serve the local library, the large city library must either be the center of county service, or at least stand behind it. The State commission, the extension department and the library of the State university or State college must back the county library and the schools and colleges of their State as far as conditions make possible.

With the opening of the fifty-seventh session on July 7, Chautauque Summer Schools, which are the oldest in the United States, will celebrate the thirty-fifth session of library courses. In four summer sessions, students may complete a full year's library course and receive a diploma. As the school accepts only those who are already in library service or under appointment to library positions, students upon completion of the course have the combined training of school work and actual experience in the field.
Miss Mary Elizabeth Downey, State library organizer of Ohio, State Library, Columbus, O., who is the director of the Chautauque School for Librarians, has planned the season's work so that students cover the maximum amount of study each summer. Classes continue through Saturday of each week to give eight school weeks each season.

The faculty of the school, besides Miss Downey, the director, included Marie T. Brown, librarian, Public Library, Cincinnati, O.; May Temple, librarian, High School Library, Chautauque Falls, O.; Eueland R. Schenk, Purdue University Library, Lafayette, Ind.; Florence L. Brown, librarian, High School Library, East Chicago, Ind.; and E. J. M. Guinn, Chicago, Ill., and Librarian, Peoria, Ill.

Cover for Music—Oxford-Made

(Photograph by Frank E. Colby)

Decoration and Fantasy

Outside and Inside

From the Design of The Cover Infer The Music That Waits Within

AROUND a music publisher's catalogue is woven such a fascinating wreath of musical and artistic reminiscences as to overshadow the interest that lies, unsuspected, in the more mundane but perhaps no less artistic business of manufacture. It may be that having from my early years been blessed (or cursed) with a love of print and letters, I speak as one biased; and yet numbers of people have been interested from time to time at some anecdote or memory of the mere physical appearance of the music published by the Oxford University Press.

The exhibition of Oxford musical publications so handsomely displayed recently by the Music Section of the Boston Public Library was first gotten together not for its musical but purely for its external attraction. As a collection of printing specimens it has already had several shows, one at the University Press in Oxford, although all the sheet music and even some of the books on music were printed in London by a specialist.

It is not by any means the comfortable fate of the designer of printing to be able to go to even a first-rate printing works and get what he wants straight away. I had a good deal of teaching to do (as well as learning) when I first began to print sheet music some five and a half years ago. Special "punches" for engraving, a new selection of type faces known only to book printers, a number of newly designed ornaments and borders, and a quantity of pictures—these had to be gotten together from innumerable sources and the process of their assembly is by no means over yet.

For the whole interest of a printer's life—and if I am a musician by profession I am a printer by hobby, or vice versa, if you will—the whole interest lies in the endless variety of the work. Every hour a new problem to be met suitably and beautifully with the same limited resources, and all, mark you, at an economic price.

Thus at the Boston Library you could see Tallis's Motet in forty parts, printed on a page measuring twenty-four by eighteen inches, and in another case a handy volume for the pocket, like the "Musical Pilgrim" series, with the flowered paper covers, or Mrs. Newman's "Concert Goer's Guide" in neat brown cloth.

The flowered paper is a fascinating and endless field for a keen designer. I have had all-over patterned papers made in many ways—from the original type ornaments that were cut for the Oxford University Press about 1620, to a repeating design of the nursemaid and perambulator in the public park, for a book of nursery rhymes. Douglas Cockerell, greatest line binder of his day, did several for me which I have used in a number of colors, and one volume of "Shakespeare Songs" is cased in a paper with a pattern made out of the most familiar portrait of the great poet himself.

An interesting succession of designers were used for three hymn books made by the same editors Percy Dearmer, Vaughan Williams and Martin Shaw. For the English Hymnal Professor Selwyn Image, then Slade professor of art at Oxford, for "Songs of Praise", Mr. Douglas Cockerell, for "The Oxford Carol Book"; Mr. Noel Rooke, the eminent woodcut artist. All the bindings are worthy of attention.

The original design for the series known as the "Oxford Musical Essays" was based upon a particularly bad hand-marbled paper from Lyons, France. I bought a good stock but as the series grew I needed some more. Alas the marbler of the original paper had meantime died, and I had to put up with a copy by his assistant. So personal is this work however that the new is a poor substitute, which I would never have chosen in the first instance.

An interesting old character did several covers for me: he was the...

Decorum

Suiting Wrapper to Matter—Oxford Manner

Caprice

(Photographs by Frank E. Colby)

Repetition

You saw it in the DAILY RECORD, Thursday, May 8, 1930

Downtown Library Opens

(Daily Record Photo)

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT,

THURSDAY, MAY 15, 1930

Annual Meeting of Society of Printers

The Society of Printers will hold its annual meeting tonight at the University Club. The occasion has been designated as ladies' night. The society will meet at half-past six for dinner. The election of officers will follow. John C. Hurd presiding. The following candidates have been suggested by the nominating committee: For president, Thacher Nelson; for vice president, George Parker Winship; for secretary, Maurice Blackmur; for treasurer, David T. Pottinger; for auditor, Amos Weston; for the council, John C. Hurd, D. B. Updike, A. P. Mackay, Herbert Farrier and W. H. Greeley. The guests of the meeting will be F. W. Buxton, vice president of the board of trustees of the Boston Public Library; Charles F. D. Belden, director of the library; Zoltan Haraszti, editor of publications; Miss Harriet Swift, librarian of the Faxon-Ticknor Collection; and Laurence B. Siegfried, editor of the "American Printer."

After the election Mr. Belden will invite the gathering to the newly-opened Treasure Room of the Boston Public Library. He will describe the work of reconstruction which was carried on during the past year on the third floor of the library. Dr. Haraszti will speak of the various collections in the Treasure Room, of the wealth of material which may be of constant help and inspiration to printers and a source of pleasure to everyone interested in finely-printed books. Finally the society will inspect the exhibition of rare books and manuscripts—and the exhibitions of Fifty Books of the Year and of Commercial Printing, these last two arranged by the American Institute of Graphic Art.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 14, 1930

Honored by King of Italy

(Photo by Bachrach)

Charles F. D. Belden

The Director of the Boston Public Library, Has Been Made a Cavaliere of the Order of the Crown of Italy in Recognition of His Services to the Appreciation of Italian Art and Letters and His Promotion of Better Understanding Between the United States and Italy

CHARLES F. D. BELDEN, director of the Boston Public Library, has been created a Cavaliere of the Order of the Crown of Italy by King Victor Emmanuel. The insignia of the order was conferred on Mr. Belden yesterday afternoon by Commendatore Pio Margotti, the Italian consul general at Boston.

The honor was bestowed in recognition of Mr. Belden's services to the appreciation of Italian art and letters in Boston and his promotion of better understanding between Italy and the United States in matters relating to the general public, as well as of his work as one of the leaders of the International Conference of Librarians at Rome in 1929.

Twice previously Mr. Belden has received honors from Italy. He was honored by the city of Ravenna in 1923 by the award of the Dante Medal and he received the Medal of the Cassa di Dante in Rome in 1924. These were bronze medals bestowed because of his services through the library to the Italian residents of Boston.

The Boston Public Library has more than 16,000 books in Italian and most of these volumes are circulated from the branch libraries in the sections of the city which have the largest Italian population.

THE
CHRISTIAN SCIENCE
MONITOR
MAY 15, 1930

Boston Library
Director Honored

Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, was honored May 14 by having conferred upon him the insignia of "Cavaliere," or Knight, of the Order of the Crown of Italy. The presentation was made by the Consul General of Italy, P. Margotti.

This distinction was conferred because of Mr. Belden's interest in Italian art and letters, and because of his activities in the promotion of library understanding between Italy and the United States, especially in matters relating to the general public.

In 1923 Mr. Belden had the distinction of being honored by the City of Ravenna with the Dante Medal and in 1924 by the Cassa di Dante in Rome with the Dante Medal. These medals were bestowed because of Mr. Belden's service through the library to the Italian residents in Boston. The Boston Public Library has now something over 16,000 volumes in the Italian language on its shelves and in circulation.

THURSDAY, MAY 15, 1930

C. F. D. BELDEN HONORED WITH ITALIAN DECORATION

Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, was honored yesterday afternoon by having conferred upon him the insignia of "Cavaliere," or Knight, of the Order of the Crown of Italy, bestowed upon him by King Victor Emmanuel. The presentation was made by the Consul General of Italy, P. Margotti. This distinction was conferred because of Mr. Belden's interest in Italian art and letters, and because of his activities in the promotion of library understanding between Italy and the United States, especially in matters relating to the general public.

It will be recalled that Mr. Belden had the distinction of being honored by the City of Ravenna with the Dante Medal in 1923 and by the Cassa di Dante in Rome with the Dante Medal in 1924. These medals were bestowed because of Mr. Belden's service through the library to the Italian residents in Boston. It is an interesting fact that the Boston Public Library has now something over 16,000 volumes in the Italian language on its shelves and in circulation.

MAY 15, 1930. NO. 13. VOL. 524

BELDEN HONORED BY ITALIAN KING

Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, was honored yesterday afternoon by having conferred upon him the insignia of "Cavaliere," or Knight, of the Order of the Crown of Italy, bestowed by the King. The presentation was made by the Consul General of Italy, P. Margotti. This distinction was conferred because of Mr. Belden's interest in Italian art and letters, and because of his activities in the promotion of library understanding between Italy and the United States, especially in matters relating to the general public.

BOSTON AMERICAN
MAY 15, 1930
Chas. F. D. Belden
Decorated by Italy

Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, has been honored with the insignia of Cavaliere of the Order of the Crown of Italy, it was announced today.

The honor was conferred through P. Margotti, consul general of Italy, for Belden's interest in Italian art and his promotion of understanding between Italy and the United States through the library.

FRIDAY, MAY 16, 1930

Little Walks
About Boston

BY WILLIAM JUSTIN MANN

The current issue of "More Books," the bulletin of the Boston Public Library, is of decided interest. The leading article by Frank H. Chase, assistant librarian, is on the recently opened Kirtland Memorial Library, in City Hall, where the police station used to be. Intended primarily as a business reference library, this new feature of our city life fulfills also another admirable purpose.

On the upper floor of the building is the Kirtland Branch Library, where may be found a good assortment of books of general literature. This meets a great need, for heretofore it has been necessary for the general public to go

THURSDAY, MAY 15, 1930

BAKER HEADS ADULT EDUCATION SOCIETY

C. F. D. Belden, Boston Librarian, Is A Vice-President

CHICAGO, May 14 (AP)—Newton D. Baker of Cleveland, former secretary of war, today was elected president of the American Association for Adult Education. He succeeds Dr. James E. Russell, dean emeritus of Teachers College, Columbia University, who was made chairman.

Vice-presidents selected included Mrs. Dorothy Canfield Fisher, of Arlington, Vt., author, and C. F. D. Belden of Boston, librarian. Margaret E. Burton of New York, was elected secretary.

THURSDAY, MAY 15, 1930

C. F. D. Belden Vice President Ass'n for Adult Education

CHICAGO, May 15 (A.P.)—Newton D. Baker, Cleveland, former Secretary of War, has been elected president of the American Association for Adult Education. He succeeds Dr. James E. Russell, dean emeritus of Teachers College, Columbia University, who was made chairman.

Vice-presidents selected included Mrs. Dorothy Canfield Fisher, Arlington, Vt., author; and C. F. D. Belden, Boston, librarian. Margaret E. Burton, New York, was elected secretary.

BOSTON POST

MAY 15, 1930

Newton D. Baker Heads Adult Education Ass'n

CHICAGO, May 14 (AP)—Newton D. Baker of Cleveland, former Secretary of War, today was elected president of the American Association for Adult Education. He succeeds Dr. James E. Russell, dean emeritus of Teachers College, Columbia University, who was made chairman.

Vice-presidents selected included Mrs. Dorothy Canfield Fisher, of Arlington, Va., and C. F. D. Belden of Boston, librarian.

Margaret E. Burton of New York was elected secretary.

FRIDAY, MAY 16, 1930

Library's 'Treasure Room' Is Opened

Rarest of the rare manuscripts in the new "Treasure Room" at Boston Public Library is this first folio of Shakespeare. Miss Sally Senick of Beacon st., is gazing with admiration at this priceless art. Medieval manuscripts, and old English and American editions are on exhibition.

Edith Benjamin of Danube st., Dorchester, one of the first visitors at the newly opened "Treasure Room," saw this 15th century manuscript.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT

WEDNESDAY, MAY 21, 1930

More Books

In the current number of "More Books," the bulletin of the Boston Public Library, is an article describing the changes which have been made in the building for the purpose of safeguarding the special collection of the library. The old Music Room has been transformed into a Treasure Room where are sheltered in fireproof cases the choicest of the library's possessions in rare books. The first exhibit in this room, now on, shows such productions of the early American press as the Bay Psalm Book, the Elliot Indian Bible, Franklin's Cato Major, etc. With miscellaneous works ranging from medieval manuscripts and early printing through the Elizabethan and Jacobean periods to modern authors down to Emily Dickinson. The purpose of these exhibits is to awaken the people of Boston as well as the Tercentenary visitors to a sense of the importance of the library's treasures.

THURSDAY, MAY 15, 1930

Although the first and second floors of Boston's new branch library in City Hall avenue are devoted almost wholly to the interest of the business man to the third floor conforms more nearly to the Public Library as most persons think of it—a place where they may go to read the latest books of fiction and to peruse the popular magazines.

May 16, 1930

TRAVELER, BOSTON, MASS.

TREASURE ROOM AT LIBRARY ROOM

The new treasure room of the Boston Public Library, work on which was begun last fall, last night was opened to the public. The former music room on the third floor, familiar to hundreds of musicians and music lovers of the city, has been fitted out to serve as the new treasure room. With its three large windows opening on the courtyard, and flooded during the whole day by sunshine, this is the most beautiful room in the building.

Architecturally nothing has been changed, except that the simple grey cement of the pavement has been replaced by slabs of imported marble. Yet the new treasure room gives a very different impression from that of the old music room. There is a feeling of elegance and distinction at the very entrance. The bronze door opening from Sargent hall holds one's attention by its artistic design. And on the walls, done in soft, varnished colors, hang, on one side, John Singleton Copley's famous oil painting, showing Charles I. in the House of Commons demanding the extradition of the five impeached members, and on the other Franklin's portraits by Duplessis and Greuze. Copley's paintings—one of the most important works of the master—is for the first time accessible to the public since the library moved into its present building.

The bookcases along the walls shelve about 60,000 volumes. The books were selected from the special collections of the library: from the Barton collection of Shakespearean and Elizabethan literature, the Prince collection of Americana, the Ticknor collection of Spanish and Portuguese literature, from the Theodore Parker, Bowditch, Longfellow Memorial Thayer and other collections. These collections, in aggregate, contain over 60,000 volumes, about half of which have a special value. But only the rarest items, one volume out of 10, have been placed in the Treasure room.

Opposite the entrance, right and left of the windows, are two wall safes. On the floor, arranged in four parallel ranges, are eight more large safes. These are for the guarding of the rarest treasures of the library. On top of the floor safes are the exhibition cases, capable of holding from 100 to 200 volumes. From time to time new exhibits will be arranged here, planned to illustrate—with original examples—some particular phase of the history of the book, to show rare editions of the works of a writer, or to represent a whole period in literature, history, the sciences.

The exhibition with which the library opens the new Treasure room is designed to give a comprehensive idea of the choice possessions of the institution. Medieval manuscripts on parchment and with illuminated miniatures are shown in one case; 15 century books printed in Germany, Italy, France, Spain, the Netherlands and England are placed on view in another; Shakespeare folios and quartos, and other precious Elizabethan and Jacobean works are displayed, and next to them some of the rarest productions of the early American press; and finally autograph letters and poems by such poets and writers as Poe, Longfellow, Dickens, Browning and Emily Dickinson. There is such a wealth of material as no other public library in the country, save the New York Public Library, could display. The library authorities regard this exhibit as an exceptional one—made only for the occasion of the opening of the room.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 23, 1930

The Boston Public Library got itself in order just in time to receive the first of the city's tercentenary visitors. Its floors have been relaid, where needed; its treasure room has been completed and stocked; the underpinning beneath the front steps, which for some time threatened to give way when crowded with spectators watching parades pass by, have long since been strengthened. Spring cleaning at the library has been thorough.

May 18, 1930

POST, BOSTON, MASS.

ART PRESERVATIVE OF
ALL ARTS IN LIBRARY
TREASURE ROOM

For the opening of the new treasure room in the Public Library of Boston on May 15 the Society of Printers was privileged to participate in the momentous event in the history of fine arts and printing. The visit to the treasure room followed the annual meeting at the University Club, observed as ladies' night, concluding with election of officers.

The special guests were F. W. Buxton, vice-president of the board of trustees of the Public Library; Charles F. D. Belden, director of the library; Zoltan Harsanyi, editor of publications, and Miss Harriet Swift, librarian of the Barton-Ticknor collection, both of the library staff. Also Mr. Laurence B. Siegfried, editor American Printer.

Instructive enjoyment was afforded the Society of Printers, comprising associates promoting "the art preservative of all arts," when after the dinner the portals of the Treasure Room were opened to the exhibition of 20 books of the year and of commercial printing to be on view at the library until May 18 through the courtesy of the American Institute of Graphic Arts.

Medieval manuscripts included: "St. Augustine," De Civitate Dei, a Dutch manuscript on vellum, written in Gothic in 1494; with three beautiful miniatures; "Lactantius," Divine Institutions, from Venice; "History of the World," French manuscript on vellum in roll form with hundreds of small illuminated letters.

The bibliographers will find delight in the 15th century books: "Speculum Naturale," a chained book; a leaf from the Gutenberg Bible, first printed from movable types; and many others. Burne-Jones' large wood cuts illustrate the Kelmscott Chaucer, beautiful work printed by Williams Morris; the Altar Book with type designed by Bertram Goodhue and printed by the Merrymount Press in Boston.

THE BOSTON HERALD, FRIDAY, MAY 16, 1930

New Treasure Room at Library Open
With Exhibition of Rare Collection

The new treasure room of the Boston Public Library, work on which was begun last fall, last night was opened to the public. The former music room on the third floor, familiar to hundreds of musicians and music lovers of the city, has been fitted out to serve as the new treasure room. With its three large windows opening on the courtyard, and flooded during the whole day by sunshine, this is the most beautiful room in the building.

Architecturally nothing has been changed, except that the simple grey cement of the pavement has been replaced by slabs of imported marble. Yet the new treasure room gives a very different impression from that of the old music room. There is a feeling of elegance and distinction at the very entrance. The bronze door opening from Sargent hall holds one's attention by its artistic design. And on the walls, done in soft, varnished colors, hang, on one side, John Singleton Copley's famous oil painting, showing Charles I in the House of Commons demanding the extradition of the five impeached members, and on the other, Franklin's portraits by Duplessis and Greuze. Copley's paintings—one of the most important works of the master—is for the first time accessible to the public since the library moved into its present building.

The bookcases along the walls shelve about 600 volumes. The books were selected from the special collections of the library; from the Barton collection of Shakespearean and Elizabethan literature, the Prince collection of Americana, the Ticknor collection of Spanish and Portuguese literature, from the Theodore Parker, Bowditch, Longfellow Memorial, Thayer and other collections. These collections, in aggregate, contain over 60,000 volumes, about half of which have a special value. But only the rarest items, one volume out of 10, have been placed in the Treasure room.

Opposite the entrance, right and left of the windows, are two wall safes. On the floor, arranged in four parallel ranges, are eight more large safes. These are for the guarding of the rarest treasures of the library. On top of the floor safes are the exhibition cases, capable of holding from 100 to 200 volumes. From time to time new exhibits will be arranged here, planned to illustrate—with original examples—some particular phase of the history of the book, to show rare editions of the works of a writer, or to represent a whole period in literature, history, the sciences.

The exhibition with which the library opens the new Treasure room is designed to give a comprehensive idea of the choice possessions of the institution. Medieval manuscripts on parchment and with illuminated miniatures are shown in one case; 15 century books printed in Germany, Italy, France, Spain, the Netherlands and England are placed on view in another; Shakespeare folios and quartos, and other precious Elizabethan and Jacobean works are displayed, and next to them some of the rarest productions of the early American press; and finally autograph letters and poems by such poets and writers as Poe, Longfellow, Dickens, Browning and Emily Dickinson. There is such a wealth of material as no other public library in the country, save the New York Public Library, could display. The library authorities regard this exhibit as an exceptional one—made only for the occasion of the opening of the room.

MAY 14, 1930

In an interesting article, principally about the new Kirestin library, in "More Books," the Public Library's valuable bulletin, Frank N. Chase recalls to memory the old Public Library building on Boylston street. He speaks of it as an imposing building, and it certainly was imposing at the time of its erection in 1855. It was the last thing in libraries, and nobody could suppose that it would ever prove inadequate to its purpose. Its original Bates Hall was the shrine of many a book-worshiper's devotion. Of course we had had, long before that, the Athenaeum, but that was always, as now, a private library. Up to the institution of the Public Library in 1852, books were for the few. The thronging of libraries by working people, by pupils in the schools, by generalists and all sorts and conditions of men, women and children, was a thing unknown. Yet the Boylston-street building had a short life—almost as short as some of the "awful" South End churches. Now the library is established in Copley Square forever. But what would it be without the branch libraries? The new branch library in City Hall avenue, the "business branch," will fill a long-felt want.

BOSTON GLOBE—FRIDAY, MAY 16, 1930
PUBLIC LIBRARY OPENS
NEW TREASURE ROOMPaintings, Books and Manuscripts of Great Value
Being Shown to Visitors

Described as the most beautiful room in the building, the new treasure room of the Boston Public Library was formally opened to the public last night with a display designed to give a comprehensive idea of the priceless possessions of the institution—first editions of Shakespeare, other precious Elizabethan and Jacobean works, rare productions of the early American press and autograph letters of such prose writers and poets as Dickens, Poe, Emily Dickinson, Browning and Longfellow.

This treasure room, familiar to thousands of musicians as the old music room on the third floor, is furnished with cases to hold 3000 books, which have been selected from all the famous collections in the main library. On the walls are John Singleton Copley's famous oil painting showing Charles I in the House of Commons demanding the extradition of the five impeached members; portraits of Franklin by Greuze and Duplessis, and others. This is the first time that the Copley painting has been readily accessible to the public since the library moved into its present building.

Society of Printers Is Shown Room

The opening of the treasure room—called by librarians an event in the history of fine arts and printing in this country—was preceded by the annual meeting and dinner of the Society of Printers, at the University Club. After the meeting the members of the society and their guests visited the treasure room, under guidance of Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Public Library of Boston.

In addition to Mr. Belden the guests at the dinner included F. W. Buxton, vice president of the board of trustees of the library, and Zoltan Harsanyi, editor of publications of the library.

For the first time in 26 years a meeting of the Society of Printers was open to women. In fact, the dinner was designated as Ladies' Night. Without division these nominations were favorably voted upon as the officers of the society for the forthcoming year: Thacher Nelson, president; George Parker Winship, vice president; Maurice Blackmur, secretary; David T. Puffer, treasurer; Amos Weston, auditor, and John C. Hurd, D. B. Uddike, A. F. Mackey, Herbert Parier and W. H. Greeley, members of the council.

Among the books on exhibition in the new treasure room of the library are the following:
Shakespeare Folios and Quartos—

The First Folio, dated 1623, one of the 20 copies that exist; "Midsummer Night's Dream," first edition, dated 1600; "Much Ado About Nothing," first edition, dated 1600. A similar copy was sold at the Clawson sale for $21,000.

Americana—The Freeman's Oath, original draft of the first form of the Freeman's Oath adopted by the Massachusetts Colony, written by John Winthrop; the Bay Psalm Book, the first book printed in 1639 in the English colonies of America; Eliot's Indian Book, New Testament printed in 1661, the Old Testament in 1663, at Cambridge. One of the most valuable items of Americana.

Fifteenth Century Books—A leaf from the Gutenberg Bible, the first book printed from movable types; the Koberger Bible, one of the most familiar medieval books; the Kelmscott Chaucer; Ptolemy's Cosmographia, printed in Ulm in 1482.

Medieval Manuscripts—St. Augustine: De Civitate Dei, a manuscript on vellum, written in Gothic letters in 1466; Lactantius, Divine Institutions, written in broad Roman letters, in Venice, about 1450-70; Histoire Universelle, a history of the world, a French manuscript in roll form, written about 1460.

All in all, Director Belden considers it such a display as no other public library in the country, save the New York Library, could offer. In another room on the third floor of the main library, through the courtesy of the American Institute of Graphic Arts, the exhibitions of 20 Books of the Year and of Commercial Printing are on view at the library until May 18. The books in the treasure room will be on exhibition until the end of the month.

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, MAY 28, 1930

THE LIBRARIAN

WITH the recent opening to the public of the new Treasure Room the grand transformation of the top floor of the Boston Public Library is complete. The work started about a year ago in the north gallery, which was altered to accommodate nearly a hundred thousand books instead of the forty thousand formerly stored there. The old wooden stacks gave way to steel cases and no longer are the attendants plagued by nightmares in which sudden fires devoured the priceless collections of Americana or Spanish and Portuguese literature.

Not only is there a feeling of security in the north gallery now, but one of great aesthetic pleasure. The black and reddish rubber floor softens one's steps and harmonizes with the gray painted walls and the rich brown of the bookcases and tables. The balcony is now surrounded by a beautiful hand-wrought iron railing. There has also been installed a courtyard, many architects consider it the most beautiful room in the building. There have been no changes of construction there, except that the gray cement of the pavement has been replaced by slabs of imported marble. One no longer has the feeling of clutter which gave the crowded music room inevitably gave. With the removal of tables, chairs and bookcases elegance and distinction have been attained.

From Sargent Hall, one enters the new treasure room through a splendid bronze door. On the wall to the left hang portraits of Benjamin Franklin by Duplessis and Greuze. To the right is Copley's painting of Charles I in the House of Commons, demanding the expulsion of the five impeached members. For the first time since the library moved into its present building, this famous painting is readily accessible to the public. The canvas was recently cleaned and to everyone's amazement sky and clouds may now be seen through the House of Commons windows, hitherto so grimy as to be practically opaque.

The bookcases along the walls shelve six thousand volumes before which may usually be seen bibliophiles with tears of envy streaming down their cheeks. These books are selected from the special collections of the library: Shakespearean and Elizabethan literature from the Barton and other precious Elizabethan and Jacobean works are displayed, and next to them some of the rarest productions of autograph letters and poems by such writers as Poe, Longfellow, Dickens, Browning and Emily Dickinson. Fascinating, one stares at the thin sheets of music and letters. No public library in the country, with the possible exception of the one in New York, could exhibit so many superb treasures at one time.

There are about twenty of the most conspicuous in a long roll, a "Universal History" in French, telling of the world's the fourteenth century. Fifty-seven delicate miniatures painted in rich glowing colors are scattered through the text. The picture of Noah building his ark, dressed in a glorious crimson robe, he is busily wielding a huge gimlet to the baptism of Clovis by St. Henry, about thirty of these delightful little pictures may be seen as the roll lies unfolded in the case.

St. Augustine's "The City of God," written in the middle of the fifteenth century, by Frater Theodoric, a Dutch scribe, is the most artistic medieval manuscript in the library. Another manuscript volume, Lactantius' "Divine Institutions," shows a striking represen-

HE New Treasure Room of the Boston Public Library is now open to the public.

In this beautiful room on the third floor will be exhibited books and manuscripts from the special collections of the library.

The treasures in the constantly changing exhibits will be drawn from the collections of mediaeval to the work of the great Venetian printer, Aldus. It is a well-known fact that the first printed books were issued by the mediaeval manuscripts. Fourty of the library's two hundred and fifty century books are included in the present exhibit. In one case is a leaf from the Gutenberg Bible, the first printed from movable types. Also in a leaf from the first dated—14 August, 1462. Then there is the Koberger Bible, printed in Nuremberg 1483, with the numerous woodcuts, each of them colored by hand, on the printer of the Koberger Bible, Nuremberg through published in same year, with its series of vivid woodcuts, illustrating the history of the world. Thomas Kempis' "Imitation of Christ," shown in the 1484 Nuremberg edition. Especially of view is Ptolemy's "Cosmographia," printed in Ulm, in the late fifteenth century. Its beautiful large Roman types are among the finest in Germany at the time. There are thirty-two maps in the volume, including one of Greenland, which is presented as a peninsula of

Wh. 5 music students, eager to hear the heart out of a Brahms concerto, had to sit huddled in the "M" collection, pages sought in the "M" collection, then in fine arts.

Now, this old music room serves as a fitting background for the library's choicest treasures. Because of its location and the three great windows opening on the

the library proudly sets forth an exhibition which includes some of its most choice possessions. Mediaeval manuscripts on parchment and with illuminated miniatures are shown in one case; many, Italy, France, Spain, the Netherlands and England are placed on view in another; Shakespeare Folios and Quartos

May 18, 1930
POST, BOSTON, MASS.

ART PRESERVATIVE OF ALL ARTS IN LIBRARY TREASURE ROOM

For the opening of the new treasure room in the Public Library of Boston on May 15 the Society of Printers was privileged to participate in the momentous event in the history of fine arts and printing. The visit to the treasure room followed the annual meeting at the University Club, observed as ladies' night, concluding with election of officers.

The special guests were F. W. Buxton, vice-president of the board of trustees of the Public Library; Charles F. D. Belden, director of the library; Zoltan Harnetz, editor of publications; and Miss Harriet Swift, librarian of the Barton-Ticknor collection, both of the library staff. Also Mr. Laurence B. Siegfried, editor American Printer.

Instructive enjoyment was afforded the Society of Printers, comprising associates promoting the art preservation of all arts, when after the dinner the portals of the Treasure Room were opened to the exhibition of 50 books of the year and of commercial printing to be on view at the library until May 18 through the courtesy of the American Institute of Graphic Arts. Medieval manuscripts included "St. Augustine," the Civitate Dei, a Dutch manuscript on vellum; written in Gothic in 1466; with three beautiful miniatures; "Lactantius," Divinae Institutiones, from Venice; "History of the World," French manuscript on vellum in roll form with hundreds of small illuminated letters.

The bibliographers will find delight in the 15th century books: "Speculum Naturale," a chained book; a leaf from the Gutenberg Bible, first printed from movable types; and many others. Burne-Jones' large wood cuts illustrate the Kelmscott Chaucer, beautiful work printed by William Morris; the Altar Book with type designed by Rastrelli Goodhue and printed by the Merrymount Press in Boston.

THE BOSTON HERALD, FRIDAY, MAY 16, 1930

New Treasure Room at Library Open With Exhibition of Rare Collection

The new treasure room of the Boston Public Library, work on which was begun last fall, last night was opened to the public. The former music room on the third floor, familiar to hundreds of musicians and music lovers of the city, has been fitted out to serve as the new treasure room. With its three large windows opening on the courtyard, and flooded during the whole day by sunshine, this is the most beautiful room in the building.

Architecturally nothing has been changed, except that the simple grey cement of the pavement has been replaced by slabs of imported marble. Yet the new treasure room gives a very different impression from that of the old music room. There is a feeling of elegance and distinction at the very entrance. The bronze door opening from Sargent hall holds one's attention by its artistic design. And on the walls, done in soft, varnished colors, hang, on one side, John Singleton Copley's famous oil painting, showing Charles I. in the House of Commons demanding the extradition of the five impeached members, and on the other Franklin's portraits by Duplessis and Greuze. Copley's paintings—one of the most important works of the master—is for the first time accessible to the public since the library moved into its present building.

The bookcases along the walls shelve about 600 volumes. The books were selected from the special collections of the library: from the Barton collection of Shakespearean and Elizabethan literature, the Prince collection of Americana, the Ticknor collection of Spanish and Portuguese literature from the Theodore Parker, Bowditch, Longfellow Memorial, Thayer and other collections. These collections, in aggregate, contain over 60,000 volumes, about half of which have a special value. But only the rarest items, one volume out of 10, have been placed in the Treasure room.

Opposite the entrance, right and left of the windows, are two wall safes. On the floor, arranged in four parallel ranges, are eight more large safes. These are for the guarding of the rarest treasures of the library. On top of the floor safes are the exhibition cases, capable of holding from 100 to 200 volumes. From time to time new exhibits will be arranged here, planned to illustrate—with original examples—some particular phase of the history of the book, to show rare editions of the works of a writer, or to represent a whole period in literature, history, the sciences.

The exhibition with which the library opens the new Treasure room is designed to give a comprehensive idea of the choice possessions of the institution. Medieval manuscripts on parchment and with illuminated miniatures are shown in one case; 15 century books printed in Germany, Italy, France, Spain, the Netherlands and England are placed on view in another; Shakespeare folios and quartos, and other precious Elizabethan and Jacobean works are displayed; and next to them some of the rarest productions of the early American press; and finally autograph letters and poems by such poets and writers as Poe, Longfellow, Dickens, Browning and Emily Dickinson. There is such a wealth of material as no other public library in the country, save the New York Public Library, could display. The library authorities regard this exhibit as an exceptional one—made only for the occasion of the opening of the room.

MAY 14, 1930

In an interesting article, principally about the new Kisteln library, in "More Books," the Public Library's valuable bulletin, Frank N. Chase recalls to memory the old Public Library building on Boylston street. He speaks of it as an imposing building, and it certainly was imposing at the time of its erection in 1855. It was the last thing in libraries, and nobody could suppose that it would ever prove inadequate to its purpose. Its original Bates Hall was the shrine of many a book-worshiper's devotion. Of course we had had, long before that, the Athenaeum, but that was always, as now, a private library. Up to the institution of the Public Library in 1852, books were for the few. The thronging of libraries by working people, by pupils in the schools, by genealogists and all sorts and conditions of men, women and children, was a thing unknown. Yet the Boylston-street building had a short life—almost as short as some of the "small" South End churches. Now the library is established in Copley Square forever. But what would it be without the branch libraries? The new branch library in City Hall avenue, the "business branch," will fill a long-felt want.

BOSTON GLOBE—FRIDAY, MAY 16, 1930 PUBLIC LIBRARY OPENS NEW TREASURE ROOM

Paintings, Books and Manuscripts of Great Value
Being Shown to Visitors

Described as the most beautiful room in the building, the new treasure room of the Boston Public Library was formally opened to the public last night with a display designed to give a comprehensive idea of the priceless possessions of the institution—first editions of Shakespeare, other precious Elizabethan and Jacobean works, rare productions of the early American press and autograph letters of such prose writers and poets as Dickens, Poe, Emily Dickinson, Browning and Longfellow.

This treasure room, familiar to thousands of musicians as the old music room on the third floor, is furnished with cases to hold 5000 books, which have been selected from all the famous collections in the main library. On the walls are John Singleton Copley's famous oil painting showing Charles I. in the House of Commons demanding the extradition of the five impeached members; portraits of Franklin by Greuze and Duplessis, and others. This is the first time that the Copley painting has been readily accessible to the public since the library moved into its present building.

Society of Printers Is Shown Room

The opening of the treasure room—called by librarians an event in the history of fine arts and printing in this country—was preceded by the annual meeting and dinner of the Society of Printers, at the University Club. After the meeting the members of the society, Maurice Blackmur, secretary; David T. Peisinger, treasurer; Amos Weston, auditor, and John C. Hurd, D. B. Uddike, A. F. Mackay, Herbert Farrier and W. H. Greeley, members of the council.

Among the books on exhibition in the new treasure room of the library are the following:

Shakespeare Folios and Quartos—The First Folio, dated 1623, one of the 20 copies that exist; "Midsummer Night's Dream," first edition, dated 1600; "Much Ado About Nothing," first edition, dated 1600. A similar copy was sold at the Clawson sale for $21,000.

Americana—The Freeman's Oath, original draft of the first form of the Freeman's Oath adopted by the Massachusetts Colony, written by John Winthrop; the Bay Psalm Book, the first book printed in 1630 in the English colonies of America; Eliot's Indian Book, New Testament printed in 1661; the Old Testament in 1663, at Cambridge. One of the most valuable items of Americana.

Fifteenth Century Books—A leaf from the Gutenberg Bible, the first book printed from movable types; the Koberger Bible, one of the most famous medieval books; the Kelmscott Chaucer; Ptolemy's Cosmographia, printed in Ulm in 1482.

Medieval Manuscripts—St. Augustine's De Civitate Dei, a manuscript on vel-

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, MAY 28, 1930

THE LIBRARIAN

WITH the recent opening to the public of the new Treasure room from the grand transformation of the top floor of the Boston Public Library is complete.

The work started about a year ago in the north gallery, which was altered to accommodate nearly a hundred thousand books instead of the forty thousand formerly stored there. The old wooden stacks gave way to steel cases and no longer are the attendants plagued by nightmares in which sudden fires devoured the priceless collections of Americana or Spanish and Portuguese literature.

Not only is there a feeling of security in the north gallery now, but one of great aesthetic pleasure. The black and red-tiled rubber floor softens one's steps and harmonizes with the gray painted walls and the rich brown of the bookcases and tables. The balcony is now surrounded by a beautiful hand-wrought iron railing. There has also been installed a courtyard, many architects consider it the most beautiful room in the building. There have been no changes of construction there, except that the gray cement of the pavement has been replaced by slabs of imported marble. One no longer has the feeling of clutter which the too crowded removal of tables, chairs and book-cases gave way to steel cases and no longer are the attendants plagued by nightmares in which sudden fires devoured the priceless collections of Americana or Spanish and Portuguese literature.

From Sargent Hall, one enters the new treasure room through a splendid bronze door. On the wall to the left hang portraits of Benjamin Franklin by Duplessis and Greuze. To the right is Copley's painting, showing Charles I. in the House of Commons, demanding the extradition of the five impeached members. For the first time since the library moved into its present building, this famous painting is readily accessible to the public. The canvas was recently cleaned and to everyone's amazement sky and clouds may now be seen through the House of Commons windows, hitherto so grimy as to be practically opaque.

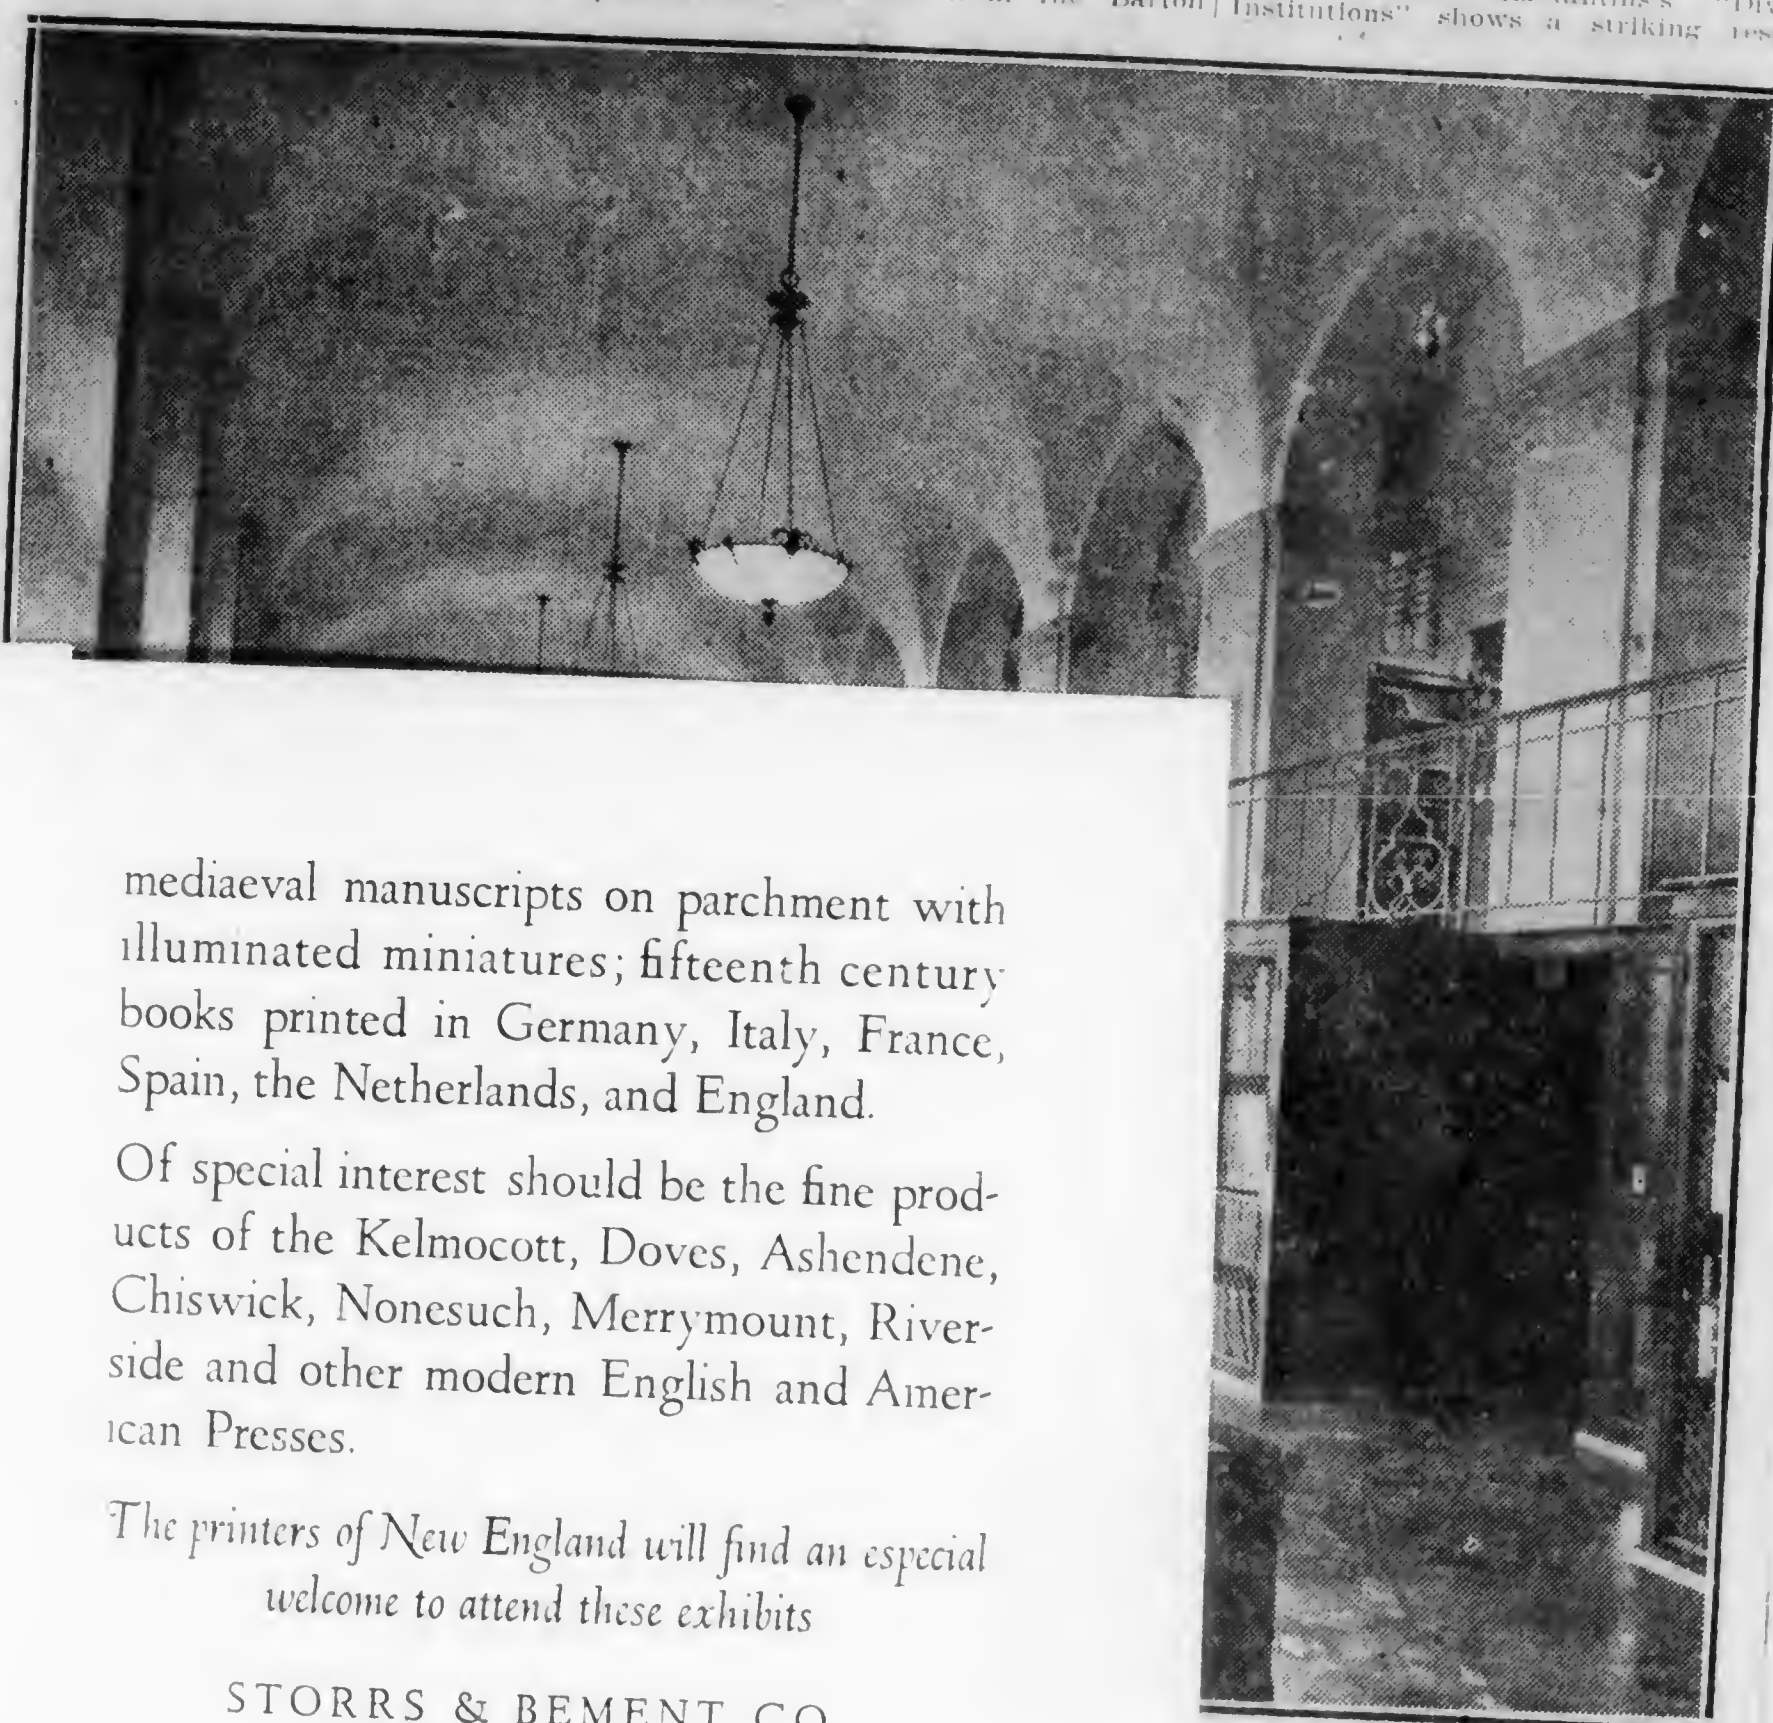

The book-cases along the walls shelve six thousand volumes before which may usually be seen bibliophiles with tears of envy streaming down their cheeks. These books are selected from the special collections of the library: Shakespearean and Elizabethan literature from the Barton and other precious Elizabethan and Jacobean works are displayed, and next to them some of the rarest productions of the early American press; and finally autograph letters and poems by such writers as Poe, Longfellow, Dickens, Browning and Emily Dickinson. Fascinated, one stares at the thin sheets of glass covering these extraordinary volumes and letters. No public library in the country, with the possible exception of the one in New York, could exhibit so many superb treasures at one time.

There are about twenty of the medieval manuscripts on view. The most conspicuous is a long roll, a "Universal History," in French, telling of the world's history from the creation to the end of the fourteenth century. Fifty-seven delicate miniatures painted in rich glowing colors are scattered through the text. From the picture of Noah building his ark dressed in a glorious crimson robe, he is busily welding a huge golden to the baptism of Clovis by St. Remi, about thirty of these delightful little pictures may be seen as the roll lies unfolded in the case.

St. Augustine's "The City of God," written in the middle of the fifteenth century, by Frater Theoderic, a Dutch scribbler, is the most artistic medieval manuscript in the library. Another manuscript volume, "Lactantius," "Divine Institutions" shows a striking resemblance to the work of the great Venetian master, Titian. It is a well-known fact that the first printed books were influenced by the medieval manuscripts. About forty of the library's two hundred and fifty medieval books are included in the present exhibit. In one case is a leaf from the Gutenberg Bible, the first printed from movable types. Also there is a leaf from the first dated Bible—14 August, 1482. Then there is the Koberger Bible, printed in Nuremberg in 1483, with the numerous woodcuts, many of them colored by hand.

From the printer of the Koberger Bible the Nuremberg Chronicle, published in the same year, with its series of colorful, vivid woodcuts, illustrating the history of the world. Thomas a Kempis' "Imitation of Christ," is shown in the 1494 Nuremberg edition. Especially interesting, from a typographical point of view, is Ptolemy's "Cosmographia," printed in Ulm, in the late fifteenth century. Its beautiful large Gothic types are among the finest ever in Germany at the time. There are thirty-two maps in the volume, including one of Greenland, which is presented as a peninsula of mediaeval manuscripts on parchment with illuminated miniatures; fifteenth century books printed in Germany, Italy, France, Spain, the Netherlands, and England.

Of special interest should be the fine products of the Kelmscott, Doves, Ashendene, Chiswick, Nonesuch, Merrymount, Riverside and other modern English and American Presses.

The printers of New England will find an especial welcome to attend these exhibits

STORRS & BEMENT CO.
BOSTON

due to the work of the great Venetian master, Titian. It is a well-known fact that the first printed books were influenced by the medieval manuscripts. About forty of the library's two hundred and fifty medieval books are included in the present exhibit. In one case is a leaf from the Gutenberg Bible, the first printed from movable types. Also there is a leaf from the first dated Bible—14 August, 1482. Then there is the Koberger Bible, printed in Nuremberg in 1483, with the numerous woodcuts, many of them colored by hand.

From the printer of the Koberger Bible the Nuremberg Chronicle, published in the same year, with its series of colorful, vivid woodcuts, illustrating the history of the world. Thomas a Kempis' "Imitation of Christ," is shown in the 1494 Nuremberg edition. Especially interesting, from a typographical point of view, is Ptolemy's "Cosmographia," printed in Ulm, in the late fifteenth century. Its beautiful large Gothic types are among the finest ever in Germany at the time. There are thirty-two maps in the volume, including one of Greenland, which is presented as a peninsula of

May 18, 1930

POST, BOSTON, MASS

ART PRESERVATIVE OF
ALL ARTS IN LIBRARY
TREASURE ROOM

For the opening of the new treasure room in the Public Library of Boston on May 15 the Society of Printers was privileged to participate in the momentous event in the history of fine arts and printing. The visit to the treasure room followed the annual meeting at the University Club, observed as ladies' night, concluding with election of officers.

The special guests were F. W. Buxton, vice-president of the board of trustees of the Public Library; Charles F. D. Belden, director of the library; Zoltan Horvath, editor of publications, and Miss Harriet Swift, librarian of the Barton-Ticknor collection, both of the library staff. Also Mr. Laurence B. Siegfried, editor American Printer.

Instructive enjoyment was afforded the Society of Printers, comprising associates promoting "the art preservative of all arts," when after the dinner the portals of the Treasure Room were opened to the exhibition of 50 books of the year and of commercial printing to be on view at the library until May 18 through the courtesy of the American Institute of Graphic Arts. Medieval manuscripts included "St. Augustine," by Civitate del, a Dutch manuscript on vellum; written in Gothic in 1495; with three beautiful miniatures; "Lactantius," Divinae Institutiones, from Venice; "History of the World," French manuscript on vellum in roll form with hundreds of small illuminate letters.

The bibliographers will find delight in the 14th century books; "Speculum Naturale," a chained book; a leaf from the Gutenberg Bible, first printed from movable types; and many others. Burne-Jones' large wood cuts illustrate the Kelmscott Chaucer, beautiful work printed by Williams Morris; the Altar Book with type designed by Bertran Goodhue and printed by the Merrymount Press in Boston.

THE BOSTON HERALD, FRIDAY, MAY 16, 1930

New Treasure Room at Library Open
With Exhibition of Rare Collection

The new treasure room of the Boston Public Library, work on which was begun last fall, last night was opened to the public. The former music room on the third floor, familiar to hundreds of musicians and music lovers of the city, has been fitted out to serve as the new treasure room. With its three large windows opening on the courtyard, and flooded during the whole day by sunshine, this is the most beautiful room in the building.

Architecturally nothing has been changed, except that the simple grey cement of the pavement has been replaced by slabs of imported marble. Yet the new treasure room gives a very different impression from that of the old music room. There is a feeling of elegance and distinction at the very entrance. The bronze door opening from Sargent hall holds one's attention by its artistic design. And on the walls, done in soft, varnished colors, hang, on one side, John Singleton Copley's famous oil painting, showing Charles I in the House of Commons demanding the extradition of the five impeached members, and on the other Franklin's portraits by Duplessis and Greuze. Copley's paintings—one of the most important works of the master—is for the first time accessible to the public since the library moved into its present building.

The bookcases along the walls shelve about 600 volumes. The books were selected from the special collections of the library, from the Barton collection of Shakespearean and Elizabethan literature, the Prince collection of Americana, the Ticknor collection of Spanish and Portuguese literature, from the Theodore Parker, Bowditch, Longfellow, Thayer and other collections. These collections, in aggregate, contain over 60,000 volumes, about half of which have a special value. But only the rarest items, one volume out of 10, have been placed in the Treasure room.

Opposite the entrance, right and left of the windows, are two wall safes. On the floor, arranged in four parallel ranges, are eight more large safes. These are for the guarding of the rarest treasures of the library. On top of the floor safes are the exhibition cases, capable of holding from 100 to 200 volumes. From time to time new exhibits will be arranged here, planned to illustrate—with original examples—some particular phase of the history of the book, to show rare editions of the works of a writer, or to represent a whole period in literature, history, the sciences.

The exhibition with which the library opens the new Treasure room is designed to give a comprehensive idea of the choice possessions of the institution. Medieval manuscripts on parchment and with illuminated miniatures are shown in one case; 15 century books printed in Germany, Italy, France, Spain, the Netherlands and England are placed on view in another; Shakespeare folios and quartos, and other precious Elizabethan and Jacobean works are displayed, and next to them some of the rarest productions of the early American press; and finally autograph letters and poems by such poets and writers as Poe, Longfellow, Dickens, Browning and Emily Dickinson. There is such a wealth of material as no other public library in the country, save the New York Public Library, could display. The library authorities regard this exhibit as an exceptional one—made only for the occasion of the opening of the room.

MAY 14, 1930

In an interesting article, principally about the new Kirestein library, in "More Books," the Public Library's valuable bulletin, Frank N. Chase recalls to memory the old Public Library building on Boylston street. He speaks of it as an imposing building, and it certainly was imposing at the time of its erection in 1858. It was the last thing in libraries, and nobody could suppose that it would ever prove inadequate to its purpose. Its original Bates Hall was the shrine of many a book-worshiper's devotion. Of course we had had, long before that, the Athenaeum, but that was always, as now, a private library. Up to the institution of the Public Library in 1852, books were for the few. The thronging of libraries by working people, by pupils in the schools, by genealogists and all sorts and conditions of men, women and children, was a thing unknown. Yet the Boylston street building had a short life—almost as short as some of the "small" South End churches. Now the library is established in Copley Square forever. But what would it be without the branch libraries? The new branch library in City Hall avenue, the "business branch," will fill a long-felt want.

BOSTON GLOBE—FRIDAY, MAY 16, 1930
PUBLIC LIBRARY OPENS
NEW TREASURE ROOMPaintings, Books and Manuscripts of Great Value
Being Shown to Visitors

Described as the most beautiful room in the building, the new treasure room of the Boston Public Library was formally opened to the public last night with a display designed to give a comprehensive idea of the priceless possessions of the institution—first editions of Shakespeare, other precious Elizabethan and Jacobean works, rare productions of the early American press and autograph letters of such prose writers and poets as Dickens, Poe, Emily Dickinson, Browning and Longfellow.

This treasure room, familiar to thousands of musicians as the old music room on the third floor, is furnished with cases to hold 6000 books, which have been selected from all the famous collections in the main library. On the walls are John Singleton Copley's famous oil painting showing Charles I in the House of Commons demanding the extradition of the five impeached members; portraits of Franklin by Greuze and Duplessis, and others. This is the first time that the Copley painting has been readily accessible to the public since the library moved into its present building.

Society of Printers Is Shown Room

The opening of the treasure room—called by librarians an event in the history of fine arts and printing in this country—was preceded by the annual dinner of the Society of

Printers, Maurice Blackmur, secretary; David T. Pattenger, treasurer; Amos Weston, auditor, and John C. Hurd, D. B. Uddike, A. F. Mackey, Herbert Farrier and W. H. Greeley, members of the council.

Among the books on exhibition in the new treasure room of the library are the following:

Shakespeare Folios and Quartos—The First Folio, dated 1623, one of the 20 copies that exist; "Midsummer Night's Dream," first edition, dated 1600; "Much Ado About Nothing," first edition, dated 1600. A similar copy was sold at the Clawson sale for $21,000.

Americana—The Freeman's Oath, original draft of the first form of the Freeman's Oath adopted by the Massachusetts Colony, written by John Winthrop; the Bay Psalm Book, the first book printed in 1630 in the English colonies of America; Eliot's Indian Book, New Testament printed in 1661, the Old Testament in 1663, at Cambridge. One of the most valuable items of Americana.

Fifteenth Century Books—A leaf from the Gutenberg Bible, the first book printed from movable types; the Koberger Bible, one of the most familiar medieval books; the Kelmscott Chaucer; Ptolemy, Cosmographia, printed in Ulm in 1482.

Medieval Manuscripts—St. Augustine;

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, MAY 28, 1930

THE LIBRARIAN

WITH the recent opening to the public of the new Treasure Room the grand transformation of the top floor of the Boston Public Library is complete. The work started about a year ago in the north gallery, which was altered to accommodate nearly a hundred thousand books instead of the forty thousand formerly stored there. The old wooden stacks gave way to steel cases and no longer are the attendants plagued by nightmares in which sudden fires devoured the priceless collections of Americana or Spanish and Portuguese literature.

Not only is there a feeling of security in the north gallery now, but one of great aesthetic pleasure. The black and red-tinted rubber floor softens one's steps and harmonizes with the gray painted walls and the rich brown of the bookcases and tables. The balcony is now surrounded by a beautiful hand-wrought iron railing. There has also been installed a courtyard, many architects consider it the most beautiful room in the building. There have been no changes of construction there, except that the gray cement of the pavement has been replaced by slabs of imported marble. One no longer has the feeling of clutter which the too crowded music room inevitably gave. With the removal of tables, chairs and book-cases, elegance and distinction have been attained.

From Sargent Hall, one enters the new treasure room through a splendid bronze door. On the wall to the left hang portraits of Benjamin Franklin by Duplessis and Greuze. To the right is Copley's painting, showing Charles I in the House of Commons, demanding the extradition of the five impeached members. For the first time since the library moved into its present building, this famous painting is readily accessible to the public. The canvas was recently cleaned and to everyone's amazement sky and clouds may now be seen through the House of Commons windows, hitherto so grimy as to be practically opaque.

The book-cases along the walls shelve six thousand volumes before which may usually be seen bibliophiles with tears of envy streaming down their cheeks. These books are selected from the special collections of the library: Shakespearean and Elizabethan literature from the Barton and other precious Elizabethan and Jacobean works are displayed, and next to them some of the rarest productions of the early American press; and finally autograph letters and poems by such writers as Poe, Longfellow, Dickens, Browning and Emily Dickinson. Fascinated, one stares at the thin sheets of glass covering these extraordinary volumes and letters. No public library in the country, with the possible exception of the one in New York, could exhibit so many superb treasures at one time.

There are about twenty of the most conspicuous on view. The most history, in French, telling of the world's famous miniatures painted in rich, glowing colors are scattered through the text. From the picture of Noah building his ark, dressed in a glorious crimson robe, he is busily welding a huge rimlet to the baptism of Clovis by St. Remi, about thirty of these delightful little pictures may be seen as the roll lies unfolded in the case.

St. Augustine's "The City of God," written in the middle of the fifteenth century, by Frater Theodoric, a Dutch scribe, is the most artistic medieval manuscript in the library. Another manuscript volume, Lactantius' "Divine Institutions" shows a striking resur-new electric wiring system, with bronze lamps between the book cases and on the tables. From the ceiling are suspended hanging lamps with chain links and dignified ornamentation.

North Gallery of the Boston Public Library

The library's music collection which was temporarily housed in the exhibition room has been permanently placed in the Barton room. The furnishings of this room are similar to the north gallery, and the old wooden shelves have also been replaced by steel cases. It has always been difficult to light this room adequately, but it has been finally solved by the use of lamps concealed around the base of the domed ceiling. There is space here for the entire music division of the library in the new location, for the cherished books and bound periodicals, as well as the scores. Which is a great relief after the old cramped quarters, heart out of a Brahms concerto, had to bite their nails while harassed pages sought it in the "M" collection.

Now, this old music room serves as a fitting background for the library's choice treasures. Because of its location and the three great windows opening on the collection; Americana from the Prince Parker, Bowditch, Longfellow Memorial, Thayer and other treasure troves.

To the right and left of the windows are two wall safes. On the first floor, in four parallel ranges, are eight more large safes. These are for the purpose of guarding the rarest treasures of the library. On top of these floor safes are the exhibition cases, capable of holding from one to two hundred volumes. From time to time new exhibits will be arranged of original examples, some particular phase of the history of the book, to show rare editions of the works of a writer, or to represent a whole period in literature, history or the sciences.

For the opening of the Treasure Room, the library proudly sets forth an exhibition which includes some of its most choice possessions. Medieval point scripts on parchment and with illuminated miniatures are shown in one case; fifteenth-century books printed in Germany, Italy, France, Spain, the Netherlands and England are placed on view in another; Shakespeare Folios and Quartos place to the work of the great Venetian printer Jenson. It is a well-known fact that the first printed books were influenced by the medieval manuscripts. About forty of the library's two hundred fifteenth century books are included in the present exhibit. In one case is a leaf from the Gutenberg Bible, the first book printed from movable types. Also visible is a leaf from the first dated Bible—14 August, 1452. Then there is in 1483, with the numerous woodcuts, many of them colored by hand.

From the printer of the Koberger Bible is the Nuremberg Chronicle, published in the same year, with its series of crude, yet vivid woodcuts, illustrating the history of the world. Thomas a Kempis' "The Imitation of Christ" is shown in the 1494 Nuremberg edition. Especially interesting, from a typographical point of view, is Ptolemy's "Cosmographia," printed in Ulm, in the late fifteenth century. Its beautiful large Roman types are among the finest ever in Germany at the time. There are thirty-two maps in the volume, including one of Greenland, which is presented as a peninsula of

Printed on Alverstone 19 3/4 x 25 1/2—Cream Laid

Northern Europe. This is the first map of American land, and is regarded by Scandinavian historians as a proof that the New World was known long before the discoveries of Columbus.

The largest volume on view is a copy of a part of Vincent de Beauvais's "Mirror of the World," the great encyclopedia of the Middle Ages. An iron chain, ten and a half inches long, is attached to the handle. In the Middle Ages, when books were scarce, the more valuable volumes were usually attached to the bench, in this way, for protection.

Among the Italian incunabula are two volumes printed by Nicholas Jenson, whose Roman types have been the models for innumerable type designers to our day. Vespella di Speyer, the first Venetian printer, is represented by a copy of "Summa Pisanella." There are works by Aldus Manutius of Venice, Antonius Zarotus of Milan, Misconina of Florence, and several other masters. The most important item historically, at least, is a little quarto printed by Stephen Pannick in Rome in 1493. It is Christopher Columbus's letter to Raphael Sanxis, treasurer of the king of Spain, about the discovery of America—or the "islands beyond the Ganges"—as Columbus called it. Thanks to the Tieknor collection, one of the richest collections of Spanish books in the world, the library contains many Spanish incunabula. These are extremely rare, as during the religious persecutions of the sixteenth century the greater number were burned by the inquisitors.

A copy of the "Amadis de Gaul," a classic and archetype of all novels of the chivalry, of the edition of 1533, has also been placed on view. The volume exhibits all the same typographical characteristics as the incunabula, and is adorned with a number of woodcuts. The first edition of Cervantes's "Don Quixote"—the destroyer of the picaresque novel—lies in the next case, in contrast to the beautiful "Amadis" this is a meanly printed little volume.

Of the fifteenth century English books the library has a leaf of John Gower's "Confession Amantis," printed by Caxton in 1483, and a copy of Higden's Great Chronicle, printed by Wynken de Worde in 1495. From an artistic point of view, the English incunabula do not bear comparison with those printed on the continent. Caxton himself was a great man, in whom English literature is eternally indebted, but he was not a great printer, not even a good one. He bought his types ready-made, and usually second-hand or third-hand. The leaf from Gower's book which the library possesses may be taken as typical of Caxton's work; the type is ugly Dutch fatface and the printing is very poor.

A copy of the third folio, similar in print to the first, is opened in the middle of Macbeth, displaying the type and the general arrangement of the paper. Four different folio editions of Shakespeare's plays were printed during the seventeenth century. The library owns copies of each folio, as well as a duplicate of the second and copy of the second imprint of the third.

THE BOSTON HERALD

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 4, 1930

ORIGINAL OF 'ALICE' COMING TO BOSTON

Carroll's Manuscript to Be Exhibited at the Public Library

The original manuscript of "Alice in Wonderland" by Lewis Carroll, will be exhibited during the summer months at the Public Library. It will be brought from Philadelphia by Director Charles F. D. Belden of the library, who arranged for the loan of the manuscript from its present owner, C. E. Rosenbach.

Mayor Curley gave immediate approval yesterday to the decision of the trustees to send Director Belden to Philadelphia. In informing the mayor of the decision, Gordon Abbott, chairman of the board, said:

"You will recall that this is the little volume that brought such an astounding price not many months ago. With the exception of a short exhibition in New York and Washington it has not been displayed in the United States. It will undoubtedly attract many people this Tercentenary year in connection with our own exhibit of Boston and Massachusetts Bay colonial material."

Mr. Rosenbach insists that the book must be handled by a special messenger.

LIBRARIAN OF SOUTH END WILL RETIRE

Miss Sheridan Has Served for 50 Years

The perfect hostess, Miss Margaret A. Sheridan, librarian of the South End Branch of the Boston Public Library, will retire June 20. Miss Sheridan completes 50 years of service, 48 of which were spent in the South End Branch and 30 of them as librarian.

Miss Sheridan denied that she was a perfect hostess, but admitted that she loved books and people. Her success in the South End she attributes partly to the fact that she grew up with the development of the branch from its humble beginning in a room on Tremont at its present spacious quarters and staff of assistants in the Municipal Building on Shawmut av and West Brookline st, with an average of 1200 persons served a day.

The "city wilderness," as Robert A. Wood, noted social worker, termed the South End, is still, in Miss Sheridan's opinion, the great meeting place for all sorts of persons.

To serve this large and ever changing group has been Miss Sheridan's task. She has had the extremes of human life to deal with, from the college professor, the clergy, the student, the business man and the nurse to the discouraged and jobless.

In the spirit of "neighbors all" she has catered to their needs and has heartened many a weary soul, in her gracious, kindly manner. She has been glad of the close personal contact that the branch library permits, and her own spirit and general knowledge have been enriched by the many informal chats she has had with visitors, many of them from the four corners of the earth.

BOSTON TRANSCRIPT.

JUNE 4, 1930

Boston Public Library Incunabula

This department has commented more than once on the catalogue of incunabula in the Boston Public Library which is being compiled by Zoltan Harazi, but too much cannot be said in commendation of this piece of work, which is what a catalogue of incunabula should be. The list of books is continued from the November and January numbers of the Library's bulletin, "More Books," and describes impressions from the presses of Nuremberg, Speier, Esslingen, Ulm, Wuerzburg, and Freiburg in Breisgau. Here we have readable and accurate accounts of the authors of these cradle books and descriptions of their works which give us a synoptic view of their contents and serve to show their place in the culture of their time. Among those in the Boston Public Library are such books as Durants "Rationale" of 1486; the Kohlerger Bible of 1488; Schedel's "Liber Chronicarum" of 1493; the "Opera" of Thomas a Kempis, 1494; Jacobus de Voragine's "Legenda Aurea" of 1488 and Ptolemy's "Cosmographia" of 1482. These are epochal books, and for years they moulded the thought and life of the people who read them. In this catalogue the author, the printer and the book itself are described in an interesting way which makes these dry bones live. Illustrations from the volumes described add to the interest of the text.

The Boston public library having prepared a selected list of books on retail selling, it might not be a bad idea for public libraries in smaller places to list as many of these books as they happen to have on the shelves and "sell" the list to employees of the local shops. There will be employers' encouragement of this suggestion. Time was when a practical merchant would have laughed his head off at the notion of anybody's going to a library to learn how to sell goods. The literature, however, of practical salesmanship has grown voluminous, and most of it is of a sort to be helpful to those who meet the public at the ribbon counter, the soda fountain or from the teller's cage. One can conceive that a selection of books on selling, if displayed prominently at our City Library, would find takers among young people, and some older ones, who have realized that their selling technique might be improved.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, JUNE 14, 1930

Free Woman From Lift During Fire

Locked in Kirstein Library Elevator as Blaze Kindles in Well

Johanna Walsh of 96 McBride street, Forest Hills, escaped being burned or otherwise injured shortly before eight o'clock this morning while locked in an elevator on the first floor of the Louis E. Kirstein Library, City Hall avenue, while a fire burned at the bottom of the well.

Her predicament was discovered by Mrs. Delia Sweeney of 171 K street, South Boston, who is employed with Miss Walsh in the library as a cleaner. The former rushed to the street and hailed Patrolman Charles Hoar and Charles Brookes of the Milk street station, who were passing through Court square; also George Carrigan of 15 Minden street, Jamaica Plain; George Perry of 164 Bennington street, East Boston, and John Fogarty, an employee at City Hall.

After fifteen minutes of frenzied work the elevator door was pried open and Miss Sweeney stepped out. As she did, the fire fanned by the draft created by the opened door, blazed up. In response to a telephone call fire apparatus and a rescue squad answered. The blaze, quickly extinguished, caused damage estimated at $100.

Woman Is Trapped in Elevator Over Fire

Imprisoned in an elevator in the Louis E. Kirstein library in City Hall ave., while a small fire sent up clouds of smoke from the pit of the shaft, a few feet away, a woman and a boy were rescued by two policemen and three civilians who hacked their way through the steel door today.

The woman, who felt certain of death while the rescuers were hammering at her prison with crowbars and axes, and while smoke swirled all about her, is Johanna Walsh, 38, of 96 McBride st., Jamaica Plain.

When the door of the elevator was battered down, she was partly overcome from smoke.

The fire, according to the police, started in the motor of the elevator at the foot of the shaft, while the woman, using the elevator, was nearing the first floor.

The fire shut off the power and Miss Walsh was unable to open the automatic lock on the door, which can be opened only at floor level. As smoke poured up through the shaft, she screamed for help. Another employee of the library, Mrs. Delia Sweeney, of 171 K st., South Boston, heard the screams and ran screaming into City Hall avenue. Patrolmen Charles Hoar and Joseph Brookes and John Fogarty, an employee of City Hall, George Carrigan and George Perry responded. They were unable to open the door with their hands, so Fogarty ran to City Hall and secured an assortment of tools.

Meanwhile a fire alarm had been sounded and a rescue company resuscitated Miss Walsh.

Boston Daily Globe

SATURDAY, JUNE 14, 1930

WOMAN TRAPPED IN ELEVATOR

June 14, 1930.
10*

The Boston Post

WHY SAFETY?

-67

hazards that may be found anywhere on the job, make a special effort to use safety first methods themselves, and be ready at all times to suggest safe methods to others and to caution those who are exposing themselves to accident. A meeting of all committeemen, chairman, safety man and manager should be held at least once a week. At these meetings all hazards which the job involves should be "thrashed out" and all problems discussed which concern the health and safety of the employees.

The safety committeemen should be replaced by new appointees every four to six weeks. This gives every employee a chance to be a safety worker, and receive an education in safety methods. Under certain conditions, where men persistently take a short cut or use unsafe practices, it will probably become necessary to issue certain safety orders. Sometimes a man must be discharged owing to his inability to co-operate from the safety point of view. But such a case is rare, if tact is used, for most men learn to appreciate the safety point of view in a short time.

It is safe to say that eighty-five per cent of all accidents are due to pure carelessness on someone's part, and the great point in prevention is the education of the worker. Keep the thought of safety before you and you will soon see the accident record cut down to the benefit both of the workmen and the corporation or company who employs him.

Let us add that safety methods can be applied in every field of work and cannot be too strongly emphasized either at home, on the street, in building construction, and indeed in all industries. I believe the day will come when a man's safety activities will be an important factor in recommending him for a job.

STONE & WEBSTER Journal

Vol. 46

JUNE, 1930

No. 6

is in good condition. Director Charles F. D. Belden of the library believes that an especially fine grade of ink must have been used, and he sees no reason why the book should not be kept intact for several hundred years.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, JUNE 14, 1930

Free Woman From Lift During Fire

Library
ndles

ido street, burned or ore eight ked in an
the Louis 11 avenue, om of the covered by K street, with Miss

ner. The nd hailed Charles tion, who unre; also 28 street,
164 Ben-and John Hall.
zied work
open and she did, reated by response 18 and a ze, quick-estimated

ost

E
RE

of d" ice in Boston

by if the taken ix for er his as he xhibi-ne as ith it facts

id,
been elden

LIBRARIAN OF SOUTH
END WILL RETIREMiss Sheridan Has Served
for 50 Years

The perfect hostess, Miss Margaret A. Sheridan, librarian of the South End Branch of the Boston Public Library, will retire June 20. Miss Sheridan, 48, of which End Branch is the South End.

Miss Sheridan, perfect hostess, loved books. In the South End, to the fact of development, humble beginnings, and staff of the Building on Brookline st. persons serve. The city, Wood, noted, South End, in opinion, the all sorts of. To serve the group in task. She is human life to lege professor the business discouraged a. In the spirit has catered heartened ma gracious, kind glad of the cl the branch. In own spirit and been enriched chats she has of them from earth.

BOSTO

JUL

Boston Public

This departure than once on 1 in the Boston being compiled much cannot 1 this piece of w logue of incur of books is cor and January bulletin, "More pressions from Speler, Essling Freiburg in I readable and authors of the tions of their v optic view of t show their pla time. Among Library are su tionale" of 148 1488; Schedel's 1493; the "Ope 1494; Jacobus Aurea" of 148 graphia" of 1 books, and for thought and in them. In this printer and the in an interestin dry bones live volumes describ the text.

The Boston public library having prepared a selected list of books on retail selling, it might not be a bad idea for public libraries in smaller places to list as many of these books as they happen to have on the shelves and "sell" the list to employees of the local shops. There will be employers' encouragement of this suggestion. Time was when a practical merchant would have laughed his head off at the notion of anybody's going to a

VIEW OF PART OF THE OLD WALK, (UPPER CORNER), WITH THE CONTINUED VIEW FROM THE

WOMAN TRAPPED
IN ELEVATORJune 14, 1930.
10*Free Woman From Lift During FireLibrary
ndles

400 street, burned or ore eight ked in an the Louis 11 avenue, om of the covered by K street, with Miss mer. The and hailed 1 Charles tton, who ware; also en street, f 164 Ben- and John fail. zled work open and s she did, treated by i response tus and a ize, quick- estimated

ost

E REof
d"

lice in Boston a by of the taken 9x for ter his ya ha- exhibi- me as with it facts did, been Belden

THE BOSTON HERALD

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 4, 1930

ORIGINAL OF 'ALICE'
COMING TO BOSTONCarroll's Manuscript to Be Exhibited at the Public
Library

The original manuscript of "Alice in Wonderland" by Lewis Carroll, will be exhibited during the summer months at the Public Library. It will be brought from Philadelphia by Director Charles F. D. Belden of the library, who arranged for the loan of the manuscript from its present owner, C. E. Rosenbach.

Mayor Curley gave immediate approval yesterday to the decision of the trustees to send Director Belden to Philadelphia. In informing the mayor of the decision, Gordon Abbott, chairman of the board, said:

"You will recall that this is the little volume that brought such an astounding price not many months ago. With the exception of a short exhibition in New York and Washington it has not been displayed in the United States. It will undoubtedly attract many people this Tercentenary year in connection with our own exhibit of Boston and Massachusetts Bay colonial material."

Mr. Rosenbach insists that the book must be handled by a special messenger.

the shaft, a few feet away, a woman and a boy were rescued by two policemen and three civilians who hacked their way through the steel door today.

The woman, who felt certain of death while the rescuers were hammering at her prison with crowbars and axes, and while smoke swirled all about her, is Johanna Walsh, 38, of 26 McBride st., Jamaica Plain.

When the door of the elevator was battered down, she was partly overcome from smoke.

The fire, according to the police, started in the motor of the elevator at the foot of the shaft, while the woman, using the elevator, was nearing the first floor.

can be opened only at floor levels. As smoke poured up through the shaft, she screamed for help. Another employee of the library, Miss Della Sweeney, of 171 K st., So. Boston, heard the screams and ran screaming into City Hall and Patrolmen Charles How and Joseph Brooks and John Fogarty, an employee of City Hall, George Kattigan and George Perry responded. They were unable to open the door with their hands, so Fogarty ran to City Hall and secured an assortment of tools.

Meanwhile a fire alarm had been sounded and a rescue company resuscitated Miss Walsh.

is in good condition. Director Charles F. D. Belden of the library believes that an especially fine grade of ink must have been used, and he sees no reason why the book should not be kept intact for several hundred years.

Northern Europe. This is the first map of American land, and is regarded by Scandinavian historians as a proof that the New World was known long before the discoveries of Columbus.

The largest volume on view is a copy of a part of Vincent de Beauvais's "Mirror of the World," the great encyclopedia of the Middle Ages. An iron chain, ten and a half inches long, is attached to the binding. In the Middle Ages, when books were scarce, the more valuable volumes were usually attached to the bench, in this way for protection.

Among the Italian incunabula are two volumes printed by Nicholas Jensen, whose Roman types have been the models for innumerable type designers to our day. Vendelin of Speyer, the first Venetian printer, is represented by a copy of "Summa Pisanella." There are works by Aldus Manutius of Venice, Antonius Zarotus of Milan, Miscomina of Florence, and several other masters. The most important item historically, at least, is a little quarto printed by Stephen Pannick in Rome in 1493. It is Christopher Columbus's letter to Raphael Sanxis, treasurer of the king of Spain, about the discovery of America—or the "islands beyond the Ganges"—as Columbus called it. Thanks to the Tieknor collection, one of the richest collections of Spanish books in the world, the library contains many Spanish incunabula. These are extremely rare, as during the religious persecutions of the sixteenth century the great number were burned by the inquisition.

A copy of the "Amadis de Gaul," a costly and elaborate work of all novels of the library, of the edition of 1533, has also been placed on view. The volume exhibits all the same typographical characteristics as the incunabula, and is adorned with a number of woodcuts. The first edition of Cervantes's "Don Quixote"—the destroyer of the picaresque novel—lies in the next case. In contrast to the beautiful "Amadis" this is a meanly printed little volume.

Of the fifteenth century English books the library has a leaf of John Gower's "Confession Amantis," printed by Caxton in 1483, and a copy of Higden's Great Chronicle, printed by Wynkyn de Worde in 1495. From an artistic point of view, the English incunabula do not bear comparison with those printed on the continent. Caxton himself was a great man, to whom English literature is eternally indebted, but he was not a great printer, not even a good one. He bought his types ready-made, and usually second-hand or third-hand. The leaf from Gower's book which the library possesses may be taken as typical of Caxton's work: the type is ugly Dutch baroque and the printing is very poor.

A copy of the third folio, similar in print to the first, is opened in the middle of Macbeth, displaying the type and the general arrangement of the paper. Four different folio editions of Shakespeare's plays were printed during the seventeenth century. The library owns copies of each folio, as well as a duplicate of the second and copy of the second imprint of the third.

THE BOSTON HERALD

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 4, 1930

ORIGINAL OF 'ALICE' COMING TO BOSTON

Carroll's Manuscript to Be Exhibited at the Public Library

The original manuscript of "Alice in Wonderland" by Lewis Carroll, will be exhibited during the summer months at the Public Library. It will be brought from Philadelphia by Director Charles F. D. Belden of the library, who arranged for the loan of the manuscript from its present owner, C. E. Rosenbath.

Mayor Curley gave immediate approval yesterday to the decision of the trustees to send Director Belden to Philadelphia. In informing the mayor of the decision, Gordon Abbott, chairman of the board, said:

"You will recall that this is the little volume that brought such an astounding price not many months ago. With the exception of a short exhibition in New York and Washington it has not been displayed in the United States. It will undoubtedly attract many people this Tercentenary year in connection with our own exhibit of Boston and Massachusetts Bay colonial material."

Mr. Rosenbath insists that the book must be handled by a special messenger.

Boston Globe
June 10, 1930

LIBRARIAN OF SOUTH END WILL RETIRE

Miss Sheridan Has Served for 50 Years

The perfect hostess, Miss Margaret A. Sheridan, librarian of the South End Branch of the Boston Public Library, will retire June 20. Miss Sheridan, 48, of which End Branch

Miss Sheridan perfect hostess loved books in the South End Branch. To the fact of development humble begin most at to its and staff of a Building on Brookline st. persons serve

The "city v Wood, noted South End, is opinion, the all sorts of P

To serve this group has task. She in human life to lege professor, the business n discouraged at

In the spirit has catered t heartened m graceful kind glad of the cl the branch ill own spirit and been enriched charts she hea of them from earth.

BOSTON

JUN

Boston Public

This departm than once on t in the Boston being compiled much cannot b this piece of we logue of incun of books is com and January 1 bulletin, "More pressions from Speier, Essling Preburg in B readable and a authors of these tions of their w optie view of th show their plac time. Among t Library are suc tionale" of 1480 1488; Schedel's 1493; the "Oper 1494; Jacobus Aurea" of 1488 graphia" of 14 books, and for thought and life them. In this c printer, and the in an interesting dry bones live, volumes describ the text.

June 6, 1930

COURIER-CITIZEN, LOWELL, MASS.

The Boston public library having prepared a selected list of books on retail selling, it might not be a bad idea for public libraries in smaller places to list as many of these books as they happen to have on the shelves and "sell" the list to employees of the local shops. There will be employers' encouragement of this suggestion. Time was when a practical merchant would have laughed his head off at maps, books, so akin are business and history in all time. Flipping the leaves of one of these small books, we read this comment on the personal habit of John Allen, the printer, made by his friend, Dunton, the bookseller:—

772

STONE & WEBSTER JOURNAL

His aspect has something so extraordinary in it that whoever does but look upon him will make no scruple to give him the title of My Lord. He is Master of an Excellent Mediocrity of temper, and under some more than Ordinary disappointment I have known him to drown his sadness in a glass of cyder.

The series of books put out by the State Street Trust Company are rich mines in which can be found the history of Boston as told by Inscriptions, by Historic Prints, by Some Events of Boston and Its Neighbors, by Forty Historic Houses. There is also Boston's Forty Immortals, commencing with John Cotton and including the merchant benefactor Peter Faneuil, the architect Charles Bulfinch, the first Roman Catholic Bishop of Boston Jean Lefebvre de Cheverus; the navigator and astronomer Nathaniel Bowditch and that soldier of the Civil War, Robert Gould Shaw.

Today when new bank buildings open we read of dark English oak panels, Italian Blanco and Formosa marble, of pilasters with bronze bases, crystal lanterns, and classic style of architecture. But in the period covered by this collection of bank material all those were lacking, yet there was no lack of romance. Neither was there lack of hard work, for merchants labored that they might add to the stability of their town, as did young Eben Jordan when, at the age of nineteen, he was in the habit of opening his store at four in the morning in order to catch the trade of the steamers that arrived from the Provinces and down East. Business offices were Counting Rooms only, in those earlier days, and when occasion required a larger space—as in the organization of the Warren Bank, those interested repaired to the comfortable rooms of a public house, such as the Exchange Coffee House.

In passing, comment must be made on the delightful habit of some of the writers of these brochures of giving a list of the bank's depositors of note. The story of these men alone would make a highly interesting book. It would be difficult to choose from the great number of brochures which is the most romantic but it is a safe guess that he who visits the shaft, a few feet away, a woman and a boy were rescued by two policemen and three civilians who hacked their way through the steel door today.

The woman, who felt certain of death while the rescuers were hammering at her prison with crowbars and axes, and while smoke swirled all about her, is Johanna Walsh, 38, of 26 McBride st., Jamaica Plain.

When the door of the elevator was battered down, she was partly overcome from smoke.

The fire, according to the police, started in the motor of the elevator at the foot of the shaft, while the woman, using the elevator, was nearing the first floor.

As smoke poured up through the shaft, she screamed for help. Another employee of the library, Miss Della Sweeney, of 171 K st., Boston, heard the screams and ran screaming into City Hall.

Patrolmen Charles Hearn and Joseph Brooks and John Fogarty, an employee of City Hall, George Kerrigan and George Perry responded. They were unable to open the door with their hands, so Fogarty ran to City Hall and secured an assortment of tools.

Meanwhile a fire alarm had been sounded and a rescue company resuscitated Miss Walsh.

Boston Daily Globe

SATURDAY, JUNE 14, 1930

WOMAN TRAPPED IN ELEVATOR

June 14, 1930.

10*

The Boston Post

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, JUNE 14, 1930

Free Woman From Lift During Fire

Library rldles

ride street, burned or fore eight sked in an the Louis dl avenue, tom of the covered by K street, with Miss mer. The and hailed Charles tion, who unre; also en street, f 164 Ben- and John Hall. zled work open and she did, treated by response tus and a ze, quick- estimated

ost

E

RE

of

d"

free in Boston a by of the taken ox for er his ya he- exhibi- me as with it facts id. been 3eiden

ORIGINAL ENGRAVING, 1824

This bank was situated at the corner of Wilson's Lane and State Street. It was built of Chelmsford granite and was regarded as one of the chief ornaments of the Boston Exchange.

is in good condition. Director Charles F. D. Belden of the library believes that an especially fine grade of ink must have been used, and he sees no reason why the book should not be kept intact for several hundred years.

Northern Europe. This is the first map of American land, and is regarded by Scandinavian historians as a proof that the New World was known long before the discoveries of Columbus.

The largest volume on view is a copy of a part of Vincent de Beauvais's "Mirror of the World," the great encyclopedia of the Middle Ages. An iron chain, ten and a half inches long, is attached to the binding. In the Middle Ages, when books were scarce, the more valuable volumes were usually attached to the bench, in this way, for protection.

Among the Italian incunabula are two volumes printed by Nicholas Jensen, whose Roman types have been the models for innumerable type designers to our day. Vendelin of Speyer, the first Venetian printer, is represented by "Summa Pisanella," by Aldus Manutius.

Zarotus of Milan, M. and several other important items historic to the quarto printed in Rome in 1492. It is bus's letter to Raphael of the king of Spain of America—or the "Ganges"—as Columbus to the Tickenor and the richest collections of the world, the library of the Spanish incunabula.

ly rare, as during the sixteenth century number were burned. A copy of the "A" and architecturally placed on view. The same typographical incunabula, and is a her of woodcuts.

Cervantes's "Don Quixote" is the masterpiece of the sixteenth century, in contrast "Amadis" this is a volume.

Of the fifteenth century the library has a "Confession Amantissimam" in 1483, and a "Chronicle" printed in 1492. From an English incunabula parson with those printed. Caxton himself to whom English literature is indebted, but he was not even a good types ready-made, a hand or third-hand, er's book which the all be taken as typical the type is ugly but printing is very poor.

A copy of the first print to the first, is a of Macbeth, displaying general arrangement different folio editor plays were printed in the sixteenth century.

Of each folio, as well the second and copy print of the third.

THE BOSTON

WEDNESDAY,

ORIGINAL COMING

Carroll's Manuscript Exhibited at Library

The original manuscript of "Alice in Wonderland" by Lewis Carroll, exhibited during the the Public Library, from Philadelphia by F. D. Belden of the library, and was loaned from its present owner, Dr. Rosenbach.

Mayor Curley gave immediate approval yesterday to the decision of the trustees to send Director Belden to Philadelphia. In informing the mayor of the decision, Gordon Abbott, chairman of the board, said:

"You will recall that this is the little volume that brought such an astounding price not many months ago. With the exception of a short exhibition in New York and Washington it has not been displayed in the United States. It will undoubtedly attract many people this Tercentenary year in connection with our own exhibit of Boston and Massachusetts Bay colonial material." Mr. Rosenbach insists that the book must be handled by a special messenger.

Boston Globe
June 10, 1930

LIBRARIAN OF SOUTH END WILL RETIRE

Miss Sheridan Has Served
for 50 Years

The perfect hostess, Miss Margaret A. Sheridan, librarian of the South End Branch of the Boston Public Library, will retire on June 10, 1930.

The Theory of Central Banking*

BY PROFESSOR T. E. GREGORY

PROFESSOR CASSEL'S article in the last issue of the Review was devoted to explaining and justifying the change which is taking place in the views entertained of the primary function of a Central Bank. In the nineteenth century that function can be described as the maintenance of stable relations between local credit and currency and gold, that is, of managing local banking and monetary arrangements with a primary regard to the international standard. In the twentieth century, the task of Central Banks, it is coming to be recognized, is to reverse the nineteenth century conception—to manage the international standard in the interests of such monetary and credit conditions as will satisfy the conditions of stability. The particular standard of stability preferred by Professor Cassel is the wholesale price level, and his choice of a method of control is the rate of discount, associated with appropriate alterations in the volume of securities held by the Central Bank.

My first comment is that there are grave reasons to doubt whether the weapons at the disposal of Central Banks are adequate for Professor Cassel's purpose. There are, as is well known, two methods by which a Central Bank can influence the volume of funds in the market. It can manipulate the discount rate, and it can buy and sell securities. Up to a point it can select one method and pursue it without having simultaneously to adopt the other. Thus it can buy securities, which will have the effect of making money more plentiful and forcing down market discount rates, without necessarily lowering its own rediscount rate in sympathy. In this case its own official rate simply becomes ineffective. On the other hand, a reduction of open market funds by sales of securities by a Central Bank is bound to lead ultimately to a rise in its own rate, for, as pressure on the market develops, increased applications for discounts will be made to it, and, unless its rate is raised, no net reduction in loans by the Central Bank will take place.

American experience in particular suggests, however, that *Lloyds Bank Limited Monthly Review.

June 6, 1930
COURIER-CITIZEN, LOWELL, MASS.

The Boston public library having prepared a selected list of books on retail selling, it might not be a bad idea for public libraries in smaller places to list as many of these books as they happen to have on the shelves and "sell" the list to employees of the local shops. There will be employers' encouragement of this suggestion. Time was when a practical merchant would have laughed his head off at the notion of anybody's going to a

Boston Daily Globe

SATURDAY, JUNE 14, 1930

WOMAN TRAPPED IN ELEVATOR

Then Fire Starts in Branch
Library Basement

Considerable excitement prevailed in City Hall about 8 this morning when a woman became caught in an elevator of the Edward Kirstein Memorial Library at 20 City Hall av. and while she was being extricated a fire started in the basement.

Johanna Walsh of 96 McBride st., Jamaica Plain, one of the women working in cleaning the building, came caught in the elevator. Delia Sweeney of 171 K at South Boston, rushed out and notified patrolman Charles Hoar, Joseph Brooks, John Fogarty, Maurice W. Fitzgerald and George Kennigan of the City Hall staff, with crowbars, released the woman from the elevator. She was practically uninjured.

While the woman was being extricated, a fire from some unknown cause started in the basement. This was extinguished by firemen who responded to a still alarm and the damage was about $100.

THE BOSTON HERALD,
SUNDAY, JUNE 15, 1930

'ALICE' SCRIPT ON VIEW AT LIBRARY

Original Manuscript of Famous Book Exhibited

The original script of "Alice in Wonderland," a book which probably has sold several hundred thousand copies since its publication in 1862, without having been banned in Boston, will be on exhibition in the treasure room of the Boston Public Library today.

Printed by hand, on notepaper that might have sold for a few pennies when the story was written by Lewis Carroll—Charles L. Dodgson was his real name—the book sold for $75,000 at a public auction in England two years ago.

This rare library relic was loaned to the library by its owner, Eldridge R. Johnson of Moorestown, N. J., and may be viewed daily from 9 A. M. to 9 P. M. Dr. A. S. W. Rosenbach of Philadelphia bought the original manuscript from the Alice mentioned in the story—Mrs. Alice Pleasance Hargreaves—for 15,490 pounds. Mr. Johnson, president of the Victor Talking Machine Company, later purchased it from Dr. Rosenbach.

June 14, 1930.
10*

The Boston Post

NOTED OLD SCRIPT ON VIEW HERE

'Alice in Wonderland'
Original at Public
Library

Just an ordinary note book that might have been bought for a few cents away back in 1862, but which sold for $75,000 at a public auction in England two years ago, was used by the author of "Alice in Wonderland" to pen his fantastic tale that has since delighted millions of readers throughout the world.

LOANED TO HUB LIBRARY

This rare library relic, which has been loaned to the Boston Public Library by its owner, Eldridge R. Johnson of Moorestown, N. J., and is to be placed on exhibition in the treasure room of the library today, was taken out of a safe-deposit vault yesterday and brought to the library. It is a book about eight inches in length and about five inches in width, and contains 20 closely lettered pages, with 37 pen and ink sketches by the author on the margins of some of the pages.

Although the author of the tale, Charles L. Dodgson, an instructor in mathematics at Oxford University, who published the story under the name of Lewis Carroll, wrote a clear, flowing hand, he took especial care to print the entire story.

In fine lettering, he penned the story which he had previously related to three little girls whom he took for a boat ride on the Thames River one summer afternoon years ago. And the little book he presented as a Christmas gift to little Alice Liddell, one of the three little girls, and the original Alice of the story.

Why It Was Printed

Alice was then about 8 years old, and it is thought that the author's reason for carefully printing the story, a tedious task when one studies the 53 pages in the book, was to be sure that it could be easily read by a little 8-year-old girl. It is lettering of the kind that is being taught in the schools today.

The cover of the book is a cheap, cloth binding, which probably was a dark green tint when it was bought in 1862 by the author. The paper is just ordinary note book paper, but the valued little book has been carefully preserved. Not a single page is loosened from the stitching.

The letters have not faded to any great extent. In fact the entire volume is in good condition. Director Charles F. D. Belden of the library believes that an especially fine grade of ink must have been used, and he sees no reason why the book should not be kept intact for several hundred years.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, JUNE 14, 1930

Free Woman From Lift During Fire

Locked in Kirstein Library Elevator as Blaze Kindles in Well

Johanna Walsh of 96 McBride street, Forest Hills, escaped being burned or otherwise injured shortly before eight o'clock this morning while locked in an elevator on the first floor of the Louis E. Kirstein Library, City Hall avenue, while a fire burned at the bottom of the well.

Her predicament was discovered by Mrs. Delia Sweeney of 171 K street, South Boston, who is employed with Miss Walsh in the library as a cleaner. The former rushed to the street and hailed Patrolman Charles Hoar and Charles Brookes of the Milk street station, who were passing through Court square; also George Carrigan of 18 Mindon street, Jamaica Plain; George Perry of 164 Bennington street, East Boston, and John Fogarty, an employee at City Hall.

After fifteen minutes of frenzied work the elevator door was pried open and Miss Sweeney stepped out. As she did, the fire fanned by the draft created by the opened door, blazed up. In response to a telephone call fire apparatus and a rescue squad answered. The blaze, quickly extinguished, caused damage estimated at $100.

The Boston Post

TUESDAY, JUNE 10, 1930.

HAS TREASURE IN LITERATURE

Original Manuscript of
'Alice in Wonderland'

The original manuscript of "Alice in Wonderland" was brought to Boston last night from Philadelphia by Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, and was taken immediately to a safe deposit box for safe keeping.

Director Belden said, shortly after his return, that it will be several days before the manuscript is placed on exhibition at the library, until such time as the complete story in connection with it is obtained. There are several facts which he has yet to learn, he said. Just where the manuscript has been locked up temporarily, Director Belden refused to say last night.

that
rary
r the arian,

and a other affair.
t had t was have bent,
er all,
ve are le and s con-id not chmen know

ght,

THE LIBRARIAN

WHAT an easy time of it future historians are going to have, and all because Massachusetts banks have made careful and thorough researches in local history and set forth the results in well-printed, attractive booklets. At the new Kirslein Branch of the Boston Public Library may be seen a splendid collection of these which keep before the mind of Bostonians and Tercentenary visitors the traditions and glory of the Commonwealth.

Twelve years ago, the Salem Savings Bank celebrated its first hundred years and issued at that time an attractive resume of its experiences. An appropriate maritime flavor is given to the exhibit by having the booklet open at a picture of Elias Hasket Derby's famous vessel, The Grand Turk, which was the first from New England to reach China. The Salem Five Cent Savings Bank has been in existence seventy-five years and includes in its booklet a view of Essex street in 1855, showing a few placid loiterers, and one wagon.

"A Century of Banking in Historic Charlestown," compiled by the Bunker Hill Branch of the American Trust Company, begins with a charming description of a gentleman of 1825, brave in his blue broadcloth suit, ruffled shirt and high silk hat. This was Major Timothy Walker on his way to the first meeting of the incorporators of the Bunker Hill Bank.

From Cambridge come three pamphlets, issued by the Harvard Trust Company, on Leaders of Cambridge Industry. One of the illustrations is a curious print showing the plan of Charles River Basin, especially engraved by Charles Davenport. His intention was to have the place dotted with elegant grass plots, edged with geraniums and clematis. One may also see ladies of the period wandering abstractedly with their escorts among carriages and horseback riders. Newburyport's contribution has a frontispiece showing the first savings bank in a cottage at Rotherwell Village, Scotland, and opened in 1810. Well, what country did you think it would be in?

One of the anniversary numbers of The Spur, house organ of the Springfield Institution for Savings, had an article on famous houses of the vicinity. Illustrated with a picture of the doorway of the Cotton House, of Longfellow, which is now in the Boston Art Museum. The Lynn Institution for Savings, a century old, includes in its booklet an interesting picture of an early shoe shop—a far cry from the mammoth, many-windowed factories of that city, today.

Beginnings of other great industries are celebrated by other banks, as well. The booklet of the Fall River Savings Bank shows an old print of the first steam packet between Fall River and Providence, in 1828. The Worcester Bank & Trust shows early time-tables of the Boston & Worcester Railroad. The Worcester County Institution for Savings has a picture of the first station of this road. The Dedham National Bank has one of the Foxbury Depot, showing the cut through the rocks, as it was when the railroad was first built. Another of the Leaders of Cambridge Industry, from the Harvard Trust Company, shows a splendid sketch of the plant of the New England Glass Works, first large industry in East Cambridge, as it appeared at the height of its prosperity. A booklet from the Brighton Five Cents Savings Bank, entitled "Sixty-five Years Service," contains an unusual real estate map of the vicinity in 1852, with names of all landowners.

One of the most striking booklets is from the Everett National Bank. It is bound in bright orange, with the picture of a stagecoach on the cover and gives a short account of the Newburyport Turnpike. Included among the illustrations is a facsimile of a handbill of the Wolfe Tavern, State Street, old Newburyport.

The Cambridge Savings Bank may well be proud of its location, which is on the site of the building where Stephen Daye set up the first printing press in British America, in 1636. Lest you had forgotten, or never known it, the Machineist's National Bank of Taunton recalls to mind that the first rebel flag flown in America was displayed for the first time from a pole on Taunton Green, Oct. 21, 1774. Taunton, it appears, was really the Cradle of Liberty. The Greenfield First National Bank shows the town's first post office, which was a log cabin, and beneath it the present magnificent Georgian structure. Many other fascinating fragments of the past are arranged in this exhibit, which proves that bankers are not entirely concerned with stocks, bonds or debentures.

It must be very gratifying to the trustees of the Public Library to see how the business community appreciates the new branch made possible by the generosity of Mr. Kirslein. Even on the hottest days, both the Business Library and the branch on the third floor are well patronized. The circulating branch reports that many people are of the opinion that it is necessary to have some sort of special card to take out books. As it is a branch of the Boston Public Library, the usual library card issued at central or any of the other branches, may be used there or in any part of the system.

Boston Traveler

THURSDAY, JUNE 12, 1930

Alice in Boston

BOSTON is particularly fortunate in the quality of the membership of the board of trustees of the Boston Public Library and of the staff headed by Director Charles F. D. Belden.

Director Belden has brought temporarily to the library the original manuscript of "Alice in Wonderland," by Lewis Carroll. Mayor Curley, himself an admirer and user of the library, and one of its best friends, aided greatly in the work of bringing the manuscript here.

THE BOSTON HERALD
Revel in Library Courtyard
Rivals MacMonnies's Statue

Was It Unadorned
Dancers and Dainty Marks
Of French Heels?

OR ONLY DRUNKEN WATCHMAN'S PARTY?

Famous MacMonnies bronze that was banished from library court yard.

The shade of shame which 30 years ago so worried the consciences of guardians of our civic morals has returned six-fold to roost in the sanctum sanctorum of cultured Boston on this, its 300th anniversary.

The silver sheen of the same old moon which once fondly caressed the graceful figure of MacMonnies's famed Bacchante as she poised for her bath in the courtyard of the Public Library, has been shed again upon her sins, magnified, multiplied and mortified.

But while thousands of Bostonians were permitted a brief and sighing gaze 'ere Bacchante was banished, only the moon, the windows of the court and a single, awestruck passerby was permitted to witness her reincarnation, a fortnight ago.

Three men and three maids, as unashamed and unadorned as Bacchante, were said to be principals in this second invasion of Copley square. The moon and the windows are mutely silent; but the eyewitness who pressed his eager face to the grilled grate from midnight until dawn is said to have reluctantly confirmed the suspicions which arose when library trustees and employees gazed aghast at the unmistakable signs of the morning after.

Yesterday, there became known the tidings that two employees of the library, watchmen, were suspended for their part in the affair by officials of the institution, who will meet in solemn conclave Friday to consider the findings of special investigators assigned to the case.

Besides the watchmen under suspension, a prominent Boston businessman and three young nurses from a Roxbury hospital are rumored to have personified the statues which came to life for those fleeting hours, although library authorities disclaim the participation of the fair sex in the revel. Yet employees reporting for work the following morning insist that in addition to empty ginger ale bottles reclining wearily on the torn turf, they unmistakably saw the imprint of high French heels, low brutal heels, tiny bare heels and great cavemen's heels in the freshly-seeded plot.

Further testimony, whether real or imaginary, was drawn from the sight of a gallon jug, slightly broken and discarded, which lay at the bottom of the magnificent marble pool over which the famed Bacchante was to have presided as mistress of revelry.

A warm night, a sheltered court, the cool refreshing waters for hot and tired feet and the jug whence flowed unsimulated spirits for the jaded, formed the picture which conjured up their inevitable conclusions.

The police were not notified, Charles F. Belden, director of the library ordered an immediate investigation and instructed Theodore Money, assistant librarian, to press the inquiry to a satisfactory conclusion.

Private detectives, armed with magnifying glasses and measuring tapes, noted the dimensions of the high, low, large and small heel-prints. One of the watchmen, repentant, is said to have told all, but implicated no one other than himself.

BACCHANTE AVENGED

So Bacchante comes into her sweet revenge. When Charles F. McKim, architect of the library, presented to the courtyard the unadorned marble figure with its dripping grapes and twinkling toes, a righteous populace rose to demand that she be banished, in her nude and voluptuous disgrace, to exile. New York's grateful museum of fine arts gathered the fallen female to its bosom.

Amid a further storm of criticism, an authentic copy of Bacchante, fair to look upon, pranced back to grace a new wing of the Boston museum, where she has since remained, but not until a fortnight ago did her spirit return to the cloistered court of the library. As dawn streaked gray into its confines, her disciples fled, but her ghost will ever haunt the marbled terrace.

Director Belden, astonished last night when informed that there was a widespread report that three nurses had forsaken the role of Nightingale for that of Psyche and Bacchus, briefly stated that the trustees were unaware of the presence of women in the drinking spree.

"A watchman and janitor," he said, "invited two or three of their friends into the library a week ago Thursday night. They remained for a couple of hours and another watchman put them out. There was no damage. The janitor and watchman have been suspended. There were no women at the affair."

2 CENTS
PAY NO MORE

DAILY RECORD
BOSTON'S ONLY PICTURE NEWSPAPER

Vol. 233. No. 144

Cloudy—Warm

Full Story on Page 2

Boston, Monday, June 16, 1930

EVE-LIKE GIRLS IN PUBLIC LIBRARY
Million Peaches
Beaches

A new heat wave wh of the East yesterday, claim some while it drags across

(Daily Record Photo)

Moonlight Revels in the stone benches and the courtyard at the Boston Public Library, with men and women participating, have resulted in the suspension of two watchmen and an investigation being made. Only the architecture of St. Paul's and they didn't even wink, let alone talk

EMPTY JUG IN FOUNTAIN
And lo! in the sparkling, crystal clear pool beneath the figures of the spraying nymphs, reposed an empty (save of water) and slightly broken glass gallon jug. It was of the type that either comes in and preventing the refilling of which there is no law.

Charles F. Belden, director of the library, denied last night that there had been any women at the party. He said that to the best of his knowledge the party was made up entirely of men. He admitted that there had been a drinking party and that the grass had been trampled, but stated that the lawn is in good repair again.

Belden stated that as a result of inquiries two employees of the library have been suspended pending

Literary Note

WE are assured by officials of the Boston Public Library that there were no nude nymphs in the classic pool of the library courtyard a few nights ago, no stark sirens revelling under the light of the moon.

Realism supplants romance in the report of the librarian, who avers that it was simply a case where a watchman and a janitor invited two of their friends into the library and another watchman put them out. There were no women at the affair.

We do not know whether we would wax indignant had there been nude bathing in the cool pool in the patio. It was a hot night, an extenuating circumstance. Many of us have had the impulse to leap into that very pool, not on suicide bent, but simply to soak in its soothing waters. And, yet, after all, if we wink at one or two persons enjoying this pleasure we are wrong, because the pool is the property of the entire people and all should have equal privilege. No, perhaps, all things considered, it would have been wrong. We are glad it did not occur.

We are sorry for the night watchman. Night watchmen are fast losing their convivial rights. Next thing we know somebody will be demanding that they keep awake all night.

You saw it in the DAILY RECORD, Monday, June 16, 1936

FOUR DIE IN HEAT WAVE

Million People Rush to Beaches to Get Relief

A new heat wave which scorched Boston and other sections of the East yesterday, claimed four lives and prostrated many people. One of the most striking from the Everett National bank, which was the first from New England to reach China. The Salem Five Cent Savings Bank has been in existence seventy-five years and includes in its booklet a view of Essex street in 1855, showing a few placid lotterers, and one wagon.

"A Century of Banking in Historic Charlestown," compiled by the Bunker Hill Branch of the American Trust Company, begins with a charming description of a gentleman of 1825, brave in his blue broadcloth suit, ruffled shirt and high silk hat. This was Major Timothy Walker on his way to the first meeting of the incorporators of the Bunker Hill Bank.

From Cambridge come three pamphlets, issued by the Harvard Trust Company, on Leaders of Cambridge Industry. One of the illustrations is a curious print showing the plan of Charles River Basin, especially engraved by Charles Davenport. His intention was to have the place port. It is dotted with elegant grass plots, edged with geraniums and calceolarias. One may also see ladies of the period wandering abstractedly with their escorts among carriages and horseback riders. Newburyport's contribution has a frontispiece showing the first savings bank in a cottage at Rothwell Village, Scotland, and opened in 1810. Well, what country did you think it would be in?

One of the anniversary numbers of The Spur, house organ of the Springfield Institution for Savings, had an article on famous houses of the vicinity, illustrated with a picture of the doorway of the Cotton House, of Longfellow, which is now in the Boston Art Museum. The Lynn Institution for Savings, a century old, includes in its booklet an interesting picture of an early shoe shop—a far cry

Radio Log Is Demanded

They Dodged the Heat at the Beach

King Summer, in the form of heat and excessive humidity, took a toll of five deaths, with others dying yesterday. This group of youngsters at City Point was only a tiny part of the crowd that thronged the beaches around the city in an effort to gain relief from the heat.

4 Drown Seeking Relief From Heat

Four persons were drowned yesterday when they sought relief from the heat in the cooling waters of the Merrimack river and other fresh water streams.

LEFT AT ALTAR BEAUTY WANTS FIANCE JAILED

Attleboro, June 15—Left waiting at the time set for her wedding, with a minister and two score guests assembled to greet a bridegroom-to-be who never appeared, and later revealed as already married, led Miss Dorothy Valiquette, pretty Titian blonde, of Rieland, to empty ginger ale bottles reclining wearily on the torn turf, they unmistakably saw the imprint of high French heels, low brutal heels, tiny bare heels and great cavemen's heels in the freshly-seeded plot.

Further testimony, whether real or imaginary, was drawn from the sight of a gallon jug, slightly broken and discarded, which lay at the bottom of the magnificent marble pool over which the famed Bacchante was to have presided as mistress of revelry.

A warm night, a sheltered court, the cool refreshing waters for hot and tired

THE DEAD
Edward Moreau, 35, of Forest st. Lawrence, drowned in the Merrimack river at Methuen when his canoe capsized.

Henry Lamon, 35, of Broad st. New York's grateful museum of fine arts gathered the fallen female to its bosom. Amid a further storm of criticism, an authentic copy of Bacchante, fair to look upon, pranced back to grace a new wing of the Boston museum, where she has since remained, but not until a fortnight ago did her spirit return to the cloistered court of the library. As dawn streaked gray into its confines, her disciples fled, but her ghost will ever haunt the marbled terrace.

Director Belden, astonished last night when informed that there was a widespread report that three nurses had forsaken the role of Nightingale for that of Psyche and Bacchus, briefly stated that the trustees were unaware of the presence of women in the drinking spree.

"A watchman and janitor," he said, "invited two or three of their friends into the library a week ago Thursday night. They remained for a couple of hours and another watchman put them out. There was no damage. The janitor and watchman have been suspended. There were no women at the affair."

Tampa's Tall With Fairfax to Be Bar

The board of inquiry into the Fairfax-Pinthis disaster, day called for the Coast Guard cutter Tampa. All radio messages which between the Fairfax and Tampa, which was within 15 miles of the scene of the disaster, lives off Situate. These will be interpreted for the steamboat inspection team by a naval radio expert.

Identity of the naval expert not be revealed until he stand this morning at the praisers' stores with the log before him.

Not only the wireless communication between the Tampa and Merchants & Minors sank the Pinthis, but the message which the Tampa may have overheard read into the records of the investigation.

Code Messages
By expert testimony, Capt. Charles G. Lyons, John T. Stewart, whether the Tampa knowledge that a ship sunk until long after the message of rescuing lives and whether any such

Continued on Page 91

BANDITS IN UP 20 IN C AND GET

Undraped Nurses Revel at Rum Party in Hub

Trustees Probe Night Orgies in Courtyard

Three male figures, undraped, and three female figures, undraped, flitted in the blue night and the silver moonlight about the sacred courtyard of the Boston Public Library in Copley Sq.

They were not statues, come to life.

Charges that the beautiful marble courtyard of the library building was the scene of a nude revel participated in by three nurses, two employees at the building and a Boston business man are under investigation by the library board of trustees it became known yesterday.

The two employees have been suspended and one is said to have confessed his participation. The trustees, aghast, astounded and shocked beyond mere words, will hold a special meeting next Friday to decide what is to be done. Private detectives are following clues.

PLAIN SIGNS OF ORGY
On the morning of June 6 when the library's official personnel reported for duty there were found unmistakable signs in the courtyard that during the night something out of the ordinary—very much out of the ordinary—had occurred.

The magnificent emerald lawn, surrounding the square marble pool, and whereon, in the past, trespass has constituted a major crime, was torn up and trampled down. Heat marks were deep in it, big heels and little French heels.

Scattered about the court on the stone benches and leaning, exhausted, against the great marble pillars, were a number of ginger ale bottles.

Of the thousands of visitors who annually visit the court to admire the architecture of Stanford White, none has been in the habit of leaving ginger ale bottles.

EMPTY JUG IN FOUNTAIN
And lo! in the sparkling, crystal clear pool beneath the figures of the spraying nymphs, reposed an empty (save of water) and slightly broken glass gallon jug. It was of the type that either comes in and preventing the refilling of which there is no law.

Charles F. Belden, director of the library, denied last night that there had been any women at the party. He said that to the best of his knowledge the party was made up entirely of men. He admitted that there had been a drinking party and that the grass had been trampled, but stated that the lawn is in good repair again.

Belden stated that as a result of his inquiries two employees of the library have been suspended pending

Heat Kills 4; Million Visit Near Beaches Temperatures

Boston Traveler

THURSDAY, JUNE 12, 1936

Alice in Boston

BOSTON is particularly fortunate in the quality of the membership of the board of trustees of the Boston Public Library and of the staff headed by Director Charles F. D. Belden.

Director Belden has brought temporarily to the library the original manuscript of "Alice in Wonderland," by Lewis Carroll. Mayor Curley, himself an admirer and user of the library, and one of its best friends, aided greatly in the work of bringing the manuscript here.

Literary Note

WE are assured by officials of the Boston Public Library that there were no nude nymphs in the classic pool of the library courtyard a few nights ago, no stark sirens revelling under the light of the moon.

Realism supplants romance in the report of the librarian, who avers that it was simply a case where a watchman and a janitor invited two of their friends into the library and another watchman put them out. There were no women at the affair.

We do not know whether we would wax indignant had there been nude bathing in the cool pool in the patio. It was a hot night, an extenuating circumstance. Many of us have had the impulse to leap into that very pool, not on suicide bent, but simply to soak in its soothing waters. And, yet, after all, if we wink at one or two persons enjoying this pleasure we are wrong, because the pool is the property of the entire people and all should have equal privilege. No, perhaps, all things considered, it would have been wrong. We are glad it did not occur.

We are sorry for the night watchman. Night watchmen are fast losing their convivial rights. Next thing we know somebody will be demanding that they keep awake all night.

We are sorry for the night watchman. Night watchmen are fast losing their convivial rights. Next thing we know somebody will be demanding that they keep awake all night.

HIGH REVEL HELD AT HUB LIBRARY

Ladies and Gentlemen Said to Have Used Courtyard and Fountain for Bacchante Rites

POOL IN COURTYARD AT PUBLIC LIBRARY
Photo shows a section of the courtyard at the public library in Copley square, where alleged revels took place.

A group of four men, including a police officer and a State street broker, and three women nurses, staged a drinking party in the classic courtyard of the Boston Public Library a week ago last Friday night, during which they engaged in such pastimes as baseball, with ginger ale bottles and jugs of gin; leap frog, with French heels tearing holes in the velvety lawn, and finally a session of unadorned bathing in the gleaming pool that sets under Stanford White's renowned fountain.

The result so far has been the suspension of two library employees who are alleged to have been involved, and the start of a complete investigation by library authorities and police officials. Reports of the revel on the night of June 6, between midnight and dawn, became spread about yesterday.

men, have admitted their participation of the revel, but deny that there was a policeman present or that women took part in the affair. Belden admitted the possibility of women being present, however, adding that with "an unrelenting watchman almost anything could happen."

Commissioner Hultman and Superintendent Crowley are awaiting an official report in order to make an investigation to determine whether one of their men was among the revelers.

The story of the affair, placed together thus far, is that the two watchmen, scheduled to go on duty at midnight, decided to stage a party in several places about town. They called the nurses. It is alleged, and the latter agreed to go with them. After indulging in several drinking bouts during the early part of the night, the group decided to make a night of it, so they went to the library and one of the watchmen opened the door with his key.

They arrived at the library about midnight and after several quiet drinks inside, went to the courtyard, where the gambling began. A bright moon lighted up the court and gave the necessary stage effects to a real demonstration of whist. As things were going quite well, one of the men conceived the brilliant idea of tossing ginger ale bottles higher and yon. This pastime occupied their attention for a time, but finally pallied, and they decided they needed a swim more than anything else.

No sooner was the idea suggested, than the entire party started stripping off their garments and sliding into the pool.

After a refreshing swim, the party cavorted about in great glee, with the soft moon shedding its beneficent rays into the secluded courtyard. Suddenly, someone discovered that they were all out of liquor and, after tipping a gallon jug upside down and squeezing it to make certain, one vexed member of the group slumped it into the pool.

There is no telling what would have been the next event on the programme if a janitor had not appeared. The janitor, whose name Belden declined to give out, arrived upon the scene and as fast as possible hustled the group out the door and into Copley square, first giving them time to replace their garments.

Incident Reported
The affair was reported to Assistant Director Money by Patrolman Willis H. Benjamin of the Back Bay Station, who went on duty in the library the following morning. Benjamin said last night that he reported finding evidence that something out of the ordinary had taken place in the courtyard during the night. That is in police office on duty in the front of a patrol at night on duty. It is ding opens in the morning.

Called to two watchmen in his office, Belden with Frank W. Buxton, a trustee, questioned them on the previous night, where on a call was sent out for a meeting of the board of trustees. This will be old Friday, when it was stated, some action will be taken.

Belden said last night that if the investigation substantiated the stories of the watchmen, the latter will be discharged and that will be the end of the incident, so far as he is concerned.

The names of the two other men who were alleged to have been with the watchmen were not given to Belden, he said. This phase of the affair, however, elicited the response from Superintendent Crowley that he would watch the probe and be ready to act if there is evidence involving an officer.

As far as the library is concerned there will be no action against any of those participating, except the employees of that institution. The nurses, alleged to have taken part in the frolic are young Roxbury women.

NIGHT REVELS AT CITY LIBRARY

Wild Party Is Reported Staged in Courtyard

Three Nurses Said to Have Participated

Director Belden Denies Women Were Present

The fountain-cooled courtyard of the Boston Public Library, sanctuary of thousands of book-lovers during the warmer months of the year, was transformed into a "night club" by library employees and their friends, during the heat wave of 10 days ago, and, according to rumor prevalent last night, both men and women participated in a drunken revel that lasted well into the morning.

To refute the rumor, however, Charles F. D. Belden, director of the library, denied last night that women had participated in the party, but said that a watchman and janitor had invited three or four male friends into the courtyard and that apparently drinking had taken place there.

He said that on the following day there were footprints on the grass, but added that no damage was caused to the lawn.

Two Suspended

As a result of the escapade, two night employees at the building are said to have been suspended by the trustees, while private detectives are tracing down the other man and the three women who not only are alleged to have drunk on the premises, but are said to have danced on the greensward of the courtyard, and are even said to have indulged in a dip, scantily clad, at the base of the fountain, to offset the effects of the hot weather.

From what could be learned last night the party occurred on the night of June 5, an exceedingly warm night, and continued well into the next morning. The discovery of the desecration of the property came the following morning, when it was found that the well-kept courtyard lawn had been punctured in numberless places by sharp French heels.

Broken in several places at the foot of the fountain in the center of the courtyard was found a gallon jug, it is charged, and upon closer examination of the lawn, kept up at a cost of hundreds of dollars to the city, the investigators found not only the imprints of women's shoes, but also the markings of bare feet, both large and small.

A rigid inquiry was immediately begun by director Belden and Theodore Money, assistant librarian. No report was made of the matter to the police, but private detectives were called in and before any repairs were made to the premises, measurements of all the footprints were taken.

A number of employees at the library were questioned, and finally, by putting two and two together, one of the investigating officials was able to pretend that he knew the complete story of the revel, and succeeded in breaking down one of the workers. He is said to have confessed to his part in the escapade, and involved the second employee. These are the two men now under suspension.

Business Man Also

Further inquiry revealed that the third man of the party was a prominent Boston business man, who made the acquaintance of the employees through his first visits to the library, which were made frequently and solely for the purposes of reading.

The names of the young women have also been learned. It is said, and upon checking up on them it was discovered that all three are hospital nurses.

The result of the inquiry was made known to the board of trustees of the library immediately, and a meeting of the full board was set for last Friday to consider the case. The death of Mrs. Curley intervened, however, and as the trustees wished to attend the funeral Friday, the trustees' meeting was postponed until tomorrow. At that time, it is expected, they will take up the cases of the two suspended employees, and also decide whether the others involved in the party shall be prosecuted for destruction of public property.

Director Belden vigorously scouted the report that women participated in the startling "party in the patio."

"These stories are absurd," declared the library head. "I have questioned the night watchman and janitor and am fully convinced that no women took part in the affair."

"The true story of the incident is that a night watchman and one of the janitors came to the library after closing time a week ago last Thursday night (June 5). They brought with them three or four friends, all of them men."

"Apparently they had had some drinks. There was evidence that they had trampled on the grass, but they caused only slight damage and no expense was entailed in the repairing of it."

Told that a report had been circulated to the effect that the imprints of French heels had been found in the lawn surrounding the fountain, Director Belden said that, as far as he could learn, none had been found.

He reiterated his statement that women could not have participated in the party, stating that the other night watchman, who was not included in the party, would have reported the presence of women in the library.

Director Belden said that he was out of the city on business when the party occurred but that he had received a full report from Assistant Librarian Money, who had inspected the grounds upon learning of the affair.

Mr. Money, he said, is convinced that no women were brought into the library.

Asked about the report that a broken gallon jug and several empty ginger ale bottles had been found on the lawn, Director Belden asserted that he had heard nothing of them.

The janitor and the night watchman, said Mr. Belden, will appear before the trustees at their next meeting, when action to be taken in the affair will be decided.

THE LIBRARY "REVELS"

The hot wave on Sunday seems to have expanded considerably the truth of the alleged scandalous doings in the court of the Public Library the week before last, as published in the morning papers yesterday. The evening papers appear to have recorded the unadorned facts. In short, a night watchman and a janitor admitted some friends to the court early one morning and they drank, as some night watchmen, some janitors and some friends will. The two employees were suspended soon afterward by Director C. F. D. Belden. As no women, nurses or non-nurses, were present at the matutinal "orgies," there was no reincarnation of the spirit of the dancing Bacchante and the baby which she triumphantly holds aloft. No damage was done. No liquor containers threw back the gleams of the rising sun. No private detectives were called in. The police were not notified. There is no evidence that the two night employees and their fellows patronized the water of the fountain. The Public Library still stands intact physically and in morale.

The Bacchante episode of years ago was one of the picturesque little events in the history of the Public Library, and there have been others. The dancing woman was very good as a bit of art, and was evicted not because of any artistic defects but because she was regarded as not quite the thing for a public institution to which the young resorted. She was more suitable as a museum piece than as a central feature of a library court.

The two little boys carved in stone over the main entrance were also objectionable in other days to the over-fastidious. Middle-aged persons also remember that the architects contrived an acrostic in the names which adorn the facade, but the arrangement was finally changed.

The Central Library, one of the masterpieces of McKim, Mead and White, is without an equal elsewhere in the United States, and attracts thousands of admiring visitors every year. The Sargent, Puvion de Lavallée and Abbey murals are enough in themselves to make a building distinctive and famous. The courtyard, where some imaginative soul thought he heard sounds of riot and ill-managed merriment among the jocund night watchmen, nurses and business men, is a beautiful place, now that the grass has appeared; and the treasure room, where the precious manuscript of "Alice in Wonderland" is now on display is impressive. Wasn't the fancy of the Sunday reporters a little below par in that they did not bring Alice to life, bob her hair, incarnadine her lips and have her do a jazz step or two with the shade of the Bacchante who departed from the library years and years ago?

Guy W. Currier Died Today

Guy W. Currier, one of Boston's best-known lawyers, died this morning at his country home in Peterboro, N. H., following illness, from heart trouble, with which he was stricken a little less than a fortnight ago, and from which his recovery had been expected.

Mr. Currier was born in Lawrence on Dec. 22, 1867, the son of John Merrill Currier and Sarah E. W. (Cole) Currier. He received his education at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and at Boston University Law School and for many years had practised law in Boston. He was admitted to the bar in 1894. As trustee in other capacities he had numerous other interests. Since 1922, Mr. Currier had been a trustee of the Boston Public Library. His term was not to have expired until 1933.

He was a member of Massachusetts House of Representatives in 1899, and of the Massachusetts Senate in 1900-1, and was chairman of Boston Port Authority, to which office he was appointed in 1929. He was a director of the Chicago Junction Railway and Union Stock Yards Company; Consolidated Railroads of Cuba; Cuba Northern Railways Company, and Cuba Railroad Company.

Mr. Currier's clubs were the Algonquin, Eastern Yacht, the Country Club, Brookline; Engineers Club, Boston; Technology Club of New York; University Club, and India House in New York.

Mr. Currier married on June 13, 1894, Miss Marie G. Burress, a former member of the old stock company of the Boston Museum. She survives him, together with two sons and three daughters: Richard Currier, Guy Currier, Mrs. Felton Elkins (Sarah Currier) of Cannes, France; Mrs. Kenneth L. Lindsey (Anne Currier) of London, England; and Mrs. Robert S. Steiner (Lucy F. Currier).

All of the members of the family are at the home in Peterboro, with the exception of Guy Currier, who was married on June 11 in London to Miss Sheila Locke, following which they left London for a honeymoon on the continent.

F. W. Buxton Heads Library Trustees

Frank W. Buxton, editor of the Boston Herald, was elected president of the trustees of the Boston Public Library, at their annual meeting yesterday. Monaghan A. T. Connolly was elected vice president and Miss Della J. Deery, clerk.

Two employees of the library, a janitor and a watchman, were discharged by the trustees at the meeting on charges of gross misconduct. They were alleged to have taken part in a drinking party in the courtyard of the library on the night of June 5. Both were suspended by Charles F. D. Belden, director of the library, pending the action of the trustees.

G. W. CURRIER DIES AT SUMMER HOME

Prominent Boston Lawyer Victim of Heart Ailment

PETERBORO, N. H., June 21.—Guy W. Currier, prominent Boston lawyer, died at his summer home here today, following a brief illness.

Mr. Currier came here the first of the month suffering from a heart attack, and has since been in the care of Dr. Cadis Phipps, a heart specialist. Dr. Charles A. Cutler of this city has also been in attendance.

The seclusion and rest at his residence here was sought by Mr. Currier on advice of his physician. Because of the pressure of business he had been under a great strain for some time.

Members of the family have been with him throughout the time he has spent here, as were both Drs. Phipps and Cutler. Mr. Currier served as a member of the Boston port authority board in 1929.

GUY W. CURRIER, LAWYER, DIES

On Public Library and Port Authority Boards

PETERBORO, N. H., June 21.—Guy W. Currier, prominent Boston attorney, died today at his summer residence.

He was a graduate of M. I. T. and of Boston University Law School and had been active in the legal and civic life of Boston. He was a Public Library trustee and a member of the Port Authority Board.

Mr. Currier was born in Lawrence Dec. 22, 1867, the son of John Merrill Currier and Sarah E. W. Currier. As trustee and in other capacities he had many other interests. Since 1922, Mr. Currier had been a trustee of the Boston Public Library. His term was not to have expired until 1933.

Mr. Currier married Miss Marie Burress, a member of the old stock company of the Boston Museum. She survives him, together with two sons and three daughters: Richard Currier and Guy Currier, Mrs. Felton Elkins (Sarah Currier) of Cannes, France; Mrs. Kenneth L. Lindsey (Anne Currier) of London, England; and Mrs. Robert S. Steiner (Lucy F. Currier).

All of the members of the family are at the home in Peterboro, with the exception of Guy Currier, who was married on June 11 in London to Miss Sheila Locke, following which they left London for a honeymoon on the continent.

THE LIBRARIAN

N EARLY seventy years ago, a fortunate little girl found in her stocking a small green book lettered in gold with the words "Alice's Adventures Under Ground." Inside was gayly illuminated the inscription "A Christmas Gift to a Dear Child in Memory of a Summer Day." The story itself was printed entirely by hand in letters so even and clear that the most avid young reader could devour chapter after chapter without weariness.

Eventually Alice Liddell's gift from her friend Charles Lutwidge Dodgson, clergyman and instructor of mathematics at Oxford, became a gift to all childhood. Successive generations knew it as "Alice in Wonderland," for this was the title the author decided on when he issued it in 1865, under the pen name of Lewis Carroll. For over fifty years the manuscript was the greatest treasure of Alice who became Mrs. Hargreaves and had children of her own. Two of her sons, by the way, lost their lives in the World War. Finally, in 1928, she permitted it to be offered at auction in London. It was purchased by an American, Dr. Rosenbach, for the record-breaking sum of $15,400. Immediately, this "greatest liv-trousers and a coat with tails and in one picture carries a money bag for the Duchess. The curious assortment of birds and animals which Alice encountered in the pool are rendered in a spirited, fantastic style. The Duck and the Eaglet and a large white owl are visible, along with several "portmanteau" creatures, with points of resemblance to several species. Alice about to drink from the little bottle has a sweet earnest expression and looks, indeed, very much like the Alice for whom the story was written.

Bill, the green lizard, may be seen soaring above the chimney (and looking very astonished) and later being revived by a crowd of animals, including a sprinkling of guinea pigs. Rabbit is hovering in the foreground with a decanter and wine glass. There are even pictures showing the Pigeon pecking at Alice's face above a neck like a tree trunk; and her hesitation outside the doorway leading into the trunk of a leafy tree.

With the Knave and King of Hearts appears the Queen, looking very dour and carrying an umbrella. (A custom which British royalty has found it difficult to rid itself of.) The famous croquet game is also shown, with cards hooped over for wickets and annoyed looking flamingoes. The King and Queen of Hearts at the trial look exactly like figures in a medieval woodcut.

When little Alice Liddell came to the end of the story which was written to third floor.

The ten drawings—any and all of which will be found engraved on my heart like "Calais" on Mary, Queen of Scots—show Alice and the animals swimming about in the pool of her tears; the Rabbit crashing through the cucumber frame; "a little Bill"—the lizard, and the Blue Caterpillar, very comfortable on his mushroom, smoking the hookah. Also, the Fish Footman delivering the Duchess' invitation to the Frog Footman; the dreamy, melting smile of the Cheshire Cat; the Hatter, reciting, plunging the poor Dormouse head first into the teapot, and finally dashing off, with a slice of hitten bread in one hand, and a bit of ten cup in the other. The tenth picture shows Alice exclaiming, "Nothing but a pack of cards." Aside from the subject matter, which is, of course, the best of its kind in the world, Tenniel's workmanship in an absolute delight. The daintiness, the precision, the rich imagination! Who can say which owes the most to the other—the inspired writer of "Alice," or his echo, the illustrator, Sir John Tenniel.

Six letters written by Mr. Dodgson to the grown-up Alice concerning a fairytale which was being made to be sold for charity. The writer refers to the "zincographer," who was to do this work and offers to have the manuscript rebound, but evidently Mrs. Hargreaves preferred it in its original state. On the envelope

Guy W. Currier, attorney, chairman of the Boston Port Authority and director in a number of railway companies, died yesterday at his summer home in Peterboro, N. H.

He had been ill for weeks with heart trouble, and was under the care of specialists, several of whom were in constant attendance.

A widow, three daughters and two sons survive him. One son, Guy, Jr., Boston banker, was recently married at London to Sheila Baines Locke, adopted daughter of the late William J. Locke, novelist.

Mr. Currier was born in Lawrence in 1867, educated in the public schools there and later enrolled at Technology. He turned to the law two years later, attending Boston University, from which he received his degree in 1894. He began the practice of law in this city shortly afterward. His office in recent years was at 152 Cambridge st.

TRUSTEE OF LIBRARY

He had many interests outside the law and was frequently consulted in business transactions involving heavy expenditures. He was a trustee of the Boston Public Library (term to expire in 1933), a director of the Chicago Junction Railways and Union Stockyards Co., director of the Cuban Railroad Co., Consolidated Railways of Cuba and Cuba Northern Railways.

In 1899 he was a member of the House of Representatives and for two years succeeding a member of the State Senate.

His clubs were the Algonquin, Eastern Yacht, Engineers and University Clubs, this city, Brookline Country Club, Technology Club and India Union of New York.

FUNERAL ON TUESDAY

In 1894 he married Miss Marie Glass Bures. There are five children: Mrs. Felton B. Elkins of Cannes, France; Mrs. Kenneth L. Lindsey of Dublin; Mrs. Robert S. Steinert of Beverly Farms, Richard, of Santa Fe, N. Mex., and Guy, Jr.

Funeral services will be held Tuesday afternoon at All Saints' Church, Peterboro. Rev. Reginald H. H. Buttel, the rector, will officiate. The musical portion of the service will be under direction of Malcolm Lang, Boston organist.

The pallbearers will be Richard Currier, Felton B. Elkins, Kenneth L. Lindsey, Samuel Ajumilodde, Herbert A. Tucker, Guy, Jr., and Guy, Jr.

He was a member of the Boston Bar Association and was elected to the office of president of the association in 1929.

He attended Massachusetts Institute of Technology in the class of 1888 and afterward prepared for the bar at Boston University school of law which he attended in 1893 and 1894 and shortly after began the practice which steadily increased in importance until he was regarded as one of the leading lawyers of Massachusetts.

SERVED IN LEGISLATURE

In 1899 he served in the Massachusetts House of Representatives and in the upper branch of the Legislature during the next two years.

On June 13, 1894, he married Miss Glass Bures, and of this union were born three daughters and two sons. Sarah, now Mrs. Felton Elkins of Cannes, France; Anne, who is Mrs.

GUY W. CURRIER, HUB ATTORNEY, IS DEAD AT 63

Chairman of the Boston Port Authority Passes on at Summer Home in Peterboro, N. H.

Guy W. Currier, attorney, chairman of the Boston Port Authority and director in a number of railway companies, died yesterday at his summer home in Peterboro, N. H.

He had been ill for weeks with heart trouble, and was under the care of specialists, several of whom were in constant attendance.

A widow, three daughters and two sons survive him. One son, Guy, Jr., Boston banker, was recently married at London to Sheila Baines Locke, adopted daughter of the late William J. Locke, novelist.

Mr. Currier was born in Lawrence in 1867, educated in the public schools there and later enrolled at Technology. He turned to the law two years later, attending Boston University, from which he received his degree in 1894. He began the practice of law in this city shortly afterward. His office in recent years was at 152 Cambridge st.

TRUSTEE OF LIBRARY

He had many interests outside the law and was frequently consulted in business transactions involving heavy expenditures. He was a trustee of the Boston Public Library (term to expire in 1933), a director of the Chicago Junction Railways and Union Stockyards Co., director of the Cuban Railroad Co., Consolidated Railways of Cuba and Cuba Northern Railways.

In 1899 he was a member of the House of Representatives and for two years succeeding a member of the State Senate.

His clubs were the Algonquin, Eastern Yacht, Engineers and University Clubs, this city, Brookline Country Club, Technology Club and India Union of New York.

FUNERAL ON TUESDAY

In 1894 he married Miss Marie Glass Bures. There are five children: Mrs. Felton B. Elkins of Cannes, France; Mrs. Kenneth L. Lindsey of Dublin; Mrs. Robert S. Steinert of Beverly Farms, Richard, of Santa Fe, N. Mex., and Guy, Jr.

Funeral services will be held Tuesday afternoon at All Saints' Church, Peterboro. Rev. Reginald H. H. Buttel, the rector, will officiate. The musical portion of the service will be under direction of Malcolm Lang, Boston organist.

The pallbearers will be Richard Currier, Felton B. Elkins, Kenneth L. Lindsey, Samuel Ajumilodde, Herbert A. Tucker, Guy, Jr., and Guy, Jr.

He was a member of the Boston Bar Association and was elected to the office of president of the association in 1929.

He attended Massachusetts Institute of Technology in the class of 1888 and afterward prepared for the bar at Boston University school of law which he attended in 1893 and 1894 and shortly after began the practice which steadily increased in importance until he was regarded as one of the leading lawyers of Massachusetts.

SERVED IN LEGISLATURE

In 1899 he served in the Massachusetts House of Representatives and in the upper branch of the Legislature during the next two years.

On June 13, 1894, he married Miss Glass Bures, and of this union were born three daughters and two sons. Sarah, now Mrs. Felton Elkins of Cannes, France; Anne, who is Mrs.

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

GUY W. CURRIER DIES SUDDENLY

Prominent Lawyer Was at Summer Home in New Hampshire

FUNERAL TUESDAY AT PETERBORO

[Special Dispatch to The Herald]

PETERBORO, N. H., June 21—Guy W. Currier, prominent Boston lawyer and for more than 30 years identified with public life in his home city and Massachusetts, died at his estate here this morning after a two weeks' illness. He will be laid to rest on a pine knoll on a bluff overlooking the placid Contoocook which he loved.

Funeral services will be Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock (daylight saving time) at All Saints' Church. The Rev. Reginald H. H. Buttel, rector of All Saints, will conduct the services and music will be by Malcolm Lang of Boston, organist.

The bearers will be lifetime associates of Mr. Currier, Richard Currier, Felton B. Elkins, Kenneth L. Lindsey, Robert S. Steinert, Robert S. Hoffman and L. Sherman Adams.

The honorary bearers will be Gordon Abbott, Frank W. Buxton, T. Handasyd Cabot, Philip Dexter, Frederick C. Dumaine, Louis E. Kirstein, John O. Loring, Joseph W. Powell, Frederick H. Prince, Horatio S. Rubens, Alexander Steinert, Col. J. M. Tarafa and Herbert A. Tucker.

Mr. Currier's death was attributed to an attack of heart disease which came on him at his office in Boston two weeks ago and he was advised to come here to his beautiful summer estate for a rest. He arrived two weeks ago today and was in an apparently slightly improved condition, but on the following day became ill. Dr. Cadis Phipps was summoned from Boston and with Dr. Charles A. Culver attended Mr. Currier until his death, which occurred while his wife and members of his family, except his son Guy, who is on tour in Europe, were at his bedside.

CIVIC ACTIVITIES

News of his death was a profound shock to his many intimate friends with whom he has been associated in civic activities for upward of 30 years. He was a member of the board of trustees of the Boston public library, on which he had served since 1929, and in whose work he was deeply interested. He was also chairman of the Boston port authority, to which post Mayor Nichols appointed him in 1929.

Among his business directorates were those of the Chicago Junction railways and Union Stock Yards Company, Consolidated Railroads of Cuba, Cuba Northern Railway Company and the Cuba Railroad Company.

He was a member of the Algonquin, Eastern Yacht, Engineers and University clubs in Boston, Brookline Country Club and the Technology Club and India House in New York.

As a leading member of the Boston bar he was widely known in legal circles and a delegation representing the Boston Bar Association will come here Tuesday to join the throng of sorrowing townsmen, business associates and friends at the church services.

Mr. Currier was born at Lawrence, Mass., Dec. 22, 1867, the son of John Merrill and Sarah E. W. (Cole) Currier.

He attended Massachusetts Institute of Technology in the class of 1888 and afterward prepared for the bar at Boston University school of law which he attended in 1893 and 1894 and shortly after began the practice which steadily increased in importance until he was regarded as one of the leading lawyers of Massachusetts.

SERVED IN LEGISLATURE

In 1899 he served in the Massachusetts House of Representatives and in the upper branch of the Legislature during the next two years.

On June 13, 1894, he married Miss Glass Bures, and of this union were born three daughters and two sons. Sarah, now Mrs. Felton Elkins of Cannes, France; Anne, who is Mrs.

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Kenneth L. Lindsey of Dublin; Lucy, who is Mrs. Robert Steinert of Beverly Farms, Mass.; Richard, of Santa Fe, N. M., and Guy, recently married and now on a honeymoon tour of Europe.

Guy Currier has been engaged in investment banking and on June 11 married, in London, Sheila Locke, adopted daughter of the late novelist, William J. Locke, one of England's leading literatures.

TRIBUTES OFFERED

Mr. Currier's death was a profound shock to his friends and associates in Boston. Some of the tributes paid his memory follow:

HERBERT PARKER:

I always found Mr. Currier an extremely well informed man in all matters of public administration. He was extraordinarily sound in his judgment of business and commonwealth affairs.

For this judgment he has been greatly trusted by many Governors of Massachusetts and his personality was such as to win the love and loyalty of his friends. He was a distinctly useful citizen and our loss in his death is great.

LOUIS E. KIRSTEIN:

Mr. Currier was a very devoted Bostonian and had the interests of the city at heart to an extraordinary extent. He was one of the most modest men I ever knew, working always for the public good with never a thought for personal glory. He was one of the most valuable trustees of the public library and had a deep interest in the education of the people. He enjoyed the confidence of workers and labor leaders for his sincere efforts to avoid labor conflicts as exemplified in his work on the port authority to avert the longshoremen's strike. His death is a tremendous loss to the city, and I am sure I am voicing the opinion of his associates on the library board and the city authorities. I do not know when I have been so shocked.

L. SHERMAN ADAMS:

Guy W. Currier's death is a most severe loss to his many friends, as well as to the Commonwealth. Few sons of Massachusetts in this generation have been so inspiring of their time as was his pleasure. For the last 30 years he was actively consulted by the Governors and members of the Legislatures.

HONORARY BEARERS WILL BE GORDON ABBOTT, FRANK W. BUXTON, T. HANDASYD CABOT, PHILIP DEXTER, FREDERICK C. DUMAINE, LOUIS E. KIRSTEIN, JOHN O. LORING, JOSEPH W. POWELL, FREDERICK H. PRINCE, HORATIO S. RUBENS, ALEXANDER STEINERT, COL. J. M. TARAFAS AND HERBERT A. TUCKER.

Ex-Mayor Malcolm E. Nichols issued a statement last night on hearing of the death of Guy W. Currier in Peterboro, N. H. He said:

"Guy Currier possessed a rare and instinctive understanding of human life. I know of no man who gave more generously of his splendid talents whether in the world of vast commercial undertakings or in the efficient conduct of public affairs. His genius made a magnificent contribution to the greatness of this city."

"I find it no easy task to estimate the loss of so remarkable a man. It was my high privilege to have known Mr. Currier as a wise and true friend whom I shall miss more than I can say."

in which so many of his recommendations later became statute. His counsel was sought by capitalists, banks and bankers, as well as organized labor. Both classes found in him their closest friend and adviser. His business interests were not confined to the state or nation, but were international in scope. Many policies of international business relations were brought to him to adjudicate. To those of us whose good fortune it was to be in close contact with him, the remembrance of his faithfulness, friendliness, judgment and ability will always be fresh.

CHARLES H. INNES:

Guy Currier was a rare and unusual man. His judgment and commonsense were almost uncanny. His knowledge of men was profound. He hated hypocrisy and sham reformers. He was always ready to take on public work unostentatiously and without seeking publicity. He possessed a real democracy that made him friends in all walks of life. He conceded the fine things he saw in most men concealed the mean ones. He was a loyal friend, a man of the highest ideals of friendship and of public service.

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

GUY W. CURRIER OF BOSTON DEAD

Succumbs in Summer Home at Peterboro, N. H.

Attorney Was Library Trustee Here and Had Other Interests

[Special Dispatch to The Globe]

PETERBORO, N. H., June 21—Guy W. Currier, prominent Boston attorney, died today at his summer home. He was a graduate of M. I. T. and of Boston University Law School, and had been active in the legal and public life of Boston. He was a Public Library trustee and a member of the Port Authority Board.

Mr. Currier was born in Lawrence Dec. 22, 1867, the son of John Merrill Currier and Sarah E. W. Currier. As trustee and in other capacities he had many other interests. Since 1922 Mr. Currier had been a trustee of the Public Library. His term was not to have expired until 1933.

He married Miss Marie Bures, a member of the old stock company of the Boston Museum. She survives him, with two sons and three daughters.

Funeral services will be Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock (daylight saving time) at All Saints' Church, Peterboro. Rev. Reginald H. H. Buttel, rector of All Saints' Church, will conduct the services. The music will be by Malcolm Lang of Boston, organist.

The bearers will be lifetime associates of Mr. Currier, Richard Currier, Felton B. Elkins, Kenneth L. Lindsey, Robert S. Steinert, Robert S. Hoffman and L. Sherman Adams.

HONORARY BEARERS WILL BE GORDON ABBOTT, FRANK W. BUXTON, T. HANDASYD CABOT, PHILIP DEXTER, FREDERICK C. DUMAINE, LOUIS E. KIRSTEIN, JOHN O. LORING, JOSEPH W. POWELL, FREDERICK H. PRINCE, HORATIO S. RUBENS, ALEXANDER STEINERT, COL. J. M. TARAFAS AND HERBERT A. TUCKER.

Ex-Mayor Malcolm E. Nichols issued a statement last night on hearing of the death of Guy W. Currier in Peterboro, N. H. He said:

"Guy Currier possessed a rare and instinctive understanding of human life. I know of no man who gave more generously of his splendid talents whether in the world of vast commercial undertakings or in the efficient conduct of public affairs. His genius made a magnificent contribution to the greatness of this city."

"I find it no easy task to estimate the loss of so remarkable a man. It was my high privilege to have known Mr. Currier as a wise and true friend whom I shall miss more than I can say."

in which so many of his recommendations later became statute. His counsel was sought by capitalists, banks and bankers, as well as organized labor. Both classes found in him their closest friend and adviser. His business interests were not confined to the state or nation, but were international in scope. Many policies of international business relations were brought to him to adjudicate. To those of us whose good fortune it was to be in close contact with him, the remembrance of his faithfulness, friendliness, judgment and ability will always be fresh.

CHARLES H. INNES:

Guy Currier was a rare and unusual man. His judgment and commonsense were almost uncanny. His knowledge of men was profound. He hated hypocrisy and sham reformers. He was always ready to take on public work unostentatiously and without seeking publicity. He possessed a real democracy that made him friends in all walks of life. He conceded the fine things he saw in most men concealed the mean ones. He was a loyal friend, a man of the highest ideals of friendship and of public service.

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

GUY W. CURRIER, NOTED LAWYER, DIES

Chairman of the Boston Port Authority Succumbs at His Summer Home.

WAS A FORMER LEGISLATOR

[Special to The New York Times]

BOSTON, June 21—Guy W. Currier, one of Boston's best known lawyers, died this morning at his summer home in Peterboro, N. H., of heart disease, with which he was stricken nearly a fortnight ago. His age was 62.

Mr. Currier was born in Lawrence, Mass., on Dec. 22, 1867, the son of John Merrill Currier and the former Sarah E. W. Cole. He graduated from Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Boston University Law School, and in 1894 was admitted to the bar.

He was a member of the lower house of the Legislature in 1899 and of the State Senate in 1900-01 and at his death was chairman of the Boston Port Authority, to which office he was appointed in 1929. He was a director of the Chicago Junction Railways and Union Stock Yards Company, the Consolidated Railroads of Cuba, Cuba Northern Railroads Company and Cuba Railroad Company.

His local clubs were the Algonquin, Eastern Yacht, Brookline Country and Engineers. He also belonged to the Technology and University Clubs and India House, all of New York.

Mr. Currier married on June 13, 1894, Miss Marie C. Bures, a former member of the old stock company of the Boston Museum. She survives him, together with two sons and three daughters: Richard Currier, Guy Currier, Mrs. Felton Elkins (Sarah Currier) of Cannes, France; Mrs. Kenneth L. Lindsey (Anne Currier) of London and Mrs. Robert S. Steinert (Lucy P. Currier).

All of the members of the family are at the home in Peterboro except Guy Currier, who married on June 11 in London Miss Sheila Locke, adopted daughter of the English novelist, the late William J. Locke. Guy, who is an investment banker, was educated at Yale and Oxford. He and his bride are now on the Continent.

Mr. Currier's daughter Lucy abandoned society life several years ago to go on the stage. She took part in "They Knew What They Wanted," one of the successful plays of the 1924-25 season. She also played with the Copley Players.

In Boston the Currier family lived at 8 Commonwealth Avenue.

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

Continued from First Page

THE LIBRARIAN

Nearly seventy years ago, a fortunate little girl found in her stocking a small green book lettered in gold with the words "Alice's Adventures Under Ground." Inside was a gift to all childhood. "A Christmas Gift to a Dear Child in Memory of a Summer Day." The story itself was printed entirely by hand in letters so even and clear that the most avid young reader could devour chapter after chapter without weariness.

Eventually Alice Liddell's gift from her friend Charles Lutwidge Dodgson, clergyman and instructor of mathematics at Oxford, became a gift to all childhood. Succeeding generations knew it as "Alice in Wonderland," for this was the title the author decided on when he issued it in 1865, under the pen name of Lewis Carroll. For over fifty years the manuscript was the greatest treasure of Alice who became Mrs. Hargreaves and had children of her own. Two of her sons, by the way, lost their lives in the World War. Finally, in 1928, she permitted it to be offered at auction in London. It was purchased by an American, Dr. Rosenbach, for the record-breaking sum of $15,400. Immediately, this "greatest liv-trousers and a coat with tails and in one picture carries a nosegay for the Duchess. The curious assortment of birds and animals which Alice encountered in the pool are rendered in a spirited, fantastic style. The Duck and the Eaglet and a large white owl are visible, along with several "portmanteau" creatures, with points of resemblance to several species. Alice about to drink from the little bottle has a sweet earnest expression and looks, indeed, very much like the Alice for whom the story was written.

Bill, the green lizard, may be seen soaring above the chimney (and looking very astonished) and later being revived by a crowd of animals, including a sparkling of guinea pigs. Rabbit is hovering in the foreground with a decanter and wine glass. There are even pictures showing the Pigeon pecking at Alice's face above a neck like a tree trunk; and her hesitation outside the doorway leading into the trunk of a leafy tree.

With the Knave and King of Hearts appears the Queen, looking very dour and carrying an umbrella. (A custom which British royalty has found it difficult to rid itself of.) The famous croquet game is also shown, with cards hooped over for wickets and annoyed looking flamingo-mallets. The King and Queen of Hearts at the trial look exactly like figures in a medieval woodcut.

When little Alice Liddell came to the end of the story which was written to

third floor.

The ten drawings—any and all of which will be found engraved on my heart like "Calais" on Mary, Queen of Scots—show Alice and the animals swimming about in the pool of her tears; the Rabbit crashing through the cucumber frame; "a little Bill"—the lizard, and the Blue Caterpillar, very comfortable on his mushroom, smoking the hookah. Also, the Fish Footman delivering the Duchess invitation to the Frog Footman; the dreamy, melting smile of the Cheshire Cat; the Hatter, reclining, plunging the poor Dormouse head first into the teapot, and finally dashing off, with a slice of bitten bread in one hand, and a bitten cup in the other. The tenth picture shows Alice exclaiming, "Nothing but a pack of cards!" Aside from the subject matter, which is, of course, the best of its kind in the world, Tenniel's workmanship is an absolute delight. The daintiness, the precision, the rich imagination! Who can say which owes the most to the other—the inspired writer of "Alice," or his echo, the illustrator, Sir John Tenniel.

Six letters written by Mr. Dodgson to the grown-up Alice concerning a facsimile which was being made to be sold for charity. The writer refers to the "zincographer," who was to do this work and offers to have the manuscript rebound in its original state. On the envelope

Guy W. Currier, attorney, chairman of the Boston Port Authority and director in a number of railway companies, died yesterday at his summer home in Peterboro, N. H.

BOSTON ADVERTISER
JUNE 22, 1930GUY W. CURRIER,
HUB ATTORNEY,
IS DEAD AT 63

Chairman of the Boston Port Authority Passes on at Summer Home in Peterboro, N. H.

Guy W. Currier, attorney, chairman of the Boston Port Authority and director in a number of railway companies, died yesterday at his summer home in Peterboro, N. H.

He had been ill for weeks with heart trouble, and was under the care of specialists, several of whom were in constant attendance.

A widow, three daughters and two sons survive him. One son, Guy, Jr., Boston banker, was recently married at London to Sheila Baines Locke, adopted daughter of the late William J. Locke, novelist.

Mr. Currier was born in Lawrence in 1867, educated in the public schools there and later enrolled at Technology. He turned to the law two years later, attending Boston University, from which he received his degree in 1894. He began the practice of law in this city shortly afterward. His office in recent years was at 152 Cambridge st.

TRUSTEE OF LIBRARY
He had many interests outside the law and was frequently consulted in business transactions involving heavy expenditures.

He was a trustee of the Boston Public Library (term to expire in 1933), a director of the Chicago Junction Railways and Union Stockyards Co., director of the Cuban Railroad Co., Consolidated Railways of Cuba and Cuba Northern Railways.

In 1899 he was a member of the House of Representatives and for two years succeeding a member of the State Senate.

His clubs were the Algonquin, Eastern Yacht, Engineers and Country Club, Technology Club and India Union of New York.

FUNERAL ON TUESDAY
In 1894 he married Miss Marie Glass Bures. There are five children: Mrs. Felton B. Elkins, of Cannes, France; Mrs. Kenneth L. Lindsey, of Dublin; Mrs. Robert S. Steinert, of Beverly; Mrs. Richard, of Santa Fe, N. Mex.; and Guy, Jr.

Funeral services will be held Tuesday afternoon at All Saints' Church, Peterboro, N. H., at 3 o'clock. The Rev. Reginald H. H. Bulter, the rector, will officiate. The musical portion of the service will be under direction of Malcolm Lang, Boston organist. The pallbearers will be Richard Currier, Felton B. Elkins, Kenneth L. Lindsey, Robert S. Steinert, Robert S. Hoffman and L. Sherman Adams.

Honorary bearers will be Gordon Abbott, Frank W. Buxton, T. Handasyd Cabot, Philip Dexter, Frederic C. Dumaine, Louis E. Kirstein, John O. Loring, Joseph W. Powell, Frederick H. Prince, Horatio S. Rubens, Alexander Steinert, Col. J. N. Tarafa and Herbert A. Tucker.

A delegation of the Boston Bar Association will attend the services.

Burial will be on a pine knoll on a bluff overlooking his estate. His estate at Peterboro, N. H., known as Marlard, comprising 500 acres, is one of its show places. It has a golf course of 18 holes, a theater where society folk appear and other features. The theater project, started in 1921, was the dream of Mrs. Currier, who is prominent in society and professional circles, and is now an institution.

The Boston residence of the Curriers is at 8 Commonwealth ave.

Guy W. Currier

THE BOSTON HERALD

SUNDAY, JUNE 22, 1930

GUY W. CURRIER
DIES SUDDENLY

Prominent Lawyer Was at Summer Home in New Hampshire

FUNERAL TUESDAY
AT PETERBORO

[Special Dispatch to The Herald]

PETERBORO, N. H., June 21.—Guy W. Currier, prominent Boston lawyer and for more than 30 years identified with public life in his home city and Massachusetts, died at his estate here this morning after a two weeks' illness.

He will be laid to rest on a pine knoll on a bluff overlooking the placid Contoocook which he loved.

Funeral services will be Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock (daylight saving time) at All Saints' Church. The Rev. Reginald H. H. Bulter, rector of All Saints, will conduct the services and music will be by Malcolm Lang of Boston, organist.

The bearers will be lifetime associates of Mr. Currier, Richard Currier, Felton B. Elkins, Kenneth L. Lindsey, Robert S. Steinert, Robert S. Hoffman and L. Sherman Adams.

The honorary bearers will be Gordon Abbott, Frank W. Buxton, T. Handasyd Cabot, Philip Dexter, Frederic C. Dumaine, Louis E. Kirstein, John O. Loring, Joseph W. Powell, Frederick H. Prince, Horatio S. Rubens, Alexander Steinert, Col. J. M. Tarafa and Herbert A. Tucker.

Mr. Currier's death was attributed to an attack of heart disease which came on him at his office in Boston two weeks ago and he was advised to come here to his beautiful summer estate for a rest. He arrived two weeks ago today and was in an apparently slightly improved condition, but on the following day became ill. Dr. Cadis Phillips was summoned from Boston and with Dr. Charles A. Cutler attended Mr. Currier until his death, which occurred while his wife and members of his family, except his son Guy, who is on tour in Europe, were at his bedside.

CIVIC ACTIVITIES

News of his death was a profound shock to his many intimate friends with whom he has been associated in civic activities for upward of 30 years. He was a member of the board of trustees of the Boston public library, on which he had served since 1922, and in whose work he was deeply interested. He was also chairman of the Boston port authority, to which post Mayor Nichols appointed him in 1929.

Among his business directorates were those of the Chicago Junction railways and Union Stock Yards Company, Consolidated Railroads of Cuba, Cuba Northern Railway Company and the Cuba Railroad Company.

He was a member of the Algonquin, Eastern Yacht, Engineers and University clubs in Boston, Brookline Country Club and the Technology Club and India House in New York.

As a leading member of the Boston bar he was widely known in legal circles and a delegation representing the Boston Bar Association will come here Tuesday to join the throng of sorrowing townsmen, business associates and friends at the church services.

Mr. Currier was born at Lawrence, Mass., Dec. 22, 1867, the son of John Merrill and Sarah E. W. (Cole) Currier.

He attended Massachusetts Institute of Technology in the class of 1894 and afterward prepared for the bar at Boston University school of law which he attended in 1893 and 1894 and shortly after began the practice which steadily increased in importance until he was regarded as one of the leading lawyers of Massachusetts.

SERVED IN LEGISLATURE

In 1899 he served in the Massachusetts House of Representatives and in the upper branch of the Legislature during the next two years.

On June 13, 1894, he married Marie Glass Bures, and of this union were born three daughters and two sons: Sarah, now Mrs. Felton Elkins of Cannes, France; Anne, who is Mrs.

Kenneth L. Lindsey of Dublin, Lucy, who is Mrs. Robert Steinert of Beverly, Mass.; Richard, of Santa Fe, N. M.; and Guy, recently married and now on a honeymoon tour of Europe.

Guy Currier has been engaged in investment banking and on June 11 married, in London, Sheila Locke, adopted daughter of the late novelist, William J. Locke, one of England's leading litterateurs.

TRIBUTES OFFERED
Mr. Currier's death was a profound shock to his friends and associates in Boston. Some of the tributes paid his memory follow:

HERBERT PARKER:
I always found Mr. Currier an extremely well informed man in all matters of public administration. He was extraordinarily sound in his judgment of business and commonwealth affairs. For this judgment he has been greatly trusted by many Governors of Massachusetts, and his personality was such as to win the love and loyalty of his friends. He was a distinctly useful citizen and our loss in his death is great.

LOUIS E. KIRSTEIN:
Mr. Currier was a very devoted Bostonian and had the interests of the city at heart to an extraordinary extent. He was one of the most modest men I ever knew, working always for the public good with never a thought for personal glory. He was one of the most valuable trustees of the public library and had a deep interest in the education of the people. He enjoyed the confidence of workers and labor leaders for his sincere efforts to avoid labor conflicts as exemplified in his work on the port authority to avert the longshoremen's strike. His death is a tremendous loss to the city, and I am sure I am voicing the opinion of his associates on the library board and the port authority. I do not know when I have been so shocked.

L. SHERMAN ADAMS:
Guy W. Currier's death is a most severe loss to his many friends, as well as to the commonwealth. Few sons of Massachusetts in this generation have been so unparagoning of their time as his pleasure. For the last 30 years he was actively consulted by the Governors and members of the Legislatures.

Ex-Mayor Malcolm E. Nichols issued a statement last night on hearing of the death of Guy W. Currier in Peterboro, N. H. He said:

"Guy Currier possessed a rare and instinctive understanding of human life. I know of no man who gave more generously of his splendid talents whether in the world of vast commercial undertakings or in the efficient conduct of public affairs. His genius made a magnificent contribution to the greatness of this city."

"I find it no easy task to estimate the loss of so remarkable a man. It was my high privilege to have known Mr. Currier as a wise and true friend whom I shall miss more than I can say."

in which so many of his recommendations later became statute. His counsel was sought by capitalists, banks and bankers, as well as organized labor. Both classes considered him their closest friend and adviser. His business interests were not confined to the state or nation, but were international in scope. Many policies of international business relations were brought to him to adjudicate. To those of us whose good fortune it was to be in close contact with him, the remembrance of his faithfulness, friendliness, judgment and ability will always be fresh.

CHARLES H. INNES:
Guy Currier was a rare and unusual man. His judgment and commonsense were almost uncanny. His knowledge of men was profound. He hated hypocrisy and sham reformers. He was always ready to take on public work unostentatiously and without seeking publicity. He possessed a real democracy that made him friends in all walks of life. He concealed the fine things he did as most men conceal the mean ones. He was a loyal friend, a man of the highest ideals of friendship and of public service.

GUY W. CURRIER

GUY W. CURRIER

GUY W. CURRIER

GUY W. CURRIER

GUY W. CURRIER

GUY W. CURRIER

GUY W. CURRIER

GUY W. CURRIER

GUY W. CURRIER

GUY W. CURRIER

GUY W. CURRIER

GUY W. CURRIER

GUY W. CURRIER

THE NEW YORK TIMES
SUNDAY, JUNE 22, 1930BOSTON GLOBE
JUNE 22, 1930GUY W. CURRIER
OF BOSTON DEAD

Succumbs in Summer Home at Peterboro, N. H.

Attorney Was Library Trustee Here and Had Other Interests

Special Dispatch to the Globe

PETERBORO, N. H., June 21.—Guy W. Currier, prominent Boston attorney, died today at his summer home.

He was a graduate of M. I. T. and of Boston University Law School, and had been active in the legal and public life of Boston. He was a Public Library trustee and a member of the Port Authority Board.

Mr. Currier was born in Lawrence Dec. 22, 1867, the son of John Merrill Currier and Sarah E. W. Currier. As trustee and in other capacities he had many other interests. Since 1922 Mr. Currier had been a trustee of the Boston Museum. His term was not to have expired until 1933.

He married Miss Marie Bures, a member of the old stock company of the Boston Museum. She survives him, with two sons and three daughters.

Funeral services will be Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock (daylight saving time) at All Saints' Church, Peterboro. Rev. Reginald H. H. Bulter, rector of All Saints' Church, will conduct the services. The music will be by Malcolm Lang of Boston, organist.

The bearers will be lifetime associates of Mr. Currier, Richard Currier, Felton B. Elkins, Kenneth L. Lindsey, Robert S. Steinert, Robert S. Hoffman and L. Sherman Adams.

Honorary bearers will be Gordon Abbott, Frank W. Buxton, T. Handasyd Cabot, Philip Dexter, Frederic C. Dumaine, Louis E. Kirstein, John O. Loring, Joseph W. Powell, Frederick H. Prince, Horatio S. Rubens, Alexander Steinert, Col. J. M. Tarafa and Herbert A. Tucker.

Mr. Currier's death was attributed to an attack of heart disease which came on him at his office in Boston two weeks ago and he was advised to come here to his beautiful summer estate for a rest. He arrived two weeks ago today and was in an apparently slightly improved condition, but on the following day became ill. Dr. Cadis Phillips was summoned from Boston and with Dr. Charles A. Cutler attended Mr. Currier until his death, which occurred while his wife and members of his family, except his son Guy, who is on tour in Europe, were at his bedside.

CIVIC ACTIVITIES
News of his death was a profound shock to his many intimate friends with whom he has been associated in civic activities for upward of 30 years. He was a member of the board of trustees of the Boston public library, on which he had served since 1922, and in whose work he was deeply interested. He was also chairman of the Boston port authority, to which post Mayor Nichols appointed him in 1929.

Among his business directorates were those of the Chicago Junction railways and Union Stock Yards Company, Consolidated Railroads of Cuba, Cuba Northern Railway Company and the Cuba Railroad Company.

He was a member of the Algonquin, Eastern Yacht, Engineers and University clubs in Boston, Brookline Country Club and the Technology Club and India House in New York.

As a leading member of the Boston bar he was widely known in legal circles and a delegation representing the Boston Bar Association will come here Tuesday to join the throng of sorrowing townsmen, business associates and friends at the church services.

Mr. Currier was born at Lawrence, Mass., Dec. 22, 1867, the son of John Merrill and Sarah E. W. (Cole) Currier.

He attended Massachusetts Institute of Technology in the class of 1894 and afterward prepared for the bar at Boston University school of law which he attended in 1893 and 1894 and shortly after began the practice which steadily increased in importance until he was regarded as one of the leading lawyers of Massachusetts.

SERVED IN LEGISLATURE
In 1899 he served in the Massachusetts House of Representatives and in the upper branch of the Legislature during the next two years.

On June 13, 1894, he married Marie Glass Bures, and of this union were born three daughters and two sons: Sarah, now Mrs. Felton Elkins of Cannes, France; Anne, who is Mrs.

Kenneth L. Lindsey of Dublin, Lucy, who is Mrs. Robert Steinert of Beverly, Mass.; Richard, of Santa Fe, N. M.; and Guy, recently married and now on a honeymoon tour of Europe.

Guy Currier has been engaged in investment banking and on June 11 married, in London, Sheila Locke, adopted daughter of the late novelist, William J. Locke, one of England's leading litterateurs.

TRIBUTES OFFERED
Mr. Currier's death was a profound shock to his friends and associates in Boston. Some of the tributes paid his memory follow:

HERBERT PARKER:
I always found Mr. Currier an extremely well informed man in all matters of public administration. He was extraordinarily sound in his judgment of business and commonwealth affairs. For this judgment he has been greatly trusted by many Governors of Massachusetts, and his personality was such as to win the love and loyalty of his friends. He was a distinctly useful citizen and our loss in his death is great.

LOUIS E. KIRSTEIN:
Mr. Currier was a very devoted Bostonian and had the interests of the city at heart to an extraordinary extent. He was one of the most modest men I ever knew, working always for the public good with never a thought for personal glory. He was one of the most valuable trustees of the public library and had a deep interest in the education of the people. He enjoyed the confidence of workers and labor leaders for his sincere efforts to avoid labor conflicts as exemplified in his work on the port authority to avert the longshoremen's strike. His death is a tremendous loss to the city, and I am sure I am voicing the opinion of his associates on the library board and the port authority. I do not know when I have been so shocked.

L. SHERMAN ADAMS:
Guy W. Currier's death is a most severe loss to his many friends, as well as to the commonwealth. Few sons of Massachusetts in this generation have been so unparagoning of their time as his pleasure. For the last 30 years he was actively consulted by the Governors and members of the Legislatures.

GUY W. CURRIER,
NOTED LAWYER, DIES

Chairman of the Boston Port Authority Succumbs at His Summer Home.

WAS A FORMER LEGISLATOR

Special to The New York Times

BOSTON, June 21.—Guy W. Currier, one of Boston's best known lawyers, died this morning at his summer home in Peterboro, N. H., of heart disease, with which he was stricken nearly a fortnight ago. His age was 62.

Mr. Currier was born in Lawrence, Mass., on Dec. 22, 1867, the son of John Merrill Currier and the former Sarah E. W. Cole. He graduated from Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Boston University Law School, and in 1894 was admitted to the bar.

He was a member of the lower house of the Legislature in 1899 and of the State Senate in 1900-01 and at his death was chairman of the Boston Port Authority, to which office he was appointed in 1929. He was a director of the Chicago Junction Railways and Union Stock Yards Company, the Consolidated Railroads of Cuba, Cuba Northern Railroads Company and Cuba Railroad Company.

His local clubs were the Algonquin, Eastern Yacht, Brookline Country and Engineers. He also belonged to the Technology and University Clubs and India House, all of New York.

Mr. Currier married on June 13, 1894, Miss Marie G. Bures, a former member of the old stock company of the Boston Museum. She survives him, together with two sons and three daughters: Richard Currier, Guy Currier, Mrs. Felton Elkins (Sarah Currier) of Cannes, France; Mrs. Kenneth L. Lindsey (Anne Currier) of London and Mrs. Robert S. Steinert (Lucy P. Currier).

All of the members of the family are at the home in Peterboro except Guy Currier, who married on June 11 in London Miss Sheila Locke, adopted daughter of the English novelist, the late William J. Locke. Guy, who is an investment banker, was educated at Yale and Oxford. He and his bride are now on the Continent.

Mr. Currier's daughter, Lucy, abandoned society life several years ago to go on the stage. She took part in "They Knew What They Wanted," one of the successful plays of the 1924-25 season. She also played with the Copley Players.

In Boston the Currier family lived at 8 Commonwealth Avenue.

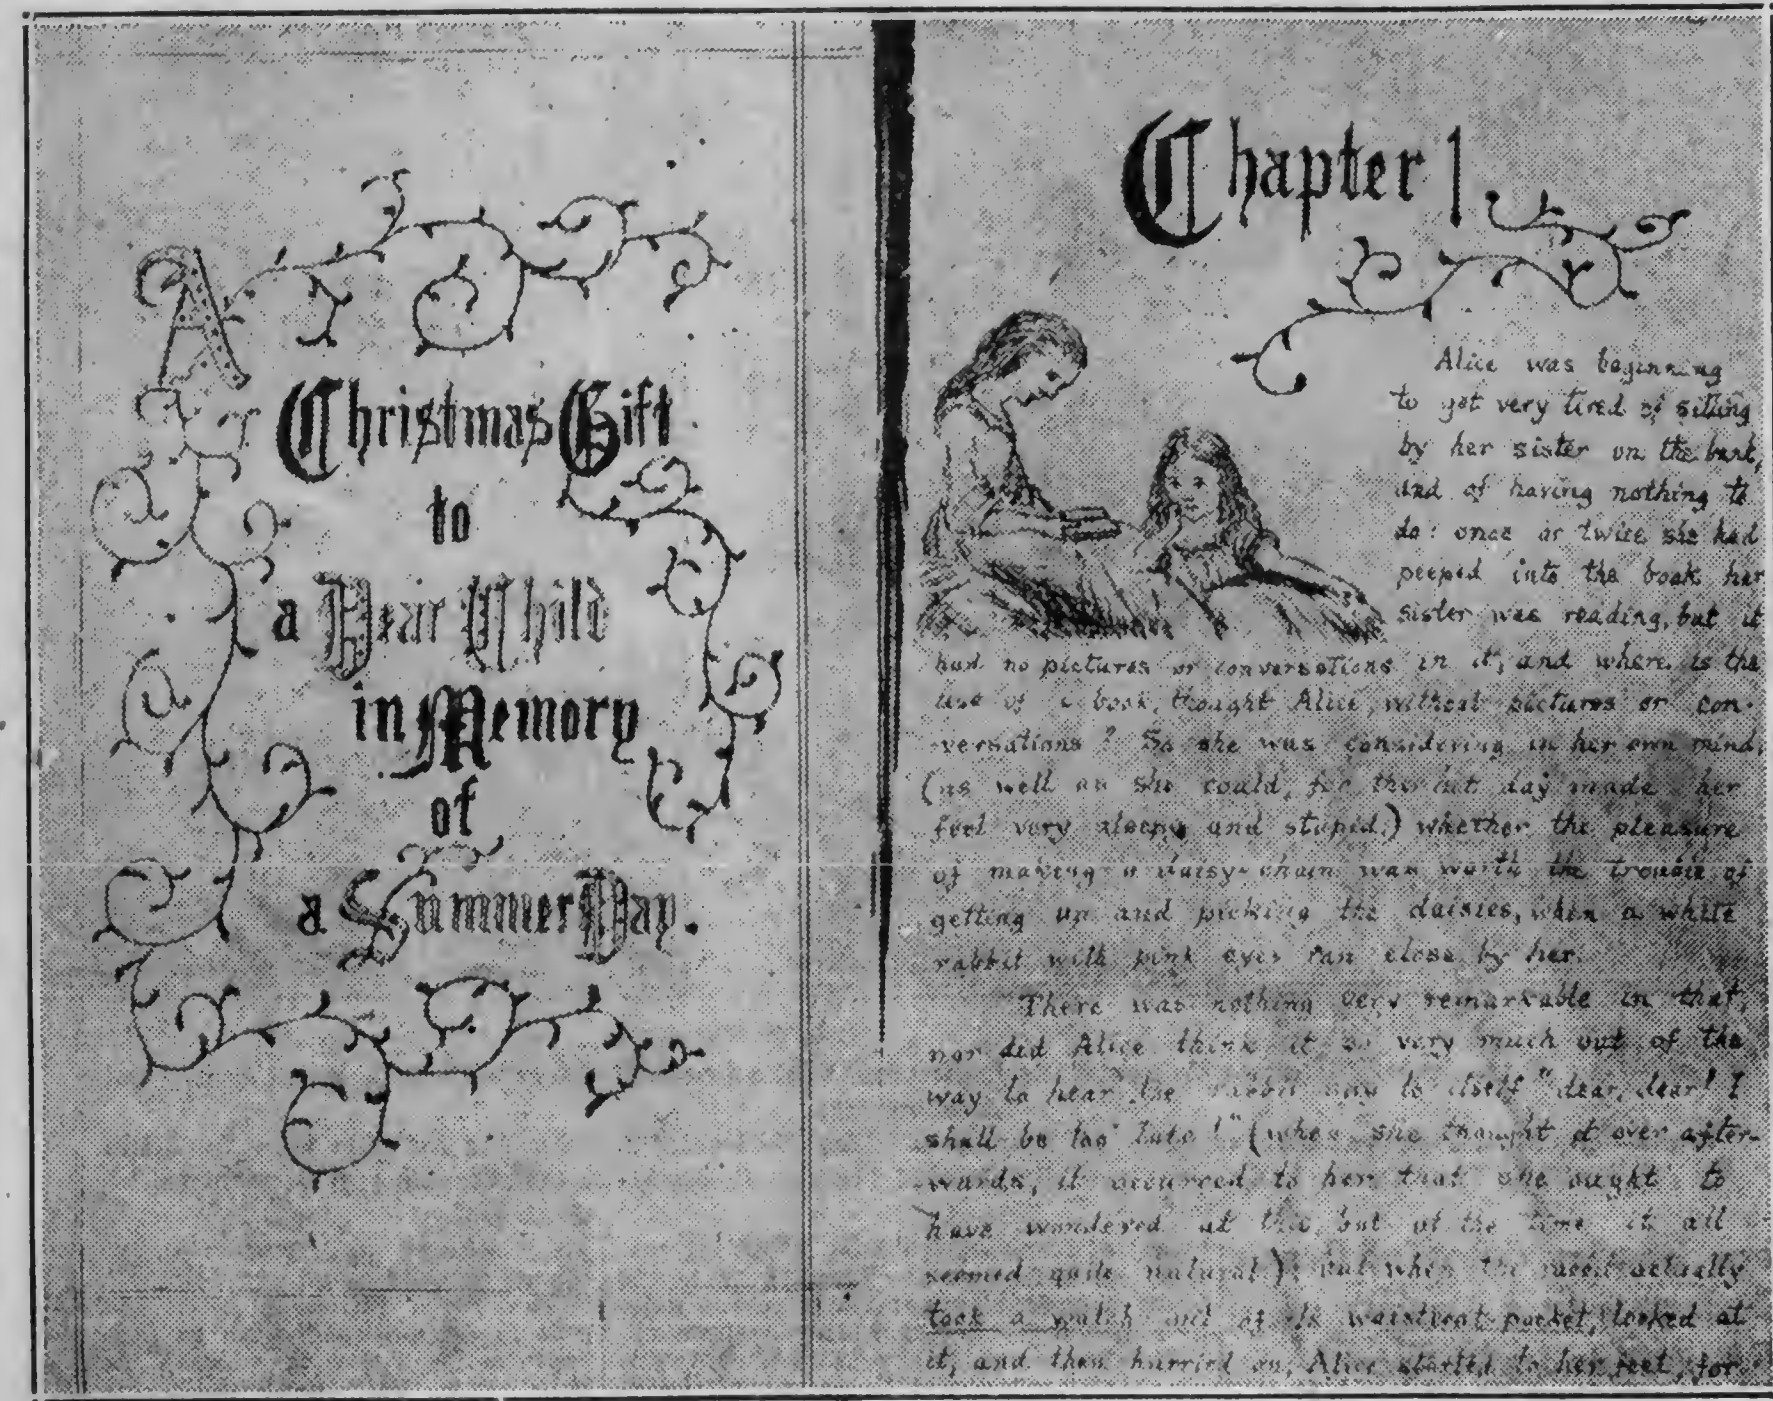

BOSTON HERALD.
JUNE 23, 1930

BAY STATE LAWYERS TO ATTEND CURRIER RITES

[Special Dispatch to The Herald]

PETERBORO, N. H., June 22.—Many Massachusetts lawyers, together with a delegation of the Boston Bar Association of which he was a member for many years, will attend the funeral services for Guy W. Currier at All Saints' Church here Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock, and escort the body to its last resting place at a spot overlooking the Contoocook river.

It is expected that the greater number will come by automobile and it has been suggested that the route through Groton, Winchendon and Jaffrey will be more convenient because of road construction at Temple Mountain.

A Lewis Carroll Manuscript

ing raider of Britain's literary treasures," as the doctor has been called, offered to sell it to the nation for exactly what he had paid for it. As no British philanthropist came forward with this sum, he finally disposed of it to a fellow-countryman, Mr. Eldridge R. Johnson, Moorestown, New Jersey. What Mr. Johnson paid has not been disclosed.

Before adding "Alice" to his remarkable library, Mr. Johnson graciously offered it to the Boston Public Library to display the manuscript for the summer months. Mr. Charles F. D. Belden, director of the library, made a special trip to Philadelphia to receive from Dr. Rosenbach the precious manuscript and the valuable inscribed first edition of the story, as well as letters from the author which will also be exhibited. Bostonians and Tercentenary visitors will find these most delightful of literary relics in the glass cases of the Treasure Room, on the third floor of the library.

It was the great privilege of your correspondent to examine the manuscript of "Alice" a short time before it was placed on exhibition. Not only is the printing clear and easily read, but the story is lavishly illustrated by the author. It is most amusing to compare these pictures with the familiar ones by Tenniel. The original Rabbit wasn't at all the elegantly dressed animal we have become accustomed to. He wears long amuse her, she had a delicious, extra surprise. The final words are written on a separate slip of paper which slides down and discloses a picture of her sweet child's face, with the clear, unclouded brow, the straightforward gaze, and "the wandering hair that would always get into her eyes."

Of course you remember how former President Coolidge was startled out of his habitual silence when he heard that Dr. Rosenbach had acquired, at the same sale, a copy of the rare suppressed first edition of "Alice in Wonderland." "I didn't know that book had ever been suppressed," he is said to have exclaimed. As a matter of fact, it was—but not in the Boston sense. Also in a glass case of the Treasure Room may be seen Dr. Rosenbach's suppressed copy, which is further embellished by an inscription presenting it to Dinah Mulock Crank, author of that touching child's classic, "The Little Lane Prince."

While British bibliophiles tore their hair, that high-hearted literary buccaner from Philadelphia likewise piled up his gold until he was able to get from them Lewis Carroll's own copy of his fantasy—uncut, and with ten of the original drawings made for the volume by Sir John Tenniel. This, too, is set forth in the Boston Public Library for the delectation of all who seek out the enclosing one of these letters dated Sept. 23, 1885, one may see domestic notes in a feminine hand: "To show Miller abt. the wood basket—Gruyere—Parmesan." Thus does reality intrude on fantasy and catch at the human heart.

Since, through the courtesy of Mr. Johnson and Dr. Rosenbach, as well as Mr. Belden, "Alice" is to be our guest for the summer months we should make every effort to see her and to permit her contemporaries of this generation to meet her as well. For once, it appears, Boston is to have jam every single day instead of yesterday and tomorrow, as the fatalistic Red Queen put it.

While British bibliophiles tore their hair, that high-hearted literary buccaner from Philadelphia likewise piled up his gold until he was able to get from them Lewis Carroll's own copy of his fantasy—uncut, and with ten of the original drawings made for the volume by Sir John Tenniel. This, too, is set forth in the Boston Public Library for the delectation of all who seek out the

THE BOSTON HERALD

MONDAY, JUNE 23, 1930

GUY W. CURRIER

Guy W. Currier, who died at Peterboro, N. H., on Saturday, may be remembered among the men whose qualities assure them success in about anything which they undertake. He was an excellent lawyer, a highly successful financier, a great factor in labor circles, an able economist, a thorough student of the drama, something of an expert on antiques and art objects, a skillful writer, and even a versifier of good parts. When he was in the Legislature about a generation ago, he exercised a great influence, although he was a Democrat. Gov. Crane was particularly attracted to him and Mr. Currier used to tell with amusement about a remark of the Governor that he wished it were possible for Guy Currier to be the voice of the administration in the Senate.

Like Senator Crane, Mr. Coolidge also admired Mr. Currier. Their relations indicate, among other things, the keenness and the certainty of Mr. Currier's judgment. At a time when "Calvin Coolidge" meant little outside of Northampton, his extraordinary ability as an organizer and administrator had become apparent to one man. This man made Mr. Coolidge an offer of a vice-presidency of a large company at a salary of $25,000. Mr. Coolidge, who then had probably never earned more than $7500 a year, thanked the gentleman for his confidence and faith in him, commented that he did not think that anybody would be offered so large a salary, and then declined the proposal, saying that he thought his career was in politics. Mr. Currier was the gentleman who made the offer.

It was only by chance that the episode of the oil lamp and the swearing in of Mr. Coolidge as President by his father did not take place at the Peterboro estate where Mr. Currier died. Mr. Currier and Mr. Coolidge had not allowed their friendship to lapse, and Mr. and Mrs. Coolidge were to be the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Currier at the Peterboro house on August 3, 1923. President Harding, however, died on August 2, and John Coolidge gave the presidential oath to his son at 2:47 the next morning in the little white farmhouse at Plymouth, under circumstances which thrilled the world. President Coolidge went to Washington instead of Peterboro. Mr. Currier used to chuckle when he told of his narrow escape from obtaining fame as the proprietor of a private estate where a President of the United States was sworn in.

He had an extraordinarily keen sense of politics and of industry and finance. Long after he ceased to hold public office he was a great power in Massachusetts affairs. Indeed he was often referred to as the most astute forecaster in New England of Massachusetts and national politics, and strangely enough, few newspaper men knew him at all well. He did not figure very often on the front page. The reporters saw his influence at various times, but were seldom able to explain it. He was unknown personally to most of the present generation of political writers, but his political judgment was a tradition in newspaper circles.

Like the late Clarence W. Barron, who refers to him in the memorandums which are now being published in the Saturday Evening Post, Mr. Currier had an amazingly wide acquaintance among the leading political, financial and industrial leaders of the era. They valued his judgment. President Taft, for example, had great confidence in him and discussed in detail with him on one occasion a momentous matter which was pending in the supreme court.

One of the ideals nearest to his heart was the establishment of better relations between capital and labor. He believed that a lack of complete understanding was working to the disadvantage of both. He had done important work among the working people of the moving picture industry. An intimate of the leaders of that and other industries, and of union labor, he had the confidence of both. At the time of his death he had sketched out a program for a series of studies which he believed would do a great deal to cement closer relations between employers and employees. It is, perhaps, not overstating it to say that in this matter he was a hard-headed idealist.

The port of Boston was one of his hobbies. Although he spent as much time away from Boston as in his home and office here, he was closely attached to the city, considering it the best of all places to live in. When he was asked to serve on the port authority, he accepted on condition that his intimate friend, Louis E. Kirstein, should also serve. Fully acquainted with railroading and maritime transportation, he thought that perhaps his knowledge might be of value to the city. He devoted a great deal of time to the study of the situation, and finally decided that somehow more cargo must be found and port conditions improved. With the assistance of Mayor Nichols and Gov. Allen he was able to prevent a walkout and strike here which would have had disastrous effects. The compromise which he effected is working out well at the present time. More recently he was in conflict with the civil service in relation to exemption of port authority employees, and Gov. Allen magnanimously made it possible for him to have what he desired.

His work as trustee of the Boston Public Library is well known. There he found a great deal of pleasure. He carried on the affairs of the department with his usual efficiency when he was president, and afterward gave much time and thought to library problems. He did a great deal of reading; Edgar Wallace's mystery stories and Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes's essays were among his favorites. The Peterboro Community Theatre was also dear to him and he often discussed the ambitious plans for the coming season. That town and Florence, Italy, where he had a villa, were in his mind constantly.

To those whom he trusted, he was extremely genial and astonishingly frank. He had seen, heard and done so much that he was at ease in the discussion of any subject. He chatted about Franciscan literature as easily as about Wallace and Van Dine. Senator Crane was something of a hero to him. He admired Calvin Coolidge most of all, characterizing him as perhaps the soundest and perhaps the best all-around administrator whom he had ever known. And like some other men of a high order of ability, he found more and more satisfaction in serving the public without any other reward than the realization that he was unselfishly doing the best that was in him.

The New York Times

MONDAY, JUNE 23, 1930.

From Late Editions of Yesterday's Times.
GUY W. CURRIER,
NOTED LAWYER, DIES

Chairman of the Boston Port Authority Succumbs at His Summer Home.

Special to The New York Times.
BOSTON, June 21.—Guy W. Currier, one of Boston's best known lawyers, died this morning at his summer home in Peterboro, N. H., of heart disease, with which he was stricken nearly a fortnight ago. His age was 62.

Mr. Currier was born in Lawrence, Mass., on Dec. 22, 1867, the son of John Morrill Currier and the former Sarah E. W. Cole. He graduated from Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Boston University Law School, and in 1894 was admitted to the bar.

He was a member of the lower house of the Legislature in 1899 and of the State Senate in 1900-01 and at his death was chairman of the Boston Port Authority, to which office he was appointed in 1929. He was a director of the Chicago Junction Railways and Union Stock Yards Company, the Consolidated Railroads of Cuba, Cuba Northern Railroads Company and Cuba Railroad Company.

His local clubs were the Algonquin, Eastern Yacht, Brookline Country and Engineers. He also belonged to the Technology and University Clubs and India House, all of New York. Mr. Currier married on June 13, 1894, Miss Marie G. Burress, a former member of the old stock company of the Boston Museum. She survives him, together with two sons and three daughters: Richard Currier, Guy Currier, Mrs. Felton Elkins (Sarah Currier) of Cannes, France; Mrs. Kenneth L. Lindsey (Anne Currier) of London and Mrs. Robert S. Steinert (Lucy P. Currier).

All of the members of the family are at the home in Peterboro except Guy Currier, who married on June 11 in London Miss Sheila Locke, adopted daughter of the English novelist, the late William J. Locke. Guy, who is an investment banker, was educated at Yale and Oxford. He and his bride are now on the Continent.

Mr. Currier's daughter Lucy abandoned society life several years ago to go on the stage. She took part in "They Knew What They Wanted," one of the successful plays of the 1924-25 season. She also played with the Copley Players.

In Boston the Currier family lived at 8 Commonwealth Avenue.

THE BOSTON HERALD

WEDNESDAY, JULY 2, 1930

ELLERY SEDGWICK LIBRARY TRUSTEE

Atlantic Monthly Editor Fills Currier Vacancy

Ellery Sedgwick, editor of the Atlantic Monthly, was yesterday named a trustee of the Public Library. His home is at 14 Walnut street and he will fill the vacancy due to the death of Guy W. Currier.

Sedgwick was born in New York Feb. 27, 1872, received the degree of A. B. from Harvard in 1894, Litt. D. from Tufts in 1920 and from Dartmouth in 1921.

He was a teacher at Groton school in 1895 and 1896, assistant editor of the Youth's Companion until 1900, editor of Leslie's monthly magazine until 1905, spent the next year as editor of the American magazine and for two years was associated with McClure's magazine. He has been with the Atlantic Monthly since 1903. He is a member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, American Institute of Arts and Letters and the Massachusetts Historical Society Home.

Tribute by Nichols

Former Mayor Malcolm E. Nichols last night paid the following tribute to Mr. Currier:
"Guy Currier possessed a rare and instinctive understanding of human life. I know of no man who gave more generously of his splendid talents whether in the world of vast commercial undertakings or in the efficient conduct of public affairs. His genius made a magnificent contribution to the greatness of this city.
I find it no easy task to estimate the loss of so remarkable a man. It was my high privilege to know Mr. Currier as a wise and true friend whom I shall miss more than I can say."

FUNERAL TUESDAY

He will be buried Tuesday on his estate there, at a spot he had selected long ago as his final resting place.

He will be interred in a mound just back of the farm house, overlooking the Contonook River and facing the village centre. The place is one where he was in the habit of resting during his stays in Peterboro.

Close friends at Peterboro last night said that even before he had acquired title to the land Mr. Currier had expressed the wish to be buried there.

The funeral will be at 3 o'clock, daylight saving time, Tuesday afternoon from All Saints' Episcopal Church, Peterboro.

The funeral services will be conducted by the Rev. Reginald H. H. Dulleel. The bearers will be lifetime associates of Mr. Currier: Richard Currier, Felton B. Elkins, Kenneth L. Lindsey, Robert S. Steinert, Robert S. Hoffman and L. Sherman Adams. The honorary bearers will be Gordon Abbott, Frank W. Buxton, T. Handeynt Cabot, Philip Dexter, Frederic C. Dunnane, Louis E. Kirstein, John C. Loring, Joseph W. Powell, Frederick H. Prince, Horatio S. Rubens, Alexander Steinert, Colonel J. M. Tarafa and Herbert A. Tucker.

Held Many Positions

Mr. Currier was admitted to the bar in 1894, and practised law in this city many years. Since 1922, Mr. Currier had been a trustee of the Boston Public

PASSING OF GUY W. CURRIER

Noted Lawyer Dies at Peterboro, N. H.— Funeral Tuesday

One of Boston's best known lawyers, Guy W. Currier, died yesterday at his country home in Peterboro, N. H., following illness from heart trouble with which he was stricken a fortnight ago.

THE BOSTON HERALD

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 25, 1930

CONDUCT SERVICES FOR GUY W. CURRIER

Funeral of Noted Lawyer Held In Peterboro

Special Dispatch to The Herald
PETERBORO, N. H., June 24.—Funeral services for Guy W. Currier, prominent Boston attorney who died Saturday at his country home in Peterboro, were held today in All Saints' Church, Peterboro. Mayor James M. Curley and former Mayor Malcolm E. Nichols of Boston were among those attending the rites.

A large group of Bostonians, many of them lawyers and associates of Mr. Currier in his public capacities, were present.

The services for Mr. Currier, who was a member of the port authority board and a trustee of the Boston Public Library, were conducted by the Rev. H. H. Bulleel, rector of All Saints' Church.

The pall bearers were Richard Currier, Felton B. Elkins, Kenneth L. Lindsey, Robert S. Steinert, Robert S. Hoffman, and L. Sherman Adams. Honorary pallbearers were Gordon Abbott, T. Handeynt Cabot, Philip Dexter, Frederic C. Dunnane, Louis E. Kirstein, John O. Loring, Joseph W. Powell, Frederick H. Prince, Horatio S. Rubens, Alexander Steinert, Col. J. M. Tarafa, Dean Wallace B. Donnan and Herbert A. Tucker. Malcolm Lang, Boston, was the organist.

Burial was in a pine grove on an eminence on the Currier estate overlooking the Contonook river.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, JUNE 30, 1930

Aviation Reading

Latest books and magazines on aviation are on display in the window of the business men's branch of the Boston Public Library in City Hall avenue. The display includes a metal model of the low winged Junkers trimotor passenger plane.

BOSTON TRAVELER.

JULY 1, 1930

ELLERY SEDGWICK LIBRARY TRUSTEE

Atlantic Monthly Editor Fills Currier Vacancy

Ellery Sedgwick, editor of the Atlantic Monthly was today named a trustee of the Public Library. His home is at 14 Walnut street and he will fill the vacancy due to the death of Guy W. Currier.

Sedgwick was born in New York, Feb. 27, 1872, received the degree of A. B. from Harvard in 1894, Litt. D. from Tufts in 1920 and from Dartmouth in 1921.

He was a teacher at Groton school in 1895 and 1896, assistant editor of the Youth's Companion until 1900, editor of Leslie's monthly magazine until 1905, spent the next year as editor of the American magazine and for two years was associated with McClure's magazine. He has been with the Atlantic Monthly since 1903. He is a member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, American Institute of Arts and Letters and the Massachusetts Historical Society Home.

THE BOSTON HERALD

Page Four June 28/1930.

Boston Review

I regret very deeply that, while Boston is trying to make herself believe she is celebrating her three hundredth birthday in a manner befitting her age, it has become necessary to fire a municipal watchman and a municipal janitor for entertaining friends in the patio of the Public Library on Copley square at an hour when patios are supposed to be deserted and night watchman are supposed to be sober as well as wide-awake.

The statistics department of the city of Boston is unable to inform me just how many patios there are in this city, but that one which forms part of the Public Library plant is a corker. I have seen it more than once, and I have often thought that it would be a splendid place in which to have an enjoyable midsummer outing, with all the world seemingly far away, and yet very close at hand. Commodore William U. Swan of the Copley Square Yacht Club, which has its headquarters close to the Public Library, had considered from all angles the idea of holding an annual festival of the club in the library patio, but decided some time ago that, even if the trustees would consent, it would be establishing a bad precedent.

The library trustees are very reticent concerning the gathering that resulted in the discharge of a janitor and a watchman. One story has it that the members of Madame Heima's senior class in beauty culture were guests of the evening, that the watchmen and the janitor merely lent their presence and the patio to the hosts, and that the latter were some of the best-dressed bootleggers in Back Bay society.

Director Belden, who deeply deplores the publicity given to the unusual society event, insists that no ladies graced the occasion with their presence, but the janitor, it is reported, avers that they were all ladies and carried their liquor as well as the proudest dames on Beacon Hill could have carried it.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, JULY 1, 1930

Ellery Sedgwick Library Trustee

To fill the vacancy caused by the death of Guy W. Currier, Mayor Curley today appointed Ellery Sedgwick, editor of The Atlantic Monthly Magazine and president of the Atlantic Monthly Company, who lives at 14 Walnut street, to the board of trustees of the Boston Public Library.

Mr. Sedgwick received his A.B. from Harvard in 1894 and was also awarded degrees from Tufts and Dartmouth. After teaching at Groton School for a year, he became a member of the editorial staff of the Youth's Companion, where he remained four years until 1900. During the next five years he edited Leslie's Monthly Magazine. He then served for a year in an editorial capacity on the American Magazine. In 1907 he joined McClure's Magazine and two years later came to the Atlantic Monthly. He is a member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, American Institute of Arts and Letters and the Massachusetts Historical Society.

THE BOSTON HERALD. TUESDAY, JUNE 17, 1930

1485 Seniors Get Diplomas At 57th B. U. Commencement

Boston Arena Thronged as De Pauw President Speaks—10 Schools Represented—12 Receive Special Honors

HONORARY DEGREES

Litt. D.
Isabel Anderson, author, Boston and Washington.
Herbert J. Burghis, president of Cornell College, Mt. Vernon, Ia.
John D. McLaughlin, associate justice of the superior court of Massachusetts, Boston.
Albert B. Meredith, professor-elect of educational administration, New York University, Hartford, Ct.
Elmer J. Rathbun, associate justice of the supreme court of Rhode Island, Providence.
Henry Knox Sherrill, bishop-elect of the Episcopal diocese of Massachusetts, Boston.

Litt. D.
William F. Anderson, bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Boston.
Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, Boston.
G. Bromley Oxnam, president of De Pauw University, Greencastle, Ind.

Sc. D.
Horace Packard, surgeon, B. U. professor emeritus, Boston.
David W. Wells, ophthalmologist, B. U. professor emeritus, Boston.
C. Sc. D.
John R. Gregg, shorthand system originator, New York city.

Old Colony Library Club

FIFTY-FIRST MEETING

To Be Held at the Lakeville Public Library
June 27th, 1930

Largest Class in History Graduated at Arena --- 12 Leaders in Varied Professions Honored

All records for degree awards at Boston University were broken yesterday at the Boston Arena, when President Daniel L. Marsh, on the occasion of the 57th annual B. U. commencement exercises, awarded 1485 degrees to graduating students, and conferred honorary degrees on 12 leaders in various walks of life.

BEAT LAST YEAR BY 406

Members of the graduating class exceeded by 406 last year's class of 1979 students. They received 26 different types of degrees, awarded for study and research in chosen fields. More than 8000 people jammed every available inch of space in the Arena, and heard President Bronny Gwynne of DePaul University, Greencastle, Ind., deliver the commencement address, discussing the topic, "The Graduate's Threefold Dilemma."

Following the award of the students' degrees, and the delivery of the commencement address, President Marsh awarded honorary degrees to one woman and 11 men. The first woman to ever receive the doctor of laws degree; three, doctor of letters; two, doctor of Ellery Sedgwick, editor of the Atlantic Monthly, was appointed by James M. Curley, Mayor of Boston, today to be a member of the board of trustees of the Boston Public Library. Mr. Sedgwick is a native of New York and a graduate of Harvard and Dartmouth, and was a teacher at the Groton schools, assistant editor of the Youth's Companion, editor of Leslie's Monthly Magazine, the American Magazine, and other publications.

He is a member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, the American Institute of Arts and Letters, and Massachusetts Historical Society Homes.

ALDRICH ART COMMISSIONER.
William T. Aldrich, 30 Newbury Street, an architect, was appointed June 30 by Mayor Curley to be a member of the Boston Art Commission for the term ending April 30, 1931. Mr. Aldrich was nominated for this position by the trustees of the Boston Public Library at a meeting held June 20.

Deceased president of Cornell College.
John Dwyer McLaughlin of Boston, graduate of Boston University in the class of 1886, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws; lawyer, and justice of the Superior Court of Massachusetts.
Doctor of Laws—Albert Barrett Meredith of Hartford, Conn., former student of Cornell University, and a distinguished authority in the field of secondary and public school education; for 10 years commissioner of education for the State of Connecticut, and for 10 years superintendent of education in the administration in the graduate division of the school of education of New York University.
Elmer Josephish Rathbone of Boston University in the class of 1898, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws; faithful servant of civic trust; for the past 11 years associate justice of the Supreme Court of Rhode Island.
Bishop Henry Knox Sherrill of Bos-

RARE TERCENTENARY EXHIBIT IN LIBRARY

Maps, Books, Manuscripts
in Treasure Room

First Letter of Columbus Included in Fine Historical Collection

An exhibition of rare maps, books, manuscripts, and broadsides, illustrating the history of the Bay Colony and Boston, have been placed on view in the Treasure Room of the Boston Public Library as part of the Tercentenary observance.

The entire exhibit is one of rare interest as it starts with the discovery of America and reaches to the present day. Every item in the collection has special value and many of them have not been seen by a half dozen individuals during a half century. The Prince Collection, which is part of the exhibit, has exceptional value in this respect.

The first map of a portion of America, the first letter of Columbus, the first reference to the New World, the first suggestion about Columbus' life and the name "America"—it is with this group that the exhibit begins.

Of necessity more emphasis is placed on the 17th Century than any other part of the historical collection. Two thirds of the exhibit bears on this period.

Interesting among the exhibits students is the manuscript by John Winthrop, written in 1644, and rather lengthily entitled "Arbitrary Government Described and Government Massachusetts Vindicated from the Aspersion." It is the first political treatise written by an American and was presented to the library by Robert E. Winthrop.

The entire list of the exhibits too comprehensive for comment listing. The Public Library officials believe that over 5000 persons a month will view these historical records that heretofore have been available to but a few. All are the property of the library itself through purchase, in some instances, and gifts in others.

An important feature is the first edition books of philosophers, poets, and novelists who once walked the streets of Boston and have extended the fabric of the city. Some of them are Emerson, Thoreau, Hawthorne, Melville, Longfellow, Holmes, James Russell Lowell and Whittier.

on, clergyman; a representative of the Prince of Peace in the American army during the World war; for the past seven years successful and beloved rector of Trinity Church, Boston, and now bishop-elect of the Protestant Episcopal Church for the diocese of Massachusetts.

1998, 1999, 2000, 2001, 2002, 2003, 2004, 2005, 2006, 2007, 2008, 2009, 2010, 2011, 2012, 2013, 2014, 2015, 2016, 2017, 2018, 2019, 2020, 2021, 2022, 2023, 2024, 2025, 2026, 2027, 2028, 2029, 2030, 2031, 2032, 2033, 2034, 2035, 2036, 2037, 2038, 2039, 2040, 2041, 2042, 2043, 2044, 2045, 2046, 2047, 2048, 2049, 2050, 2051, 2052, 2053, 2054, 2055, 2056, 2057, 2058, 2059, 2060, 2061, 2062, 2063, 2064, 2065, 2066, 2067, 2068, 2069, 2070, 2071, 2072, 2073, 2074, 2075, 2076, 2077, 2078, 2079, 2080, 2081, 2082, 2083, 2084, 2085, 2086, 2087, 2088, 2089, 2090, 2091, 2092, 2093, 2094, 2095, 2096, 2097, 2098, 2099, 2100, 2101, 2102, 2103, 2104, 2105, 2106, 2107, 2108, 2109, 2110, 2111, 2112, 2113, 2114, 2115, 2116, 2117, 2118, 2119, 2120, 2121, 2122, 2123, 2124, 2125, 2126, 2127, 2128, 2129, 2130, 2131, 2132, 2133, 2134, 2135, 2136, 2137, 2138, 2139, 2140, 2141, 2142, 2143, 2144, 2145, 2146, 2147, 2148, 2149, 2150, 2151, 2152, 2153, 2154, 2155, 2156, 2157, 2158, 2159, 2160, 2161, 2162, 2163, 2164, 2165, 2166, 2167, 2168, 2169, 2170, 2171, 2172, 2173, 2174, 2175, 2176, 2177, 2178, 2179, 2180, 2181, 2182, 2183, 2184, 2185, 2186, 2187, 2188, 2189, 2190, 2191, 2192, 2193, 2194, 2195, 2196, 2197, 2198, 2199, 2200, 2201, 2202, 2203, 2204, 2205, 2206, 2207, 2208, 2209, 2210, 2211, 2212, 2213, 2214, 2215, 2216, 2217, 2218, 2219, 2220, 2221, 2222, 2223, 2224, 2225, 2226, 2227, 2228, 2229, 2230, 2231, 2232, 2233, 2234, 2235, 2236, 2237, 2238, 2239, 2240, 2241, 2242, 2243, 2244, 2245, 2246, 2247, 2248, 2249, 2250, 2251, 2252, 2253, 2254, 2255, 2256, 2257, 2258, 2259, 2260, 2261, 2262, 2263, 2264, 2265, 2266, 2267, 2268, 2269, 2270, 2271, 2272, 2273, 2274, 2275, 2276, 2277, 2278, 2279, 2280, 2281, 2282, 2283, 2284, 2285, 2286, 2287, 2288, 2289, 2290, 2291, 2292, 2293, 2294, 2295, 2296, 2297, 2298, 2299, 2300, 2301, 2302, 2303, 2304, 2305, 2306, 2307, 2308, 2309, 2310, 2311, 2312, 2313, 2314, 2315, 2316, 2317, 2318, 2319, 2320, 2321, 2322, 2323, 2324, 2325, 2326, 2327, 2328, 2329, 2330, 2331, 2332, 2333, 2334, 2335, 2336, 2337, 2338, 2339, 2340, 2341, 2342, 2343, 2344, 2345, 2346, 2347, 2348, 2349, 2350, 2351, 2352, 2353, 2354, 2355, 2356, 2357, 2358, 2359, 2360, 2361, 2362, 2363, 2364, 2365, 2366, 2367, 2368, 2369, 2370, 2371, 2372, 2373, 2374, 2375, 2376, 2377, 2378, 2379, 2380, 2381, 2382, 2383, 2384, 2385, 2386, 2387, 2388, 2389, 2390, 2391, 2392, 2393, 2394, 2395, 2396, 2397, 2398, 2399, 2400, 2401, 2402, 2403, 2404, 2405, 2406, 2407, 2408, 2409, 2410, 2411, 2412, 2413, 2414, 2415, 2416, 2417, 2418, 2419, 2420, 2421, 2422, 2423, 2424, 2425, 2426, 2427, 2428, 2429, 2430, 2431, 2432, 2433, 2434, 2435, 2436, 2437, 2438, 2439, 2440, 2441, 2442, 2443, 2444, 2445, 2446, 2447, 2448, 2449, 2450, 2451, 2452, 2453, 2454, 2455, 2456, 2457, 2458, 2459, 2460, 2461, 2462, 2463, 2464, 2465, 2466, 2467, 2468, 2469, 2470, 2471, 2472, 2473, 2474, 2475, 2476, 2477, 2478, 2479, 2480, 2481, 2482, 2483, 2484, 2485, 2486, 2487, 2488, 2489, 2490, 2491, 2492, 2493, 2494, 2495, 2496, 2497, 2498, 2499, 2500, 2501, 2502, 2503, 2504, 2505, 2506, 2507, 2508, 2509, 2510, 2511, 2512, 2513, 2514, 2515, 2516, 2517, 2518, 2519, 2520, 2521, 2522, 2523, 2524, 2525, 2526, 2527, 2528, 2529, 2530, 2531, 2532, 2533, 2534, 2535, 2536, 2537, 2538, 2539, 2540, 2541, 2542, 2543, 2544, 2545, 2546, 2547, 2548, 2549, 2550, 2551, 2552, 2553, 2554, 2555, 2556, 2557, 2558, 2559, 2560, 2561, 2562, 2563, 2564, 2565, 2566, 2567, 2568, 2569, 2570, 2571, 2572, 2573, 2574, 2575, 2576, 2577, 2578, 2579, 2580, 2581, 2582, 2583, 2584, 2585, 2586, 2587, 2588, 2589, 2590, 2591, 2592, 2593, 2594, 2595, 2596, 2597, 2598, 2599, 2600, 2601, 2602, 2603, 2604, 2605, 2606, 2607, 2608, 2609, 2610, 2611, 2612, 2613, 2614, 2615, 2616, 2617, 2618, 2619, 2620, 2621, 2622, 2623, 2624, 2625, 2626, 2627, 2628, 2629, 2630, 2631, 2632, 2633, 2634, 2635, 2636, 2637, 2638, 2639, 2640, 2641, 2642, 2643, 2644, 2645, 2646, 2647, 2648, 2649, 2650, 2651, 2652, 2653, 2654, 2655, 2656, 2657, 2658, 2659, 2660, 2661, 2662, 2663, 2664, 2665, 2666, 2667, 2668, 2669, 2670, 2671, 2672, 2673, 2674, 2675, 2676, 2677, 2678, 2679, 26

BOSTON UNIVERSITY
GRADUATES 1485

Honorary Degrees Given to 12 Persons.

Commencement Exercises in Arena Attended by More Than 14,000

More than 14,000 relatives and friends of 1485 graduates, the largest number in history, witnessed the 57th annual Boston University Commencement yesterday in the Arena. Practically every seat in the hall was taken and aisles were overcrowded.

Honorary degrees were awarded to one woman and 11 men, six of them from Boston, who have outstanding records of achievement in their chosen field. The degrees were awarded to the following: Doctor of commerce, science, John Robert Gregg of New York, originator of shorthand system; Doctor of science, Horace Packard of

Boston and David Washburn Well, physicians; doctor of letters, William Franklin Anderson of Boston, bishop of the Methodist Episcopal church

Charles Francis Dorr Belden, librarian of the Boston Public Library; Garfield Bromley Oxnam of Greencastle, Pa., president of DePauw University; doctor of laws, Mrs Larz Anderson of Boston and Washington, Herbert John Burgetahler of Mt Vernon, Ia., president of Cornell College; John Dwyer McLaughlin of Boston, associate justice of Massachusetts Superior Court.

Albert Barrett Meredith, Commissioner of Education for Connecticut; Elm Jeremiah Rathbun of Providence, associate justice of the Supreme Court of Rhode Island; Henry Knox Sherborn of Boston, bishop-elect of the Protestant Episcopal Church for the diocese of Massachusetts.

In all, 25 different degrees were awarded for study and research in special fields. There were 406 graduates this year, including the Student School of Education, which spent its first year under B. U. direction.

The procession of graduates in and gown, led by trustees, university officials and faculty members under direction of the chief marshal Prof Irving C. Whittemore, and associate marshals, Prof John J. Mahon and Howard LeSourd, formed at a man and marched into the Arena

10:15. The address was by I.
Oxnam of Depauw University.
music was by the Boston Univer Orchestra. Two honorary degree re ents opened and closed the progr
Bishop William F. Anderson with invocation and Bishop-Elect H
Knox Sherrill, rector of Trinity, H copal Church, with the benedicte
College of Business

The B. O. College of Education administration led the 10 schools colleges in the number of degrees granted, with 223. The others in descending order are School of Education, 210; School of Law, 164; College of Liberal Arts, 163; College of Agricultural Arts and Letters, 90; School of Education and Social ice, 73; School of Theology, 68; School of Medicine, 47; Graduate School of Theology, 47; School of Music, 47; and College of Music, 2. A total of 302 diplomas and certificates were granted also.

For the first time bachelor of science in journalism awarded to two students; the of bachelor of music for the first at Commencement, to two grad and diplomas in physical educa
11 graduates of the Sargent of Physical Education. One deg doctor of religious education an of doctor of sacred theology granted, and four degrees of of philosophy.

Page Three

to an audience of unknown, while the return to 90 in the shade, have been regarded
and soon forgotten.
state of comfort.
oration from the then comes a long-
would follow the cushere a member rehorrible suspicion.
lunch-snatching-shopping merely a hypothesis? Is it possible the young men like books and reading more than the girls do? Let's begin talking hurriedly about something else.

LESSONS NEEDED

From the Baltimore Sun

100th ANNIVERSARY NUMBER

BOSTON TRANSCRIPT THURS. JULY 24 1890

A SPECIAL ILLUSTRATED SECTION WITH THE REGULAR ISSUE OF THAT DATE

BOSTON A CENTURY AGO

MANY INTERESTING FACTS NOT GENERALLY KNOWN

Read the posters they carry on their sides. Often you will find on them notification of a Transcript feature that will be of special interest to you. The trucks travel many miles every day on their Transcript delivery errands, and thousands have the chance to read their messages.

Watch for them.

Read the posters.

Two Weeks' Rest Needed

To the Editor of the Transcript:

A middle-aged working woman, still lame from injuries received four years ago in a street automobile accident from which no compensation could be obtained, has been obliged to live on savings while waiting for the completion of a general hospital service from Massachusetts General Hospital. With the hope of gaining strength enough to go back to work in the fall, this woman needs help in paying the board for the care of the children in the houses of greater Boston where the charge will be $10 a week. Are there friends who can help this evidently deserving case with amounts, no matter how small?

Field Agent, Adult Education,
77 Cazenove Street, Boston.

In Need of Rest

To the Editor of the Transcript:
Kindly acknowledge twenty dollars re-

See New England First

1485 AWARDED

BOSTON EVENING

Part Two

EXCURSIONS
SUNDAY, JULY 27
Old Orchard
 ROUND $2.50 TRIP
 A Day at the Seashore
 Train leaves North Station 8:25 A.M. (E.S.T.).
 Stops to take at Lynn, Salem, Beverly, Ipswich, Lawrence, Haverhill, Dover and Rochester.
 Arrives Alton Bay 10:21 A.M. and Weirs at 11:28 A.M. Returning leaves Weirs at 6:15 P.M. (E.S.T.).

Winnepesaukee
 ROUND $2 TRIP
 Quaint, Picturesque Seashore Resort
 Tickets good from North Station.
 Boston, on all regular trains to and from Gloucester and Rockport.

Cape Ann
 ROUND $1 TRIP
 Travel by train—avoid congested highways
BOSTON and MAINE
 LINE OF THE MINUTE MAN
Railroad

Crossroad Impressions

Where French and German Prepossessions Meet and Part.

By H. T. P.

SEVEN hours from Paris, and the mild-mannered customs inspectors are glancing through one's baggage at Aachen. They end a casual examination with a considerate reminder that meanwhile one's train has been switched from Track One to Track Three. Evidently, the new Germany of good will has not changed in two years' absence. Fifteen hours from Paris, and one is supping in Hamburg at a quiet, smooth-running hotel, remembered from pre-war experience, still serving midnight meals as though they were mere incident of nocturnal routine. (Up and down Boston one must hunt them, often vainly.) The entrance-hall and the restaurant have been modernized—doubtless one of those extravaganzas that lay often and heavy upon the Puritan conscience of the Agent-General for Reparations. Since the result is pleasant to contemplate, we of less scruple and in private position approve it. Even our French acquaintance of the long journey admits that it is well done: under the softening influence of the golden Moselle agrees that good taste is sometimes present, on either bank of the Rhine. All day long there was a clatter of French or Belgian tongues in the compartment. Now to right and to left the voices are German.

All of which is to say that upon a given day in Paris one may hear the recent evacuation of the Rhineland discussed from French points of view; read as well the arguments and prepossessions. Allow another day for the journey to Hamburg, and there one may hear the same topic debated from another background and in different prophetic; read no less. The German newspapers, daily or weekly, have teemed with pictures of the rejoicings at Wiesbaden and Mainz, of the entrance of German civic authorities to resume possession. The Parisian journals, in turn, have pictured the final lowering of the French colors at Trier or Mainz, or General Guillaumat—the commander-in-chief of the occupying troops—in statu esque pose on the deck of the little Arts and Letters and Massachusetts Historical Society.

HEAT WAVE

COWAN

SIGNS OF PEACE IN INDIA

[From the New York World]

Summer weather, bringing to India heat for which there is no counterpart in this country, may be in large part responsible for the let-up in Nationalist activities which has been evident in recent weeks. At the same time, there are certain signs that below the surface of the Indian mind, the degree of bachelors of music for the first time awarded to two students; the degree of bachelors of music for the first time awarded to two graduates, and diplomas in physical education to 11 graduates of the Sargent School of Physical Education. One degree of doctor of religious education and one of doctor of sacred theology were granted, and four degrees of doctor of philosophy.

THE LIBRARIAN

IN the display window of the new Kirslein Library, on City Hall avenue, there is an alluring publicity exhibit of the reading matter available in the Circulating Branch, on the third floor. As one can see from the selection in the window, all the latest books—fiction and non-fiction—may be obtained, as well as an attractive assortment of American and English periodicals.

Small figures of Cotton Mather, Governor Winthrop, John Harvard, Anne Hutchinson, Sir Harry Vane and Anne Bradstreet stretch welcoming hands to the passersby and call their attention to an array of books in the foreground, having to do with the early history of Massachusetts. As the Librarian's nose was interestedly pressed against the pane, a friend, who is by way of being an antiquarian, joined her and pointed out that one of the book illustrations showing a view of the South End of Boston and of the Neck, about 1764, was the work of Lord Byron's grandfather, a British naval officer, whose vessel visited Boston about that time.

As regards the disposition of lunch

Interior of the Circular Branch Library
On the Third Floor of the Kirslein Library.

time, men seems to have much more sense than women. (Shouts of "No! No!" from embattled feminists.) You seldom see young men grabbing a sandwich and a milk shake at the nearest drug store, then rushing from store to store to compare values or match a tie to socks bought last week. Whereas every female does that almost every lunch time as a matter of course—buys one day, then rushes back the next to change everything. The sensible young men of Boston's business section, on the other hand, have discovered the Kirslein Branch and spend the spare moments of their lunch time there. They are in the majority there every day, outnumbering the females by five to one. But—the Librarian's brain has just reeled under a horrible suspicion. Can it be that the lunch-snatching-shopping hypothesis is merely a hypothesis? Is it possible that the young men like books and reading more than the girls do? Let's begin talking hurriedly about something else.

Boston Traveler

THURSDAY, JULY 31, 1930

Summer Privilege Plan

THE Boston Public Library is a particularly well conducted institution. Its trustees and staff not only ably meet the intellectual requirements of a great library, but are also in touch with public needs.

The "summer privilege plan" is an example of how well the library officials understand how best to serve the public. Under the plan an adult patron may go to the library, ask to be given the benefits of the summer privilege plan and then take out books which may be taken away on a vacation trip, in fact, kept until Oct. 15.

How much better this system is than having books lie gathering dust! Of course, certain classes of books, especially those very recently acquired, cannot be taken away for this long period. There are hundreds of thousands of volumes from which the resident of Boston may choose his or her summer reading.

Ellery Sedgwick, editor of the Atlantic Monthly, was appointed by James M. Curley, Mayor of Boston, today to be a member of the trustees of the Boston Public Library. Mr. Sedgwick is a native of Boston and a graduate of Harvard University. He was a teacher in the Groton schools, assistant editor of the Youth's Companion, editor of the Atlantic Monthly Magazine, the Atlantic Magazine, and other publications.

He is a member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, the American Institute of Architects, and the Massachusetts Historical Society.

ALDRICH ART COMM.
William T. Aldrich, 3
Street, an architect, was June 30 by Mayor Curley to ber of the Boston Art Com-
the term ending April 30.
Aldrich was nominated position by the trustees of Public Library at a meet-20.

ARMENIANS won so many points of excellence in connection with the racial groups exposition in Symphony Hall that the grand prize goes to them. The judging was done yesterday.

afternoon by a board of three judges, composed of Charles F. D. Holden, director of the Boston Public Library; Philip Hendy, curator of paintings of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, and Professor Paul J. Sachs, associate director of the William Hayes Fogg Art Museum in Cambridge.

Seven or eight of the racial groups that have night for more than a week in Symphony Hall had installed exhibits of their national arts and crafts in one of the rooms on the second floor, converting the room into a museum of articles of special merit because of age, utility or workmanship. The various groups showed what they considered best or most characteristic of their national contribution to civilization.

Awards were made by classes. First prize in handicrafts was given to the Ukrainians, first for the Poles, the Armenians, first for handicrafts to the Polish, first for antiques to the Armenians, first for paintings to the Polish, first for photography to the Armenians, first for costume to the Syrians, first for industry to the Swedes, and a special award to the Ukrainians for artistic arrangement of their display. This gives the Armenians three points, with which goes the grand prize.

Grand prize.

One of the articles of antiquity in the Armenian exhibit is a copy of the Four Gospels in the New Testament, a book of 562 pages, written by hand in the Armenian language in the year 1111 A. D., or more than 800 years ago. It is richly illustrated by hand, in several colors, and beautifully decorated, instead of paper. It is of sheepskin and is in a perfect state of preservation; the handwriting is exquisitely executed. This volume was loaned to the Boston exhibit by N. M. Taskian, of Chicago. This exhibit is open until this afternoon, and will be open again this evening in connection with the Ukrainian program which closes the series of entertainments.

It has become a matter of common knowledge among these groups, who have contributed to the entertainments and to the exhibition, that Mrs. William Lowell Putnam, who sponsored the undertaking, has been present at every performance and has visited the exhibit several times. She has expressed her satisfaction with the way the racial groups in Boston responded to the invitation to take their part in the Tercentenary celebration and on various occasions the racial groups have expressed their appreciation in giving them the opportunity.

Walter Smith, trumpet soloist and bandmaster, recently appointed by the Tenenbrenner music committee of the city of New York. Professor John A. O'Shea, chairman, as leader of the new sixty-piece municipal band which is to give several concerts in the next few weeks, has been invited by Edwin Franko Goldman to conduct a special concert to be given by Goldman's famous band at the Mall in Central Park, New York city, Wednesday evening, July 30. To meet this engagement, Walter Smith, because of his many other pressing duties, has arranged to go to New York by airplane.

to New York. The feature of the Goldman band concert will be "The Potentate" march composed by Walter Smith in honor of Samuel C. L. Maskell, potentate of Aleppo Temple, Masek Shrine. In addition to his work as teacher of the trumpet, and the many solos which he plays over the air at church services and in concerts, Walter Smith also regularly conducts several bands, including the Jemey Band which broadcasts from WEEI every Sunday evening, and the Aleppo Drums Corps, the largest fraternal band of its kind in the world.

During the week of July 27, Goldman's Band in New York will have as guest conductors, in addition to Walter Smith other well-known members of the Bandmasters' Association, including John Philip Sousa and Arthur Pryor.

Disabled when her propeller became fouled while hauling her drag net during fishing operations in South Channel, fifty-five miles southeast of Highland Light, Cape Cod, early yesterday, the Boston fishing dragger Olive Williams was towed to the fish pier this morning by schooner R. Eugene Ashley of New Bedford. The Olive Williams will have to be hauled out on a marine railway for repairs.

— Looking at the men who attend public banquets, we are reminded of the Bible text, "To him that hath shall be given." [Los Angeles Times]

A black and white photograph of a young man with dark, wavy hair, wearing a tuxedo and a bow tie. He is holding a large, light-colored, oval-shaped object that resembles a large, stylized letter 'A' or a decorative element. The object has a dark floral design on it. The background is dark and textured. In the bottom right corner, there is a signature that reads "Horse" and "Carr".

will be many priceless heirlooms, including rugs, shawls, quilts, furniture, dolls and toys, old money, books and papers and:

Collection of birds of Cape Ann.
Tea will be served each afternoon from 4 to 5 o'clock, with some of the olden days to melodeon accompaniment. Four special entertainments of a musical character will be offered.
On Wednesday evening, "The Maid of Shawsheen," by Eugene H. Tewksbury, a play depicting the romance of the Shaw! through the many nations of the world, will be presented on the stage in the evening.
Thursday evening, a concert of old songs and hymns by all Paritan choir will be the attraction for all who love the atmosphere of those bygone days.
Entertainment on Saturday

RUFFED GROUSE OUT WITH OFFSPRING

The first of the ruffed grouse hatched last fall in the upland region have appeared in the open with a flock of chicks was noted on its estate last week by Francis A. Cooper. The mother worried by her responsibilities, took a position on a tree where she could observe her offspring and issued worried orders as to their conduct. (Martha's Vineyard Gazette)

THE LIBRARIAN

IN the Treasure Room of the Boston Public Library may now be seen two illuminated vellum leaves, one containing John Robinson's farewell address to the Pilgrims in 1620, and the other Calvin Coolidge's address at the opening of the Pilgrim Tercentenary in 1920. These are the work of Mrs. da Loria Norman, the well-known American book illustrator, who has loaned them to the library for exhibition during the summer. Placed in a gilded frame, the two leaves give the impression of an immense manuscript volume. The leaves have exceptionally rich and beautifully illuminated border designs and the text shows touches of grey, gold and Indian red amid the simple, dignified lettering. The center of the page containing Coolidge's address is broken by an inscription of the dates of the anniversary of the landing in heavily embossed letters of gold which stand out strikingly against the black background.

Mrs. Norman's paintings and illuminations have been highly praised by many critics. She has had a successful artistic ever-helpful "Stranger's Directory," distributed free by the Boston Transcript, is listed under Directories and has even attained the dignity of a calendar. Every edition, from 1905 to date, has been preserved at the Boston Public Library. The latest issue is distributed in the Information Office.

Under "Sports" is noted Michael T. ("Nuf' Cod") McGreevy's splendid collection of 446 photographs of baseball games, clubs and players of Boston and other places, 1875 (?) 1923. The pictures were presented to the Boston Public Library at the time when his cozy, up-to-date barroom (much more charming than the most charming speakeasy) was transformed into a branch.

So you see that nothing relating to Boston has been omitted from this delightful and hospitable bibliography. It was compiled by Mr. L. E. Taylor, of the catalogue department, who really should be invited to appear in the Tercentenary parade as the Spirit-of-thorough-and-light-handed-bibliographical-research.

Modestly issued as Brief Reading List No. 43, and entitled "The Massachusetts Bay Colony and Boston a Selected List of Works in the Public Library of the City of Boston," is the bibliography of one hundred and sixty-five pages now being distributed free to all card-holders of the Boston Public Library. The booklet is really one of the most valuable contributions to the Tercentenary celebration. It is likewise the most extensive bibliography of Boston so far compiled.

By glancing through the titles listed, one gets an excellent resume of the historical background of Boston as well as the present-day conditions here, from every imaginable standpoint. Although Mr. Charles F. D. Belden, director of the library, declares in the foreword that the titles have been chosen with a view to the interests of the general reader rather than those of the specialist, bibliophiles will be thrilled at the remainder of priceless Americana owned by the Boston Public Library. Included in the section headed "Early Narratives" are such items as Francis Higginson's "New-England's plantation," the second edition, 1630; the first edition (1619) of the valiant Captain John Smith's "A Description of New England," not to mention Thomas Morton's "The New-English Canaan," published in 1637.

A portion of the bibliography is also given over to historical and descriptive works about Boston, Lincolnshire, including St. Botolph's Church and the Guildhall, with poetry and fiction relating to these, as well. Material about Boston, Mass., is divided into thirty-six topics, and these, in turn, have innumerable subdivisions. Biography, for example, has nineteen sub-headings, ranging from actors to statesmen. History, likewise, is lavishly inclusive with references not only to innumerable books, but to broad-sides, early maps, diaries and newspapers of the various periods.

Of great interest, too, are the notes, comments, and quotations scattered through the pages like posies. With reference to the "Chart of Boston Harbor 1687-88," we are told, "This was prepared for Governor Andros, and is the earliest known map of the Harbor." The section "Anniversaries" has two comments. One, from Winsor's "Memorial History of Boston" states: "When, in 1730, a hundred years had passed from the foundation of the town, a commemoration was proposed; but the community was then suffering under a visitation of the small-pox, and the anniversary was not observed, except by one or two pulpit ministrations."

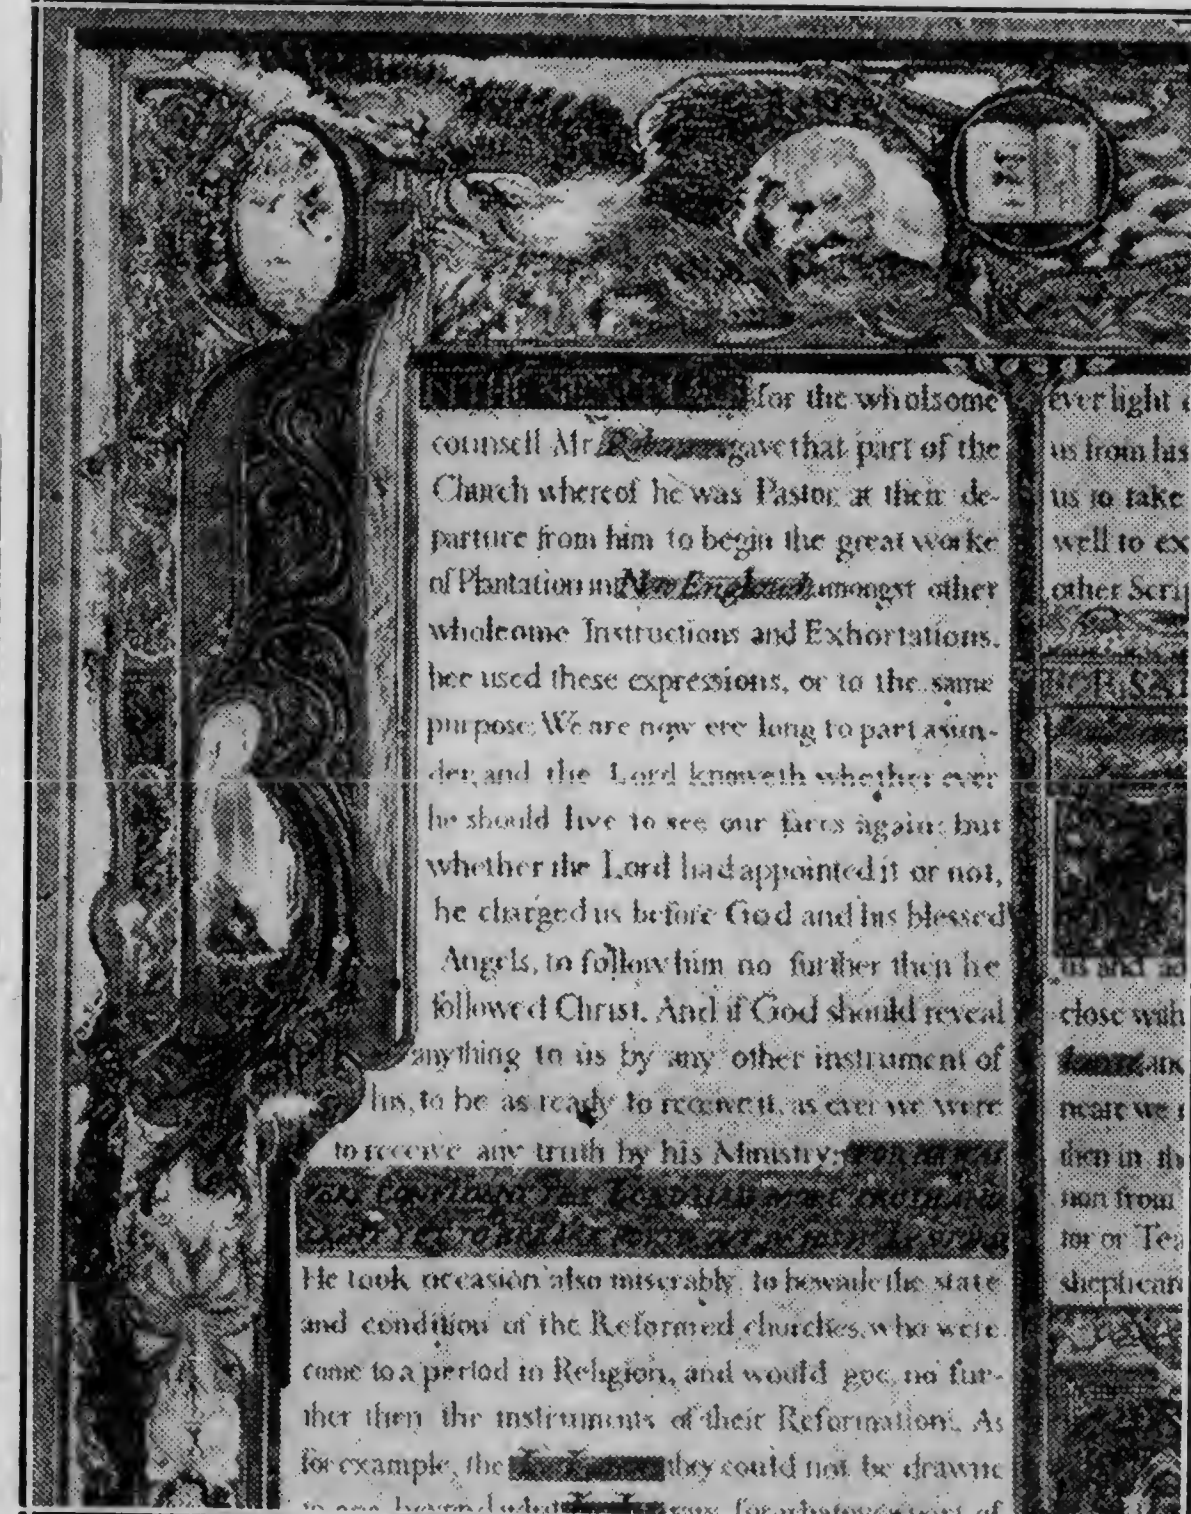

Following that is a portion of the sermon "delivered at Cambridge before the Great and General Assembly of the Province of the Massachusetts, May 27 MDCCLXXX," by Dr. Thomas Prince. "And how extremely proper it is, upon the close of the first century of our settlement . . . to look back to the beginning of this remarkable transaction; and first commemorate the righteous and signal works of God toward us, both in our own days and in the days of our fathers; and then consider the great and special obligations they have laid upon us."

Of inestimable value to editors, "columnists," and all interested in folkways, generally, are the final paragraphs under "Wit and Humor."

"The quatrain beginning 'And this is good old Boston, the home of the bean and the cod,' is discussed in a note by Rev. Samuel Clarke Bushnell, entitled, 'To whom it may concern' . . . (A. 1269.1)."

"The jest which refers to Boston as the Hub of the Universe had its origin in the words of Holmes' Boston State-house is the hub of the solar system," printed in his "Autocrat of the Breakfast Table, 1858, p. 143."

The Librarian was glad to see that the

John Robinson's Farewell Address to the Pilgrims in 1620 career both in England, where she has lived for many years, and in America. Her work includes mural painting and frescoes, water colors and needle work, besides illuminated books and vellums. Most of her illuminations were done on commission and are owned by wealthy book collectors. A few years ago the New York Public Library commissioned her to illustrate a vellum copy of Ecclesiastes and the Song of Solomon.

Original Documents

THE officials of Boston's public library are performing a great public service in placing on display for the benefit of all residents and visitors alike an amazingly interesting collection of maps, books and manuscripts, some of them more than 500 years old. The exhibit covers a lengthy period starting before Columbus sailed on his voyage of discovery. It is particularly replete with matter of timely interest because of our tercentenary.

The collection has been prepared most carefully, sequence has been observed in the display, and those who are interested in the facts and original documents may observe the first-hand story of the plans for sailing to the new world, its eventual settlement and development.

It gives a picture, available in no other way, of the story of New England. It is likely that our public library this year will surpass all previous records for visits.

BOSTON POST.

JULY 23, 1930

TELLS YOU WHERE TO SPEND VACATION

Those who can never decide where they wish to spend a vacation will find their troubles at an end by making a visit to the Kerstein branch of the Boston Public Library. This city institution advertises that it has a file of places guaranteed to offer every variety of rest and recreation known to man.

LIBRARY MAKES SUMMER RULES

Books Can Be Kept Long Period Without Fines

No dues will be collected by the Boston Public Library by those keeping books over two weeks from now up to Oct. 15, if card-holders will ask for the summer privilege plan. The plan has been printed on leaflets and follows:

"The Boston Public Library offers to every adult card-holder the privilege of drawing books at any time after June 1 and of keeping them as long as desired up to Oct. 15. Books may be taken on vacation. They may be returned when read and others obtained in place of them with the same time limit.

"Under this summer privilege plan, books must be applied for in person or by proxy. Certain classes of books, especially those recently acquired, are not available for the extended period; but, in general, it is the policy of the library to allow its card-holders to keep books during the summer long enough for leisurely reading."

The Boston Post
AUGUST 5, 1930

NUDE STATUE FOR MUSEUM

"Bacchante" Ousted From Library Years Ago

The much-rebuffed statue of "Bacchante," designed by Frederick MacMonnies, and once ejected from the courtyard of the Public Library for "nakedness," is now the permanent possession of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts. It became known yesterday.

Many years ago, Boston clergymen and others forced the removal of the famous statue from the library on the grounds that "the lady is not only nude; she is glaringly and obtrusively naked." She has been at the museum for some years now, but was offered as a gift of the late Mrs. Harriet J. Bradbury, a sister of the late George Robert White, and has been accepted by the trustees as a permanent feature.

Bacchante first was lent to the museum in 1910. Ten years before was the year of her expulsion from the library.

The Sunday Post
AUGUST 10, 1930

APPROVES TWO NEW LIBRARIES

Plans for the construction of two new branch libraries costing $10,000 each were approved yesterday by Mayor Curley. He ordered the contracts advertised at once and work started in three weeks.

Ralph Adams Cram designed the first branch, which will be built on city land adjoining the Mission Church, Roxbury. The second was designed by Putnam and Cox and will be erected at 8 Hazelton street, off Blue Hill avenue, Mattapan, construction work to start Sept. 1.

The Mayor explained that these are the first of 40 branch libraries which will be constructed to meet the needs of the growing city. Under his programme, approved by the library trustees, two branches will be built each year for 20 years.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR
SATURDAY, AUG. 9, 1930

MAYOR OPENS WAY FOR TWO NEW LIBRARIES

Curley Approves Plans for Mattapan and Parker Hill Branches

Inaugurating what he believes will result in one of the finest library systems in the world, Mayor Curley today approved plans for construction of two $100,000 branch libraries, the first in a program calling for erection of 20 over a 10-year period. The program, recommended by Mayor Curley two years ago while he was a member of the examining committee of the Boston Public Library, provides for two new libraries each year for 10 years. It is expected that these buildings will adequately take care of the needs of the city for more than a generation.

In commenting on the completed sketches for the two new branches this year, one at Parker Hill and the other at Mattapan, Mayor Curley said:

"Boston will soon have one of the finest public library systems not only in the United States, but in the world. We already have one of the three great scholarly collections of books in the United States, the others being in the Congressional Library at Washington, and in New York.

"Our physical facilities, however, have not kept pace with the requirements of a great and growing city," he added, "and the program which is now being put into effect will correct this condition. The trustees, with the assistance of various departments in City Hall, have made a careful survey and I believe the new structures will be ready for occupancy in the fall."

The architect for the Parker Hill branch is Ralph Adams Cram, supervisor of the architectural work on the Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York. Putnam & Cox, who designed the Amherst College buildings, planned the Mattapan branch library.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 9, 1930

First Fruits of New Public Library Expansion

Branch Libraries Will Cost $100,000 Each

UPPER—New Parker Hill Branch to Be Built at the Lower End of the Municipal Playground, Near the Mission Church, Roxbury; Cram and Ferguson, Architects

LOWER—New Mattapan Branch, in a Rapidly Growing District; Architects, Putnam & Cox

SKETCHES submitted by the trustees of the Boston Public Library for two new branches, each to cost $100,000, have been approved by Mayor Curley, as the first units of the comprehensive expansion program recommended by the examining committee of the library, two years ago. One branch will be erected near the Mission Church, Roxbury, and the other in Mattapan, at 8 and 10 Hazleton street, near the present branch in Babson street.

The library program calls for the building of two branches every year for ten years, in the expectation that these buildings will be adequate for the needs of Boston for at least a generation after the final construction. They will give Boston, in the opinion of the mayor, "the finest public library system in the world." Calling attention to the fact that Boston has one of the three great scholarly collections at books in the country, the other two being in the Congressional Library, Washington, and in New York, the mayor deprecates the fact that the physical facilities of the Boston Public Library have not kept pace with the requirements of a great and growing city.

The mayor has urged the trustees, who have made a careful survey of the city's needs to use all possible haste in the work on the first units and has been assured that they will be ready by winter. He issued a statement as follows:

"It is a particular source of gratification to me that the trustees followed my suggestion and selected Ralph Adams Cram, of Cram & Ferguson, as architect for the first of the two buildings designed, the one at Parker Hill. Mr. Cram is the foremost architect, everything considered, in the world. The Cathedral of St. John the Divine, in New York, will be but one of a series of noble monuments designed or supervised by him. This branch library is to be at the lower end of the municipal playground in Parker Hill. At the other end is the large Mission Church. I believe that the whole neighborhood will feel in many ways the effects of this little gem of architecture designed personally by Mr. Cram. It is not too much to say that this sets a new standard for small library construction.

"The architects of the other branch, the one at Mattapan, are Putnam and Cox, who designed the beautiful Kirstein Memorial branch in City Hall avenue. Their work is well known throughout the United States, and the Amherst College buildings, which they designed, are considered splendid examples of American architecture at its best. Like the branch at Parker Hill, this Mattapan building will serve a large and growing population. "When all our twenty branches are completed, Boston will be pointed to everywhere as having carried out the ideals which many persons have expressed, but which no city has ever carried out."

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 13, 1930

THE LIBRARIAN

EVER since the Kirstein Memorial Library opened there has been considerable wear and tear on the vocal cords of the attendants there. Attacks of laryngitis are frequent owing to the continual necessity of explaining to all comers that the place is not a private institution to which one pays money to "belong," but a branch of the Boston Public Library. It has gradually sunk into the minds of the majority that the general collection on the third floor circulates to B. P. L. cardholders, but there are still some people who cherish the idea that the business books on the second floor are for reference use only. To combat this false impression the librarian has arranged in the display window an inviting array of books and magazines, flanked by a tennis racket and a bag of golf sticks.

Letters whose eye is caught by the sport paraphernalia discover the notice that "Books May Be Borrowed One Month During the Vacation Period." They are also made aware of the fact that, with the exception of the current issue, all magazines likewise circulate. Among the books arranged in the window are those which have to do with marketing, used cars, fields of work for women, stocks and bonds, journalism, retail buying associations, trade marks and the Soviet Government.

Of course all residents of Boston proper may have a library card, but it is also possible for the luckless souls who live outside the city limits but who work in this city to take advantage of the splendid Kirstein collection. Ask one of the attendants to explain the uses of a "Firm" card.

Incorrigible "joiners," the Bostonians! From the day the Kirstein Memorial Building opened, they have come in and professed themselves willing to pay the fee and "belong." When the attendant explained—first slipping a throat lozenge between her (or his) lips—that the library was without money and without price, the questioner accepted the privilege with delighted alacrity. Inevitably he returned the next day—and the next. That those in the business district needed a library and appreciate Mr. Kirstein's magnificent gift of one, is proved by the number of people who make use of Kirstein. The daily average of attendance has been consistently higher than last year at Newark's famous pioneer Business Branch, which has been in existence twenty years. Kirstein's circulation—never a strong point in business branches, and not expected to be overwhelming—increased twenty-five per cent during June and July.

When it was decided to locate the Business Branch on City Hall avenue, many declared that the lords of leisure who spent their days propping up the walls of City Hall or drifting through its corridors, would promptly move over to the new library. This cynical prophecy failed to come off. The clientele at Kirstein is made up of people who really make use of its splendid reference and circulating material. There are no idlers.

At first, the majority of patrons of the Business Branch were men, but women are coming to use it more and more. Interest in the books on secretarial work was the opening wedge; now the ladies look over and take home works on advertising, business law and other subjects. Insurance is particularly popular among them. Have you noticed how many women are in the business of soliciting insurance? They have added charm and tact to that difficult profession.

Many questions on business and economics come through the mail and over the phone. Lawyers and advertisers use the books most frequently, the attendants believe. Books most in demand are those on accounting, advertising, hotel management and the stock exchange. Curiously enough, interest in the last named doesn't seem to wane. Amateur financiers still clamor for a hair of the dog that bit them.

The branch on the third floor also has a new and delightful exhibit. It is called "When a Man Had Time to Write Letters," and shows a selection from the pen of George William Curtis, noted American journalist, orator, publicist and author, who was born in 1824 and died eight years before the close of the century. He lived for eighteen months with the community at Brook Farm and wrote a book about his experience. This is displayed among the letters, along with other of his works, including the charming "Pease and I."

In the course of his lifetime, Curtis was connected with the New York Tribune, Putnam's Monthly and Harper's. He was also an advocate of civil service reform all his days, and yet found time to write precise, kindly, unbiassed letters to an old friend. The originals of these are arranged in the display cabinet at the Kirstein branch and each is accompanied by a typewritten copy. The careful handwriting and the sincerity of the phrasing bring before the mind's eye that vanished time when the world wasn't too busy for leisure and pleasant good-fellowship. A month before his death, Curtis could write to his old friend, with simple affection: "I think of you as unchanged by time, for I know that your heart, out of which are the issues of life, is unchangeable."

Interior of the Circulation Department of the Kirstein Business Branch, Boston Public Library

Two New Branch Library Buildings To Be Ready for Occupancy in Fall

Within a few weeks work will be started on two new branches of the Boston public library, one on city land adjoining the Mission Church, Roxbury, and the other on a Hazelton street, Mattapan. The buildings, costing $100,000 each and representing the finest type of modern architecture, will be the first two units completed in a program calling for the construction of 20 branches each year over a period of 20 years and involving an expenditure of $4,000,000.

Creation of the new system was recommended by Mayor Curley while he was a member of the examining committee of the library two years ago and was among the projected improvements to which he pledged himself in his inaugural last January.

The mayor has approved architects' sketches for the two units as submitted by the library trustees. Ralph Adams Cram designed the Mission Hill branch, and has given it a form and spirit to harmonize with the Mission Church, although unable to employ the same basic material, a type of stone which has now been exhausted.

It will be of Weymouth seam-faced granite, a single story high, with leaded casement windows and slate roof. Reading rooms on the main floor will be augmented by an assembly hall in the basement. The seal of the library trustees will be seen over the main entrance.

The Mattapan branch, also one story high, was designed by Putnam & Corbridge. It will be in the Georgian style, of red brick and white stone trimmings, with a copper lantern resembling a cupola adorning the roof. All reading and assembly rooms will be on the first floor, leaving the basement for engine and storage room. In announcing the detailed plans, Mayor Curley said that realization of the 20-year program will give Boston the finest public library system in the world. He said:

We already have one of the three great scholarly collections of books in the United States, the other two being in the Congressional library at Washington and in New York. Our physical facilities, however, have not kept pace with the requirements of a great and growing city, and the program which is now being put into effect will correct this condition. The trustees, with the assistance of various departments in City hall, have made a careful survey, in conformity with the recommendations of a recent examining committee, on which I had the honor to serve. I have urged the trustees to use all possible haste, and am assured that the two structures will be ready for occupancy in the fall. There will be nothing better of the kind anywhere.

Boston Transcript

124 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

(Entered at the Post Office, Boston, Mass., as Second Class Mail Matter)

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 20, 1930

THE LIBRARIAN

BOSTON'S immemorial culture and taste for scholarship remains secure, for according to the latest annual report of the Public Library, there were, on the last day of 1929, 5309 more cardholders than a year previously. Charles F. D. Belden, the director, declares that in every other phase of its life the Boston Public Library has shown health growth. There was a gain in circulation of over 30,000. It is not possible to keep a record of the innumerable patrons who have crowded into the various reading rooms throughout the year and who have consulted books there. With the increased interest in adult education the number of these continuously grows larger.

Pure scholarship was recognized last year by many acquisitions to the library's already splendid resources. The most noteworthy was the purchase of the library of Professor William P. Trent of Columbia University. This contains the most valuable material in existence on the life and work of Daniel Defoe. There is no excuse for Bostonians neglecting the author of "Robinson Crusoe" now, "friend indeed in all the necessities of this mortal life." Insisted the shrewd old servant in "The Moonstone." Several manuscripts and some rare seventeenth century books were also bought.

House-cleaning and alteration went on throughout the year on a large scale at the library. The supporting piles which were found to have rotted badly have been replaced with foundations of steel and concrete. The Librarian recalls this interesting and eerie work. It went on in a sub-subway world, where workmen in rubber hipboots worked with pumps in the glare of acetylene torches. That oozy "made land" on which the building stands has been vanquished at last. Mural decorations on the second floor were carefully cleaned and the marble vestibule repaired. New fire doors have been built at various locations and additional fire extinguishers provided. The fountain basin in the beautiful court has likewise been reconstructed.

What has improved and beautified the building more than anything else, however, are the numerous changes on the third floor. The reconstruction of the North Gallery, the shifting of the Music Division into the Barton-Ticknor Room and the rich equipment of the new Music Room, formerly the Brown Room, add to the magnificence of the building and increase its usefulness. Let us hope that the Fine Arts will be next in line for improvement. The quiet luxury of the North Gallery, with its fireproof shelves and cases, emphasizes the hazardous, cramped conditions in the neighboring department, where overcrowded wooden shelves are still in use. In spite of the difficulties under which the Fine Arts Department works, the attendants have made great progress in a comprehensive reorganization of the picture collection. The large assortment of mounted pictures for circulation, known as the School Collection, has also been reclassified. The lantern slide collection has been rearranged on a simpler and more effective system.

Owing to the confusion of reconstruction in the Barton-Ticknor Division last year, there was a slight decrease in the use of books. To balance this, a great gain was observed in the use of the Prince collection, which contains the early Americana of the Library. This was due to the Tercentenary Celebration. An excellent suggestion is that photostat copies be made of the rare imprints of which the only copies are in the special collections and which are in constant demand by readers.

The Music Division has to its credit a continuation of its series of interpretative lectures on symphony concerts and opera, with which has been issued annotated programs and booklets. The collection has been enriched by generous gifts from publishers of recorded music, and it is hoped that eventually there will be a new music room with suitable provision for audition, so that students may be able to compare the recorded performances with the scores.

How many library patrons have ever heard of the Shelf Division of the Boston Public Library? Some probably have a vague idea that this department has charge of dusting shelves and arranging books on them in an orderly manner. On the contrary, this division has charge of classifying books, deciding what the call-number of each shall be, noting them in the accession book, as well as deciding where they shall go in the stacks.

Last year was an unusually busy one for this department. The Trent Collection, mentioned above, was sorted and shelved, the whole Statistical Department was rearranged and put in numerical order, and the various Special Collections on the third floor shifted about, while structural improvements were going on.

The Bates Hall Center Room is now connected directly with the stacks, a great advantage to those who apply for books there. A substantial increase is reported in the use of the department by mail. In all, 872 requests for information were received and answered during the year.

People all over the United States make use of the Division of Genealogy. As the annual report says, "The number of inquiries for the genealogy of families of other than English origin is on the increase, indicating a growing interest on the part of our more recent immigrants in their family history." Some, indeed, have become so excessively family-conscious that they apply for coats-of-arms. The department obligingly provides drawings of these, free of charge.

More Books, the Bulletin of the Library, has completed its fourth year and has won increased appreciation among its many readers. Ten issues were published last year, as against nine in 1928. The success of More Books is partly due to the fact that it publishes the lists of new books in "digest" form, instead of the earlier dictionary form. Then, too, its brilliant and penetrating articles of bibliographical and literary interest are widely cherished.

If you are inclined to think that the crowds in the periodical room have simply dropped in to get a look at the humorous weeklies or follow a continued story, you are vastly mistaken. Many earnest seekers after knowledge are there, as well, including students from various schools and colleges. Innumerable have been the requests for material which has to do with books and authors. "Book reviews," the report states, "and criticisms of literary style, comparisons of authors of books are in constant demand. Biographies of authors and any bit of information, especially if it has a quality of human interest, are asked for by the reading public. The number of biographies of authors in the clipping file has increased one hundred per cent during the past year."

The Statistical Department has now been completely reorganized. Current use of books, to balance this, a great gain was observed in the use of the Prince collection, which contains the early Americana of the Library. This was due to the Tercentenary Celebration. An excellent suggestion is that photostat copies be made of the rare imprints of which the only copies are in the special collections and which are in constant demand by readers.

The Music Division has to its credit a continuation of its series of interpretative lectures on symphony concerts and opera, with which has been issued annotated programs and booklets. The collection has been enriched by generous gifts from publishers of recorded music, and it is hoped that eventually there will be a new music room with suitable provision for audition, so that students may be able to compare the recorded performances with the scores.

How many library patrons have ever heard of the Shelf Division of the Boston Public Library? Some probably have a vague idea that this department has charge of dusting shelves and arranging books on them in an orderly manner. On the contrary, this division has charge of classifying books, deciding what the call-number of each shall be, noting them in the accession book, as well as deciding where they shall go in the stacks.

Last year was an unusually busy one for this department. The Trent Collection, mentioned above, was sorted and shelved, the whole Statistical Department was rearranged and put in numerical order, and the various Special Collections on the third floor shifted about, while structural improvements were going on.

The Bates Hall Center Room is now connected directly with the stacks, a great advantage to those who apply for books there. A substantial increase is reported in the use of the department by mail. In all, 872 requests for information were received and answered during the year.

People all over the United States make use of the Division of Genealogy. As the annual report says, "The number of inquiries for the genealogy of families of other than English origin is on the increase, indicating a growing interest on the part of our more recent immigrants in their family history." Some, indeed, have become so excessively family-conscious that they apply for coats-of-arms. The department obligingly provides drawings of these, free of charge.

More Books, the Bulletin of the Library, has completed its fourth year and has won increased appreciation among its many readers. Ten issues were published last year, as against nine in 1928. The success of More Books is partly due to the fact that it publishes the lists of new books in "digest" form, instead of the earlier dictionary form. Then, too, its brilliant and penetrating articles of bibliographical and literary interest are widely cherished.

If you are inclined to think that the crowds in the periodical room have simply dropped in to get a look at the humorous weeklies or follow a continued story, you are vastly mistaken. Many earnest seekers after knowledge are there, as well, including students from various schools and colleges. Innumerable have been the requests for material which has to do with books and authors. "Book reviews," the report states, "and criticisms of literary style, comparisons of authors of books are in constant demand. Biographies of authors and any bit of information, especially if it has a quality of human interest, are asked for by the reading public. The number of biographies of authors in the clipping file has increased one hundred per cent during the past year."

The Statistical Department has now been completely reorganized. Current use of books, to balance this, a great gain was observed in the use of the Prince collection, which contains the early Americana of the Library. This was due to the Tercentenary Celebration. An excellent suggestion is that photostat copies be made of the rare imprints of which the only copies are in the special collections and which are in constant demand by readers.

The Music Division has to its credit a continuation of its series of interpretative lectures on symphony concerts and opera, with which has been issued annotated programs and booklets. The collection has been enriched by generous gifts from publishers of recorded music, and it is hoped that eventually there will be a new music room with suitable provision for audition, so that students may be able to compare the recorded performances with the scores.

How many library patrons have ever heard of the Shelf Division of the Boston Public Library? Some probably have a vague idea that this department has charge of dusting shelves and arranging books on them in an orderly manner. On the contrary, this division has charge of classifying books, deciding what the call-number of each shall be, noting them in the accession book, as well as deciding where they shall go in the stacks.

Last year was an unusually busy one for this department. The Trent Collection, mentioned above, was sorted and shelved, the whole Statistical Department was rearranged and put in numerical order, and the various Special Collections on the third floor shifted about, while structural improvements were going on.

The Bates Hall Center Room is now connected directly with the stacks, a great advantage to those who apply for books there. A substantial increase is reported in the use of the department by mail. In all, 872 requests for information were received and answered during the year.

People all over the United States make use of the Division of Genealogy. As the annual report says, "The number of inquiries for the genealogy of families of other than English origin is on the increase, indicating a growing interest on the part of our more recent immigrants in their family history." Some, indeed, have become so excessively family-conscious that they apply for coats-of-arms. The department obligingly provides drawings of these, free of charge.

More Books, the Bulletin of the Library, has completed its fourth year and has won increased appreciation among its many readers. Ten issues were published last year, as against nine in 1928. The success of More Books is partly due to the fact that it publishes the lists of new books in "digest" form, instead of the earlier dictionary form. Then, too, its brilliant and penetrating articles of bibliographical and literary interest are widely cherished.

If you are inclined to think that the crowds in the periodical room have simply dropped in to get a look at the humorous weeklies or follow a continued story, you are vastly mistaken. Many earnest seekers after knowledge are there, as well, including students from various schools and colleges. Innumerable have been the requests for material which has to do with books and authors. "Book reviews," the report states, "and notify the library of class assignments, often giving an idea of their requirements a week in advance. Some teachers take pride in having a class of one hundred per cent borrowers."

Many departments of the Library have a rest from their labors in summer, but not the Teachers' Room. Attendants there work just as hard all the year round. It appears that the most consistent and serious readers are found among those students who attend the summer schools in this vicinity. "Coming as they do from different localities with the definite purpose of making the season count for as much as possible, they make intensive use of books and periodicals for six solid weeks."

The Library Training Class is still flourishing, and now has a classroom of its own. Last year—which was the second for the class—seventeen students were enrolled; six from outside the library who took the full eight months course; three library assistants enrolled on part time to begin the course after finish in two years; and eight more library assistants continued on part time the work begun a year ago, and graduated in June. Readers' adviser work has also gone on steadily.

One blushes for Boston on reading in the annual report that nearly 15,000 "missing" books are recorded. "Missing" books, as the text explains, "include those lost by theft or otherwise unaccounted for." Missing books, as any librarian will tell you, are seldom permanently gone. The "borrower" may be stricken with an attack of conscience months later, and sneak one or several of them back to the library. Then, too, stack attendants occasionally put volumes in the wrong place on the shelves, and until these are discovered by Argus-eyed shelf readers, they too figure as missing.

Circulation is considered, by some, to be the life force of libraries. The record of the Boston Public Library is in this respect, interesting. There has been a slight decrease in some departments, owing to the noise and confusion of reconstruction. The numerous stagings throughout the building scared away some nervous patrons. While the flooring in the front hall was being replaced, many peered in, then backed away, murmuring, with Gelett Burgess:

I wish that I had a floor.
I don't mind not having a door.
But this crawling around
Without touching the ground,
Is getting to be such a bore.

The issue department, which not only had a new flooring laid, but was cluttered with a staging while the Abbey paintings were being cleaned, lost slightly over 15,000. The special libraries, which perhaps suffered most of any department, circulated 33,110 books, about the same as last year.

Circulation among children, throughout the branches, as well as in the Central Library, showed a gain of 27,705. Total circulation throughout the branches was definitely ahead of 1928, by the splendid gain of 46,784. The Librarian was delighted to see that the little open shelf room had a large circulation increase, though it, too, suffered from the floor under construction, as it opens off the main entrance hall. This year the circulation there is 49,165, as compared with 47,544 in 1928. Since 1921 the circulation has increased by 17,974 volumes. So crowded is it in the tiny department during the winter months that you select your reading at the risk of suffocation.

Once again the board of trustees repeats what was said in the report of last year. The Librarian, too, finds it well worth repeating: "We wish to stress the need of more money for the purchase of books; we hope for larger city appropriations for this purpose and for gifts from individuals for the establishment of book funds. A public-spirited citizen can leave no better memorial than a fund which shall supply a steady stream of valuable new books for the use of the public; such a fund is a spring of intellectual nourishment contributing richly to the life of the community. Provided with a proper book-plate, each book is a worthy reminder during untold years to come of the man or woman whose generosity has brought it into the hands of the reader who needs it."

School use of the Children's Room throughout the system has increased notably. Indeed, in several of the Branches which are near school buildings there has been a growth in the number of pupils allowed to come to the Library for reference work during school hours. This pressure is relieved on both teacher and librarian and the pupil, in each case, receives more personal attention. "Teachers," says the report, "are prompt to

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT. WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 20, 1930

THE BIBLIOGRAPHER

IT is to be hoped that the midsummer calls on the staff of the Boston Public Library for "light summer reading" have not interfered with the continuation in the library's organ, More Books, of the cataloguing of the collection of incunabula on its shelves. Since the United States Government has spent a million dollars and a half for the Voltaire collection of incunabula, there has been an awakened public interest in the books printed before the year 1500. The start made in cataloguing this collection, under the direction of Zoltan Haraszti, the able editor of the publications of the library, attracted the general attention of scholars, as nothing quite approaching it in completeness had heretofore been attempted in this country. While old books in Latin printed more than 400 years ago may not have a wide appeal to the general public, such a catalogue as has been started in the Boston Public Library will do much to increase a more general appreciation of their value and importance. Furthermore, those to whom such a catalogue makes its widest appeal are not those who read a book once and toss it aside, or those who merely glance at incunabula as something merely old and curious. The Public Library's catalogue not only describes briefly and accurately from a bibliographical standpoint these old books, but tells of their contents, their authors, the reason why these books were written, the times in which they had their birth, their early printers, and all those facts which supply a cross-section of the cultural life of the Middle Ages. In fact, it is impossible to understand the Middle Ages without such a background as such a catalogue supplies. Most of the incunabula catalogues are merely bibliographical; that of the Boston Public Library is biographical and historical as well, and the authorities of the library are deserving of high praise for their encouragement of an undertaking which puts knowledge in the hands of those who will make the best use of such knowledge. It is hoped that the work will not only be continued in "More Books," but that it will be issued in separate form. Such action would not only be of benefit to scholars, but would serve to attract general public attention to the treasures of the library and would advertise the institution as being thoroughly up-to-date in its work of promoting, like the Smithsonian Institution, "the increase and diffusion of knowledge among men."

More Books

From the standpoint of the book collector, the most interesting features of the annual report of Director Charles F. D. Belden of the Boston Public Library are the announcement of the purchase of the Defoe collection of the late William P. Trent of Columbia University, and the attention given to the importance of More Books, the valuable "house organ" of the library, which is in constant increasing demand. This publication, now in its fourth year, has long been valued by other libraries and by students, but the surprising fact is shown that whereas the last Quarterly Bulletin in 1923 circulated only about 4000 copies to the general public, in 1929 no less than 35,000 were similarly called for. Attention has already been called, in these columns, to the catalogue of incunabula appearing serially in this bulletin, but the director quotes the titles of many other special articles which are of great value and interest to readers. The library still suffers from the demand for more of the popular fiction which is read today and forgotten tomorrow, but which every patron of the library thinks he must read because the book is talked about. As it is manifestly impossible, even if it were expedient, to buy enough copies of this merely ephemeral literature to supply everybody, the suggestion is made that the trustees might well consider a small charge for extra copies of such books. Most of these popular "best sellers" become waste paper after being read a few times, and the library might find much better use for its money than spending it for temporary popular entertainment.

THE BIBLIOGRAPHER

Boston Daily Globe.

FRIDAY, AUG 22, 1930

LIBRARY REFLECTS HABITS OF READERS

Receipts of $20,348.65
From Small Fines

14,497 Volumes Vanished From Shelves Last Year

Habits of the people of Boston are reflected items of the annual report for 1929 of the trustees of the Boston Public Library, just printed and released for distribution.

Included among the receipts of the city's public library system is $20,348.65, all of which was paid in small fines by men and women who did not bring their books back on time.

Still another item represents the people who did not bring their books back at all, having lost them. This payment for lost books amounted last year to $1136.23, and these two items, both due to the habits of the book borrowers, make up practically the whole of the income of the library system, aside from the support of the city treasury.

Other items in this income account show $709.02 was received from the commissions on the public telephone booths, $537.31 from the sale of waste paper and $52.50 from the sale of catalogues.

During the past year 14,497 volumes disappeared off the open shelves to which the public has access. Of these, 5080 were reported missing from the Copley-square library and 9417 from the various branch libraries throughout the city. Some of these books, it is said, will probably turn up, having been misplaced in the wrong section of the library.

During the year 41,335 volumes were withdrawn from circulation because they were worn out and 1338 more were withdrawn because there seemed to be no demand for the part of borrowers. To replace these books 112,346 volumes were added, 84,339 of them by purchase and 18,007 by gift or exchange.

The total expenditure for books, periodicals and newspapers last year was $192,033.98, and the total number of volumes now in the Central Library and the various branches is 1,575,745.

The outstanding purchase of the past year was that of the entire library of Dr. William P. Trent of Columbia University. This library consists chiefly of the works of Daniel Defoe or relating to his period in literary history and is of great value to scholars, undoubtedly the greatest Defoe collection in existence. It includes 7583 volumes.

MAYOR CURLEY STARTS IMPROVING LIBRARY FACILITIES FOR BOSTON— TWO BRANCH EDIFICES TO BE ERECTED IN NEAR FUTURE AT COST OF $100,000 EACH—FOLLOWS OUT IDEA OF COMPREHENSIVE SYSTEM OUT- LINED BY HIM AFTER STUDY WITH EXAMINING COMMITTEE.

Mayor Curley has approved sketches submitted by the Trustees of the Boston Public Library and work will soon start on two new branches. They are to cost $100,000 each, and are the first two units of the comprehensive system recommended by Mayor, then ex-Mayor, Curley, when he was a member of the Examining Committee of the Public Library, about two years ago. The whole program calls for the building of two other branches every year for nineteen more years. It is expected that these buildings will be adequate for the needs of Boston for another generation, at least, perhaps indefinitely.

In giving out the sketches, Mayor Curley said: "Boston will soon have the finest public library system, not only in the United States, but in the world. We already have one of the three great scholarly collections of books in the United States, the other two being in the New York. Our physical facilities, however, have not kept pace with the requirements of a great and growing city, and the program which is now being put into effect will correct this condition. The trustees, with the assistance of various departments in City Hall, have made a careful survey, in conformity with the recommendations of a recent Examining Committee, on which I had the honor to serve. I understand that plans have been matured for further expansion year by year. I have urged the trustees to use all possible haste, and am assured that the two structures will be ready for occupancy in the fall. There will be nothing better of the kind anywhere.

"It is a particular source of gratification to me that the trustees followed my suggestion and selected Ralph Adams Cram, of Cram and Ferguson, as architect for the first of the two buildings designed, the one at Parker Hill. Mr. Cram is the foremost architect, everything considered, in the world. The Cathedral of St. John the Divine, in New York, will be but one of a series of noble monuments designed or supervised by him. This branch library is to be at the lower end of the municipal playground in Parker Hill. At the other end is the large Mission Church. I believe that the whole neighborhood will feel in many ways the effects of this little gem of architecture designed personally by Mr. Cram. It is not too much to say that this sets a new standard for small library construction.

"The architects of the other branch, the one at Mattapan, are Putnam and Cox, who designed the beautiful Kirstein Memorial branch in City Hall avenue. Their work is very well known throughout the United States, and the Amherst College buildings, which they designed, are considered splendid examples of American architecture at its best. Like the branch at Parker Hill, this Mattapan building will serve a large and growing population. When all our twenty branches are completed, Boston will be pointed to everywhere as having carried out the ideals which many persons have expressed, but which no city has ever carried out."

ARCHITECT'S DRAWING OF BRANCH LIBRARY IN PARKER HILL, DISTRICT, ROXBURY, WORK ON WHICH HAS BEEN STARTED BY MAYOR CURLEY.

ANOTHER TYPE OF BRANCH LIBRARY BEING BUILT IN SUBURBS IN MAYOR CURLEY'S PLAN FOR COMPLETING SYSTEM FOR CITY.

Boston Post Aug. 29, 1930

Little Walks About Boston

BY WILLIAM JUSTIN MANN

The current issue of "More Books," the monthly bulletin of the Boston Public Library, is especially rewarding. In it you will find a very full and interesting description of the present Tercentenary Exhibit at the library, prepared by Zoltan Haraszti, the editor of the bulletin.

The dominant note in this exhibition in the new Treasure Room is naturally in harmony with this tercentenary year, and two-thirds of the material displayed has to do with the Puritan settlement here. "The Humble Request," the farewell address of Governor Winthrop and his companions to the brethren of the Church of England, whom they were now leaving; the first draft of the Freeman's Oath in the handwriting of John Winthrop, and a copy of the "Bay Colony Records," are prominent among the exhibits.

Then there is a copy of "New-England's Plantation," by Francis Higginson, the Salem minister, and close to it is the "Planter's Bloe," by the

Rev. John White, the "Father of Dorchester," although he never came here, and one of the most potent supporters of New England colonization. Edward Johnson's "Wonder-working Providence," a history of New England from 1620 to 1682, is another of the important books shown.

The Mather Papers are in themselves a real treasure. They fill seven volumes containing innumerable autograph letters written by Richard, Increase and Cotton Mather, by John Cotton, and by almost every prominent clergyman of the century. These Mather Papers belong to the Prince Collection, and were arranged in their present order by Thomas Prince himself.

But this exhibit is comprehensive in its scope, and recognizes the unity of the story of America in the respective epochs of its discovery and of its colonization. The first map of a portion of America, the first reference to the New World, the first sketch of Columbus' life—it is with these and like material that, as the editor says, the exhibition begins.

Nor are later phases of the history of Massachusetts and of Boston neglected. Among the fairest fruits of New England's settlement are those which ripened in our golden age of letters. First Editions of Emerson, Hawthorne, Longfellow, Lowell, Thoreau, Whittier, and Holmes, are among the exhibits, and show how wide is the scope of the plan and of the arrangement of this most interesting exhibition.

'DESPICABLE,' SAYS CURLEY OF SHAW'S AVOWAL OWN FATHER WAS DRUNKARD; 'LACKING IN TASTE,' BELDEN'S OPINION

English Author, Attacked
By Powell, Is Defended
Warmly by Merwin

By H. F. MANCHESTER

While no one is exactly surprised at anything that George Bernard Shaw may choose to say or do, his recent rattling of his family skeleton has aroused mixed emotions among his admirers, and has drawn him anew into the field of newspaper controversy to which he is not entirely a stranger.

When Shaw has blithely proclaimed himself the world's greatest playwright, or has aired his humorously-technoclastic views on all things on earth or in the heavens above, front-page dispatches provocative of high amusement have generally resulted. Rotogravure pictures of the bearded litterateur engaged in absorbing, half-clad, his ultra-violet, have also helped to forge him a halo of droll and benevolent eccentricity. In short, with the passage of time he has been accorded general immunity—it has seemed that he enjoyed the privilege of a life-time shooting license.

Now has Shaw abused the privilege? Ask the critical game-wardens on his trail?

SHAW'S PROMPT RETORT TO MINISTER'S ATTACK

"If you can't get rid of the family skeleton you may still make it dance," Shaw wrote recently in a biographical preface to a new edition of his works, and then calmly stated that his parents were socially ostracized because his father was a drunkard.

"If he were asked to a dinner or a party," he added, in the statement which has now circled the globe, "he was not quite sober when he arrived, and was invariably scandalously drunk when he left."

While some point out that his revelations are in keeping with the tone of modern biography, others quote the Biblical injunction: "Honor thy father and mother." Dr. J. C. Carlisle, English preacher and ex-president of the Baptist Union, is one of the latter. He made Shaw's statement the subject of a sermon and attacked the author indignantly.

"No doubt all that Mr. Shaw says about the old man's manners and drunken habits is true," he said from the pulpit, "but it is not chivalrous to bring back from the dead and exhibit his nastiness as an excuse for his son's rudeness."

The writer, whose plays have consistently ridiculed prevalent ideas of chivalry, replied immediately: "This appears to me to be the sort of reprimand which usually comes from people who think that because the truth is unpleasant one should tell a lie. I really write and tell the truth, and if a story is to be told about my family I would rather tell it myself in my own way than leave it to a gentleman who might be out just to tell lies."

When Carlisle talks about speaking well of the dead, how far is he willing to carry that? I wonder, if he happened to be preaching about Henry VIII or

SAMUEL MERWIN.
Queen Mary, would he say nothing disparaging about them?—must people be

Top, George Bernard Shaw. Below, left to right, Mayor James M. Curley and Charles F. D. Belden, city of Boston librarian.

In a biographical preface to a new edition of his works, George Bernard Shaw wrote recently that, because his father was a drunkard, his parents were socially ostracized. "If he were asked to a dinner or a party," added the celebrated English author and playwright, "he was not quite sober when he arrived, and was invariably scandalously drunk when he left."

This statement quickly went around the world and excited lively comment, much of it in the form of sharp criticism.

necessary and lacking in taste for him to describe in detail his unpleasant habits.

"It is true that biographical fashions have changed," he said, "and where once it was the custom of writers to mention only the good in a man, often at the expense of the whole truth, now we learn all manner of things about the foibles, weaknesses and misdemeanors of men of the past. This hardly excuses Mr. Shaw when he is engaged in writing of his own father. If you or I were writing of him, we might go more fully into his weaknesses and still remain within the pale of good taste. Wouldn't it have been far better if Mr. Shaw had simply stated that his father was a hard-drinking man and had allowed the reader to decide for himself what effect it had upon the family life?

"It is a question how much the public has a right to know about the private lives of people. There have been notable revelations of intimate matters which have been severely questioned as to taste. In reading D'Annunzio's novel with its thinly masked episodes supposedly from the life of Duse, one has perhaps knowing something of his reasons for writing it. My present reaction is that objections to his statements are sentimental twaddle. I find myself more in sympathy with him because a minister has seen fit to denounce him. We can never arrive at any degree of civilization until we get rid of the minister point of view—the reactionary, self-righteous, inquisitorial habit of intrusion.

If we put this statement of Shaw's back two or three generations, we would not think of criticizing it. If it had been made by a French literary man, it is doubtful if it would cause a flurry. Anglo-Saxons hate the truth, and love to build preposterous walls around their cherished illusions. We all want to pretend.

I have always found Bernard Shaw to be a truth-teller among Pharisees, and if I knew all the facts of the case I think I would agree with him.

The two countries will be ready for each other in a day. There will be nothing better to be had anywhere.

It is a particular source of gratification to me that the trustees followed my suggestion and selected Ralph Adams Cram, of Cranston and Lexington, as architect for the two buildings designed, the one at Parker Hill. Mr. Cram is the foremost architect, everything considered, in the world. The Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York will be but one of a series of noble monuments designed or supervised by him. This branch library is to be in the lower end of the municipal playground in Parker Hill. At the other end is the large Mission Church. I believe that the whole neighborhood will feel in many ways the effects of this fine gem of architecture designed personally by Mr. Cram. It is not too much to say that this sets a new standard for small library construction.

The architects of the other branch, the one at Mattapan, are Putnam and Cox, who designed the beautiful Kirsten Memorial branch in City Hall avenue. Their work is very well known throughout the United States, and the Anderson College buildings, which they designed, are considered splendid examples of American architecture at its best. Like the branch at Parker Hill, this Mattapan building will serve a large and growing population. When all our twenty branches are completed, Boston will be pointed to everywhere as having carried out the ideals which many persons have expressed, but which no city has ever carried out.

ANOTHER TYPE OF BRANCH LIBRARY BEING BUILT IN SUBURBS IN MAYOR CURLEY'S PLAN FOR COMPLETING SYSTEM FOR CITY.

Boston Post Aug 29, 1930

Little Walks About Boston

BY WILLIAM JUSTIN MANN

The current issue of "More Books," the monthly bulletin of the Boston Public Library, is especially rewarding. In it you will find a very full and interesting description of the present Tercentenary exhibit at the library, prepared by Zoltan Haraszti, the editor of the bulletin.

The dominant note in this exhibition in the new Treasure Room is naturally in harmony with this tercentenary year, and two-thirds of the material displayed has to do with the Puritan settlement here. "The Humble Remonstrance," the farewell address of Governor Winthrop and his companions to the brethren of the church of England, whom they were now leaving, the first draft of the Freeman's oath, the first handwriting of John Winthrop, and a copy of the "Bay Psalm Book," are among the "Bay Colony Records,"

Then there is a copy of "New-England's Plantation," by Francis Higginson, the Salem minister, and close to it is the "Planters Plea," by the

Rev. John White, the "Father of Dorchester," although he never came here, and one of the most potent supporters of New England colonization. Edward Johnson's "Wonder-working Providence," a history of New England from 1628 to 1632, is another of the important books shown.

The Mayflower Papers are in themselves a real treasure. They fit seven volumes containing invaluable autographs, letters written by Richard, Increase and Cotton Mather, by John Cotton, and by almost every prominent clergyman of the century. These Mayflower Papers belong to the Prince Collection, and were arranged in their present order by Thomas Prince himself.

But this exhibit is comprehensive in its scope, and recognizes the duty of each of its discoverers and of its collection. The first man of a portion of New World, the first reference to the first life of it with these and the next edition begins.

Now are later phases of the history of Massachusetts and of Boston, the first of the first fruits of New England's settlement are those of the first editions of Emerson, Hawthorne, Longfellow, Lowell, Thoreau, Whitman, and Holmes, are among the exhibits, and show how wide is the scope of the plan and of the arrangement of this most interesting exhibition.

the passage of time—it has accorded general immunity—it has seemed that he enjoyed the privilege of a life-time shooting license.

Now has Shaw abused the privilege? Ask the critical game-wardens on his trail?

SHAW'S PROMPT RETORT TO MINISTER'S ATTACK

"If you can't get rid of the family skeleton you may still make it dance," Shaw wrote recently in a biographical preface to a new edition of his works, and then calmly stated that his parents were socially ostracized because his father was a drunkard.

"If he were asked to a dinner or a party," he added, in the statement which has now circled the globe, "he was not quite sober when he arrived, and was invariably scandalously drunk when he left."

While some point out that his revelations are in keeping with the tone of modern biography, others quote the Bible and injunction: "Honor thy father and mother." Dr. J. C. Carlisle, English preacher and ex-president of the Baptist Union, is one of the latter. He made Shaw's statement the subject of a sermon and attacked the author indignantly.

No doubt all that Mr. Shaw says about the old man's manners and drunken habits is true," he said from the pulpit, "but it is not chivalrous to bring back from the dead and exhibit his madness as an excuse for his son's rudeness."

The writer, whose plays have consistently ridiculed prevalent ideas of chivalry, replied immediately. "This appears to me to be the sort of reprimand which usually comes from people who think that because the truth is unpleasant one should tell a lie. I really write and tell the truth, and if a story is to be told about my family I would rather tell to a gentleman who might be out just to tell lies."

"When Carlisle talks about speaking well of the dead, how far is he willing to carry that? I wonder, if he happened to be preaching about Henry VIII or

SAMUEL MERWIN.

Queen Mary, would he say nothing disparaging about them?

"It is better to wait until people are dead before one says anything unkind about them. The idea that we shouldn't say anything unkind about the dead is a thoroughly false one."

CENSURE FROM MAYOR CURLEY
The reporter has asked several prominent Bostonians for their comment on Shaw's attitude. Mayor Curley, the first to be consulted, condemns the dramatist vigorously.

George Bernard Shaw, in his exposition of the weakness or the sin of his father, is deserving both of pity and censure. It is most unfortunate that a man who has achieved the distinction in the literary world which has been achieved by Mr. Shaw should not have terminated his literary career before embarking upon his present venture in quest of notoriety. The greatest master of English composition the world has ever known, himself an Englishman, William Shakespeare, once uttered a great truth which is applicable in the case of George Bernard Shaw, wherein he said "To my virtues be most kind, and to my faults a little blunt."

In America there has been developed in the past half century a great fraternal organization. The cornerstone upon which it rests is respect for the dead, its motto being, "The faults of our brother we write upon the sands of time; his virtues upon the tablet of love and memory."

The dead are entitled to rest in peace, and to have only that which has been praiseworthy in life said of them. One of the most deplorable features of certain contemporary biographers is the disclosure of every little or great evil connected with those who have passed to the Great Beyond and who are no longer able to present a defense.

Nothing can be more despicable than the presentation of a story such as Shaw has unfolded with reference to his father. It should merit him the contempt and ignominy which such a course deserves.

MR. BELDEN'S OPINION

Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, stated that he would not have had Mr. Shaw depart from the truth in writing of his father, but is of the opinion that it was unnecessary and lacking in taste for him to describe in detail his unpleasant habits.

Left, Bernard Shaw. Below, left to right, Mayor James M. Curley and Charles F. D. Belden, city of Boston librarian.

In a biographical preface to a new edition of his works, George Bernard Shaw wrote recently that, because his father was a drunkard, his parents were socially ostracized. "If he were asked to a dinner or a party," added the celebrated English author and playwright, "he was not quite sober when he arrived, and was invariably scandalously drunk when he left."

This statement quickly went around the world and excited lively comment, much of it in the form of sharp criticism.

"It is true that biographical fashion has changed," he said, "and where once it was the custom of writers to mention only the good in a man, often at the expense of the whole truth, now we learn all manner of things about the foibles, weaknesses and misdemeanors of men of the past. This hardly excuses Mr. Shaw when he is engaged in writing of his own father. If you or I were writing of him, we might go more fully into his weaknesses and still remain within the pale of good taste. Wouldn't it have been far better if Mr. Shaw had simply stated that his father was a hard-drinking man, and had allowed the reader to decide for himself what effect it had upon the family life?"

"It is a question how much the public has a right to know about the private lives of people. There have been notable revelations of intimate matters which have been severely questioned as to taste. In reading D'Annunzio's novel with its thinly masked episodes supposedly from the life of Duse, one has a feeling of intruding where he has no right. The publication of Browning's love letters by his son was held by some to be lacking in taste."

"Mr. Shaw's reference to Henry VIII and Queen Mary seem to be hardly relevant. I agree on the whole with Philip Guedala's rule that when the vices or misdemeanors of a prominent person directly affected his performance of his public duties and had an influence on the condition of society and the shaping of policies, then they cannot honestly be ignored in a biographical estimate. But this does not apply to the case of Shaw's father."

HARFORD POWELL'S COMMENT
Harford Powell, biographer and novelist, saw a direct play for newspaper headlines in the dramatist's unusual frankness.

"If I had been Bernard Shaw's father," he said, "I would have been drunk all the time. For many years Shaw has been consistently breaking into the newspaper headlines by finding out what most people believe and then saying the opposite. If Steve Brody hadn't jumped off the Brooklyn bridge, Shaw would have done it. If it were the general custom to disparage one's parents, Shaw would speak very highly of his father. Shaw has had years of practice in standing on his head, but here it is a grave question as to the cumulative effect of this practice. In spite of all his antics, I still have a feeling that he is a pretty good fellow underneath, but even the most enthusiastic admirers of his plays cannot praise him when he throws a bottle into the family burying ground."

MERWIN CHAMPIONS SHAW

The author, Samuel Merwin, expressing great confidence in the wisdom of whatever Mr. Shaw may choose to say, declared:

Mr. Shaw has devoted his whole life to speaking unpalatable truths, and I have never found him to be far from right. I have admired him many times because he has refused to apply the whitewash of lies which is so popular among Anglo-Saxons, and I hardly think I would condemn him for his recent statements if I were in full possession of the facts.

It is true that a question of taste is involved, and one cannot give his final opinion without seeing what he wrote in its entirety, and perhaps knowing something of his reasons for writing it. My present reaction is that objections to his statements are sentimental twaddle. I find myself more in sympathy with him because a minister has seen fit to denounce him. We can never arrive at any degree of civilization until we get rid of the minister point of view—the reactionary, self-righteous, inquisitorial habit of intrusion.

If we put this statement of Shaw's back two or three generations, we would not think of criticizing it. If it had been made by a French literary man, it is doubtful if it would cause a flurry. Anglo-Saxons hate the truth, and love to build preposterous walls around their cherished illusions. We all want to pretend.

I have always found Bernard Shaw to be a truth-teller among Pharisees, and if I knew all the facts of the case I think I would agree with him.

THE BOSTON HERALD

SUNDAY, AUGUST 31, 1930

BRANCH LIBRARIES

To the Editor of The Herald:

The Boston Public Library system is doubtless one of the most serviceable and efficient in the world. It is possible that the geographical distribution of the branch libraries might be improved in one or two cases. On Blue Hill avenue, for instance, there is not a single branch library from Grove Hall to Walk Hill street. But on the whole there is very little fault to be found with the selection of titles, the delivery system from the central library, the accommodations in the reading rooms, etc. The librarians are uniformly courteous and obliging, and often seek out opportunities to be of service. Let me illustrate.

A short time ago I applied at the Codman Square Branch for some books on Hindu religion and mythology. There seems to be considerable local interest in the subject, for none of the books listed in the card catalogue happened to be on the shelves at the time. I did not ask the librarians for any assistance and they offered none.

Next I tried the Mount Bowdoin Branch, a few blocks distant. As I was fumbling about in the card catalog a librarian approached me and asked if she could be of any assistance. I explained the object of my search. She regretted that there were no source books on the subject available, but she brought over to my table several volumes of reference, all of which proved very helpful.

I was so pleased with this experience that I began to wonder why all our librarians could not be equally alert, cheerful, and anxious to help. Of course, the young ladies are very busy with the routine clerical work, but the intelligent librarian, in her spare moments, can find infinite opportunities for service. It will make her job much pleasanter, and transform her from a mere clerical worker into a creative human guide to those who frequent the reading rooms for profit or for pleasure.

It is not necessary for the librarian to have "personality." A willingness to serve, here as everywhere else, is personality enough.

S. SHERSHEVSKY.
Dorchester, Aug. 28.

THE BOSTON HERALD

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 1930

Top o' the Morning

Meditation in the Courtyard of
The Boston Public Library

Gray granite walls that tower round
the court.

Bid me stay,
The splashing fountain murmuring in the court.

Bids me stay:
The lengthening shadows warn me night is near.

Hasten home,
One wee small sparrow twittering as it here alone.

A sore and troubled spirit softly cries for release.

A sweet and perfumed silence out of space.

Murmurs peace:
The shadows grow and quiet slowly claims.

For its own
My heart, my soul and I yield all to it,
Here alone.

MERIEL P. BRADFORD.

THE BOSTON HERALD

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 3, 1930

BRANCH LIBRARIES

To the Editor of The Herald:

A letter commenting on the service at the Boston Public Library or in any of its branches is a rarity. Since we have had such a letter, may we not hope that it will stimulate interest in, and appreciation of, that considerable and kindly help which permeates our entire library system?

If personally may be defined as "one's self in action," surely "willingness to serve" is a factor in that elusive something which makes "service seem divine."

There are 31 branches or branch libraries in Boston. Each has a librarian in charge, first, and second, and general assistants, according to the size of the library; and, in some of the larger branch libraries, a children's librarian. There are no "mere clerical workers" and a "creative human guide" is a species with which I am not familiar. There is no question in the minds of the little Italian children of the North End as to the name by which they shall be called, "Library teachers" they are, and the home lessons, the research work, all the questions that baffle the young minds are brought to the library on North Bennet street for solution. "How tall is the tallest plant?" "Where's the red book that was here last year?" "What's the difference between a rabbit and a squirrel?" "How much pay do you get?" These are from the younger visitors. Older people have their problems too: the most frequent questions are, "How can I buy a library card?" "How can I get the book that tells about being American?" The English may be difficult to understand, as spoken by the foreigner, but the sympathy of the librarian interprets and understands, even anticipates his needs. Sometimes in order to come at all, little folks must bring younger brothers or sisters in arms. A request to "Hold my baby, please, while I can write" never meets a refusal, and the cheerful library worker tidies and adjusts the clothing as she renders this service.

From every branch library deposits of books are sent to schools and playgrounds. This means not only selection and dispensing, but also careful recording and collecting.

To enter the service of the library it is necessary to pass a rigid examination, to possess a degree, or equally satisfactory qualification, and to meet the approval of director and supervisor, and to serve in three different branches before appointment. Is the remuneration commensurate with the requirements? Not at all; nor has there been any considerable advance in the last 25 years to meet a changing cost of living expenses. However, love for the work and a true spirit of social service keep the ranks filled. Some day we hope Boston standards of justice will advance the wage scale of these most worthy servants.

MRS. THOMAS F. McMAHON.
Brighton, Sept. 1.

THE BOSTON HERALD

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 1930

JUDGE PARMENTER

After 28 years of service Judge James Parmenter has retired from the Boston municipal court to which Gov. Winthrop Murray Crane appointed him as an associate justice. It was a good choice. The modest and capable lawyer, long known as a scholar, proved himself the possessor of admirable qualities for the bench. It must have been a great satisfaction to him to serve in the court of which his father had been a distinguished chief justice. All his life Judge Parmenter has lived in Arlington, known as West Cambridge in the year of his birth. He had a fine career at Harvard, earning a Phi Beta Kappa key in the college and a cum laude in the law school. He took his academic degree in 1881 and began to practise law in 1885.

It seems to have been his definite purpose to keep out of the public eye. He was not an advertising judge. But his work he did well. He early earned the confidence of the community, and he kept it throughout his career. A bachelor; he lived in the old family homestead, serving his town as a library trustee and a member of the school committee. As chairman of the examining committee of the Public Library of Boston he brought in a report commended as one of the best ever rendered. We say good-bye to him as senior associate justice of the municipal court with sincere regret.

THE BOSTON HERALD

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1930

GETTING AN EDUCATION

When Ezra Cornell founded Cornell University he said his wish was to give any person an opportunity to obtain instruction in any study. Greater Boston offers that precise facility to working men and women through a multitude of educational machines which function at night as well as by day, so that those who too may study, that those whose foundation is defective may extend their education, and that those who wish to acquire technical skill for some specific purpose may obtain it, by the industrious use of leisure time.

As one scans the guide books which list Boston's offerings in this field he will wonder if any city in the country can offer more. The Boston Public Library has just issued its annual list of public educational courses under the general title of "Opportunities for Adult Education in Greater Boston." The pamphlet, so-called, contains 124 pages. The index of courses alone fills six double-column pages. Scores of institutions all over the metropolitan area, including those of great fame, have these courses to offer. Many are available through the university extension division of the state department of education and the public schools of the city.

The booklet calls attention also to the advisory service rendered without charge by the Prospect Union Educational Exchange in Cambridge, "which has exhaustive information about the educational resources" of the greater city. The union publishes a handsome booklet of 150 pages listing these opportunities. Here is another double-column, six-page index, cataloguing subjects all the way from "Accounting" to "Zoology." Whether one studies for general culture, for the mastery of a trade or profession, or for even the acquirement of skill in some recreation, here the facilities are listed. This is something for Boston to boast of.

JACOB BINDER EXHIBITS HIS TWO
PORTRAITS OF GUY H. CURRIER

GUY H. CURRIER
From Paintings by Jacob Binder

Two portraits of the late Guy H. Currier, by Jacob Binder, are on private exhibition for a few days in the artist's studio in Ipswich st. Both portraits are similar in pose and character, but one is only about half life size.

The smaller portrait was completed some weeks before Mr. Currier's sudden death, and the larger one was partially completed at that time. The first is for the family. The larger one will probably go to the Boston Public Library, of which Mr. Currier was chairman of the board of trustees when he died.

The spirit in which the portraits are painted is in keeping with the character of Mr. Currier—unconventional, the formality in pose, in color scheme and in design that marks the usual portraits from life which artists paint has not been strictly adhered to in these portraits.

But neither the dignity nor the personal character of the man has been sacrificed in these pictures; for these portraits are in a very real sense pictures, in which a certain lightness of value—a certain luminosity and color harmony—have been achieved which give them distinction.

It is as if Mr. Currier were seated easily near the window, with its colorful hangings, in his own home, and having a confidential chat with somebody. He is clad in a pearl-gray business suit, the left arm resting a little higher than the right; the head and expression in an attitude of close attention.

The fact that the coat is buttoned in an apparently indifferent way also gives the portrait a touch of character—as if he were ready for the next move, whatever it might be. The keen penetration of the man is in face, as is the indefinable charm of the man with his intimates and acquaintances.

In these respects the artist has given a counterfeit presentment of Mr. Currier, who, though a public character for many years, was not particularly familiar to the public-at-large. The silent power and character of the man are in this portrait. The head is wonderfully well painted. It is a portrait that has an artistic value aside from mere portraiture.

A. J. Philpott.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1930

THE LIBRARIAN

In the Library Journal each month is a series of sketches of "Librarian Authors." Included in the latest issue is Miss Gladys Edison Locke, of our own Boston Public Library, whose exciting mystery stories have induced many shivers in her fellow library workers and the public at large. She was born in Boston, as the chronicle says, and graduated from the Girls' Latin School, Boston University, and Simmons College in Boston. For six years she was a tutor in Latin, French and Italian and for two years was a teacher of Latin and English in the Milford, N. H., High School. Since 1917 she has been a cataloger in the Boston Public Library.

Miss Locke says that she has been writing stories ever since she was a child—fairy tales at first and later fairy plays for a theater she made out of pasteboard with paper dolls for actors. Finally she wrote a few historical stories, and while in college a biography of Queen Elizabeth. For some years now she has been writing detective stories, and three out of the number have been published in London. She has published the following books: Queen Elizabeth, 1913; That Affair at Portstead Manor, 1914; Ronald of the Moors, 1919; The Red Cavalier, 1922; The Scarlet Macaw, 1923; The Purple Mist, 1924; The House on the Downs, 1925; The Golden Lotus, 1927; and Redmaynes, 1928.

Miss Locke's hobby is traveling in England and Scotland, and as she is of English descent, loves those places dearly. For the past several years she has lived in Dorchester. The Librarian well remembers hiding in the remote depths of the B. P. L. stacks, when she should have been alphabetizing cards, in order to finish The Purple Mist. And then being too scared to move for some fifteen minutes for fear that the eerie purple fog would rise from the floor beneath and the rattle of the death coach be heard in Copley square.

Some day the Librarian hopes to figure out to her own satisfaction why hard-working and amiable library attendants, like Miss Locke and Edmund Lester Pearson, should develop such a fascinated interest in the most bizarre details of criminology. The fact that Mr. Pearson was once the Librarian of the Transcript does somewhat explain to this unworthy successor why he went in (on paper) for crime in a big way, but Miss Locke continues as inexplicable as she is entertaining.

THE BIBLIOGRAPHER

Tercentenary Book Exhibit

Boston's tercentenary exhibition of rare books has been arranged in the Treasure Room of the Boston Public Library, where a selection of about 250 items of rare books, maps, manuscripts and broadsides illustrating the history of Boston and the Massachusetts Bay Colony have been assembled. The books, with few exceptions, are first editions of some of the rarest pieces of Americana, and the manuscripts are all original autographs. The exhibit is not merely bibliographical, but historical. It starts with the discovery of America and reaches to the present time. Emphasis is placed upon the seventeenth century, of such vital importance to Boston. Two-thirds of the material bear on the lives of the first three generations of colonists, especially the first. The nucleus of the exhibit is the Prince Collection, which has been strengthened by various smaller collections and later purchases, making it one of the most valuable collections of Americana in existence. Some of these items have not been seen by more than half a dozen people in the last half century. Now the exhibit is made available to all, free of charge, and the items are provided with brief descriptive notes, so that visitors may obtain a good idea of the wealth of the library in this department. An article describing this exhibit, with a number of illustrations, appears in the June number of "Rare Books," copies of which may be had at the library. The article describes in necessarily limited space, but with sufficient fullness to give a comprehensive view, the whole exhibit from Columbus to Oliver Wendell Holmes, and is interestingly written by the Library's editor, Zoltan Haraszti.

THE BOSTON HERALD, SUNDAY, AUGUST 10, 1930

Two New Branch Library Buildings
To Be Ready for Occupancy in Fall

Within a few weeks work will be started on two new branches of the Boston public library, one on city land adjoining the Mission Church, Roxbury, and the other at a Hazen street, Mattapan. The buildings, costing $100,000 each and representing the finest type of modern architecture, will be the first two units completed in a program calling for the construction of two branches each year over a period of 20 years and involving an expenditure of $4,000,000.

Creation of the new system was recommended by Mayor Curley while he was a member of the examining committee of the library two years ago and was among the projected improvements to which he pledged himself in his inaugural last January.

The mayor has approved architects' sketches for the two units as submitted by the library trustees. Ralph Adams Cram designed the Mission Hill branch, and has given it a form and spirit to harmonize with the Mission Church, although unable to employ the same basic material, a type of stone which has now been exhausted.

It will be of Weymouth steam-faced granite, a single story high, with leaded casement windows and slate roof. Reading rooms on the main floor will be augmented by an assembly hall in the basement. The seal of the library trustees will be seen over the main entrance.

The Mattapan branch, also one story high, was designed by Putnam & Cox. It will be in the Georgian style, of red brick and white stone trimmings, with a copper lantern resembling a cupola adorning the roof. All reading and as-

r in ular fol-em-Cirserv-

was the dard his be pplingue syl-

e of so, like hus"

gift;
folgood als," any that Paul

ain-En-for One

grip
the spe-tron
Inde

hisucalled

apply

is a out

the then ould

ould

oft led yed

-40
les ler, san

ms
of ng:

rne
and for low it," ory in imvas

for or"

of red

th ise," ten ley,"

At
is an on

Boston Transcript

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1930

City Again to Invoke Courts in Benton Will

Will Go to Supreme Court in Famous Case on Grounds of New Evidence

Announcement was today made by Mayor Curley that the city has engaged John L. Hall, of the law firm of Choate, Hall and Stewart, as special counsel, to make another fight in court, on behalf of the trustees of the Public Library, to save for the institution the sum of approximately $1,000,000 provided for in the will of Josiah H. Benton, for the purchase of books.

Mr. Benton, who had long served as chairman of the library board, died on Feb. 6, 1917, leaving $100,000 outright to the library for the benefit of the children and the residue of his estate, more than $1,000,000, in trust to Mrs. Benton, with the provision that upon her death it be turned over to the library trustees, one half of the net income of the residue to be applied to the purchase of books, maps and other library material, the other half to be held as an accumulating fund until it reaches $2,000,000 and then to be applied to the enlargement of the present library building in Copley square, or to branch library construction.

Mr. Benton was never satisfied with the amount of money that the library could spend each year for books, as in his day less than $50,000 from the general funds with slightly more than $200,000 from trust funds was devoted to this purpose. A few days after the will had been filed a joker was discovered in it which amazed the city authorities.

The joker lay in the restriction that Mr. Benton placed on the legacies. In brief, he provided that this money was not to be used for the library unless the city appropriated each year at least three per cent of "the amount available for department expenses from taxes and income in said city." Unless this mandate were enforced, the income from the two funds would go to the rector of Trinity Church to be by him dispensed in relieving the necessities of the poor.

Not only did the allotment from taxes and other income fall in the year of Mr. Benton's death to equal the sum named by him in the 3 per cent provision, but it has never done so. Two years ago, when the money was available, the city went to the Supreme Court in a friendly suit with the rector of Trinity Church to have the issue determined, such issue being whether Mr. Benton intended that the appropriations for the school and police department should be included in the 3 per cent provision.

The Court held that such an interpretation must be made, inasmuch as Mr. Benton, a student of city affairs, could have been supposed to know that the school committee made its own appropriations and that the other departments were State-controlled.

Since that time the matter has simmered until Attorney Hall, an old friend of Mr. Benton's, made known his belief that Mr. Benton's views were as the city set forth in its contention. He agreed to repone the case, either through a petition of instruction or some other means to be determined, and the law department will give him co-operation.

THE BOSTON HERALD

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 13, 1930

MR. BENTON'S WILL

The will of the late Josiah H. Benton which John L. Hall, of the law firm of Choate, Hall and Stewart, acting as associate counsel for Boston, will ask the supreme court to construe again, is extraordinarily interesting. Mr. Benton, an eminent lawyer, was greatly devoted to the Public Library. He had served as chairman of the board of trustees for many years and wrote a treatise on the history and working of the institution. In his will, which he drew up himself, he made generous provisions for it—but conditionally. One of the conditions was that certain library bequests should become effective only in those years when the city appropriation for it was at least 3 per cent of "the amount available for departmental expenses from taxes and income in said city."

The library appropriation had never been that much. Was he aware of this? Should the police and school departments, and the finance commission, the appropriations to which are beyond the control of the city, be regarded as "city departments"? In the earlier decision, the supreme court answered each question in the affirmative. The bequests have not gone to the library, therefore, but, as provided in the will, to the rector of Trinity Church, who was directed to dispense them for the benefit of the poor. They have been so disbursed, and now it is sought to have them applied to the purposes which, it is contended by the city, Mr. Benton had in mind when he drew up the document.

SEEKS TO RETAIN FUND FOR LIBRARY

City Starts Action to Secure Income from Benton Will

Court action has been started by the city to make certain that the public library and not the poor of Trinity parish will be the beneficiary of the income of a fund of $1,000,000 set aside in the will of Josiah H. Benton, under specific reservations, for the purchase of books for juveniles dealing with mechanical subjects.

Mr. Benton was a trustee of the library and keenly interested in its work. His will provided that the income of the fund which he established should revert to the rector of Trinity Church to be used for the relief of the poor of the parish if the city failed annually to appropriate for the maintenance of the library department an amount equal to 3 per cent of the total municipal appropriations.

The city has never appropriated more than 1 1/2 per cent of the budget for library maintenance. The library trustees are seeking to have set aside the provision relating to the municipal appropriation, and the argument will be advanced that Mr. Benton never seriously intended to impose such a condition on the city. Another argument will be that the needy of Trinity parish are not sufficiently numerous to require such an amount as the income from the trust fund of $1,000,000.

Yesterday Mayor Curley named John L. Hall of Choate, Hall & Stewart as special counsel for the city in the case.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 1930

A Lasting Gift from the Library

One of the contributions to the Tercentenary which has a very definite permanent value has been made by the Boston Public Library. We refer to a carefully compiled book-list, having not less than 165 pages, which the library has published under the title, "The Massachusetts Bay Colony and Boston." Here there has been brought into clear and intelligent order, capable of instantaneous reference, not only the essential books dealing with the early history of this State and city, but also, and still more abundantly, the books and even the best magazine articles which present the developing life of Boston straight down to the current year and times.

Although Mr. Charles F. D. Belden, the director of the Public Library, modestly declines at being exhaustive, nevertheless it offers some material on almost every phase of the life of the city. The most useful books are cited with regard to the railroads, shipping and terminal facilities of Boston no less carefully than those which deal with the natural history of this place, its botany, geology, meteorology and ornithology. The literary and scientific institutions are included, but so likewise are the hotels and restaurants, the public works of State and city, the best books of data about our commerce and industry, and even about Boston's favorite sports and recreations. As a result, we predict that during many years of the future whenever a student or author has before him some task of research about Boston, he will do well to begin his canvass by reference to this book-list compiled by Lucien E. Taylor of the catalogue department. It is a Tercentenary work that will give lasting service.

THE BOSTON HERALD

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1930

STEALING LIBRARY BOOKS

The Widener Library at Harvard is not the only one which has fallen a victim to book thieves. The Harvard Club of Boston issued recently a polite and ponderous note on the evaporation of volumes. The New York Public Library, like the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, requires patrons to check their bundles and receptacles. It is not difficult to imagine the scholarly Prof. Albert Bushnell Hart bristling and delivering an oration when he is first held up at Widener in accordance with the new regulations; and the talkie rights to the protest of Prof. Charles Townsend Copeland when he first becomes what the police call an s. p.—suspicious person—would not be without value.

The Boston Public Library had a net loss of about 11,000 or 12,000 stolen books last year, a third being taken from the Copley square building and the rest from the 31 branches. It is significant that Director Belden says that the missing books are mainly those used by students. The thefts there are not so large as in the years immediately following the war, but they still average about 30 a day. A particularly unfortunate aspect of the larceny there and elsewhere is that the books are taken from the open shelves. Librarians strive to make books easily accessible by placing them within the reach of all readers. The public at Harvard and elsewhere takes advantage of this liberal policy.

THE BOSTON HERALD

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 1930

THE BENTON LIBRARY REQUEST

To the Editor of The Herald: There appeared in both The Herald and Traveler on Saturday, Sept. 13, a news item entitled "Seek to Retain Fund for Library," which contained the statements that "Court action has been started by the city to make certain that the Public Library and not the poor of Trinity parish will be the beneficiary of the income of a fund of $1,000,000 set aside in the will of Josiah H. Benton, under specific reservations for the purchase of books for juveniles dealing with mechanical subjects."

And that "Another argument will be that the needy of Trinity parish are not sufficiently numerous to require such an amount as the income from the trust fund of $1,000,000." While it is not desirable that any attempt should be made to try in the newspapers a question as to the meaning of Mr. Benton's will, which may be presented for determination by our courts, it would seem unfortunate for the reading public to be misled even temporarily by any inaccurate implication as to the provisions of Mr. Benton's will.

Mr. Benton's provision for the poor in the event that the city of Boston did not appropriate in any particular year for the maintenance of the Boston Public Library at least 3 per cent of the amount available for departmental expenses from taxes and income in said city was not restricted to the poor of Trinity parish. His gift was not to Trinity Church or to Trinity parish, but he merely named the rector of Trinity Church in the city of Boston as the distributing agent, and directed that the income in question should be "by him dispensed in relieving the necessities of the poor." There is no limitation by the language of the will to the poor of Trinity parish, and in actual administration the income received by the rector of Trinity Church in accordance with the provisions of Mr. Benton's will has been dispensed in relieving necessities of the poor generally without limitation to the poor of Trinity parish.

In an editorial of The Herald on the same date, after the comment upon Mr. Benton's devoted service to the Public Library, there appears the sentence: "In his will, which he drew up himself, he made generous provisions for it (the library)—but conditionally." With reference to this statement it should be pointed out, in justice to Mr. Benton, and for the sake of accuracy, that one-half of the residue of Mr. Benton's estate after the death of his widow is bequeathed unconditionally to the trustees of the Public Library, to be held as an accumulating fund until it amounts to the sum of $2,000,000, and then to be applied to the enlargement of the present central library or the construction of a new central library building.

It is the income of only a $100,000 fund created under the 11th clause of the will and the income of half the residue of the estate after the death of Mr. Benton's widow, which occurred some time ago, that go to relieve the necessities of the poor in every year in which the city of Boston does not appropriate the amount stipulated by Mr. Benton for the maintenance of the Public Library.

ANDREW MARSHALL
Boston, Sept. 17.

THEY HAVE TO BE GOOD GUESSERS

Those who work in Public Libraries have an opportunity to see where the people's interest is focused at any given time, according to Chester A. Fazakas of the Boston Public Library.

When there are heavy requests for books of a certain type, then the librarians, he says, know that people are interested in something new. He is emphatic in commending the influence of the Globe's "Uncle Dudley" editorials on readers.

"Only recently," he says, "your Uncle Dudley wrote quite a lucid treatise on the present-day humanists and their philosophy. Immediately we had call after call for Babbitt, Mumford, Santayana, More, et al."

A large number of the requests contain amusing mistakes. "When we get a request for a good book on insect sociology, we are in doubt just what is meant; then we use our own judgment and may send a book by Henri Fabre or something similar."

"The unexpurgated edition of the Arabian Nights is very properly kept from general circulation; still, frequently demands are made for this edition. Here is how one applicant sent in for it: Original Arabian Nights. Doubtless this patron was a juvenile, so the conventional copy of the book was sent."

"The Jesuit Ignite" was meant for "Jesuit Enigma."

"Grades Speed Study" is, of course, "Gregg's Speed Study."

"Lamb-Tales From Dickens" is a request that, on the surface, seems a simple thing to fill, but is it? Which would you give, his "Tales From Shakespeare," or some edition of "Dickens' Tales?"

Please send "A Book on the Life of Spiritualism." That was a tough one. A book on spiritualism was sent the applicant.

"Darwin's Decent Man" offered no trouble.

"The Orations of Homer" was amusing, but the "Iliad" was sent.

"Dickens' Cricket of the Harp," suggested the real story.

"Glenstock's Fishes of Maine" was intended for "Fishers of Men."

"Felder's Christ in the Cities" was intended for "Christ and His Critics."

"Hamlet's History of English Literature" was returned to patron for more information as to what was meant.

"Cleere's Quotations" might be a possibility, but his "Orations" were sent and no complaint was returned.

"Brailsford's Olives of Tender Age" proved to be his "Olive of Endless Age."

"Stoddard's Vote Against Civilization" meant "Revolt."

"Papini's Life of Christy Matthewson" was highly humorous. There seems hardly any excuse for this one, because Papini's Life of Christ was so well advertised.

One teacher sent in for a list of books on "Costumes of the 18th Century." Asked what country she wished, she wrote back, "United States."

"Any Book by Demopseu." De Maupassant is seen clearly.

"Life of M. Gondes" indicates that India is of great interest to some of our readers.

"Mrs. Borden Harrison's Pink Tea and Politics" was the call received for "Mrs. Harriman's from Pinafores to Politics."

"Dr. Holt's Care and Feeding of Books" might be attributed to a person thinking of two or three things at the one time—inattention.

"Rousseau's Special Compact" was intended for his "Social Contract."

"G. Sullivan's Patience" is easily solved—Gilbert and Sullivan.

"Right Off the Coast by Revel" was meant to be "Right Off the Coast."

The Dominican, Fr. Proctor, is a well-known authority on Savonarola and the Reformation, so no difficulty was offered when a call came for "Rev. J. Proctor's Life of Savonarola and the Protestant Reformation."

son" was highly humorous. There seems hardly any excuse for this one, because Papini's Life of Christ was so well advertised.

One teacher sent in for a list of books on "Costumes of the 18th Century." Asked what country she wished, she wrote back, "United States."

"Any Book by Demopseu." De Maupassant is seen clearly.

"Life of M. Gondes" indicates that India is of great interest to some of our readers.

"Mrs. Borden Harrison's Pink Tea and Politics" was the call received for "Mrs. Harriman's from Pinafores to Politics."

"Dr. Holt's Care and Feeding of Books" might be attributed to a person thinking of two or three things at the one time—inattention.

"Rousseau's Special Compact" was intended for his "Social Contract."

"G. Sullivan's Patience" is easily solved—Gilbert and Sullivan.

"Right Off the Coast by Revel" was meant to be "Right Off the Coast."

The Dominican, Fr. Proctor, is a well-known authority on Savonarola and the Reformation, so no difficulty was offered when a call came for "Rev. J. Proctor's Life of Savonarola and the Protestant Reformation."

son" was highly humorous. There seems hardly any excuse for this one, because Papini's Life of Christ was so well advertised.

One teacher sent in for a list of books on "Costumes of the 18th Century." Asked what country she wished, she wrote back, "United States."

"Any Book by Demopseu." De Maupassant is seen clearly.

"Life of M. Gondes" indicates that India is of great interest to some of our readers.

"Mrs. Borden Harrison's Pink Tea and Politics" was the call received for "Mrs. Harriman's from Pinafores to Politics."

"Dr. Holt's Care and Feeding of Books" might be attributed to a person thinking of two or three things at the one time—inattention.

"Rousseau's Special Compact" was intended for his "Social Contract."

"G. Sullivan's Patience" is easily solved—Gilbert and Sullivan.

"Right Off the Coast by Revel" was meant to be "Right Off the Coast."

The Dominican, Fr. Proctor, is a well-known authority on Savonarola and the Reformation, so no difficulty was offered when a call came for "Rev. J. Proctor's Life of Savonarola and the Protestant Reformation."

Rickenbacker's book, "Fighting in the Flying Circus," is an ever popular book and is sent even when the following methods of writing are employed: "Fighting a Fly in the Circus—" "Fighting in the Flying Serv-ice."

"Pig Mallon by Burned Shaw" was quite obvious.

Brander Matthews' book of the short story is considered a standard work. One patron applied for his "Short Store." This error might be explained on the ground of the applicant being a Latin whose tongue would naturally pronounce each syllable.

"Please send Ben Juan's Life of Byron." That one is quite clear; so, also, is "Spots I Promise." Likewise, "Drood's Dickens."

"The Life of Christ by Josephus" may perhaps be excusable.

Some claim that spelling is a gift; perhaps it is, in which case the following is understandable: "Any good book on the expansion of metals."

The same would hold true for "any book on ratial background."

Here is a delicious one and one that proved a twister for a moment: "Paul Graves' Golden Treasury."

Grant Overton wrote an entertaining book called "American Nights' Entertainment." One patron sent in for "Overton's The Thousand and One First Night."

Woodrow Wilson holds a good grip on the people as is evidenced by this continued demand for his works, especially his "The State." One patron applied for his "When a Man Finds Himself."

"Will you please send a good historical survey of prehistoric education?" What would you have supplied on this request?

"Thorough's Cape Cod" was simply a misspelling of Thoreau.

"Any good life of Barrabas" was a little too much.

"Boccaccio's Cameron." "History of Renaissance" turned out to mean "History of Red Sox."

It is strange how perennial is the demand for the Rubaiyat.

There was some hesitation when asked to fill out this request: "I would like a book on games such as would be suitable to a pajama party."

Here was a dubious one: "The Profit (Book on Judia)."

"Tagore's Stray Birds" was applied for as "Stray Words."

Barnum himself would have enjoyed this one: "Troubles and Tramps—40 Years Recollect of P. T. B." (Struggles and Triumphs)

"Are You Are" was quite a puzzler, but it was finally taken to mean Capek's "R.U.R."

"Life of Bronze." Perhaps Brahms has a statue somewhere made of bronze.

This request was rather sparkling: "Any book by Jewels Vereno." Vereno had an exceptional imagination, and the party applying for the above had a very good imagination, also.

Two separate requests came in for Huxley's "Jesting Pilate." Here's how they were received: "Guesting Pilot," "Justing Pilot."

Michael Pupin advanced the theory that what we thought was static in our radios was really a definite communication from Mars, so no one was surprised to find someone asking for "Pupin's Unimportant to Inventor" ("From Immigrant to Inventor," of course).

Fr Scott's "God and Myself" was applied for as "Eccort God and Myself."

Unconscious humor is always heat; here is a sample: "Davis' Life on a Many Evil Barrony." (Medieval was meant.)

Dr. Lea would not be at all flattered if he read this one: "Dr. Lea's Health and Decease."

"Pep's Diary" is understandable. Here is one that was rather surprising: "Christ at the Wrong Table." (Round Table.)

Harold Bell Wright has often been applied for as Harold Bellright.

How many can get this one? "Please send a copy of Donkey Hawtrey." (Don Quixote).

Freud is fast dying out as far as his particular theories go. At the height of the demand for his works came a call for "The Publin Wish," which, of course, was "The Freudian Wish."

The lecturer, John L. Stoddard, upon his conversion to Catholicism wrote a book entitled "Return of a Lost Faith," and issued under the pseudonym, "An American Agnostic." A request was sent in for "Agnes Nostick's" New book; the connection is obvious.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

Concerts at Public Library

The Boston Public Library has recently issued its schedule for the 32d season of free public lectures and concerts given in the Lecture Hall of the central library at Copley sq. The quantity and variety of free musical entertainment offered during the season is astonishing, the quality higher than is usual at free concerts.

All the concerts listed below are open to the public free of charge. No tickets are required for admission. They are all given on the date and at the hour specified in the Lecture Hall, entrance on Boylston st. only. The doors of the hall will be opened two hours before the time announced for beginning the entertainment, and closed when it begins, or when the hall is filled. Those who wish to get in will soon form the habit of early arrival, as many of the concerts and lectures attract capacity audiences.

The list below does not include lectures, except those on musical topics. As a rule there is either a lecture or a concert every Thursday evening at 8, every Sunday afternoon at 3:30 and every Sunday evening at 8. The complete list may be obtained at the Public Library or its branches. It is subject to change.

Thursday, Oct. 2, Copley Club Singers. Sunday, Oct. 5, 8 p. m., Jewish music; lecturer, Prof. Braslavsky; soloists, Boston Jewish Choral Society. Sunday, Oct. 12, 8 p. m., colonial and Revolutionary music; Alice Pope Taylor, assisted by Bessie Talbot Fosgate, soprano. Sunday, Oct. 19, 8 p. m., program of piano music for young people of all ages; Pessia Cox.

Varied Programs

Sunday, Nov. 2, 8 p. m. Songs and Legends of the Hebrides, Clara Slas-Davis. Sunday, Nov. 9, 8 p. m., Sulzen String Quartet. Monday, Nov. 10, 8 p. m., Bird Song Recital, Edward Avis, bird mimic and whistler. Sunday, Nov. 16, 8 p. m., recital of piano music and poems by Browning, Laura Huxtable Porter. Sunday, Nov. 23, 8 p. m., operatic and ballad recital; Mme. Alice Baschi and assistants. Sunday, Nov. 30, 8 p. m., Viking Male Chorus; August C. Hulten, director. Sunday, Dec. 7, at 3:30, Jane Leland Clarke, pianist and composer. Sunday, Dec. 7, 8 p. m., Eleanor Brigham, pianist. Sunday, Dec. 28, 8 p. m., Scotland in Song and Story, Mme. Beale Morey. Sunday, Jan. 11, 8 p. m., orchestra of the Lincoln House Association; Jacques Hoffman, conductor. Sunday, Jan. 18, at 8, a rebirth of Jewish Music, Henry Gideon and assistants. Sunday, Jan. 25, at 3:30, "Your Voice and All It Can Mean to You," Alicia Starratt, with music. Sunday, Jan. 25, at 8, opera talk, "Boris Godunov," Mme. Susa Doane. Sunday, Feb. 1, at 8, German Singing Society, A. L. Y. P. S.; Erdine T. Oedel, director. Sunday, Feb. 8, at 8, Hoffman String Quartet. Sunday, Feb. 15, at 8, Alexander Romanque, violinist. Sunday, Feb. 22, at 8, Trio instrumental de Paris. Sunday, March 1, at 8, Choral Society of the Massachusetts Federated Women's Clubs. Sunday, March 8, at 8, Elizabeth Siedoff, pianist. Sunday, March 15, at 8, orchestra of the Lincoln House Association; Jacques Hoffman, director. Sunday, March 22, at 3:30, lecture, with music, Otto G. T. Straub. Sunday, March 29, at 8, Boston Civic Symphony Orchestra; Joseph F. Wagner, conductor. Sunday, April 5, at 8, Joseph Pulvino, viola. Sunday, April 12, at 8, chamber music composed by Joseph F. Wagner. Sunday, April 19, at 8, Jewish music (continuation of lecture of Oct. 5), Prof. Braslavsky. Sunday, April 26, at 8, Feldman String Quartet.

Public Library to Open Course Oct. 2

The thirty-second season of free lectures and concerts is to be opened in the Boston Public Library hall on Oct. 2. As in previous years, the Thursday entertainments are to be given at 8 P. M., and those on Sundays at 3:30 and 8 P. M. There is also to be a series of Monday afternoon meetings arranged by the Russian Club. Dates, speakers and their subjects are as follows:

- Oct. 2, 8 P. M.—The Copley Club Singers and Entertainers (members Massachusetts Federation of Music Clubs) in a program of songs, with readings by Elizabeth Nicholas Carr, Dolores Rodriguez, pianist. Under the direction of Pauline Hammond Clark.
- Oct. 5, 3:30—The Passion Play of 1899, Dr. John C. Bowker.
- Oct. 5, 8—Jewish Music; a lecture, Professor S. Braslavsky. Part 1. Secular Music and Jewish Folk Songs. Soloists, Boston Jewish Choral Society.
- Oct. 9, 8—Virginia, Historical and Beautiful. Edwin A. Freeman.
- Oct. 12, 3:30—The World on the Eve of Columbus's Voyage. Rev. Carroll Perry.
- Oct. 12, 8—Concert, Sulzen String Quartet. Alice Pope Taylor, assisted by Bessie Talbot Fosgate, soprano. In costume.
- Oct. 16, 8—The Nature of the Orient. Walter W. Allerton. In Mandarin costume.
- Oct. 19, 3:30—What Price Poetry? Laura Simmons.
- Oct. 19, 8—Program of Piano Music, for Young People of All Ages. Pessia Cox.
- Oct. 23, 8—Chichen Itza; a Wonder-City of Yucatan. George Allan England.
- Oct. 26, 3:30—Mark Twain Humorous and Humanist. Caroline Ticknor.
- Oct. 26, 8—The "Allied Arts." Maud Cuneo-Hare. Illustrated by the "Allied Artists."
- Oct. 30, 8—The Scenic Maritime Provinces. Arthur H. Merritt.
- Nov. 2, 8—American Humors and their Humor; with illustrative readings. Dr. Francis Henry Wade.
- Nov. 2, 8—Songs and Legends of the Hebrides. Clara Slas-Davis. Francis Standerwick, accompanist.
- Nov. 9, 8—A Chile Trip. Arthur L. Sweetser.
- Nov. 9, 3:30—The Whirligig of Dramatic Taste. Robert E. Rogers. (Drama League course.)
- Nov. 9, 8—Concert, Sulzen String Quartet.
- Nov. 16, 8—Bird Song Recital, Edward Avis, bird mimic, whistler, violinist, entertainer. Illustrated. (Brookline Bird Club course.)
- Nov. 16, 8—Where Nature Smiles in Old Vermont. Percy A. Brigham. (Field and Forest Club course.)
- Nov. 16, 3:30—Dramatic Scenes from the Prophecies: Amos, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Hosea, Micah, and Malachi. Mrs. John P. Whitman. In costume.
- Nov. 16, 8—A recital of pianoforte music and poems of Robert Browning. Laura Huxtable Porter.
- Nov. 20, 8—The Lure of Alaska. Mrs. Adelbert Fernald.
- Nov. 23, 3:30—Japan, Progressive and Picturesque. Walter W. Allerton; in costume; illustrated.
- Nov. 23, 8—Operatic and ballad recital. Mme. Alice Baschi and assisting artists.
- Nov. 30, 3:30—A Woman Alone in Darkest Africa. Alice Howland Macomber; illustrated.
- Nov. 30, 8—Concert, the Viking Male Chorus. August C. Hulten, director.
- Dec. 4, 8—Beautiful Cities of the Northland. Charles Ernest White.
- Dec. 7, 3:30—Concert, Jane Leland Clarke, pianist and composer, and assisting artists.
- Dec. 7, 8—Concert, Eleanor Brigham, pianist.
- Dec. 11, 8—The Romance of Germany. John George Bucher; contributed by the Bureau of Commercial Economics, Washington.
- Dec. 14, 3:30—The Theater of Yesterday and Tomorrow. Frank Chouteau Brown; illustrated. (Drama League course.)
- Dec. 14, 8—Charles de France. The son of France through her folklore. Mme. Jeanne Brondel Allen.
- Dec. 18, 8—A Christmas Play. Community Service of Boston, Inc.
- Dec. 21, 3:30—Dickens's "Christmas Carol." Edward F. Payne, president Boston branch of the Dickens Fellowship; and author's of the Forest, Marguerite Rand, reading. Illustrated with lantern slides and music.
- Dec. 28, 3:30—Modernism in Art. Carolyn L. Dawkins; illustrated.
- Dec. 28, 8—Scotland in Song and Story. Mme. Beale Morey. With lantern slides and Scotch songs.
- Jan. 4, 3:30—Dramatic Reading of One-Act Plays. Isabella Taylor.
- Jan. 4, 8—Song Recital, Roland E. Partridge, tenor.
- Jan. 8, 8—Lake Placid Club—An Experiment in Intelligence. H. W. Hicks, vice-president. Field and Forest Club course.
- Jan. 11, 3:30—The Theater in England. Frank W. C. Hervey, A.M., Harvard University. (Drama League course.)
- Jan. 11, 8—Concert, orchestra of the Lincoln House Association. Jacques Hoffman, conductor.
- Jan. 15, 8—Illustrations in Art of the Twelve Poets. Edward W. Forbes.
- Jan. 18, 3:30—The Romance of Landerprie in the Frozen North. Ethel S. Wheldon, illustrated.

- Jan. 18, 8—A Sketch of Jewish Music. Henry Gideon, and assistants. Illustrated with music and lantern slides.
- Jan. 22, 8—The Indian Comes to America. Col. Philip A. Moore. Contributed by the Bureau of Commercial Economics, Washington, D. C.
- Jan. 25, 3:30—Your Voice and All It Can Mean to You. Alicia Starratt. With music.
- Jan. 25, 8—Opera Talk, with musical illustrations. "Boris Godunov." Mme. Susa Doane.
- Jan. 26, 8—Picturesque Switzerland. Arthur R. Davies.
- Feb. 1, 3:30—Modern Art. Mrs. Everett W. Varney, illustrated.
- Feb. 1, 8—Concert, by the German Singing Society, under the direction of Erdine T. Oedel.
- Feb. 8, 8—Bewitching France. Professor William Sandoz, color photography directly from nature.
- Feb. 8, 3:30—The Season's Best Play. Robert B. Rogers.
- Feb. 12, 8—Concert, Hoffmann String Quartet.
- Feb. 12, 8—The Ascent of the Geronimo. Bradford Washburn. (Field and Forest Club course.)
- Feb. 15, 3:30—Reading, "The Twilight Hour of Yank." Kuhl Fell. by A. E. Graham.
- Feb. 15, 8—Concert, Alexander Romanque, Roumanian violinist of the First National Institute of Violin.
- Feb. 19, 8—The Land of Lorna Doone; a Part of Storied England. Mrs. James Frederick Hopkins.
- Feb. 22, 3:30—The Speed Limit. Nellie Crie Haynes.
- Feb. 22, 8—Concert, Trio instrumental de Paris.
- Feb. 26, 8—Spain: Patios and People. Fletcher Brier.
- Mar. 1, 3:30—The Chateaux of Old Touraine. Marie Ware Laughton, illustrated.
- Mar. 1, 8—A Greek and Byzantine Pictorial. Ralph Adams Cram.
- Mar. 8, 3:30—The Theatre is Dead. Albert R. Lovejoy, director, Cambridge School of the Drama.
- Mar. 8, 8—Piano Recital, Elizabeth Sadoff.
- Mar. 12, 8—America's Alphabet of Beauty— from Alaska to Zion. Rev. Charles W. Casson. (Field and Forest Club course.)
- Mar. 15, 3:30—Religious Readings, or Henry Lawrence Southwick.
- Mar. 15, 8—Concert, orchestra of the Lincoln House Association. Jacques Hoffman, conductor.
- Mar. 19, 8—America from Sea to Shining Sea. Mrs. Arthur Dudley Ropes.
- Mar. 22, 3:30—Interpretative Reading from Shakespeare and Modern Authors. George J. D. Currie, member of the Faculty of the Boston School of Expression.
- Mar. 22, 8—Drama and the "Little Theatre." Fannie Barnett Linka, illustrated by a one-act play given by the Ford Hall Little Theatre Players.
- Mar. 26, 8—Seeing America First. Rev. Jason G. Miller.
- Mar. 29, 3:30—Lecture, with music, Otto G. T. Straub.
- Mar. 30, 8—Concert, Boston Civic Symphony Orchestra. Joseph F. Wagner, conductor.
- Apr. 2, 8—The American Country House and its Grounds. Katherine Brooks Norriss.
- Apr. 3, 3:30—Through Syrian Streets and Bazaar. Mary Parker Dunning. In costume.
- Apr. 5, 8—Viola concert. Joseph Pulvino, violin.
- Apr. 8, 8—Literary Excursions in England and Scotland. Charles S. Olin.
- Apr. 12, 3:30—American Irish. Lillian Winter, comment. Professor Irving L. Winter.
- Apr. 12, 8—Concert, chamber music compositions of Joseph F. Wagner.
- Apr. 13, 8—New England Hawks and Owls. Dr. John May, director of the division of ornithology, Massachusetts Department of Agriculture. (Brookline Bird Club course.)
- Apr. 16, 8—California the Golden. Henry Warren Poon.
- Apr. 19, 3:30—Lexington and April 19, 1775. Edwin H. Worthen, illustrated.
- Apr. 19, 8—Jewish Music. A lecture, Professor S. Braslavsky. Part 2. Sacred (Synagogal) Soloists. Boston Jewish Choral Society.
- Apr. 23, 8—Lonely Australia. Edward S. Harison.
- Apr. 26, 3:30—An Afternoon with Flowers. Birkner Foster Lelton.
- Apr. 26, 8—Concert, Feldman String Quartet.
- Apr. 30, 8—Finding the Rainbow at the End of the Trail. Dr. Dewitt G. Wilcox.

BOSTON RUSKIN CLUB

- Oct. 4—The Beautiful Friendship of Boston's Golden Age. (Lillian Whiting.) Alice Wentworth MacGregor, soprano; Dolores Rodriguez, pianist.
- Oct. 20—Along the Florida Keys. Dr. Andrew Oliver. Illustrated.
- Nov. 10—Ruskin's Faith in God. Rev. Adelbert S. Hudson.
- Nov. 24—A Holiday in Europe. Mrs. Carl L. Walton. Illustrated.
- Dec. 8—The Christmas Message, and author's readings. Rev. Henry Hallam Sanderson.
- Dec. 15—Musical, the music department, Alice Wentworth MacGregor, chairman; Dolores Rodriguez, assistant.
- Jan. 12—Early American Poetry. Sherwin Lawrence Cook.
- Jan. 26—The Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum. Walter Rowlands. Illustrated.
- Feb. 9—John Ruskin's Anniversary. Mrs. Agnes Knox Black. In Memory of E. Charlton Black, LL.D., late Professor of English Literature, Boston University.
- Feb. 16—The Homes and Habits of John Ruskin. Mrs. Arthur Dudley Ropes, President, Massachusetts Women's Christian Temperance Union. Illustrated.
- March 9—Wild Animal Life of Greenland and Alaska. Dr. John W. Ruskin. Illustrated.
- March 23—Reading as a Medicine. Mrs. Herbert J. Gurney, former president, Massachusetts Federation of Women's Clubs.
- April 15—To be announced.
- April 27—The Ethical Message of the Victorian Poets. Rev. Joseph P. MacCarthy.
- May 4—Annual meeting.

A Business Need Met

As Bostonians settle down, after vacations, to the work and progressive developments of a new business year, how do matters fare at the new business branch of the Boston Public Library? For five months the attractive, well-equipped building in City Hall avenue has held open a hospitable door to men and women engaged in commerce and industry downtown, and today we are privileged to print the official figures which show the resulting attendance. As many as 42,412 visitors called at the business branch from May 7 to Sept. 18. For the 105 full days when the library was open during this period, that means an average attendance of 404 persons a day. Just now the demand is proving still brisker. Four hundred and seventy-four persons came to the business branch on Monday of this week, and 435 calls were made yesterday.

Here is convincing proof of a practical public demand for the kind of aid to Boston's business which the downtown branch can give. The number of persons now daily using the business books quite handsomely exceeds any expectations originally held with regard to the introductory period. In addition to the general investigations frequently carried on there by commercial and industrial houses, each day the business branch helps to answer many specific questions of an obviously real value to those who ask them. An important steamship company desires to know what was the total export of coffee from Panama in 1928. A great investment banking house asks what are the uses of cadmium, and what were the prices for this metal in 1928 and 1929. A clerk comes to secure for his executive facts about the hydro-electric power commission of Ontario. Another wishes to know the rainfall of Guatemala; someone else the name of the United States consul in Budapest.

Many inquiries about specific addresses, needed for business purposes, are filled each week, and this is of much practical value, as anyone knows who has ever had an important letter to send without being certain, at first, of the address. Not only the established concerns of the city, but numerous persons engaged, or about to engage, in new enterprises, are taking benefit from the library. They come there to read the books which will inform them of the experience of others in similar undertakings, and which state, often from the work of competent research students in the country's business schools, what are the principles and methods necessary to success. All in all, even without special mention at this moment of the 20,000 visitors who have made use of the regular public library books on the third floor, the story of the first five months of the business branch is one of strong usefulness, a further occasion for gratitude to the citizen who gave Boston this new civic asset, Louis E. Kirstein.

THE LIBRARIAN

RIGHT here in Boston, at Franklin Square House, is one of the most unusual libraries in this country. For it caters to the varied literary tastes of a clientele entirely female and numbering about nine hundred. As it is under the direct supervision of Mrs. J. Porter Russell, president of the corporation, book selection does not lack that dash of masculine approval so requisite to a well-rounded library.

There are about four thousand volumes in the collection, including fiction, non-fiction, reference works, and even a few juvenile books. Guests may take out any of these, with the exception of the reference material, without charges, for a week at a time. Renewal is then permitted, if the book is returned to be stamped. Otherwise a fine must be paid. A pay circulating library of new fiction is also maintained. The money which accrues from these and the fines mentioned above are used to buy new fiction and a selection of the most recent non-fiction. The latter is free, as the management is interested in developing a taste for serious reading among its patrons.

There is a great fascination in seeking out the literary preferences of an all female public. For one thing, there is no great demand for "Westerns," which so many libraries have to stock in large quantities. "Mysteries," however, are almost as popular here as elsewhere. Fiction of high literary value is also in demand, and one may see, on the shelves, well-worn copies of the works of Thomas Mann, Sigrid Undset, Thomas Hardy, and many others of the sort. Then, too, there is a call for the pleasant love stories of Berta Ruck, Kathleen Norris, and Grace Hill Lutz. Poetry and psychology are likewise in high favor.

An excellent dramatic collection is being built up at this library. The plays are much sought after, which is not surprising considering the number of dramatic schools in Boston with students living at the Franklin Square House. Indeed, students of numerous other schools and colleges make use of the circulating and reference books. On winter evenings a table is strewn with material on literature, biography, history, and foreign languages, with intent faces bending over it. Recently there has been a most valuable addition to this reference collection through the purchase of the latest edition of the Encyclopedia Britannica.

In spite of competition from the South End Branch of the Boston Public Library which is nearby, there has been a steady increase in circulation at the Franklin Square House library. The librarian, Miss Florence A. Doughty, who was formerly a high school teacher, has done much to make the bookshelves attractive to readers. In addition to rearranging and entitling the general collection, she has improved the cataloguing scheme for the most circulating library.

The library is open from 4:30 to 9:30 every day and on Sundays, from 1:30 to 2:30 and 6:30 to 9:30. Miss Doughty is the entire library staff, as she shelves, lists, takes registrations, charges books and does reference work. She has also instituted a reserve system, by which guests are notified when a book they desire has been added to the library. No charge is made for this service which is an extremely popular one.

Publicity methods used by the library are most ingenious. For instance, each Christmas there is a tree just outside the door, trimmed with the customary ornaments and tinsel, and with bright book jackets scattered among the boughs. Throughout the year, these jackets are attached to the bulletin board by the librarian's desk as the books are received, in order that the patrons may keep track of new acquisitions. All notices referring to library matters put on the general bulletin board of the Franklin Square House are marked with a blue star, which symbol has now come to represent the library in the minds of the guests. The librarian has the interest and active services of a library committee. Members, for 1930, are Mrs. Herbert J. Keith, Mrs. Arthur B. Lamb and Mrs. J. Porter Russell.

One of the library rooms has been delightfully arranged as a magazine reading room, with wicker chairs upholstered in gay chintz, and softly-shaded lamps on little tables. Most of the important periodicals published in the United States are available here. Guests who have come to Boston from various parts of the country have declared that the Franklin Square House library is as unique as the hotel of which it is a part.

HISTORIC SHRINES

OF MASSACHUSETTS
Boston Daily Record
No. 122 September 16-1930

Old West Church, Cambridge and Lynde sts., now a public library branch. In the preceding meeting house on this site the first funeral prayer in Boston was offered.

First Funeral Prayer

The Old West Church at Cambridge and Lynde sts., in the West End of Boston, now used as a branch of the Boston Public Library, is portrayed here.

Religious precedent and revolutionary associations cling to this West End site through the history of the predecessor of the present structure.

The first West Church structure was a wooden meeting house built in 1736-37. It had a handsome steeple. In the early days of the revolutionary struggle this steeple was used by the patriots in Boston to give signals to Continental troops in Cambridge. In the siege of Boston British officers, suspecting this use of the steeple, had it taken down.

The first pastor of the original church was William Hooper from Scotland. The second church structure, now a library branch, was built in 1806. Among its pastors was the Rev. Charles Lowell, father of James Russell Lowell.

The religious precedent associated with the original wooden meeting house was the first funeral prayer ever held in Boston. In those early days the colonists, as related in Shurtleff's "Topographical and Historical Description of Boston," turned from anything that resembled the church customs of their fatherland.

"No prayers or particular services were had at the house or even at the grave; but after the funeral the mourners and their friends returned to the house."

"If we can believe the charges in the old administration accounts, there sometimes must have been pretty high times."

"Instead of the prayers and addresses which are now a part of the funeral ceremonies at houses, the prayers, and now then a funeral sermon, were reserved for the ensuing Sunday forenoon religious services at the meeting house."

The first prayer made at a funeral in Boston is said to have been offered by the Rev. Dr. Chauncy at the interment of the Rev. Jonathan Mayhew, pastor of the West Church, who died July 9, 1766.

Pastor Mayhew was buried from the West Church on account of the large number of persons who wished to be present. The assembly being in a meeting house, it was deemed fitting to have a devotional exercise. Hence the funeral prayer.

"KINDLY DIRECT ME TO THE GENEALOGY ROOM. I'M ONE OF THE NEW HAMPSHIRE 'SNODGRASSES.'"

Boston Transcript
WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1930

Seasonal Publicity at the Kirstein Branch

The football season is soon ended; the reading season never ends.

The Top Floor of the Kirstein Branch, Boston Public Library in City Hall Avenue, Though Three Flights Up, Does Not Lack Patrons. There Is Now a Special Call for Books on Games and Sports, and Many Books on the Subject Are Displayed in the Window. The Football Game Here Represented Was Staged by Mr. Frank A. (King) Brady, Ex-Dartmouth Football Star, Brother of the Librarian

Little Walks About Boston

BY WILLIAM JUSTIN MANN

The Boston Public Library was most fortunate in the co-operation of the architects and the artists who united in making it the harmonious and always admired treasure house for books which mean so much to the city. McKim, Meade & White, the architects, St. Gaudens, Chavannes, Sargent, Abbey, and Daniel Chester French—each and all of them gave of their genius and of their devoted labors in bringing about the completed result.

The name of Charles Follen McKim stands out notably among that group who gave Boston one of its finest treasures. It was he who conceived and drew up the plans for city building, and it was he who summoned the artists who gave charm and unity to the whole creation. His enthusiasm and persistence overcame all the obstacles that arose. This was especially true as to the murals by Chavannes who abandoned the undertaking, but after the lapse of two years was again approached and then finally consented to execute those perfect and delicate wall paintings in which we all delight.

In Cambridge also, the work of Charles F. McKim is much in evidence. The Johnston Gate at Harvard is one of his creations. The Harvard Union building, the Radcliffe Gymnasium, and Robinson Hall, were designed by him. The gate and terrace at the corner of Massachusetts avenue and Quincy street, that corner associated with the names of Louis Agassiz, Andrew P. Peabody, and George Herbert Palmer, were his last work for Harvard.

McKim was a potent factor in bringing about the architectural triumphs at the Chicago World Fair. He was one of the most active workers in making possible that dream of beauty which became so famous as the White City. He drew the plans for the Agricultural building and also for the New York State building, for which he chose as his model the Villa Medici, the home of the French Academy in Rome. He also had much to do in the establishing of the American Academy in Rome.

Nor should we forget that the beauty of Washington as it is today, and the return in a measure to the L'Enfant plan of 1792, owes much to Charles F. McKim. He was much absorbed in the work of the commission appointed to consider the Washington problem, and of which he was a member. He wrote to Prescott Butler: "I have just returned from Washington after three most interesting days with Burnham and Olmsted over the District of Columbia problem. If half of what is talked of can be carried through it will make the Capital City one of the most beautiful centres in the world."

Burnham, McKim, Olmsted and Charles Moore went to Europe together to study the great things done by others in the same line as the work they had in view. On his return home McKim was active in forwarding the work, and he, together with St. Gaudens and Moore, drove a stake to mark the site of the Lincoln Memorial and where it was finally placed.

The Italian Historical Society of Massachusetts, Inc.

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS

OFFICERS

CAV. PROF. J. D. M. FORD, PRES.
COMM. FRANK LEVERONI, V. PRES.
CAV. CHARLES F. D. BELDEN, V. PRES.
ALBERT P. ROBUSCHI, TREASURER
209 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON
PROF. JOSEPH H. SASSERNO, SECY.
ROXBURY LATIN SCHOOL
W. ROXBURY, MASS.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

DR. GIOVANNI BOTTERO
VINCENT BROGNA, ESQ.
PAUL CEFIRINO, ESQ.
PROF. RALPH ADAMS CRAM
PROF. JAMES GEDDES
JAMES J. PHELAN, ESQ.
COMM. SAVERIO R. ROMANO
CAV. SILVIO VITALE

Dear Sir or Madam:

The Italian Historical Society of Massachusetts has been formed as an incorporated association of Italian-Americans and American friends of the Italian people, who have united for the purpose of promoting a better understanding between the Italian and American people, to provide social and intellectual development among its members and to encourage the nobility of patriotism.

tical and unreservedly
als. Its essential
books and pamphlets,
and to offer a general
ch workers in the

The Italian Historical Society of Massachusetts, Inc.

The undersigned Directors have the honor to invite you to attend the Inaugural Exercises of the Society to be held on October 13th, 1930, at 9:30 A. M. at the

JACOB SLEEPER HALL
688 Boylston Street
Boston

His Excellency NOBILE GIACOMO DE MARTINO
Royal Italian Ambassador

our honored guest will inaugurate the Society.

Yours,

Joseph H. Sasserno
Secretary

CAV. CHARLES F. D. BELDEN
DR. GIOVANNI BOTTERO
VINCENT BROGNA, ESQ.
PAUL CEFIRINO, ESQ.
PROF. RALPH ADAMS CRAM
CAV. PROF. J. D. M. FORD

CAV. PROF. JAMES GEDDES
COMM. FRANK LEVERONI
JAMES J. PHELAN, ESQ.
ALBERT P. ROBUSCHI
COMM. SAVERIO R. ROMANO
PROF. JOSEPH H. SASSERNO

CAV. SILVIO VITALE

Please present this Invitation at the door.

"KINDLY DIRECT ME TO THE GENEALOGY ROOM. I'M ONE OF THE NEW HAMPSHIRE SNODGRASSES."

Boston
WEDN

Seasonal Publi

The Top Floor of the Kirslein Branch, Boston Public Library in Special Call for Books on Games and Sports, and Many Books on Staged by Mr. Frank A. (King) Bra

Little Walks About Boston

BY WILLIAM JUSTIN MANN

The Boston Public Library was most fortunate in the co-operation of the architects and the artists who united in making it the harmonious and always admired treasure house for books which mean so much to the city. McKim, Meade & White, the architects, St. Gaudens, Chavannes, Sargent, Abbey, and Daniel Chester French, each and all of them gave of their genius and of their devoted labors in bringing about the completed result.

The name of Charles Follen McKim stands out notably among that group who gave Boston one of its finest treasures. It was he who conceived and drew up the plans for city building, and it was he who summoned the artists who gave charm and unity to the whole creation. His enthusiasm and persistence overcame all the obstacles that arose. This was especially true as to the murals by Chavannes who abandoned the undertaking, but after the lapse of two years was again approached and then finally consented to execute those perfect and delicate wall paintings in which we all delight.

In Cambridge also, the work of Charles F. McKim is much in evidence. The Johnston Gate at Harvard is one of his creations. The Harvard Union building, the Radcliffe Gymnasium, and Robinson Hall, were designed by him. The gate and terrace at the corner of Massachusetts avenue and Quincy street, that corner associated with the names of Louis Agassiz, Andrew P. Peabody, and George Herbert Palmer, were his last work for Harvard.

McKim was a potent factor in bringing about the architectural triumphs at the Chicago World Fair. He was one of the most active workers in making possible that dream of beauty which became so famous as the White City. He drew the plans for the Agricultural

No 840

The Italian Historical Society of Massachusetts, Inc.

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS

OFFICERS

CAY. PROF. J. D. M. FORD, PRES.
COMM. FRANK LEVERONI, V. PRES.
CAY. CHARLES F. D. BELDEN, V. PRES.
ALBERT P. ROBUSHI, TREASURER
209 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON
PROF. JOSEPH H. SASSERNO, SECY.
ROXBURY LATIN SCHOOL
W. ROXBURY, MASS.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

DR. GIOVANNI BOTTERO
VINCENT BROGNA, ESQ.
PAUL CIFRINO, ESQ.
PROF. RALPH ADAMS CRAM
PROF. JAMES GEDDES
JAMES J. PHELAN, ESQ.
COMM. SAVERIO R. ROMANO
CAY. SILVIO VITALE

Dear Sir or Madam:

The Italian Historical Society of Massachusetts has been formed as an incorporated association of Italian-Americans and American friends of the Italian people, who have united for the purpose of promoting a better understanding between the Italian and American people, to provide social and intellectual development among its members and to encourage the nobility of patriotism.

It is non-sectarian, non-political and unreservedly in harmony with American institutions and ideals. Its essential program is educational. It plans to publish books and pamphlets, to arrange tours and engagements for lectures and to offer a general informational service for students and research workers in the Italian field.

All the activities of the Society are supported exclusively by its members. In the furtherance of its work, the Society invites the cooperation of all worthy friends of the Italian people, and expects to receive from you, as such, a ready and warm support.

Respectfully yours,

J. D. M. Ford
President

Joseph H. Sasserno
Secretary

"KINDLY DIRECT ME TO THE GENEALOGY ROOM. I'M ONE OF THE NEW HAMPSHIRE SNOODGRASSES."

Boston Transcript
WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1930

Seasonal Publicity at the Kirstein Branch

The Top Floor of the Kirstein Branch, Boston Public Library in City Hall Avenue, Though Three Floors Up, Does Not Lack Patrons. There is Now a Special Call for Books on Games and Sports, and Many Books on the Subject Are Displayed in the Window. The Football Game Here Represented Was Staged by Mr. Frank A. (King) Brady, Ex-Dartmouth Football Star, Brother of the Librarian

Little Walks About Boston

BY WILLIAM JUSTIN MANN

The Boston Public Library was most fortunate in the co-operation of the architects and the artists who united in making it the harmonious and always admired treasure house for books which mean so much to the city. McKim, Meade & White, the architects, St. Gaudens, Chavannes, Sargent, Abbey, and Daniel Chester French—each and all of them gave of their genius and of their devoted labors in bringing about the completed result.

The name of Charles Follen McKim stands out notably among that group who gave Boston one of its finest treasures. It was he who conceived and drew up the plans for city building, and it was he who summoned the artists who gave charm and unity to the whole creation. His enthusiasm and persistence overcame all the obstacles that arose. This was especially true as to the murals by Chavannes who abandoned the undertaking, but after the lapse of two years was again approached and then finally consented to execute those perfect and delicate wall paintings in which we all delight.

In Cambridge also, the work of Charles F. McKim is much in evidence. The Johnston Gate at Harvard is one of his creations. The Harvard Union building, the Radcliffe Gymnasium, and Robinson Hall, were designed by him. The gate and terrace at the corner of Massachusetts Avenue and Quincy Street, that corner associated with the names of Louis Agassiz, Andrew P. Peabody, and George Herbert Palmer, were his last work for Harvard.

McKim was a potent factor in bringing about the architectural triumphs at the Chicago World Fair. He was one of the most active workers in making possible that dream of beauty which became so famous as the White City. He drew the plans for the Agricultural building and also for the New York State building, for which he chose as his model the Villa Wexley, the home of the French Academy in Rome. He also had much to do in the establishing of the American Academy in Rome.

Nor should we forget that the beauty of Washington as it is today, and the return in a measure to the L'Enfant plan of 1792, owes much to Charles F. McKim. He was much absorbed in the work of the commission appointed to consider the Washington problem, and of which he was a member. He wrote to Frederick Butler: "I have just returned from Washington after three most interesting days with Burnham and Olmsted over the District of Columbia problem. If half of what is talked of can be carried through it will make the Capital City one of the most beautiful centres in the world."

Burnham, McKim, Olmsted and Charles Moore went to Europe together to study the great things done by others in the same line as the work they had in view. On his return home McKim was active in forwarding the work, and he, together with St. Gaudens and Moore, drove a stake to mark the site of the Lincoln Memorial and where it was finally placed.

The Italian Historical Society of Massachusetts, Inc.

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS

OFFICERS

CAV. PROF. J. D. M. FORD, PRES.
COMM. FRANK LEVERONI, V. PRES.
CAV. CHARLES F. D. BELDEN, V. PRES.
ALBERT P. ROBUSCHI, TREASURER
209 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON
PROF. JOSEPH H. SASSERNO, SECY.
ROXBURY LATIN SCHOOL
W. ROXBURY, MASS.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

DR. GIOVANNI BOTTERO
VINCENT BROGNA, ESQ.
PAUL CIFRINO, ESQ.
PROF. RALPH ADAMS CRAM
PROF. JAMES GEDDES
JAMES J. PHELAN, ESQ.
COMM. SAVERIO R. ROMANO
CAV. SILVIO VITALE

Dear Sir or Madam:

The Italian Historical Society of Massachusetts has been formed as an incorporated association of Italian-Americans and American friends of the Italian people, who have united for the purpose of promoting a better understanding between the Italian and American people, to provide social and intellectual development among its members and to encourage the nobility of patriotism.

tical and unreservedly
als. Its essential
books and pamphlets,
and to offer a general
ch workers in the

The Italian Historical Society of Massachusetts, Inc.

The undersigned Directors have the honor to invite you to attend the Inaugural Exercises of the Society to be held on October 13th, 1930, at 9:30 A. M. at the

JACOB SLEEPER HALL

688 Boylston Street

Boston

His Excellency NOBILE GIACOMO DE MARTINO
Royal Italian Ambassador

our honored guest will inaugurate the Society.

Yours,

Joseph H. Sasserno
Secretary

Cav. Charles F. D. Belden
Dr. Giovanni Bottero
Vincent Brogna, Esq.
Paul Cifrino, Esq.
Prof. Ralph Adams Cram
Cav. Prof. J. D. M. Ford

Cav. Prof. James Geddes
Comm. Frank Leveroni
James J. Phelan, Esq.
Albert P. Robuschi
Comm. Saverio R. Romano
Prof. Joseph H. Sasserno

Cav. Silvio Vitale

Please present this Invitation at the door.

THE LIBRARIAN

FORTY candles on a birthday cake is a brilliant showing for an individual and even more so for an organization. The majority of clubs are organized with great fervor and attended with enthusiasm for a year, two years or a decade; then, usually, members outgrow their interest or transfer it to another source. How different the history of the Massachusetts Library Club, organized forty years ago and growing more popular and successful every year.

Louis Felix Ranlett, editor of the club, recently disclosed to the Librarian some of the exciting preparations now being made to mark the forthcoming birthday. On Nov. 13, 1930, he writes, the Massachusetts Library Club will celebrate the exact anniversary day of the meeting forty years ago at which the club was organized. As a major feature of the celebration George H. Evans, librarian, Public Library, Somerville, and president of the club, and Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library and of the Massachusetts Board of Free Public Library Commissioners, who is chairman of the club's fortieth anniversary committee, announce a dinner to be tendered to charter members by all the members of the club.

The dinner, which will be held in the Princess Ballroom at the Hotel Somerset, Boston, at 8.30 P. M., will be preceded by a reception beginning at 6.00 P. M. Should the ballroom's capacity of two hundred be exceeded the additional diners will be served in other rooms and assemble after dinner for the speaking program. The program will be ended at 9.00 o'clock.

Among the charter members who will speak are William C. Lane, librarian emeritus, Harvard College Library, and president of the club, 1891-92; Alice G. Chandler, a trustee of the town library of Lancaster, president of the club, 1897-98, and present president of the Library Art Club; and Frederick W. Paxson, present delegate of the club to the American Library Association. It is hoped that Adam Strohm, librarian of the Detroit Public Library and president of the American Library Association, and Carl H. Milam, secretary of the American Library Association, will speak.

Of the eighty-four persons who attended the organization meeting forty years ago, twenty-seven are now living. All who can attend will be the guests of the club. It is expected that a number of them and of other early members will respond to the greetings of the president. Reservations for the dinner, accompanied by the remittance of $2.50 for each ticket wanted, should be sent by club members for themselves and any guests that they may wish to bring to Louis Felix Ranlett, Boston Public Library, to reach him before noon on Nov. 12.

The afternoon preceding the anniversary dinner is to be given up to a program of professional library interest. The meetings will take place in the lecture hall of the Boston Public Library. Alice M. Jordan, supervisor of work with children in the Boston Public Library, will survey the new children's books, discussing about fifty titles. Another speaker will discuss recent books for adults. The book week exhibit of the Boston Public Library will be arranged in advance of the book week and will be on display on Nov. 13 in the Venetian alcove outside the children's room. The Boston Public Library's Tercentenary exhibit of rare books, broadsides and manuscripts will remain on display in the new treasure room until after the close of the meeting.

THE LIBRARIAN

NEXT month, in Washington, will be held the important White House conference on child health and protection. By co-operating with this, it is possible for librarians to aid the cause of childhood throughout the world. In the latest bulletin of the American Library Association, Miss Edith Guerrier of the Boston Public Library, who represented the conference at the A. L. A. meeting in Los Angeles, offers valuable suggestions as to how this may be done.

"To begin with," says Miss Guerrier, in her direct, friendly way, "we can read our little blue book, so that when the time comes to call us into action we shall not have to delve into the back files of newspapers or take a trip to Washington and ring the White House doorbell to find out what the White House conference is. Copies of the conference blue book may be secured by writing Grace Abbott, Interior Building, Washington, D. C." States and municipal librarians, she continues, may help by assembling and making special lists of documents already published by States and cities which have any bearing on the subjects under consideration. Information services of public libraries may serve as repositories for classified information on whatever well-known work is being done for children. Such information designated by colored symbols on a map clearly visualizes the extent of service provided by the town or city for the children.

The hospital, medical and insurance libraries can be sure that books and pamphlets on the subjects in question have been evaluated by acknowledged experts. The law libraries can be ready with lists of recent legislative acts for the benefit of children which have not been included in the printed codes. Insurance libraries can collect the reports, findings and bibliographies of the committees, which will prove invaluable material for their clipping files. Social service libraries are advised to file the Conference Blue Book at once and be on the watch for forthcoming publications. In this connection, Miss Guerrier quotes Miss Van Rensselaer: "The White House conference is giving attention to home environment as it effects the health and protection of the child. It raises the question as to whether the house, the equipment and furnishings, as well as the management of its activities, contribute to the well being of the family."

The writer also warns her associates that the financial experts who send to their libraries for treatises on sports, cooking and social service, as well as for statistics on business conditions will some day be calling for information on the greatest piece of organized social research ever undertaken.

The World Peace Foundation will need this material in its excellent library since the promotion of the welfare of children is the greatest move to be made in paving the way toward the peace of the world. All special libraries can help by giving space in their house organs to news items relating to the work of the conference. In conclusion, the writer states, that next to the press, librarians have the greatest opportunity to disseminate the information which will soon be forthcoming as a result of the November, 1930, meeting of the White House conference on Child Health and Protection.

Perhaps you didn't know that the Boston Public Library has been on the air since last August. If you will listen in every Wednesday afternoon at two, you will hear many interesting sidelights on news and old books of importance. This broadcast is on WJAC and forms part of the "Woman's Hour," conducted by Miss Eleanor Geer.

Miss Laura R. Gibbs, readers' adviser at the B. P. L., was the first speaker with "Gleanings of Theodore Roosevelt" as her subject. A week later Miss Beatrice Flanagan, librarian of Memorial Branch, discussed "Books for the Hostesses," with the result that there was an increased demand for the volumes she mentioned.

Frank H. Chase, that genial scholar who is assistant librarian, chose as his subject one of his pet enthusiasms, "White Mountaineering," introducing his audience to a dozen or more books in the few minutes at his disposal. Since then the library has had a considerable number of requests for a list of these "read-making" books.

On Oct. 1, Richard G. Hensley, in charge of the statistical department, spoke on "Rear Admiral Byrd and the South Pole," and a week later Miss Emily Goldstein, librarian of the West End branch, gave a resume of current Jewish books. Last week Miss Christine Hayes of the ordering department spoke on "Your Books: What Chance Have They?"

The subject of this week's broadcast is "The New Interior" and the speaker is Miss Mildred R. Bradbury, assistant in charge of the department of fine arts. On Oct. 25 Louis Felix Ranlett, chief of the ordering department, will tell you something about "Getting Acquainted with Nature Through Books." Keep the day in mind—Wednesday—and the time, two o'clock.

Librarians will have an opportunity to see what the Boston Public Library is doing for business next Monday evening, for the meeting of the Boston Chapter, Special Libraries Association, will be held at the Kirsstein Business Branch, 29 Chiv. Hall avenue, Dr. Arthur H. Cole, administrative curator, Baker Library, Harvard Business School, will speak, also Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, also Mrs. Mary W. Dietrichson, librarian of the Kirsstein Business Branch.

The entire building of the Kirsstein Memorial Library will be open for the inspection of the association. Miss Grace C. Brady, librarian of the Kirsstein Branch Library, will be present to explain the work carried on in her department.

Members of the association will meet for supper at the Bellevue Cafeteria, corner Beacon and Bowdoin streets, at 6 P. M., and are urged to notify Miss Meriam 650 Congress street, telephone Hubbard 4331, by Saturday noon, Oct. 25, if they plan to attend. The meeting at the Kirsstein Business Branch will be at 7.30.

On Saturday afternoon, Oct. 25, there will be a walk through the Middlesex Fells conducted by Miss Meriam and Mr. Lee. Members who wish to join will please get in touch with Miss Meriam.

The delightful Charles Sumner Bird Reading Room for Boys and Girls recently opened to its young public by the Wahpole Public Library was described at length in last week's Librarian. The picture which is here reproduced was unfortunately received too late for publication then. The room has been very popular with the children of Wahpole since the opening day. Miss Eleanor H. McLean, a graduate of Sumner College School of Library Science, is in charge of the reading room.

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1930

Stegelmann to Give German Readings at Public Library

Four readings in German from famous literature of that country will be given by O. A. F. Stegelmann in the lecture hall of the Boston Public Library at 3 P. M., beginning next Saturday. The other three readings will be on Nov. 8, Dec. 6 and Dec. 13.

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1930

A CASE FOR LIBRARY EXTENSION

To the Editor of the Transcript:

Anyone doubting the wisdom of the Branch Library expansion, as planned by Mayor Curley, need only visit the Faneuil Branch Library. Housed in the same small building where it was started nearly seventeen years ago, there is but one room which adults and children must share, which is so crowded that it is now almost entirely a children's library. There is no room for the adult reader who might wish to enjoy the wonderful selection of books and magazines found at this branch. Night after night the room is filled with high school boys and girls intent on their studies. Books are piled high on the tables for the shelf which now discipline is maintained, and one wonders how discipline is maintained, and one learned upon inquiring that whereas when the library first opened 20,000 books were given out in a year, today 70,000 are given out in the same small room. Such a condition is not fair to the public.

As a home owner and resident of this section for nearly thirty years, I am in a position to observe the changes which have taken place in the Faneuil and Oak square district during these years. This is a community of adult readers, people anxious to take advantage of the library and further their education. I think it is safe to say that by means of lectures and other community affairs held at this branch, the people have had more opportunities offered to them than in most of the other districts. What a pity that these opportunities must cease! These lectures are held in a basement room, dimly lighted, poorly ventilated, and having a seating capacity of only one hundred, yet the attendance is usually one hundred and fifty or more. I understand that as many as three hundred children are crowded in at some of the Story Hours.

During the past few years petitions have been sent to the trustees of the Library containing hundreds of names and asking for better quarters. The people here have faith in the trustees and cannot but feel that their turn will come next and that these trustees will realize conditions and answer their appeals.

Mrs. GEORGE E. PARSONS
Faneuil, Oct. 21.

THE BOSTON HERALD

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1930

KIRSTEIN LIBRARY WELL PATRONIZED

Association Hears of Work at October Meeting

Scores of men and women business executives and many others engaged in the commercial field are making extensive use of the Kirsstein Memorial library. Mrs. Mary W. Dietrichson, librarian, said in an address at the October meeting of the Boston chapter, Special Libraries Association, at the Kirsstein library last night. Miss Abbie G. Glover, president of the association, presided, and nearly 200 men and women members attended.

Charles Belden, director of the public library of Boston, and Dr. Arthur H. Cole, administrative curator, Baker library, Harvard business school, were the other speakers. Mr. Belden praised the work of the library, which was erected by Louis E. Kirsstein, a trustee of the public library, in memory of his father, Edward Kirsstein. Dr. Cole said that the Kirsstein library and the Baker library are co-operating. He also paid tribute to the activities of the new library.

Following the meeting, refreshments were served on the second floor, and the entire building was open for inspection. Miss Grace C. Brady explained the work carried on in her department.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1930

THE LIBRARIAN

More Books, the Bulletin of the Boston Public Library, is at hand once more. The Librarian is pleased to report. The leading article for the September issue, by Miss Margaret Munsterberg, describes a collection of documents, ranging from 1750 through the revolutionary period, concerning an old New England town, which the Library recently acquired.

Included in the papers are four note books, from the contents of which Miss Munsterberg builds up a picture of pioneer days more fascinating than one can find in any formal history. The oldest of these notebooks is described by the writer as a rough little affair of rag paper, torn in parts, frayed at the edges, unbound, about 3 1/2 x 5 1/2 inches in size, and is inscribed: "Peter Emerson His Book Bought in Halifax 1750. Price one shilling." Peter appears to have been a carpenter, and a cabinet maker, one who operated a sawmill. Some idea of a skilled workman's wages may be had from the following: "To six Days work at a half a crown a Day." A crown, it seems, was the equivalent of five shillings.

Another one of the notebooks, a diary of Rev. Caleb Prentiss, a graduate of Harvard, class of 1765, gives an account of that "celebrated Dark Day," when the people believed that the Day of Judgment was near. "May 19th-1780," states the notebook, "was an uncommon Dark day. It came on in the fore noon about 10 or 11 o'clock and continued (2) some time in the afternoon and was followed by as an uncommon dark night the fore part of the night the day was so dark that we were obliged to light a candle to see to eat dinner."

Mrs. Sarah Parker kept what was perhaps the most interesting notebook of all, for in it she recorded many references to historic events: of "a hill called bunkers hill where a bloody battle issued" and later: "Genrel Burgoyne Surrendered his self Presoner with 7000 to mager genrel Gates on October the 17: 1777."

Library Notes of the Bulletin proudly mentions that the large folio volume, "Masterpieces of Architecture," in the United States, which may be found on shelf-number 8094B.107, contains some remarkably beautiful views of the Boston Public Library. A small number of public buildings, etc., have been selected by a jury of eleven prominent architects.

From the splendid views and vistas of the library was chosen the front on Copple Square, shown in a full-page picture. There are also some unusually fine views of the court-yard, giving the effect of the colonnade; details of the main entrance showing the iron work on the gates; a beautiful view of the staircase with one lion (the other one very likely has been sulking ever since) and some of the nautical; a wide perspective of Bates Hall, further, parts of the delivery room with the Abbey frieze, a view of the staircase from the vestibule and the main doorway to Bates Hall.

Boston Transcript

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1930

To Begin Work on Branch Library

Cram & Ferguson, architects of the new Parker Hill branch library, announced today that they would be ready for the laying of the cornerstone during the week of Nov. 3. This is the first of the two branch libraries which mark the beginning of a new program of construction to embrace two such institutions a year for a period of twenty years. Mayor Curley today asked the library trustees to select sites at once for two more libraries next year.

Boston Daily Globe

THURSDAY, OCT 30, 1930

MAYOR SUGGESTS NEW BUILDINGS

Two Fire Stations, Two Police Stations in List

Two Branch Libraries, Hospital Structures to Be Considered

Mayor Curley had a conference yesterday with department heads and notified them to complete their legislative programs within a week, for budget purposes. Fire Commissioner McLaughlin was told to consider the advisability of constructing two new fire stations and Police Commissioner Hultman is asked to look into the situation of constructing two new police stations; the four units to cost $350,000 apiece.

Two branch libraries at $100,000 are also to be considered as well as an additional building for the Board of Public Welfare to cost $250,000; a kitchen at the Boston City Hospital, to cost $300,000, and a building for treatment of children's diseases to cost $600,000. The Mayor announced he would send an order to the City Council at the next meeting, asking for an appropriation of $400,000 for equipment for the new City Hospital administration building.

The Boston Post

OCTOBER 6, 1930

JOB

To the Editor of the Post:
Sir—To relieve the unemployment situation, what is being done? Here are some suggestions:

No day employees at the Boston Public Library should be permitted to work on the evening or Sunday force.

The day workers at the Boston Public Library are working both days and nights. Such is not consonant to one's health, and also to giving someone else an opportunity for work.

The city of Boston, through the board of trustees of the Boston Public Library, can correct this injustice to others. It is said that many school teachers are without employment.

Then, too, day school teachers in the Boston public schools should not be permitted to teach at night schools. Such work should be given to teachers out of work.

No day workers in factories should be permitted to work nights when that night work is done in the rush season. Give such work to those who have no work.

For men and women to work both day and night in an effort to hog it all is not consistent to the laws of nature, as governing our health in constitution to our needs. Share with others in need, by not depriving them of an opportunity for a livelihood.

MAX HENRY NEWMAN.

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 1930

A LIBRARY NEED

To the Editor of the Transcript:

The system of branch libraries, numbering thirty-two in Boston, furnish almost entirely the home contacts of the Boston Public Library. Like the proverbial "swan mother," in this period of distress due to business depression, our branch library has extended its sheltering arms to draw in the needy. If the house is cold, a comfortable reading room is close by; if the purchase of magazines and newspapers must be curtailed, the best can be found at the library. The librarian is aware that the family budget is short on its "movie" allowances for she sees many new faces at the reading tables and new borrowing cards are in demand. However, it is when she faces her "story hour" that she likens herself to the "old woman who lived in a shoe." At least, it seems like that at the Faneuil Branch Library. The quaint little church, which a neighboring congregation outgrew about twenty years ago and which thus became a new branch library, is serving a population many times as large now. Growth in the Faneuil section of Brighton for the past fifteen years has been phenomenal.

In this community of homes, the library has developed into a center for civic groups and has given impetus to every worth-while movement. The Special Aid and Red Cross groups of the war period were followed by the Improvement Association, which has fostered and furthered every effort for the betterment of Brighton. During the past three years, the Better Homes movement through the co-operation of the librarian has been most enthusiastically developed.

In the low-ceilinged, stuffy basement hall, which crowds have taxed to capacity, many famous speakers have been heard. However, public safety will not permit such large meetings and therefore activities must now be restricted. There is a hope that Faneuil may be chosen for a new library next year. Certainly one doubts if the trustees could find in all Boston a more urgent need.

CORSELA G. McMAHON
Faneuil, Nov. 3.

At 2 P.M. on Saturday, Nov. 15, in the Lecture Hall of the Boston Public Library, Jean Mardin will present a marionette dramatization of John Bennett's "Master Skylark," a story of Shakespeare's time. The public, especially children and adults accompanied by children, are cordially invited by the library authorities.

THE BOSTON HERALD

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1930

LIBRARY CLUB TO OBSERVE BIRTHDAY

Dinner at Somerset on 40th Anniversary

A dinner to be held at 6:30 P. M. next Thursday at the Hotel Somerset will feature the celebration of the founding of the Massachusetts Library Club 40 years ago. A reception will precede the dinner.

Those in charge include George H. Evans, president of the club and librarian of the Somerville Public Library, and Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, chairman of the club's 40th anniversary committee. Guests of the club include charter members, of whom 27 of the original 84 are living.

Among the charter members who will speak are William C. Lane, librarian emeritus, Harvard College library and president of the club, 1891-92; Alice G. Chandler, a trustee of the town library of Lancaster, president of the club, 1897-98, and present president of the Library Art Club, and Frederick W. Faxon, present delegate of the club to the American Library Association. It is hoped that Adam Strohm, librarian of the Detroit Public Library and president of the American Library Association, and Carl H. Millam, secretary of the association, will speak.

The afternoon preceding the anniversary dinner is to be given up to a program of professional library interest. The meetings will take place in the lecture hall of the Boston Public Library. Alice M. Jordan, supervisor of work with children in the Boston Public Library will survey the new children's books. The book week exhibit of the Boston Public Library will be arranged in advance of the book week and will be on display Nov. 13 in the Venetian alcove outside the children's room. The Boston Public Library's tercentenary exhibit of rare books, broadsides and manuscripts will remain on display in the new treasure room until after the close of the meeting.

THE BOSTON HERALD

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1930

LIBRARY CLUB DINES ON 40TH BIRTHDAY

170 Members, Guests Gather At the Somerset

The Massachusetts Library Club observed its 40th anniversary at a dinner in the Hotel Somerset last night, with 170 members and guests present. Twelve charter members of the 25 living out of total of the original 84 attended and had a birthday anniversary cake to themselves.

George H. Evans, librarian at the Somerville Public Library, president of the club, presided. Announcement was made that Frank H. Chase, assistant librarian of the Boston Public Library, was seriously ill. A letter was received from him and read by Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library and chairman of the anniversary committee. It was voted to send a message to him. A telegram was also sent to all the absent charter members.

Among the speakers were Alice G. Chandler, a trustee of the town library of Lancaster, who was president of the club 1897-98; Adam Strohm, librarian of the Detroit Public Library and president of the American Library Association; Miss Theresa Hitcher of Brooklyn, N. Y., who recounted events of a European trip and tales of Monte Carlo; George H. Tripp of New Bedford, and Miss Caroline Underhill, representing the New York State Library Association.

Gardner N. Jones spoke for the charter members. Frederick W. Faxon, present delegate of the club to the American Library Association, showed pictures of former conventions. The fashions of the women of olden times evoked some mirth.

Before the dinner there was a reception and in the afternoon a program of professional library interest was held at the public library.

Boston Daily Globe

FRIDAY, NOV 14, 1930

STATE LIBRARY CLUB NOTES ANNIVERSARY

12 Charter Members at the Dinner

One of the most notable features of the after-dinner exercises last evening at the observance of the 40th anniversary of the Massachusetts Library Club, at Hotel Somerset, was a sad story told with a guarantee of its truth by George H. Tripp, Public Librarian at New Bedford.

The subject of the story was a New Bedford whaling captain, who about 90 years ago, during the Fr Mathew temperance crusade in this country, was persuaded to give up his daily allowance of grog, which he had enjoyed for many years, and to consent for the sake of a public example to join a total abstinence society.

The old whaler then went on a three year cruise, during which he touched not a drop of anything alcoholic, in spite of the rough seas, whistling gales and long vigils of his cruise.

On his return, according to the reporter, the whaler sought out the temperance agitator who had induced him to sign the pledge and after giving him an account of his sufferings as a total abstainer for three years, he declared that he must be released from membership in the total abstinence society at the earliest possible moment, so strong did he feel the call to return to the bottle.

"Why," said the man who had inveigled him into the prohibition fold, "you won't have to be released from membership. The fact is, when I presented your name for membership three years ago, you were black-balled."

The chiefly honored guests at the dinner were 12 of the 25 surviving charter members of the club. George H. Evans, president of the club, presided. He introduced each of the 12 charter members, Miss Helen M. Bell, Francis M. Birwell, Alice G. Chandler, Bertha H. Merrill, Cora A. Quimby, Elizabeth P. Thurston and Ada L. Wetherbee, also Mrs. L. Louise Tarlton, Mrs. Grace M. Whittemore and Gordon M. Jones and John D. Parsons.

Letters of regret from a number of absent charter members were read by Mr. Evans.

After a friendly letter from Herbert Putnam, former member and president of the club, now librarian of the Congressional Library, Washington, had been read, Mr. Putnam was unanimously elected an honorary member.

There were also fraternal letters from William C. Lane, librarian emeritus of Harvard University, who promised to at some future meeting contribute biographical data in regard to early members of the club; from R. R. Bowker, Catherine E. Loring, Miss Theodora Macurdy of the Boston Public Library, and Frank H. Chase, assistant public librarian of Boston, who is very sick at his home in Hingham.

Among the speakers were Miss Theresa Hitcher of the Brooklyn, N. Y., Public Library, recently returned from Europe with a store of reminiscences on which she drew for the benefit of the audience; Miss Catherine Underhill, representing the New York State Library Association; Gardner Jones, who spoke for the charter members, and Miss Alice G. Chandler, trustee of the Lancaster Public Library.

The final feature was a chat by Frederick W. Faxon on highlights at various conventions of the club during its 40 years' existence.

AMERICAN, BOSTON, MASS.

NOV 11 1930

Says Libraries Should Be Open Until 10 P. M.

Editor Boston American:

Branch libraries of the Boston Public Library should be kept open until 10 o'clock evenings, considering the present conditions of those out of work and not enjoying the comforts of home life.

The city of Boston can well afford to give such people this comfort, by permitting them to spend an hour longer reading evenings.

Too many of the branch libraries are without lavatories.

This should not be. This is a public necessity, and should be provided for by the powers that be. MAX HENRY NEWMAN.

Massachusetts Library Club
Fortieth-Anniversary Meeting
Boston Public Library
November 13, 1930

Lecture Hall:
2:30-3:15 Alice M. Jordan, Supervisor of Work with Children, Boston Public Library, Children's Books of the Season.
3:15-4:00 H. Addington Bruce, M.A., author of works on psychology, lecturer, President of the Boston Authors Club, The Great American Paradox.
4:00-4:30 Ralph Adams Cram, LL.D., Litt. D., architect, author, Changing Ideals in Library Architecture.
Venetian Alcove (near Children's Library):
Book Week Exhibit.
Treasure Room:
Exhibit of rare Americana.

Hotel Somerset

Gala Anniversary Dinner: Reception 6:00. Dinner 6:30.
Speakers as announced in Club Bulletin and also President Strohm, A.L.A.

Tickets for the dinner, at $2.50 each must be reserved before noon of November 12, through Mr. L. F. Ranlett, Boston Public Library.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT, WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1930

The Boston Public Library Honors Children's Book Week

A Display of New Editions and Old Favorites in the Venetian Alcove Adjoining the Children's Room

THE BOSTON HERALD

MONDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1930

BOOKS FOR THE SAILORS

As Christmas approaches, when many homes will be filled with new books, it is pertinent to suggest what can be done with old books, not worth keeping as choice volumes and too good to throw away. The American Merchant Marine Library Association, a national organization co-operating with most of the important American lines, has for the last ten years distributed books and magazines to sailors on our ships in all parts of the world and to light-house keepers and men aboard lonely lightships.

Most men who go to sea are omnivorous readers while off duty and their tastes are eclectic. Mystery stories, "realistic" novels, scientific books on subjects ranging from astronomy to cooking, all find an eager reception awaiting them. Distribution centres are maintained by the association in all the large seaports of the country and in the chief centres of navigation on the Great Lakes. The local dispatch office is in the Boston Public Library, where books should be sent.

THE LIBRARIAN

One of the most delightful meetings scheduled in a long time is the one to be held by the local chapter of the Special Libraries Association, for it will include a lecture on the Harvard College Theater Collection, one of the most complete and fascinating in the world. This will be held Nov. 24 at 7:30 P. M.

Mrs. Lillian A. Hall, custodian of the Theater Collection, will be hostess for the evening. The speaker will be Mr. Frank Wilson Cheney Horsey, instructor in English at Harvard College and an enthusiastic lover of the theater, who is the personal friend of many of our greatest modern actors.

Supper will be served at the Cock Horse Inn, 56 Brattle street, Cambridge, at 6 P. M., for one dollar a plate. Members are asked to notify Miss Meriam, at 50 Congress street, by Saturday noon, Nov. 22.

Another project of the Special Libraries Association is a course in library methods with the emphasis on cataloging and classification, offered by the education committee.

The course will be conducted by Miss Loraine A. Sullivan, a graduate of the School of Library Science, Pratt Institute, and a member of the staff of the Boston Public Library. Though the courtesy of Mr. Sever, the course will be given in the library of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, 60 Massachusetts avenue, Cambridge, from 7 to 8:30 P. M. on a night chosen by prospective members. Tuesday, Wednesday (preferably) or Friday are possible. The class will meet once a week beginning in January, 1931. The fee for the course is $10. Ten members a necessary to form a class. Membership in the Boston Chapter, S. L. A. ($1 a year) is required. Applications should be sent, before Dec. 1, to the chairman of the education committee, Mrs. Alice L. Hopkins, Simmons College Library, 300 The Fenway, Boston, Mass.

The Children's Book Week display at the Boston Public Library is unusually splendid this year. It is located in the Venetian Alcove just outside the door of the Children's Room. The exquisite painted panels of fruit on each side of the doorway enclose original drawings of Professor Kelly's "The Blacksmith of Vilno."

In the foreground is a huge teakwood table on which are arranged recent publications of juvenile fiction and non-fiction, along with new editions of old favorites. All of these retain their vivid enticing jackets. Bookcases and shelves are likewise piled with volumes which small fingers itch to get hold of. On the walls of the alcove are pasted cover illustrations which catch the eye and make one rush out to the nearest bookstore and buy widely. The plump and engaging marble group of Child Feeding Swan presides over the exhibition, which has won the wholehearted favor of grown-ups as well as children.

President
MISS ABIE G. GLOVER
Assistant Librarian, The Insurance
Library Assn. of Boston
40 Broad Street
Hancock 3466

Vice-President
MRS. MARY W. DIETRICHSON
Librarian, Kirstein Business
Branch, Boston Public Library
20 City Hall Avenue
Hubbard 6860

Secretary-Treasurer
MISS ELIZABETH S. DOWNES
Librarian, Boston Univ. School of Education
97 Huntington Avenue
Commonwealth 6679

Assistant Secretary-Treasurer
MISS MILDRED E. ROHIE
Librarian, Lee Higginson & Co.
70 Federal Street
Liberty 5000

Executive Committee Member
MISS E. LOUISE LUCAS
Librarian, Fogg Art Museum
Harvard University, Cambridge University 7691, Line 346

Executive Committee Member
REV. FREDERICK T. PERSONS
Librarian, Congregational Library
14 Beacon Street
Haymarket 1101

Boston Chapter, Special Libraries Association

Time: Monday, October 27, 1930, at 7:30 P.M.

Place: Kirstein Business Branch, Boston Public Library, 20 City Hall Ave.

Program: The Kirstein Business Branch

Speakers: Dr. Arthur H. Cole, Administrative Curator, Baker Library, Harvard Business School

Mr. Charles Belden, Director, The Public Library of the City of Boston

Mrs. Mary W. Dietrichson, Librarian, Kirstein Business Branch, The Public Library of the City of Boston.

The entire building of the Kirstein Memorial Library will be open for our inspection. Miss Grace C. Brady, Librarian, Kirstein Branch Library, will be present to explain the work carried on in her department.

Supper: Bellevue Cafeteria, corner Beacon and Bowdoin Streets, at 6:00 P.M. Tables in the corner nearest Bowdoin Street will be reserved for us until 6:05 P.M. No definite menu is planned, as members may choose their own. Kindly notify Miss Meriam (50 Congress Street) telephone Hubbard 4331 by Saturday noon, October 25, if you are coming to supper.

On Saturday afternoon, October 25, there will be a walk through the Middlesex Fells, conducted by Miss Meriam and Mr. Lee. All members interested please call Miss Meriam, Hubbard 4331.

Membership Committee

Miss Marion G. Eaton, Chairman
Miss Eleanor Akin
Miss Aletta Spence

Hospitality Committee

Miss E. J. Meriam, Chairman
Mr. Kimball C. Elkins
Mr. G. W. Lee
Miss Florence L. Morse

Elizabeth S. Downes
Secretary

The BOSTON PLAN of Meeting the Problem of the ADULT BEGINNER Piano Student

A New Way of Serving a Fast-Growing Desire on the Part of Matured Persons for Personal Musical Expression

By MARGARET ANDERTON

DURING the past two or three music seasons especially, there has been observed a growing desire among adults to learn to play the piano.

Teachers of the instrument come into the offices of this magazine, telling us of this new call, asking how and what to teach, in order to fill this interesting and rather difficult need.

Letters come to THE MUSICIAN from time to time from the non-professional music lover types showing definitely this adult trend toward piano study.

Wistful letters some are. Others are determined letters.

Many, alas! are letters of disappointment telling how some adult beginner had sought out a piano teacher and had received "spoon-feeding" and had been set down to some infantile instruction book and methods.

Some few course books or instruction books labelled "For the Older, and the Adult Beginner" have sprouted up of course, recently.

These, we are told by teachers and by the adult beginners themselves, do not "fill the bill." They are, in most cases disappointing rehashes of courses laid out for the little child beginner, despite their hopeful titles.

Now, if in spite of reported failures of teachers, and adults to get the hoped-for results, the urge still persists, what is the obvious conclusion? The fact stands out that the adult trend toward piano study, the adult desire to make music, is here.

It is here to stay? Ah! that depends on how the situation is being met throughout the United States.

A pioneer movement to meet the adult need for education in piano playing, in a new way, was started by the State of Massachusetts, at Boston, some 2 or 3 years ago.

Boston has long been an educational center. It is, however, a conservative community and different, or daring ways of attaining educational results, are not in general vogue there. It is usually to the vivid, eager, pioneer mental habits of the out-going Western States that we look for novelty in educational experiments. This time, however, New England has led the vanguard in the way of giving piano-playing opportunity to the adult beginner, using massed piano classes and a "lecture-lesson" plan of instruction.

James A. Moyer, director of the University Extension Course sponsored the movement, ably seconded by the energetic efforts of Helen B. Garrity, his assistant supervisor, whose vision and enthusiasm took care of the many details connected with the place of meeting, the instructor, the gathering together of the adult students.

Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Public Library of Boston donated the use of the Library Auditorium as a meeting-place. It should not be forgotten that to Mr. Belden is due first honors, for, by his vision in starting free concerts of piano music, and other kinds, for the people of Boston, an increase in the love of good music was engendered.

This "music snowball" of getting the people in general to love to listen to the music, created that increasing desire to make music for themselves as well as to listen to others making it for them.

Mr. Moyer, catching up this "music snowball" rolled it along into the personal making of music through the adult piano-playing course. The people have happily done the rest.

Reports received from the State University Extension inform THE MUSICIAN that the very first of the piano-playing adult classes brought an enrollment of thirty members. Reports of the November, 1929 opening brought a registration of 164 adult beginner members and a necessity for a second "Advancing Piano-playing class" to take care of the original "Elementaries" who had persisted, carried on, and reached an advanced stage of achievements.

The work is still going forward. Reports for the 1930-31 season have not yet reached THE MUSICIAN. The latest bulletin from the University Extension, however, announces a new elementary adult class to start this month, to be held, as before, at Boston Library Auditorium, and a second course to start also in November for advanced pianists and teachers. This second course will take place at Boston University's school of music, but under the State University Extension Courses, directed by Mr. Moyer.

The United States, vast and wonderful, must surely have work going forward to meet the adult trend toward piano-playing, in other places.

Whether the particular kind of pioneer movement for adult piano study used at Boston, which has now gone past the experimental stage into its present record of proven achievements, or whether some other system is being used in other cities, is something about which THE MUSICIAN would like to be informed.

Space prohibits, at this time, entering into any advisory dissertations to the private teacher who may be already coping with the adult beginner's need, as to how it should, or should not be done, in order to get swift and time-saving results at piano playing efforts, by mature men and women. We have, in our midst, many capable and wise teachers of the piano. THE MUSICIAN would like to hear from them on this vital problem, and how to meet it.

M. A.

THE JEWISH ADVOCATE

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1930

KISLEV 5, 5691

Unusual Collection of 1930

Juvenile Books On Display

At West End Public Library

During Children's Book Week

Interesting and Instructive Assembly of Books for Children Together with Exhibit of Drawings by Juvenile Artists on Display Through December 3.

By SIBYL SOROKER

Transported from the bleak, dull, wet sordidness that only a West End street can effect on a rainy day, to the homelike, cheerful, livable atmosphere of the West End Branch of the Boston Public Library was my experience one very rainy day last week, as I mounted the steps of what used to be one of the oldest churches in New England, and stood upon the threshold of a delightfully cozy room, glowing with the romance of books.

It was Children's Book Week, and I had come to view the exhibit especially prepared and arranged for the juveniles by Fanny Goldstein, the head librarian of the West End Branch, who is being recognized today as an authority throughout the country.

I was transported from a work-a-day world to a world of pictures, of fairy tales, of heroes, of animals and kings, of science, biography and geography, of Mother Goose rhymes, and Judaism. I sat in a room that was once a minister's study talking to a Jewish librarian. I walked three flights of stairs to see the room where the first Sunday school in Boston met, which today houses the old West End Branch collection of books, now of historic value, and only used for reference.

I looked out upon the Charles River on one side; upon the Customs House Tower on the other; I saw the State House Dome in the distance; a fitting setting for the first Boston settlers, to handle their problems of State. Tradition even has it that slaves were harbored in the attic during the war, and children squeal with that "creepy", ghost-like sensation when they hear Miss Goldstein tell the tale during children's story hour. For the West End Branch building has a unique history as a house of worship, having been first erected in the 1700's, and then rebuilt in 1806, with its original beams still intact.

First Exhibit in 1929

When Miss Goldstein assembled a similar exhibit of drawings and books last year during Children's Book Week, it was the first time Boston had witnessed such an effort. The pleasure derived by children and adults alike as well as the favorable comment and praise from artists and publishers prompted the chief of the branch to assemble all the juvenile productions of 1930, regardless of the energy involved. For it is a one-man task that requires a keen knowledge of bookdom coupled with an understanding of children. This interest is by no means limited to children, for grown-ups from all over the city—from students and intellectuals to laborers—come to the West End Branch to revel in the delights and mysticisms found there.

On the walls were hung the original drawings by some of the outstanding juvenile artists all over the country, from within the ages of six to 16. There is a marked difference in structure and design in this exhibit, the black and white trend predominating.

From here I wandered to the table which was destined to lead me round the globe in children's books. The predominating influence was the idea of promoting peace and friendship in the younger generation. There were dolls representing the various countries loaned by the American Junior Red Cross; there was a map, and an assembly of books on each country of the world, each book being carried over on the map to the country it talks about.

The John Newberry Medal Awards next caught my eye. All the nine books were exhibited, as follows: 1922, Van Loon, Hendrik Willem, "The Story of Mankind"; 1923, Lofting, Hugh, "The Voyages of Dr. Dolittle"; 1924, Haves, Charles Boardman, "The Dark Frigate"; 1925, Finger, Charles Joseph, "Tales from Silver Lands"; 1926, Chrisman, Arthur Bowie, "Shen of the Sea"; 1927, James, Will, "Smoky"; 1928, Mukerji, Dhan Gopal, "Gay-Neck"; 1929, Kelly, Eric P., "The Trumpeter of Krakow"; 1930, Field, Rachel, "Hitty—Her First Hundred Years."

Comparison in "Dress"

What was particularly noticeable was the marked contrast in make-up and attractiveness of "Hitty", for instance, the 1930 award, as compared with the unattractive, skimpy appearance of one of Oliver Goldsmith's moralizing tales of the 18th century, called "Goody Two Shoes." The copy of "Hitty" is a work of art, with its colored plates, its gorgeous pastels, blacks, and whites. Here, we see the result of artist and publisher joining forces to effect a most finished product. And it was a really beautiful result!

From this table, it was but a step to the latest Junior Literary Guild selections—those which the library can endorse and recommend for boys and girls. Among this group are found Commander Ellisberg's "Thirty Fathoms Deep," and "The Painted Pig" by Mrs. Morrow, which has just been published.

I saw books on ships, on science, biography, on the Bible—Andre Maurois' book, "The Country of 36,000 Wishes," a story of a beautiful work on Joan of Arc, the colored plates a work of art, the entire book assembled by French publishers—a book on "The Cat Who Went to Heaven"—another on "Young Heroes of the Bible."

Of Jewish Value

All the juvenile books of Jewish significance were on display, although their messengers and unattractiveness in dress was a marked contrast to the colorful, vivid, pictures and covers of the others in the assembly. The decorative diversions, which children find so alluring, were not featured in such books as "Seven Skies" by Harry Guggenheim, or in the works of Elma Ehrlich Levinger.

Especially intriguing for the children, in my opinion, was the Mother Goose exhibit to which I was led, the verses for the young by A. A. Milne being tied up with the various Mother Goose figures we know so well.

In connection with Children's Book Week, Miss Goldstein has instituted a daily story hour for the youngsters. Although she conducts a weekly story hour as a regular feature, this event planned for the children especially is heralded with delight in the thought of the interesting, intriguing tales they will hear and enjoy so much.

The Judaica

As I finished my wanderings, Miss Goldstein led me with pride to her "surprise" feature—the Judaica. The West End Branch is the only branch in the city where books of Jewish interest and concern are assembled, and Jewish students, scholars and readers generally find these shelves especially helpful. These books have no rest; no sooner are they returned, then there is another call; thus, they are in constant circulation. To Louis Kirstein should go the gratitude of those readers who enjoy the Anglo-Jewish periodicals and weekly papers—of Jewish interest only—found in the library. For years, Mr. Kirstein has been supplying the West End Branch with this medium of information, and Miss Goldstein declares she could not possibly answer all the questions that are put to her daily, were it not for this gift of Boston's most leading Jewish citizen.

The branch has grown and is continuing to grow, under its chief librarian's leadership. Today, there are over 8,000 volumes for juveniles alone housed in the library. I was particularly impressed with the exhibit, and with the restful atmosphere of the library. Since the exhibit will be on display through December 3, there is ample opportunity for all those interested to become as intrigued with the result of Miss Goldstein's efforts as I was on that unromantic rainy day last week.

THE BOSTON HERALD

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1930

LOUIS E. KIRSTEIN HONORED BY JEWS

Abraham Ratschesky Also Amon, 30 Leaders Named By American Hebrew

NEW YORK, Dec. 4 (AP)—The names of 30 American Jews who have distinguished themselves in public or cultural life and through benefactions in 1930 were made public today by the "American Hebrew" in its annual "Who's who of Jewry."

The list includes two Governors-elect, supreme court justices, the winner of the 1930 Nobel prize for medicine and philanthropists who have made large gifts.

Major Jew benefactions for the year were listed at $22,800,000. Outstanding among benefactors of the year were named Maurice Falk of Pittsburgh, who established the Maurice and Laura Falk Foundation with $10,000,000 for philanthropic uses, and Louis Bamberger of Newark, N. J., who, with his sister, Mrs. Felix Fuld, gave $5,000,000 to establish an institute of advanced study.

Karl Landsteiner of New York, who won the 1930 Nobel prize in medicine, and Maurice Sterne, president of the American Society of Painters, also were listed.

Others named included: Louis E. Kirstein, Boston, who contributed $200,000 for a library for Boston business men and Abraham C. Ratschesky, Boston, minister to Czechoslovakia.

THE BOSTON HERALD

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 3, 1930

MONSIGNOR CONNOLLY MARKS 77TH BIRTHDAY

The Rt. Rev. Mgr. Arthur T. Connolly, pastor of the Blessed Sacrament Church, Jamaica Plain, quietly observed his 77th birthday anniversary at the rectory yesterday. A native of Waltham, he studied for the priesthood in Maryland and Montreal. He is the first pastor of the church which has been developed into one of the largest parishes under his guidance.

Monsignor Connolly was a former trustee of the Boston Public Library. During the day he received many congratulatory messages.

BOSTON POST

DECEMBER 9, 1930

Another famous great building in Boston which is built "stone upon stone, and brick upon brick"—without depending on steel framework to hold the walls together—is the Public Library in Coppley square.

Next time you have a chance to do so, you might inspect the thickness of the walls, near the base, of the two buildings I have mentioned as examples of building methods prevailing in Boston, before the Hub's first steel-frame skyscraper was built that being the Winsor Building on Newspaper row, (if I am not mistaken).

In order to support the enormous weight above it, the lower walls of the Ames Building are seven or eight feet thick. And those of the Public Library are about five feet thick.

As a contrast to such massiveness, the modern steel-frame skyscraper can be made, if so desired, with its lowest brick or stone walls as thin as those of the topmost story.

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1930

THE LIBRARIAN

NO more appropriate background could be found for a collection of material relating to the history of Boston business than the Kirstein Business Library. In the show window of that building may now be seen books, pamphlets and pictures which help us to visualize the adventurous and romantic backgrounds of New England enterprise. The display was made possible by the careful research of Mrs. Adeline Slade Fitz, daughter of David Slade, founder of the D. and L. Slade Company of Boston, the spice manufacturers, whose career has lent fragrance to commerce hereabouts.

Many world-famous industries had their beginnings in Boston, as every schoolboy knows. Among these was the exportation of ice. This product of Yet they got through an enormous amount of work. They owned fleets of merchant vessels, won the confidence of Oriental potentates, and shipped goods to remote ports whose very names are spelled-laden.

Undoubtedly Mr. Stearns's first customers included Boston matrons, rich in their own right, who were yet careful, thrifty shoppers. One can see them gravely fingering linens, or selecting muslins for the children's frocks. They have the paths of distance now, but they were notable housewives. "first," which this collection recalls, is the first American piano made about 1790 in the shop of Benjamin Crehore. The Vose Company in whose booklet this historical incident occurs have carried on that tuneful craft ever since. Then, too, the Forbes Lithograph Company made the first theatrical posters shown in America, or elsewhere. These three sheet posters which wheeled pennies from sugarcust youth from the final quarters of last century, are in demand among collectors these days. Most

This building, which housed the Boston Public Library, was part of the Tontine Crescent on Franklin Street, and was designed by Charles Bulfinch. The buildings were an admirable example of architecture, but a poor business proposition: a co-operative scheme which reduced Bulfinch to bankruptcy. From this particular building was adapted the facade of the Kirstein Business Branch of the Boston Public Library, which is now exhibiting a collection of books, pamphlets and pictures relating to Boston business.

Yankee pluck and ingenuity dates back to the middle of the last century when the Tudor Company was shipping fragile, glittering cargoes to the West Indies and India.

In those days young men were competent business executives at an age when moderns are completing their formal education. There was, for example, the case of Charles Russell, aged nineteen, who made a trip around the Horn to Peru in 1857 and remained eighteen months to make a survey of market conditions in South America.

A decade before this, the firm of R. H. Stearns was established by Richard H. Stearns, weighed down by twenty-three years and a capital of $700. Although he had had no previous experience, he took in the sum of $23.75 the first day. His Boston was a small, self-sufficient place whose merchant princes had their offices and warehouses on India and adjoining wharves. Their costumes, which included tall silk hats and massive gold watch chains, seem absurd to us, today, and their lives leisurely.

noteworthy of all the achievements which had their start around Boston was the first reciprocal telephone conversation ever held over a distance outside of a single building. This was between Alexander Graham Bell who spoke from the Cambridge plant of the Waltham Manufacturing Company with his assistant in Boston.

The collection is a vivid record of innovations and improvements, depressions—oh, yes, Boston has weathered them before. There was one in the late nineties, it appears—and triumphs at world fairs and elsewhere. The Transcript, it is pleasant to note, has an honored place in the display, for it has often added its spray of illustrated articles cut from the paper appear, as well as others which were later republished by the firms they concerned. Booklets, pamphlets and pictures, "stories," as Mrs. Fitz remarks, "will, I feel sure, help the youth of New England to emulate the sturdy traits of their ancestors and make for a better citizenship."

BOSTON TRAVELER, FRIDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1930

The Monsignor Reaches 77

AN intellectual and pious old monsignor sat in the study of his rectory in Jamaica Plain a few days ago, his serenity a bit sidetracked by the discovery that his friends, and there are ever so many of them, had remembered that this was his 77th birthday anniversary. He had planned to observe it alone, yet the friendly interruptions brought a glow to his heart.

It is difficult to realize that the Rt. Rev. Mgr. Arthur T. Connolly, pastor of the Blessed Sacrament Church in Jamaica Plain, is 77. One of the best minds hereabouts, he has made a definite spiritual and scholarly impress upon the community, as a pastor and as a trustee of the public library, a post he holds and has held with honor to himself and mental profit to the community.

EVENING GLOBE, BOSTON, MASS.

December 15, 1930

CORNER STONE LAID BY MAYOR AT MISSION HILL BRANCH LIBRARY

MAYOR LAYING CORNER STONE OF NEW BUILDING

The corner stone of the new Mission Hill Branch Library on Tremont street, Roxbury, was laid by Mayor Curley this morning at 11:30 as officials of the Library Department and residents of the section looked on. The exercises were necessarily brief due to the cold.

The library branch is built on the Mission Hill Playground site adjoining the Mission Church. The present branch library, located on the opposite side of the street, is inadequate for present needs. The old branch will be closed as soon as the new building is ready for occupancy.

Mayor Curley said that it was a genuine pleasure for him to lay the corner stone for the new branch library in the old Roxbury section, which he said was dear to his heart. He declared that he knew that the people of the Mission Hill section would benefit by the new branch. It would be of special value to the school children of that section, he said.

The new building is of brick. The basement and first floor already have been constructed. The building will be finished in the Spring, according to the contractors.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1930

A BOSTON ASSET

A NUMBER of Wakefield people have found much satisfaction seeking information on business and industrial subjects at one of Boston's newer institutions, the Kirstein Memorial Library. This is the Business Branch of the Public Library of the City of Boston and as noted in these columns at the time of dedication, was erected by Louis E. Kirstein of Boston, a trustee of the Public Library, as a memorial to his father, Edward Kirstein, whose early business associations were largely with Boston. The Kirstein Library has already proved invaluable for many business concerns. An immense amount of information is readily available for every conceivable line of commercial and industrial activities ranging from city directories, maps and atlases to books on advertising, banking, credits, foreign trade, insurance, marketing, railroad mergers, trusts and about "everything under the sun." It must be an immense source of satisfaction to the donor of the Library to realize that his thoughtfulness is thus appreciated. In this respect, however, we wonder just how many people have expressed their appreciation to Mr. Kirstein along this line. In all probability the majority of letters received by him are begging letters or appeals for this or that object, and we venture the opinion that anyone writing to him, expressing appreciation, would afford a pleasant surprise. This is not only true in the case of Mr. Kirstein but applies equally as true to many others who are performing public service and doing the day's work unostentatiously, simply as their tasks. Appreciation is appreciated!

Boston Daily Globe

TUESDAY, DEC 16, 1930

LAST TRIBUTE PAID FRANK H. CHASE

HINGHAM, Dec 15—Funeral services for Frank H. Chase, assistant librarian of the Boston Public Library, were held at noon today at the Episcopal Church of St. John the Evangelist, of which he had been a junior warden. The church was filled to overflowing with relatives and friends, including many in library work. Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, with Mrs. Belden, headed a large delegation from that institution. The State Library, the Harvard College Library and the Public Library Commission were all well represented. Pres. George Evans represented the Massachusetts Library Club, Miss Abbie G. Glover represented the Boston chapter of Special Libraries Association and Rev. Frederick T. Persons represented the Yale class of 1894. The service was conducted by the rector of the church, Rev. Daniel Magruder. Burial was in Linwood Cemetery, Haverhill.

Boston Daily Globe

FRIDAY, DEC 12, 1930

FRANK H. CHASE, HINGHAM, DIES

Assistant Librarian of Boston Library

HINGHAM, Dec 12—Frank H. Chase, assistant librarian of the Boston Public Library, died this morning at his home on Pleasant st., following a sickness of several months.

He was born in Rockland, Me., April 22, 1870, and prepared for college at Haverhill High School. He entered Yale in 1890 and received his degree of A.B. in 1894, and that of Ph.D. in 1896.

FRANK H. CHASE

He was a member of Phi Beta Kappa. For 15 years after graduation he was engaged largely in teaching, although in that time he made two extensive trips abroad. He spent much of the years of 1896-97 in Europe, studying art, and he spent most of the years of 1901-02 in the Near East.

He taught at Cheshire (Conn.) Academy and was a tutor of English at Yale between 1898 and 1900. Upon his return from the Near East in 1901 he became instructor in English at Bates College, and in 1902-4 was professor of English at Center College, Kentucky. Between 1904 and 1911 he was professor of English literature at Beloit College, Wisconsin.

He entered the service of the Boston Public Library Oct. 2, 1911, as custodian of special libraries, and on May 19, 1916, he was made custodian of Bates Hall. He became reference librarian Oct. 23, 1923, and was next to Mr. Belden, director, in authority. On Jan. 10, last, his title was made assistant librarian.

Mr. Chase was in much demand in library organizations as a speaker. His wide studies, his travels, his linguistic ability (he spoke five languages and was familiar with two others) and his generous disposition made him popular everywhere. He held membership in the American Library Association, Special Libraries Association, Massachusetts Library Club, and of the latter he had served as president. Since the occupation of the new house of the University Club of Boston he had served as librarian and had organized the library. When in Wisconsin he had organized the Wisconsin Association of English Teachers and was its first president. He was junior warden of the Church of St. John the Evangelist (Episcopal) and he had served as secretary of the Episcopalian Club of Massachusetts.

He had published "Bibliographical Guide to Old English Syntax," 1896, and "Bibliography of American Art and Artists Before 1835," 1918, and had contributed many articles to philological and library magazines.

He held membership in the Appalachian Mountain Club, the Yale Club of Boston, and the University Club.

In 1903 he was married to Miss Mary Hollands McLean of Haverhill, who survives.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 17, 1930

THE LIBRARIAN

MIDWAY on the great staircase of the Boston Public Library, the officials have set a laurel wreath in memory of a high-hearted gentleman, Frank H. Chase, who served the cause of scholarship in Boston for nearly twenty years. To the incredulous astonishment of his friends, the placard beneath the laurel gave his birth date as 1870. Time, we are told, is only a mode of thought. Frank Chase's nimble, sprightly mind, forever bubbling with plans and projects, ranged over the years as lightly as he himself over his beloved mountains. He was always with the interested and eager, whatever their generation.

Because he was so enthusiastic himself, Mr. Chase had the greatest capacity for kindling enthusiasm in other people. Witness those monthly luncheons of the editorial board of Library Life, the now defunct staff publication of the B. P. L. He was chairman of the board, and gathering his assortment of ill-trained amateur reporters, he would whisk them off to a little restaurant near Copley Square. There, his talk would be so stimulating, witty and helpful, that his associates would rise from their rapt, or chicken chow-mien determined to do a really brilliant article or editorial on the "Proposed Pension Scheme" or "Why Branch Children's Rooms Are So Crowded in Winter." His own style had grace and ease, as well as that rare literary quality: intimacy. You felt him leaning forward to catch your eye and nod brightly at you, between sentences.

What fun the staff club meetings were when he presided! Visiting celebrities felt immediately at home when he introduced them. Christmas, New Year, Valentine's Day parties took on the breathless excitement they have when the participant-pants are seven! The annual Drama Evening gave him the greatest kick, however. Though he always insisted he could never learn lines, he was once persuaded to appear as the father of a huge family of young ladies in a play from the French, which included a beautiful velvet jacket, and a make-up—very difficult—with a semi-bald wig and a grand, twirly mustache. Thereafter, "mother" and all the "daughters" were bidden to a party at the charming house in Hingham. And parties there were the most delightful in the world.

How many of the Boston Public Library as well as its public first learned the delights of scholarship from Frank Chase. Reference work with him was never an affair of card catalogues and shelf numbers. He could scurry to the shelves and get the book you wanted and, for good measure, an armful of others to compare with it. You heard his quick step, his enthusiastic, somewhat breathless voice now in Fine Arts, now at the end of Bates Hall, or on his way downstairs to the Open Shelf Room. There never was time to wait for elevators.

Mr. Chase lived and worked always with reckless generosity. It is to the loss of all of us that he did not spare himself. He would have loathed the idea of hoarding his vitality, of cherishing himself, feeling perhaps:

And he who shortens his life in time
May lengthen it in living.

It is difficult to imagine Frank Chase as anything but vividly alive. For those of us who had the privilege of working with him will find this world a much slower, less radiant place now that he has left it.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1930

Many Attend Services in Hingham for Frank H. Chase

Many friends and associates of Frank H. Chase, assistant librarian of the Boston Public Library, attended his funeral this noon at the Church of St. John the Evangelist, Hingham. The services were of simple character and were conducted by Rev. Daniel R. Magruder, rector. Burial was in Linwood Cemetery, Haverhill.

EVENING TRANSCRIPT, 1

Frank H. Chase Dies in Hingham

Asst. Librarian at Boston Public Library and a Graduate of Yale, '94

Frank H. Chase, who had for some years been associated with the Boston Public Library, where he was lately assistant librarian, died today at his home in Hingham, following an illness of several weeks.

Frank Herbert Chase was born in Portland, Me., April 22, 1870. His father and mother were Hazen M. Chase and Fannie L. (Hale) Chase. After leaving the high school in Haverhill Mr. Chase entered Yale where he was graduated with the class of '94, with his A. B. degree, two years later receiving his Ph. D.

At first he was a teacher at Cheshire (Conn.) Academy for one year; later a tutor of English at Yale University for two years. This was followed by the position of instructor in English at Bates College, this however, only for a year. When he accepted the post of professor of English at Center College in Kentucky, where he stayed two years.

From 1904 to 1911 Mr. Chase was professor of English literature at Beloit College, and it was from this place that he resigned to identify himself with the Boston Public Library, which he entered on May 19, 1916, in the special libraries department. He was appointed custodian of Bates Hall on Oct. 23, 1923, and later was reference librarian, his title having been changed in January of this year to that of assistant librarian.

Mr. Chase was one of the organizers and the first president of the Wisconsin Association of English Teachers, the American Institute of Architects, and a Phi Beta Kappa man. He was a member of the Appalachian Mountain Club, the Yale Club of Boston, the Episcopalian Club, of which he had been secretary; and a member of the Church of the Evangelist at Hingham, where he was junior warden.

He was the author of "Bibliographical Guide to Old English Syntax," published in 1896; "Bibliography of American Art and Artists Before 1835," 1918. During the years 1897 and 1898 Mr. Chase traveled extensively over Europe, and in 1900 and 1901 he spent considerable time in the Near East. Mr. Chase was especially fond of mountain climbing and research work.

On June 30, 1903, Mr. Chase married Mary Hollands McLean of Haverhill, who is his sole survivor.

The Boston Post

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 13, 1930

FRANK H. CHASE

In the death yesterday of Frank H. Chase, the Boston Public Library loses a devoted and able official. Patrons of the library lose a kindly friend who was never too busy to help those who needed guidance.

Mr. Chase, a former professor of English, knew books and loved books. But he had more than the pedant's interest in them. He was keenly alive to the problems of life as well as to literature. His passing is a definite loss to the library, where he was assistant librarian, and to Boston and Hingham, where he worked and lived.

THE BOSTON HERALD.

DECEMBER 13, 1930

Frank H. Chase

Funeral services will be held Monday noon for Frank H. Chase, 60, assistant librarian of the Boston Public Library, who died in his home on Pleasant street, Hingham, yesterday. He had been ill for several weeks.

He was a native of Portland, Me., and was graduated from Yale in 1894 with A. B. degree and two years later received his Ph. D. He was a teacher at Cheshire, Ct., Academy for a year and became a tutor of English at Yale for two years. From Yale he went to Bates College for a year and from 1904 to 1911 was professor of English literature at Beloit College. He became identified with the Boston Public Library in 1916. He was one of the organizers and first president of the Wisconsin Association of English Teachers. He was a member of the Appalachian Mountain Club, the Yale Club of Boston, the Episcopalian Club of which he had been secretary and a junior warden in the Church of the Evangelist at Hingham. He leaves a widow, Mary Hollands McLean Chase.

Mr. Chase was English instructor of the Bates College faculty in 1901-2, was two years at Centre College in Kentucky and then went to Beloit College for seven years. He had been connected with the Boston public library in responsible capacities for nearly 20 years. Mr. Chase was ranked very high among American librarians, had written for magazines and was author of several volumes pertaining to English literature and associated literary topics.

He was a member of the Wisconsin Association of English Teachers, the American Institute of Architects, and a Phi Beta Kappa man.

He was the author of "Bibliographical Guide to Old English Syntax," published in 1896, and "Bibliography of American Art and Artists Before 1835," 1918. During the years 1897 and 1898 Mr. Chase traveled extensively over Europe, and in 1900 and 1901 he spent considerable time in the Near East. Mr. Chase was especially fond of mountain climbing and research work.

On June 30, 1903, Mr. Chase married Mary Hollands McLean of Haverhill, who is his sole survivor.

FRANK H. CHASE DIES; BOSTON LIBRARIAN

Head of Reference Department Was Widely Known as an English Scholar.

TAUGHT AT FOUR COLLEGES

Organized Teachers' Group in Wisconsin and Was Author of Two Works on Bibliography.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Mass., Dec. 12.—Frank H. Chase, who had been associated with the Boston Public Library since 1911, and as reference librarian since 1923, died today at his home in Hingham after an illness of several weeks.

Born in Portland, Me., in 1870, he was graduated from Yale in 1894 and two years later took his Ph. D.

He was a teacher at Cheshire (Conn.) Academy for one year; later a tutor of English at Yale University for two years, and then instructor in English at Bates College for one year until he accepted the post of Professor of English at Centre College in Kentucky, where he stayed two years.

From 1904 to 1911 Mr. Chase was Professor of English Literature at Beloit College, resigning in 1916 to enter the special libraries department of the Boston Public Library. He was appointed custodian of Bates Hall in 1916. For the last seven years he had held the title of assistant librarian.

Mr. Chase was one of the organizers and the first president of the Wisconsin Association of English Teachers, the American Institute of Architects and was a Phi Beta Kappa man.

He was the author of "Bibliographical Guide to Old English Syntax," published in 1896, and "Bibliography of American Art and Artists Before 1835," 1918.

Mr. Chase married Mary Hollands McLean of Haverhill, Mass., in 1903. She is his sole survivor.

Dec. 13, 1930

127

EXPRESS, PORTLAND, MAINE

F. H. Chase Dies In Hingham, Mass.

Assistant Librarian Of Boston
Library A Portland
Native

Frank H. Chase, 60, native of this city and assistant librarian in the Boston public library, died Friday in his home in Hingham, Mass. He was a son of Hazen M. and Fannie L. Chase and was educated in Haverhill, Mass., and Yale University, class of 1894. Mr. Chase was a teacher in Cheshire, Conn., Academy, two years, spent the next two years in travel and study in Europe and tutored in English at Yale two years, making a second trip abroad in 1901, where he studied more than a year.

Mr. Chase was English instructor of the Bates College faculty in 1901-2, was two years at Centre College in Kentucky and then went to Beloit College for seven years. He had been connected with the Boston public library in responsible capacities for nearly 20 years. Mr. Chase was ranked very high among American librarians, had written for magazines and was author of several volumes pertaining to English literature and associated literary topics.

December 12, 1930

THE JEWISH TIMES

4

LOUIS E. KIRSTEIN
A leader in "Big Business" and philanthropy

A Business Executive Looks at Judaism

One of Boston's Most Distinguished Citizens Discourses on Religious Training, Anti-Semitism and Other Timely Topics

By FANNY GOLDSTEIN

THE scholar," says the Talmud, "takes precedence over kings." But how could the Talmud foresee an era when the Romance of Big Business would rule men, and when the business man would take precedence over scholars and kings? We have within our own day seen where sceptres have been broken and thrones overthrown; we have seen the lagging reins of wounded nations taken in hand gradually but forcibly by men, not to the purple born; but kings of commerce, humanists, men of wide experience, who with an uncanny, almost x-ray sense, detect the social or economic canker, and fearlessly operate.

When a man is born into wealth we are prone to expect great things of him. He was born, we are likely to say, with a cawl, or a golden spoon in his mouth, so naturally luck follows him everywhere he turns. "Why shouldn't he do so and so? Look at the start he had! If I had his breaks I'd be great!" We expect great things of those who are born into or inherit wealth. Wealth is a trust in the hands of the rich man. Society should benefit from his surplus, but how he shall use this wealth no one has a right to dictate. That privilege must be wholly the individual's. It is, therefore, a fortunate thing for men when some of our modern kings of commerce are contemporaneously generous.

THE nature of wills is changing and men themselves gifted with vision and executive powers choose to use their surplus wealth during their own lives when they can rejoice in their gifts by aiding worthy causes, and see the fruits of their labors enjoyed by their fellowmen.

"The true and loyal Jew must show allegiance to all phases of Judaism—philanthropy, practical mitzvot, education, and the rest—if he is to be recognized as such." Wealth and scholarship, however, are not always twin sisters, and so there is an old Jewish adage which says, "He who aids the scholar and makes learning possible shall be counted as if learned and reap the blessings of the scholar." Upon close examination of the personalities weighted with academic degrees and of those who wield and mould educational, social or cultural possibilities without degrees, one is inclined to favor the self-made man; especially if in the making of self that man has retained and nurtured human qualities and warm heart beats for others less fortunate.

Of such men in Boston—like Abou ben Adem—the name Louis E. Kirstein leads all the rest. With this man's name we associate power, but no arrogance; generosity, but no ostentation; a high degree of human service, but always self-effacement.

The personality behind the name had intrigued many. Louis E. Kirstein was on the eve of sailing for Europe, an inopportune time to request a busy man's ear; but when I called at his office at Filene's he received me cordially and graciously and asked what my business was.

"Mr. Kirstein, I would like to introduce you to your many Jewish friends of other places, who I am confident would benefit from the knowledge that such Jews as you exist."

He almost blushed. "Oh, there's nothing interesting about me. I'm just a hard-boiled business man."

"Mr. Kirstein, won't you please let me do the boiling? I'm really not such a bad cook!" At which he laughed and said, "Well, fire ahead. What would you like to know?"

"I should like to ask you a few questions. In the first place, was your business career an accident or choice?"

"That traces rather far back," he answered. "I started working when I was thirteen years old, and when one is forced into work at thirteen there is not much choosing."

"Did you find the lack of a college degree a handicap?"

"I should not put it exactly that way, but rather choose to say that any lack of a higher education is likely to prove a handicap and make success more difficult, especially so when, later on, the person is thrown in contact with people who have the cultural and educational backgrounds which he has missed. He will regret it even if he has overcome the handicap of not having a college education."

"How much time, for example, did you in your constructive years give to outside study for educational and cultural subjects?"

"Not nearly as much as I should have liked to, or, frankly, that I could have managed to had I foreseen their importance at a sufficiently early date."

"In your opinion, will a college degree be exacted in the future in all major or executive positions if the romance of Big Business in America continues as a syndicated or chain store idea?"

"I would not say so definitely. Let me rather put it thus. A college degree can hurt no one. It is always likely to prove an asset in a competitive race, and because competition in every phase of modern business or profession is so keen and demands so much of the vitality and the time of a person who takes his job seriously, it is better to get the right start."

"Mr. Kirstein, you have always been known as a generous man, deeply interested in all phases of Jewish life. You have affiliated yourself with almost every current movement in Jewry and yet you are not a man who takes an active part in synagogue or religious expression."

"That is chiefly because I believe in no dogmatic religion. I am rather what might be called a militant Jew. I feel that I want to do my own thinking in a religious way just as I do in thinking in other things. But the synagogue is a necessary part in Jewish life, and the synagogue belongs to Temple Israel. I think that the trend in religious education and the part of the synagogue is playing in equipping the day with a more intelligent background, the history of their race is bound to produce upright Jews in the next generation who will not doubtless be lessened and difficulties will not be quite so great. I say this quite frankly today, that had I not the opportunities which the young have now in learning and observing Judaism, and if I had my younger days to live over I would aim to be better informed and more active in Jewish life than I am today."

"What in your opinion is the greatest Jewish question before the world today?"

Quick as a flash and without any hesitation whatsoever he answered, "Anti-Semitism!"

This answer, coming from a man who is as well absorbed as perhaps any Jew in Boston, and who has many contacts with non-Jews everywhere, seemed of especial significance to me.

"Have you, as a man in your position, sensed or experienced such a thing?"

FOR let it be known here that Mr. Kirstein sits at the council table of almost every important organization in Boston. He is vice-president of William Filene's Sons Company of Boston; director of B. Forman Company of Rochester, Abraham & Straus, Inc., of Brooklyn, and of Bloomingdale Brothers. He is an outstanding member or important officer of over a score of trade boards, financial institutions, educational bodies, and civic, religious and philanthropic institutions. In addition to all these distinguished posts he has just been appointed by Governor Allen of Massachusetts as chairman of the Boston Port Authority Board.

"Anti-Semitism is not a personal question alone," continued Mr. Kirstein. "It is a problem everywhere. Call it what you will, the Jew has what seems insurmountable difficulties to overcome in this respect. I personally do not encounter any because, if I may put it plainly, I am not looking for it. They must accept me as a man and, so long as I do my duty as such, let them think what they will."

"Do you think that in your particular case your wealth is in part a safeguard against anti-Semitism?"

"Not at all. A poor man, if he has the strength of will and self-respect and character, can overcome it."

"How in your opinion can Jews be absorbed as Americans without any loss of their racial identity?"

"By living clean, upright and ethical lives; by thinking fearlessly and applying themselves to their problems in a manner that must command the respect of other races; by convincing the rest of the world that religion is entirely a private affair and not the other fellow's business; by performing the duties imposed upon them as citizens of this country and as members of our society; by living as well and constructively and actively as the other fellow and then score one above."

"What service gives you personally the greatest happiness?"

"Business. I am happy in my business relationship. I find it stimulating. I find it exhilarating. I find that it calls forth powers within me that other subjects rarely do. Business today is a great romance. It calls for specialization equally as much as the other professions. You go to a doctor when you are ill. You go to a lawyer when you need legal advice. But the business man must be in a position to serve you not only upon call but to do well, he must anticipate your demands. He is constantly running a race that calls for force

Continued on Page 7

THE BOSTON HERALD.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 27, 1930

The city of Boston not only provides you with everything that you can read but it tells you what to read, if you ask it. The city speaks in its literary capacity through the lips of Miss Laura Gibbs, reader's adviser at the Boston Public Library.

When this job was made three years ago, an enthusiastic reporter wrote that by consultation with Miss Gibbs one could obtain the equivalent of a college education. There was immediately a great rush to her office, but some three score of persons never went a second time when they learned that the library would issue no certificate or diploma for work done under Miss Gibbs's guidance.

All kinds of people come to her seeking information about books on all subjects. Most of her clientele are high school graduates—educated just enough to realize their ignorance, but not enough to feel superior to free advice. Club women ask what to read in preparing their papers. Travelling salesmen want a good list of serious but not too weighty fiction that they can read on a long trip through the West. She tells of one young man who wished her to prescribe a course of reading on underground telephone work. Miss Gibbs knew nothing about it but she knew another worker in the library who did. He told her that there was just one book on the subject, so she gave the young man that, sorry that she couldn't oblige with a "course."

Young women afraid to chat with their employers for fear of revealing their lack of education come to Miss Gibbs for advice. Technically trained men come to her for broadening. Her most persistent readers are those interested in history, and particularly current history.

She herself is a college graduate with a bachelor's degree in library science from the University of Illinois and an M. A. from Columbia. Her work is highly individual. First of all she tries to learn the reader's taste, ability and education. She tries to make sure that the books she recommends will suit the reader in both style and content. She discusses with the reader the books that he has read. She offers no short cut to culture.

N. E. Association to Meet on Monday

The New England Association of America, an organization devoted to non-commercial interests of New England, will sponsor a program designed to give the public knowledge of its purposes at the Boston Public Library at eight o'clock next Monday evening. Brief addresses will be made by William C. Crawford, Courtenay Guild, Logan L. McLean, Arthur L. Race, Mrs. Emily F. Hurd and John Jackson Walsh. Alton Hall Blackington will give an illustrated lecture on "The Romance of News Gathering," and there will be tenor solos by Helen Robinson of the New England Conservatory of Music.

THE BOSTON HERALD

FRIDAY, JANUARY 2, 1931

SHOW SOUVENIRS OF TERCENTENARY

Coins, Medals, Buttons and Badges on Exhibit at Public Library

The most complete collection known to exist of the various souvenir tokens, coins, medals, buttons and badges which have been produced to commemorate the Massachusetts Bay Tercentenary are being shown in an exhibition at the Boston Public Library as one of the final events of the celebration. The collection, numbering 180 items, has been assembled through the interest and work of Henry Schumaker of the Roslindale Board of Trade following a suggestion from E. B. Mero, executive secretary of the conference of city and town committees who expressed a hope that some one would undertake the work.

Through the courtesy and interest of Director C. F. D. Belden of the Boston Public Library, the collection is now being shown to the public daily and will continue for about two weeks in the exhibition hall of the library building in Copley square, on the third floor.

The collection includes souvenirs issued or sanctioned by about 25 local committees, the medallions issued the tercentenary corporation and the conference of city and town committees. The special medallion given by Gov. Allen and the several badges used by the city of Boston are also included.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 27, 1930

Students and the Public Library

The New York Public Library will hereafter not permit school and college students to do class-room work in the reference department of the library, nor will they be allowed to take books from the shelves for class-study purposes. The reference-librarian holds that while the library exists only to serve the public and that an increase in readers is evidence of its usefulness, "it cannot properly fulfill its main purpose unless students doing ordinary class-room work are barred."

One imperative reason for this ruling is that there is great overcrowding of the reading-room and its tables. "On Saturdays or holidays," says the librarian, "it is not unusual to have every seat taken early in the morning and to see several hundred more persons leaning against the shelves or sitting on the floor to read," and of these it is believed that about a quarter are students doing class-room work. Then, too, it is impossible to provide the number of books of the kind consulted by students for all who call for them. The library does not attempt to keep on its shelves textbooks, students' translations, "notes" and other works of a similar character which are not literature in themselves but only guides and handbooks to literature. They should be kept in the libraries of the different schools and colleges where the students can freely consult them. The library's books have been selected, its catalogue planned and its staff organized to make its collections readily serviceable to the general reader and the specialist, "and undergraduate students coming to the reference department find a collection of books that was not selected for them, a catalogue that is not planned for them and a staff that is not organized to aid them."

We suspect that the officers of the library will find it easier to announce such a ruling than to enforce it, for we see no reason why a student should be denied the privileges of the institution because he is a student. We doubt whether any such restriction would be countenanced in Boston. But, granting so much, it is quite proper for a public library to decline to lend its shelves with school and college textbooks. If a library goes into that sort of thing at all, it must carry scores of copies of many books solely for the accommodation of students. On the other hand, there are hundreds of books not in the textbook category which students need to consult again and again—anthologies, encyclopedias, dictionaries. A public library that should refuse to permit a student access to the Great Oxford Dictionary, which few public-school libraries have the funds to possess, would really fail in its function of a public library, "devoted to the advancement of learning."

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 30, 1930

PUBLIC LIBRARIES

To the Editor of the Transcript:

The rule against students preparing their lessons has been in force for several months at the New York Public Library, and is only another indication of the petty officiousness and meanness and tyranny that characterizes all the servants of the library, from the director down. Everybody who carries a parcel or a bag into the library must submit to a search. All sorts of imbecile rules are laid down and enforced with that harsh churlishness found in New Yorkers.

Our own Boston Library has its faults, too, but courtesy on the part of the attendants is at least never lacking.

Boston, Dec. 28.

D. E. J.

The West End Branch of the Boston Public Library Did Its Bit on Christmas Eve to Add to the Good Cheer Dispensed by Dwellers on the Hill. From 8 to 10:30 P. M. a Constant Stream of People Passed in and Out of the Brilliantly Lighted Building. Groups of Singers Stationed in the Gallery Sang Carols, and Late in the Evening the Bell Ringers Rang Out Their Tunes to a Thoroughly Appreciative Audience.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT, JANUARY 5, 1931

Mr. Partridge on Exploration Bent

IN the Lecture Hall of the Boston Public Library, which has been until recently the place of string quartet music, Mr. Roland E. Partridge last evening renewed the simplicity and directness of musical performance which has so often prevailed in the hall. As is always the case in a recital by Mr. Partridge, the program was of major interest. It contained but three divisions: the first devoted to ancient composers, English and Italian; the second, wholly from Schubert, with several unacknowledged songs; and the last, from composers recent and contemporary, English, French, American and German. The singer thus ranged widely while holding to a neat plan. Never satisfied with the usual thing in the usual way and often on exploration bent, he proffered two pieces which he marked "First time in Boston." These were "Prado Verde," by one Esteban Daza of the sixteenth century, and "Die Allmähliche," by Richard Strauss. This was a program of style and, as Mr. Partridge projected it, of differentiation within style. As Mr. Partridge selects his music with discrimination, so he sings it understandingly. From the music of the early writers he draws the lightness, the grace, the restrained ardor, the form and balance which are so delicate a contrast to the more eloquent expression of Schubert's day. Ancient composers for the beginning of a program are unshakable tradition in the contemporary concert hall. Their characteristic way of writing is familiar to every listener; descriptive words come quick to mind—"pattern" and "symmetry," "sweetness and simplicity," and so on.

Yet it is only when an exacting and sympathetic musician such as Mr. Partridge sings them, that these songs are really living and persuasive, instead of merely convenient as material for opening vocal exercise. Mr. Partridge likewise finds matter and means for contrast in a field which is seemingly limited in contrast. Daza's "Prado Verde," for example, is curt and neat and even rather dry in a way quite different from the sweet simplicity of, say, "Gather Your Rosebuds" of William Lawes. Then, again, he finds something of a smooth and more Italianate grace in the airs of Carissimi and Bononcini. Whatever the quality of delicacy, blitheness or tender melancholy, his securely heavy voice is sympathetically attuned to the earlier styles.

At his middle group, he turned to Schubertian lyricism and Schubertian accuracy of expression. To those who are familiar with Mr. Partridge's singing, it was a pleasure to hear his voice become more eloquent in power and richer in quality without the effect of strain. There were sustained tones of full strength. There was effective command of color. Perhaps the high point of the evening, from the viewpoint not only of audience response but also of artistic achievement, was attained in his interpretation of Schubert's "Denn Unendlichen," an impression both stirring and dignified.

At the beginning of the division devoted to later music, the value of Mr. Lewis M. Stark's accompaniments became increasingly more apparent. In Schubert's "Die Forelle," of the preceding group, he had furnished a delicate and pertinent accompaniment. Now, with the even more independent and indispensable piano part for Strauss's "Die Allmähliche," he was again both capable and persuasive while at the same time wholly sympathetic.

N. M. J.

Boston Traveler
Jan. 6, 1931

Library Service

People's Editor:

It seems to me that it is about time the Boston Public Library adopted modern methods in the delivery of books.

A few days ago I went into Bates Hall with a friend who wanted information on a subject on which he was to write a paper. I took a book from the shelves and read while he went through card catalogues and made out some 18 slips, which he handed in at the desk. This had taken him 40 minutes. In half an hour a boy brought him three dirty books and returned 15 slips marked either "out" or "gone to the bindery." My friend gave an exclamation of disgust. "I simply can't go through those cards again," he said. "I'll have to join a lending library where you get service."

And you get that service in the public libraries of all the big western cities, where they have the open shelf system. There the attendants help you find what you want instead of sitting at a desk reading the latest book or magazine.

And why not in Boston? They tell you it will cost money to make the change. Well wouldn't it be money well spent? Think of the time it would save students and others who can't afford to belong to private libraries!

L. RAINEY.

Boston.

Boston Daily Globe

FRIDAY, JAN 2, 1931
EXHIBIT OF RARE SPANISH BOOKS AT PUBLIC LIBRARY

In connection with the 14th annual meeting of the American Association of Teachers of Spanish, an exhibition of rare Spanish books has been arranged in the treasure room of the Boston Public Library. About 90 volumes have been displayed, chiefly the earliest editions of Cervantes, Lope de Vega, Jodge de Montemayor and collections of popular ballads.

Two little volumes, printed in 1605 and 1615 at Madrid by Ivan de la Cuesta, are the earliest editions of "Don Quixote" owned by the library; the one is the second issue of the first part, and the other is the first edition of the second part. The library also owns the earliest Valencian, Brussels, Barcelona, etc. editions of this immortal story. The oldest English translation, made by Shelton and printed in 1600 in London, has also been displayed at the exhibit.

A copy of "Amadis de Gaula," the ancestor and archetype of all novels of chivalry, has been placed next to a copy of "Don Quixote." Cervantes' other works, his "Galatea," "Exemplary Novels," "Journey to Parnassus" and his "Comedies" are shown in original editions.

Among the works of Lope de Vega one may see the "Arcadia," the first edition of the first work published by that great poet and dramatist. His "Isidro the Ploughman," printed in 1599, was the first work by Lope to win great popular success. The "Juste Poetion," published in 1620, contains the long poem with which Lope as presiding officer opened the literary contests of the year. The library's copy once belonged to the poet Robert Southey.

More interesting and more valuable than any of these rare editions is the original manuscript of "El Castigo a Venganza," a drama, the whole in the handwriting of Lope de Vega, with the poet's signature and with the license for performance.

Boston Daily Globe

THURSDAY, DEC 25, 1930

BEACON HILL FOLK AGAIN SING CAROLS

Great Crowd Views Spectacle; Snow Adds to Its Beauty

Other Sections of City Hear Hymns; Services in Many Churches

The unexpected snowfall, mild temperatures, and other factors all combined to make the Christmas Eve celebration on Beacon Hill and throughout the city last night one of the most picturesque in several years.

It was on Beacon Hill that the evenings groups of carolers headed for this open space, and from early in the evening until nearly midnight it was filled with people, standing in the darkness to hear the singers, or coming to sing and then departing. The houses walling in the square seemed like a row of altars, their windows were so filled with flickering candles.

Singing in Nearby Streets

The side streets formed a secondary attraction, for many of the windows here contained crèches, some of which have been imported from Italy. Chestnut st. is always a favorite for the singing of carols, with the slope of Mr. Vernon st. in front of the old Ames residence, and West Cedar st. are also popular. From Beacon Hill the singers wandered into the Back Bay, or departed for other sections of the city where they delighted shut-ins.

Dr. Richard C. Cabot, one of those who helped to start this custom several years ago, again led a group of carolers up on the hill, after a visit to the Eye and Ear Infirmary in Charles st. where again in a circle on the second floor, in their appearance, the Christmas tree in the yard of the hospital was lighted.

Great crowds also followed three groups who manipulated hand bells, under the direction of Mrs. Arthur Shurtcliffe. One of these groups included Miss Sarah Shurtcliffe, Miss Mary Rogers of Cambridge, Miss Polly Palfrey, James White, Norris Tuttle, and Jose Castillo; another, Miss Elizabeth Shurtcliffe, Miss Barbara Bassett, Edward Yocmans and Jack Shurtcliffe. In a still younger group were Miss Alice Shurtcliffe, Miss Mary Bradley, Miss Selma Robins and Nancy Cabot.

They Play Old Carols

These groups began the evening at 6:30 on Beacon st. and appeared on the hill about 7:30 for the rest of the evening. They played the old carols, "Good King Wenceslas," "Bring a Torch, Jeannette," "Isabella," "God Rest Ye Merry, Gentlemen," "St. Paul's Steeple," and other Christmas hymns. "It Came Upon a Midnight Clear," and, of course, "O Come All Ye Faithfuls." In fact, we heard all over the hill last evening.

Many of the groups represented churches of the city. A large number came from the Church of the Advent, non-Congregational Church. Others came from the Arlington street Church, under the auspices of the Marian Laymen's League, and most of the churches in the center of the city were represented.

The caroling extended all over the city. At the West End Branch of the Public Library, several groups sang under the direction of the staff of the library, coming from St. Joseph's Church, the Burroughs Neighborhood Church, the Ford Hall Folk, and groups were also heard on the hill. The male choir introduced a novel note by singing carols in Polish.

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 7, 1931

THE LIBRARIAN

As a relief from the murky skies and prevailing dampness of New England mid-winter, the Boston Public Library has arranged a display of Samoan handicraft. The walls of the Fine Arts exhibition room are hung with tapa cloth in rich warm colors. The South Sea Islanders made this from the bark of the mulberry tree. It is beaten out on a log with a baton, placed on a wide board and scraped with a shell dipped at intervals into water to keep the surface wet. Pieces of the bark are glued together with a solution of gum from the breadfruit tree and water. The design is carved on a block of wood with a knife and the cloth is then printed from the block. The color dye is taken from trees, though earth pigment is also used.

The tapa is dyed in the most exquisite tones of red and brown. The designs are generally geometric and curiously suggestive of contemporary art. Included is an antique tapa with a design derived from the ancient sign language in black, brick red and fawn color. It is the only one of this type known to exist and was presented by Princess Tahi. Most striking is the circular tapa in yellow, brown and black, signed by King Tanumase, who was slain Dec. 23, 1929.

In the center cases are examples of the kind: the Samoa Siva dress skirt, made of a shrouded tropical plant, and much more charming than the familiar Hawaiian variety. These are exquisitely made, in delicious shades of gold, white and dawn pink. Here, too, are several of the Lavalava, the print cloth wrapped like a skirt around the body. These, curiously enough, are made in Paris, and shipped by the French to their South Sea Island possessions.

The display cases also contain war clubs and war knives, grimly beautiful, as well as reminders of the more placid side of the island existence: fans, table mats and baskets. There are also models of war canoes and boats, one of which is inlaid with mother of pearl. Most fascinating are the Kava cups, of coconut shells, miraculously carved.

Another case contains pictures of those islands of idyllic Pago Pago Harbor, in American Samoa is shown, bringing to mind pictures of Sadie Thompson and her protagonist, the Reverend Davidson. Samoan men and women are likewise pictured, and they are of splendid physique and with pleasant, cheerful faces. Then, too, there is a photograph of the home of Robert Louis Stevenson. The exhibit will continue for two weeks.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

FRIDAY, JAN. 9, 1931

SAMOAN HANDICRAFT AT PUBLIC LIBRARY

Tapa-cloths are the main feature of a collection of Samoan handicraft material being exhibited by Omer Lassonde, a Concord (N. H.) artist, at the Boston Public Library. These cloths, which are used as partitions in houses in Samoa, are made of bark from the mulberry tree and are printed with a dye taken from the "Aos" tree.

Fans, bordered with brilliant feathers of native birds; a model of a "vaalo," a large canoe; one of a "pow," a small canoe; beads and rings made from shells; the cane of Matasafa, King of Samoa during the time of Robert Louis Stevenson, and a variety of handwoven baskets and mats are also being shown. The exhibit will be open to the public until Jan. 18.

BOSTON GLOBE
JANUARY 7, 1931

MAYOR ASKS $25,000 PAY FOR GOVERNOR

Mayor James M. Curley has filed a bill to increase the salary of the Massachusetts Governor from $10,000 to $25,000 a year.

He also petitioned for legislation to permit the trustees of the Boston Public Library to hold real and personal estate to an amount not exceeding $20,000,000. The present limit is $10,000,000.

In another bill the Mayor asked for authorization to build a municipal building in the Franklin Park-Franklin Field section of Dorchester, with right to borrow $400,000.

Ex-Senator Joseph J. Mulhern of Dorchester filed with the Legislature yesterday a bill to abolish the Boston Finance Commission. In a statement Mr. Mulhern assailed the Republican party as responsible for the creation of the commission. He further declared that the commission falls "to serve any useful purpose other than to create a great deal of unfavorable publicity for the city of Boston with no benefit resulting from its action."

Senator Charles C. Warren of Arlington filed a bill directing the Metropolitan District Commission to construct and maintain a public bathhouse and swimming pool on the Mystic River easterly of the bridge leading from Bedford st. to Arlington, to High st. Medford.

Senator James G. Moran of Mansfield filed a resolve directing the State Department of Labor and Industries to investigate the hours of labor, working conditions of and compensation paid to employees, license fees and taxation of so-called chain stores.

A bill providing for a 20 percent increase in taxes paid on income, especially from investments in business corporations, banks and similar concerns, was filed by Frank A. Goodwin, chairman of the Boston Finance Commission. "This bill," he said, "would place a small part of the added burden upon those who can afford to pay it and take it off the backs of those who are now overburdened beyond what they can stand."

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY.

Women's City Club

George Russell (A.E.), Irish poet and economist, will speak in Steinert Hall on Monday, at 7:45 P. M. Mr. Russell, until recently editor of the Irish Statesman, will talk on "The Last of the Fantasies," a discussion of the end of the romantic Irish culture and the great Irish writers it produced. At a tea to be given by the art and library committee on Tuesday, at 4 P. M., Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, will speak to members and their guests on the work of the Merchant Marine Library Association. Mrs. Henry Howard, president of the association, is unable to be present but announced. Mrs. Charles E. Morgan, chairman of the committee, will receive.

"Resolved, That Sinclair Lewis gives an accurate picture of American life" is the subject of a debate at the second meeting of Mrs. Hugh Butler's course in public speaking, on Wednesday, at 10 A. M. Legislation now pending in Massachusetts with reference to old age assistance will be explained and discussed at a luncheon at 12:30 P. M. on Thursday by Mrs. Eva Whiting White, president of the Women's Educational and Industrial Union, a member of the Board of Public Welfare and head resident of Elizabeth Peabody House.

JANUARY 17, 1931

THE LIBRARY JOURNAL

JANUARY 1, 1931

DEATH LAID a heavy hand on the library profession, taking from amongst its old-time leaders the beloved William E. Foster, whose service at Providence developed its great library system from the beginning, and Clement W. Andrews, who had like experience in the development of the John Crerar Library at Chicago. That gentlest of gentlemen, Frank H. Chase, assistant librarian of the Boston Public Library, died after a trying illness in which he faced death with a smile as he faced life with cheerfulness, an example to us all. Charles S. Green passed on after thirty years with the Oakland, Cal., Public Library and Myra Poland after twenty-seven years' service in the Osterhout Public Library at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., to which she left her life savings. The A. L. A. lost one of its most brilliant and promising younger members in the death of Marion Lovis, supervisor of Detroit School Libraries. The death of Edward C. Williams, librarian of Howard University, Washington, D. C., is especially to be lamented because as the leading negro librarian his experience would be especially useful in the coming southern development.

FRANK H. CHASE, who has been associated with the Boston Public Library since 1911 and Reference Librarian since 1923, died December 12, 1930, at his home in Hingham after an illness of several weeks.

University Club News

January, 1931

In Memoriam
Frank H. Chase

IN the death of Frank H. Chase, The University Club has lost an esteemed and beloved member and the community a distinguished savant.

He was one of the charter members of The New University Club of Boston, had served as a member of its Board of Governors since the opening of the Club in the fall of 1926, holding also the positions of Librarian and Chairman of the Library Committee from that date. To the Government of the Club he brought wise counsel and sound judgment gained through years of experience in collegiate and civic affairs.

In his duties as Reference Librarian and later Assistant Librarian of the Boston Public Library, he found opportunity for the full expression of his abilities. Idealistic, yet practical, he sensed the intellectual needs and tastes of the community and contributed, steadfastly and effectively, toward the happiness of his fellow men and the progress of the great library of this city.

Transcript, February 11, 1931

At the Public Library
Current at the Boston Public Library are, in the treasure room, first editions of Daniel Defoe's works and, in the exhibition room, a collection of thrift posters, displayed under the auspices of the Savings Bank Association. This will be seen only this week, through Feb. 22.

Annual Avukah
Exhibit of Books and Art Work

Jewish Advocate—Dec. 16, 1930
On Display at West End Branch of Public Library

Tying up with the 275th anniversary celebration of the first Jewish settlement in this country, and emphasizing the cultural Jewish contribution of modern art and literature, Fanny Goldstein, head librarian of the West End Branch of the Boston Public Library, announces the annual Chanukah exhibit already on display at the West End Branch.

In addition to books of current Jewish interest and significance, there will be an exhibition of the work of local Jewish artists at the same time. Some piece of art representative of the following artists, all well known in the community, will be displayed: Jacob Binder, Bashka Paef, George Arons, Ethel Mechanic, Sonia Mazur, Jacob Rosenberg, Harold Rotenberg, Ernest Halberstadt, Arthur Esner, Edward Brodny, Isador Richmond, Mr. and Mrs. Tock, Lewis Novack, Henry Klein, Beatrice Paupert and Arthur Rosenstein.

The public is cordially invited to view the exhibit.

WEST END BRANCH PUBLIC LIBRARY GAY AT CHRISTMAS

No one can visit the West End Branch of the Boston Public Library on Cambridge St. during this week without being aware that the spirit of Christmas has taken possession of the place. A great Christmas tree stands in the center of the building, every part of which is liberally decorated with Christmas greens. In front of the tree, facing the visitor as he enters, there is a Madonna.

On Christmas eve the branch Librarian and her assistants will dispense the usual hospitality. Carols will be sung during the evening by the Children's Choir of St. Joseph's Church, in which 11 nationalities are represented; by a group of carol singers from the Burroughs Newsboys' Foundation, by the Ford Hall Folks Choir, and by the Polish Male Choir, that has taken international prizes for singing. A group made up of library assistants from all over the city, accompanied by a violinist, will sing during the intervals between the coming of the groups.

Black Week—Dec. 24, 1930

IN connection with the 275th anniversary of the settlement of the Jews in America, a special exhibition of "The Jew in Contemporary Art and Literature" will be placed on view tomorrow at the West End branch of the Boston Public Library, at 131 Cambridge Street, to remain through Dec. 22, from 9 A. M. to 9 P. M.

Transcript Dec. 12, 30

Boston Public Library, Copley Square—In the Treasure Room: Manuscripts, broadsides and rare books relating to Boston and the Bay Colony. In the Exhibition Room: Books, charts, maps and documents relating to Boston. Water colors of Boston, England, by W. Ratcliffe. In the Yonatan Alcovy, Christmas exhibit of Children's books.

Boston Public Library, West End Branch, 131 Cambridge Street—Special exhibition of "The Jew in Contemporary Art and Literature." Through Dec. 22.

Transcript, February 11, 1931

Boston Public Library, Copley Square—In the Treasure Room: Manuscripts, broadsides and rare books relating to Boston and the Bay Colony. In the Exhibition Room: Thrift posters, displayed under the auspices of the Savings Bank Association. Through Feb. 22.

Chenoweth Jewish Artists—Dec. 20, 1930.
At the West End Branch of the Boston Public Library, Cambridge and Lynde Streets, there is an exhibition of paintings hung in connection with the celebration of the 275th anniversary of the settlement of the Jews in America. Miss Fannie Goldstein, chief librarian, has assembled a miscellany of works by amateurs and professionals.

Among the contributors is the very talented Ernest S. Halberstadt, who can model a head with sculptural fullness, who can make a water color an animated pattern of color. Louis Novak has made a sympathetic portrayal of a rabbi. Jacob Rosenberg in "Leo" manifests a marked talent for portraiture. Harold Rotenberg, in depicting Dorothy Livingston, has worked suavely while abandoning detail.

The art of caricature is represented in the contributions from Isaac Slocum, who underscores the follies of a man with a mixture of hope and cynicism. Others exhibiting are Isadore Richmond, Henry Klein, Martin Myerson, Sonia Mazer, Frances Maletz. The pictures are shown beneath the flickering lights of a Menorah, the seven-branches candelabrum. D. A.

THE JEW IN CONTEMPORARY ART—The Jewish Book of the Month Club, recently organized, is well represented on its advisory committee by five Bostonians—Miss Fanny Goldstein, Librarian of the West End branch of the Boston Public Library; Rabbi Samuel J. Abrams, of Temple Ohabei Shalom; Alexander Brin, editor and publisher of the Jewish Advocate; Prof. Nathan Isaacs of Harvard and Prof. Harry A. Wolfson of Harvard. So far the club selections have been: Sholem Asch's "The Mother" (Horace Liveright), for October; Charles E. Russell's "Havin' Salomon" (Cosmopolitan Book Corporation), for November, and Rabbi Stephen Wise's and Jacob Haas's "The Great Betrayal" (Brentano's), for December.

The West End branch of the Boston Public Library is observing Dec. 13-22 the 275th anniversary of the settlement of the Jews in America, with a special exhibit of the Jew's cultural contribution in current American literature and art.

West End Library Has Jewish Art

The West End Library, Cambridge and Lynde streets, marks the two hundred and seventy-fifth anniversary of the settlement of the Jews in Boston with an exhibition of works by young Boston Jewish artists. Drawings, water-colors, pastels, architectural models and oils comprise the show. Exhibitors are: Jack Rosenberg, Harold Rotenberg, Ernest Halberstadt, Sonia Mazur, Beatrice Paupert, Ethel Mechanic, Louis Novack, Henry Klein, Isador Richmond, Arthur Rosenstein.

Transcript Dec. 20-1930

CHANUKAH BOOK EXHIBITION OPENS

Librarian Fanny Goldstein of the West end branch of the Boston Public Library, will welcome all who are interested in the annual Chanukah exhibition of books.

There will also be displayed the work of local Jewish artists—Jacob Binder, Bashka Paef, George Arons, Ethel Mechanic, Sonia Mazur, Jacob Rosenberg, Harold Rotenberg, Ernest Halberstadt, Arthur Esner, Edward Brodny, Isador Richmond, Mr. and Mrs. Tock, Lewis Novack, Henry Klein, Beatrice Paupert and Arthur Rosenstein.

Transcript Dec. 20-1930

Transcript, February 11, 1931

The subject of the lecture scheduled to be given in the Lecture Hall of the Boston Public Library on Thursday, February 12, by Mr. Bradford Washburn has been changed to "Exploration of Mt. Fairweather, Alaska."

Boston American
January 26, 1931

Praises Religious Collection at Library

Editor Boston American:
Having occasion to consult religious weeklies in my tours through the United States, I have found the best collection in the Boston Public Library.
Some public libraries seem to show religious prejudice in their selection of such weeklies, but the best and most liberal selection of these weeklies is to be found in the Boston Public Library and I would like others to know this if they have to consult these papers in libraries.
N. H. KNUDSEN.
Springfield.

Boston Daily Globe

MONDAY, JAN 26, 1931

SMALL LIBRARY FIRE
CAUSES EXCITEMENT

Fire in a waste paper chute in the basement of the Boston Public Library caused excitement at the library about 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon. A large number of men and women were reading in the building at the time, and some of them, when they smelled the smoke, went to the street.
Fire Headquarters was notified by telephone, and firemen put out the flames without trouble.

DAILY RECORD, Monday
January 26, 1931

Waste Paper Fire
at Boston Library

A fire scare at the Boston Public Library yesterday caused a score of the 100 patrons present to hurriedly leave the building although their first knowledge that anything was wrong came with the arrival of the fire department.
An employee discovered paper blazing in a waste paper chute in the cellar and telephoned to the fire department. The clanging of apparatus gongs drew a crowd in Copley sq., but the fire was quickly put out with hand extinguishers. The cause was not determined.

The Boston Post
MONDAY, JANUARY 26, 1931PAPER BLAZE
IN LIBRARY

$250 Damage Caused by Cigarette in Basement

More than 200 persons reading in various rooms at the Boston Public Library, Copley square, Back Bay, were disturbed and more than a score left the building at 5 o'clock last night when a small fire in a waste paper chute in the basement filled the building with smoke.

Officials of the library called the fire department on a still alarm. Firemen had little difficulty extinguishing the blaze with a hand extinguisher. The blaze caused $250 damage. A carelessly thrown cigarette is believed to have caused the blaze.
When the smoke began to filter into the various rooms librarians went about the tables and announced that there was a small fire in the basement but there was no danger and that guests might remain if they wished.
The greater part of the damage was caused by firemen tearing out walls in the basement to make sure the fire was extinguished.

THE BOSTON HERALD

MONDAY, JANUARY 26, 1931

PUBLIC LIBRARY BLAZE
FRIGHTENS READERS

Thin clouds of smoke seeping through the corridors of the Public Library in Copley square, and the arrival of fire apparatus shortly after 5 o'clock last night, created a scare among more than 300 readers and visitors. Many ran into the square, some watched the activities of firemen as they ripped away part of a waste paper chute, while others kept on reading unaware that anything was amiss.

The blaze started in the bottom of the chute after a careless smoker had tossed a lighted cigarette into a receiver. A still alarm was sounded when officials discovered the smoke. Damage was about $250.

THE BOSTON HERALD

FRIDAY, JANUARY 30, 1931

CITY TO ERECT TWO
BRANCH LIBRARIES

Brighton and Jamaica Plain Buildings Approved

New branch library buildings will be erected this year in the Faneuil district of Brighton and the Boylston section of Jamaica Plain. A loan order of $200,000 was approved by the city council committee on finance yesterday after Chairman Frank W. Buxton of the library trustees had declared that preference should be shown the districts selected by the trustees because of existing conditions.

Chairman Buxton made known that the trustees consider that 32 branch libraries are sufficient to meet all demands and that the additional expenditures which any increase in the number would force are not looked upon as advisable.

Boston Daily Globe

FRIDAY, JAN 30, 1931

COUNCIL COMMITTEE
PASSES LOAN ORDERS

Four Departments of City to Share $2,000,000

New Sewers, City Hospital, Libraries and Long Island Building Approved

Loan orders for more than $2,000,000, divided among four city departments, were approved by the Committee on Finance of the Boston City Council yesterday.

The orders include $1,000,000 for sewers, $313,000 for immediate expansion and improvement at Boston City Hospital $200,000 for branch libraries in the Faneuil district of Brighton and the Boylston district of Jamaica Plain, and $280,000 for a recreation building at Long Island Hospital. The last order carries out the promise of Mayor Curley, made on his Christmas visit to the inmates of the hospital.

Chairman Frank W. Buxton of the library trustees recommended the branch library locations and said that the trustees consider 32 branch libraries ample.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, JANUARY 31, 1931

Wayland Woman's Club

Charles F. D. Holden, director of the Boston Public Library, will speak on "Adult Education" next Tuesday at 3 P. M. in the Unitarian vestry. The guest of honor will be Mrs. Charles A. Stockbridge, eleventh district director. The education committee, Mrs. F. Winchester Denio, chairman, is in charge.

BOSTON TRAVELER, MONDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1931

City Thanks Kirstein

Mayor Curley at left presenting Louis E. Kirstein with engrossed resolutions adopted by city council expressing thanks for the Kirstein Memorial Library on City Hall avenue, in the presence of Councilman Herman I. Bush, who recommended the resolutions.

JANUARY 30, 1931
BOSTON POST.
$1,400,000 FOR CONSTRUCTION

Work to Be Started to Provide Jobs for Idle

Public construction projects costing $1,400,000 late yesterday received the approval of the City Council committee on finance following hearings at City Hall during which city officials urged immediate action so that the work could be started without delay to provide jobs for the jobless.

Two new branch libraries will be built this year at a cost of $100,000 each. Chairman Frank W. Buxton announced that the board of library trustees had decided to erect the new branch buildings in the Faneuil section of Brighton and in the Boylston section of Jamaica Plain. He declared that 32 branch libraries would be sufficient to meet the demands of the entire city.

Feb. 3, 1931

MORNING GLOBE, BOSTON, MASS.

KIRSTEIN RECEIVES SET OF RESOLUTIONS FROM CITY

In appreciation of his gift to the city of a branch public library on City Hall av. Louis E. Kirstein yesterday was presented an engrossed set of resolutions adopted recently by the Boston City Council.

Mayor Curley, in making the presentation, declared that the building, opened on May 7, 1930, has proved most admirable in all respects, while its use has exceeded all expectations.

The average number of persons using the business branch during the day, said the Mayor, was 455, and the average number of persons using the Kirstein branch on the third floor was 203.

The total number of persons who have been served by the library from the date of its opening to Jan 30 was 134,778.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1931

Kirstein Given an Embossed Tribute

One of the pleasing duties of Mayor Curley yesterday was his presentation to Louis E. Kirstein, Boston merchant, of an embossed set of resolutions adopted by the city council in appreciation of his gift of a $150,000 memorial branch library to the city and his service on the board of library trustees. City Councillor Herman L. Bush of Roxbury, who introduced the resolutions in the council, assisted the mayor in the presentation.

In his address the mayor declared that the use of the new library branch had exceeded all expectations by serving an average of 658 people a day, of whom 455 received books in the business branch on the first two floors, while the remainder went to the general adult's branch on the third floor of the beautiful brick structure.

February 3, 1931

POST, BOSTON, MASS.

KIRSTEIN IS GIVEN THANKS

Resolutions Presented by Mayor Curley

In appreciation of his gift of a $150,000 memorial branch library to the city and his service on the board of library trustees, Mayor Curley yesterday presented to Louis E. Kirstein, Boston merchant, an embossed set of resolutions adopted by the City Council.

City Councillor Herman L. Bush of Roxbury, who introduced the resolutions in the Council, assisted the Mayor in their presentation to the founder of the Kirstein branch memorial library for business men at City Hall avenue and Williams court, the site of old police station 2.

In his presentation address the Mayor declared that the use of the new library branch had exceeded all expectations by serving an average of 658 people a day, of whom 455 received books in the business branch on the first two floors, while the remainder went to the general adult's branch on the third floor of the beautiful brick structure.

He voiced his praise of the service offered by the new branch in providing books from the Baker library at the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration, and also in providing commercial information for business men by telephone.

February 2, 1931

EVENING GLOBE, BOSTON, MASS.

PRESENTATION BY MAYOR TO LOUIS E. KIRSTEIN

Resolutions by City Council in Appreciation of the Memorial Library

MAYOR CURLEY PRESENTING RESOLUTIONS TO LOUIS E. KIRSTEIN

Louis E. Kirstein in the office of Mayor Curley today was presented an engrossed set of resolutions adopted by the Boston City Council last year, in appreciation of Mr. Kirstein's gift to the city of a branch library on City Hall av. The sponsor of the resolutions was Councillor Herman L. Bush, Mayor Curley, in making the presentation, said:

"The new Kirstein Memorial Library, housing on the first two floors a business library and on the third floor a general library for adults, was opened to the public on May 7, 1930. The building and its equipment has proven most admirable in all respects, while its use has exceeded all expectations. The total number of persons who have been served by the library from the date of its opening on May 7 to the closing hour on Jan 30 was 134,778 (business branch, 93,156; general branch, 41,592), being an average of 658 persons each day. The library is not open evenings, Saturday afternoons or Sundays.

"The average number of person using the business branch each day was 455. The average number of persons using the Kirstein branch on the third floor was 203 persons. The maximum attendance for both the business and the general branch was on Jan 12 when the business branch served 657 persons and the general branch 329 persons, or a total of 1016.

Ready Reference Books

"As stated, the first two floors are occupied by the business branch. The third is occupied by a unit of the regular library branch system known as the Kirstein branch. Use of the material in the business branch may be had by calling at the branch, by telephoning, or in certain cases by taking books away for use. The first floor is devoted to ready reference material. Here are to be found city and state directories, cable codes, maps, atlases, investment services, timetables and countless other ready reference books.

"On the second floor will be found a wide collection of business reading, on all matters relating to business, the latest and most authoritative books. These may be borrowed for home or office use. In addition there are on file a large collection of pamphlets, bulletins, and magazines covering almost every phase of business; in addition the business information to be found in the publications of the United States Government.

"The close relations established by the Boston Public Library with the Baker Library of the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration place the resources of that great library at the disposal of all citizens of Boston. Through the business branch it will often be possible to borrow the desired books from the Baker Library. At all times the volumes are available for use and study by the Boston business man at the Baker Library itself.

"The third floor of the Kirstein memorial branch, a regular branch of the Boston Public Library, is intended solely for the service of adults. Here may be found general reference works, magazines and a good collection of books for the borrower. Through daily deliveries all books available for circulation at the central library may be obtained not only here, but at any branch.

THE BOSTON HERALD

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1931

GIVES LECTURE ON ITALY

An illustrated lecture, "Italy, the Birth of Ruskin," was given in the Public Library yesterday afternoon by Mrs. Arthur Dudley Ropes, president of the Massachusetts Women's Christian Temperance Union. Miss Lilla Elizabeth Kelley presided. The 31st anniversary of the Ruskin Club will be observed Feb. 25 at the Homecraft shop, 192 Boylston street. Miss Margaret Fryer of Jamaica Plain will be chairman of the day.

BOSTON POST,

FEBRUARY 5, 1931

Gossip of the Town

Fiction doesn't go so well with the business man during his business day though he'll spend hours browsing around the shelves of the business branch of the Boston Public Library in City Hall avenue. What the business man reads most, if one should happen to step in and look about, are books that tell the secrets of his trade. There are something like 55 men who come into the place daily. The figures are from Mary Watkins Dietrichson, the librarian.

Journalism gets a great break and even bauxite, about which somebody had the patience to write books and which we never heard of before, and which is nothing more or less than "a native ferruginous hydrate of alumina," in case you are interested. From those shelves one can learn how to run anything from a metropolitan newspaper to an enormous department store, down even to the salaries the executives get, how newspaper features are written and syndicated and what newspapers pay for them.

Most of the men who use the library in the avenue are either 40 or over and have, for the most part, a substantial and successful look. There are some expert research workers who come to the library in quest of special material. One of these recently got through sketching a series of commercial charts which are now appearing in the financial journals. Women are regarded very welcome in the library but for some strange reason they rarely come.

When we were there we saw two women readers on two floors of the library and upwards of probably 150 men. The library's record day was on Jan. 12 when it served some 657 readers. The place, as everybody knows, is Louis E. Kirstein's gift to the city in memory of his father.

Boston Traveler

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 1931

RUSKIN CLUB MEETS MONDAY

The Boston Ruskin Club will observe its 11th anniversary of Ruskin's birthday in the lecture hall of the Boston Public Library, Monday afternoon, at 3 o'clock. Miss Lilla Elizabeth Kelley, the president, will present, Prof. Agnes Knox Black of Boston University, who will speak.

CHANGE IN SUBJECT OF FREE LECTURE

The subject of the lecture scheduled to be given in the lecture hall of the Boston Public Library on Thursday, Feb. 12, by Bradford Washburn has been changed to "Exploration of Mt. Fairweather, Alaska."

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1931

Drawings by Thornton Oakley at Library

Seventy-six pen-and-ink drawings by Thornton Oakley, of Philadelphia, are on view in the exhibition room of the Boston Public Library. The drawings are full-page and double-page illustrations of Amy Oakley's recently published "Enchanted Brittany" and of her "Cloud-Lands of France." Eight drawings were originally produced in Esie Masson's "Folk-Tales of Brittany."

Mr. Oakley's drawings are romantically picturesque. Churches, castles, ramparts, bridges, boats, harbors, roads, forests, old streets and markets. Men and women in their quaint costumes are merely part of scenes laid in Concarneau, Fontenay, Pontivy, Douarnenez, Belle-Ile-en-Mer, and Mont-Saint-Michel.

"In the Silent Forest of Saint-Bruno still stands the Convent of the Grand-Chartreuse," reads the title of one drawing. "Black and drear is the Hamlet of La Berarde" is the title of another. Streets from Chambéry, Annecy, Nice and other old towns are shown. One picture shows "The Valley of the Ubayette" and another is called "Above the town of Chamonix rise the snowy bastions of Mont-Blanc."

The exhibit will be on view till February 15.

THE JEWISH ADVOCATE Friday, February 6, 1931

Kirstein Receives Gratitude of City of Boston

KIRSTEIN MEMORIAL LIBRARY PROVING GREAT BOON

Photo shows Mayor James M. Curley (left) presenting Louis E. Kirstein with set of engrossed resolutions adopted by the City Council, expressing thanks for the Kirstein Memorial Library on City Hall avenue. Councillor Herman L. Bush (right) recommended the resolutions.

A recent report of the librarian of the Kirstein Branch of the Boston Public Library, on the third floor of the Kirstein Memorial Library, indicates that the demand for books is steadily growing. Says Miss Brady: "A survey of circulation figures is a conclusive proof of the need for a branch library in this part of the city. During the 181 1/2 days the branch has been opened, 18,020 books have been issued — 10,870 fiction and 7,150 non-fiction. Nine hundred and seventy-seven books were also obtained from the Central Library in response to requests for titles which were not in our collection or which were in circulation when asked for. Month by month we noticed a steady and persistent growth in our circulation. All present signs point to a continuance of the progress we have made during the past eight months. With our policy of service, we hope to increase our circulation through the commendation of a satisfied public."

BOSTON POST,

FEBRUARY 19, 1931

Little Walks About Boston

BY WILLIAM JUSTIN MAN

There is much to make especially interesting the Washington's birthday anniversary of this year, which falls on next Sunday, Mount Vernon is being reproduced at Paris for the French International Colonial Exposition, to open there this spring. The room occupied by Lafayette at Mount Vernon while visiting there, the key of the castle sent by Lafayette to Washington, who had just entered upon his high duties as President—these are among the reproductions which will arouse keen interest.

The 20th anniversary of the birth of Washington is now so near at hand, falling on this next year, 1932, that it is already much in our thoughts. No other anniversary occurring in our times can have a larger interest and significance than this. From now on, everything connected with the life of Washington will receive careful and minute attention.

For this present anniversary now at hand, the Boston Public Library will put on exhibition in the lecture room next Saturday, the large and beautiful Washington gold medal presented by Congress to Washington, in recognition of his high service in freeing Boston from the British occupation. The medal will remain on exhibition during the following Sunday and Monday. It is only once a year that there is given opportunity to see this precious treasure, which is at all other times kept securely locked up in a safe.

No other city has quite so much reason as Boston for tenderly cherishing the name of Washington. Here began the Revolution, and here were those dark and crucial days when the success of our struggle for independence seemed to hang upon the outcome of what was then a mere phone here. Had Washington failed in his efforts here, how well-nigh hopeless could have been the outlook. He saved the town, he saved the cause, and he won a fame which made all subsequent patriotic and attacks upon him, fall harmless.

See how any other city such little nearly interesting Washington medals as are here to be found. Next Sunday and next Monday will be days when one may well go once more to stand before the Stuart portrait of Washington in our Art Museum, the portrait which holds its own undiminished eminence. And there are also days in which to pause before the noble equestrian statue of Washington, in our Public Garden, and to rejoice that one of the world's great statues is thus dedicated to his memory, and finds its fitting place in the city which owes him so much, and that holds him so reverently and tenderly in its heart.

SCHOOL of POLITICS

"FOREIGN AFFAIRS"

CONDUCTED BY THE

MASSACHUSETTS LEAGUE OF WOMEN VOTERS

WITH THE CO-OPERATION OF

RADCLIFFE COLLEGE

AND

The Cambridge League of Women Voters

AGASSIZ HOUSE

10 GARDEN ST., CAMBRIDGE, MASS.

JANUARY 27, 28, 29, 1931

TICKETS: $3.00, on sale at

STATE LEAGUE HEADQUARTERS, 31 Mt. Vernon St., Boston
CAMBRIDGE LEAGUE HEADQUARTERS, 42 Brattle St., Cambridge

BOSTON POST,

JANUARY 1, 1931

Rare Spanish Book in Library Display

In connection with the 14th annual meeting of the American Association of Teachers of Spanish, an exhibition of rare Spanish books has been arranged in the Treasure Room of the Boston Public Library. About 60 volumes have been displayed, chiefly the earliest editions of Cervantes, Lope de Vega, Jorge de Montemayor, and collections of popular ballads.

Two little volumes, printed in 1586 at Madrid by Ivan de la Cuesta, are the earliest editions of "Don Quixote" owned by the library; the one is the second issue of the first part, and the other is the first edition of the second part. The library also owns the earliest Valencia, Brussels, Barcelona, etc., editions of this immortal story. The oldest English translation, made by Shelton and printed in 1605 in London, has also been displayed at the exhibit.

January, 1931

THE CHURCH MILITANT

FRANK HERBERT CHASE.

A Devoted Layman

In the death of Frank Herbert Chase at his home in Hingham on December 12, 1930, the Diocese has lost one of its most active lay workers. He was senior warden of the Church of St. John the Evangelist in Hingham, clerk of the congregation at St. Paul's Cathedral, a member of the Bishop's Committee, and since the death of the late Irving P. Fox, secretary of The Episcopal Club. At the Cathedral he had been from the beginning a member of the Dean's Council and active in the Lawrence Men's Club.

Mr. Chase was born in Portland, Maine, in 1870, and secured his preparatory education in Haverhill, Massachusetts. He received his A.B. degree from Yale in 1894 and a Ph.D. from the same university in 1896. He married Mary Holland McLean, head of the English Department in the Haverhill High School in 1903. The first fifteen years of his career were spent in teaching at Cheshire Academy, at Yale University, Bates College and Beloit College.

Since 1911 Mr. Chase had been connected with the Boston Public Library, most of that time as custodian of Bates Hall. He was well known as a teacher of English and a librarian, and contributed to many magazines in addition to publishing two books of a bibliographical character. The following resolution speaks for itself:

"The members of the Council of the Episcopal Club of Massachusetts, assembled in a meeting on December 12, 1930, wish on their own behalf and as on behalf of all of the members of the Club to place upon the record this expression of their sense of the occasioned by the death of their Secretary on December 12, 1930. His cheerful and able assistance in the meetings of both the Club and Council will cause a void which will be very difficult to fill. Greater than that, the loss of his kindly and friendly spirit it will be impossible to replace. The members universally always cherish the memory of his friendship and wish to extend to Mrs. Chase their highest esteem and sympathy."

J. GILBERT SWIFT,
Secretary pro tem.

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1931

THE LIBRARIAN

FROM the extraordinary success of the Kirstein Branch, it is evident that Bostonians appreciate the idea of a public library so convenient to the business district. As a neighbor who has dropped in at various hours of the day, the Librarian is in a position to note how the clientele has increased since the opening. Indeed, in recent months, during the noon hours there has often been what amounts to a library "run on the bank." Every chair is occupied by an intent reader sampling fiction, non-fiction, or magazines. Lines form at the charging desk and the agreeable attendants are kept hustling to check books in and out. This, in spite of the fact that there is no public elevator and the patrons must plod up three flights of stairs—even though they are as creaky in the joints as the Librarian.

We quote with pleasure certain paragraphs from the report of Miss Grace C. Brady, Librarian of the Kirstein Branch: "Eight months have elapsed since the Kirstein Memorial Library was first opened to the public. Situated in the heart of the business district, the value of a general circulating branch, housed in the same building with a business

"An analysis of the classes of non-fiction books we have given out indicates the types of books in which the public is interested."

Class	Number
Literature	1,678
Biography	1,421
Travel	848
Philosophy	578
History	567
Natural Science	578
Fine Arts	327
Sociology	294
Useful Arts	241
Periodicals	228
Religion	165
Language	142
Amusements	127
Medicine	86
Reference	42
Law	21
Total	7,150

It is interesting to note that borrowers drew more books from the literature class than from any other. Books on drama and poetry by contemporary authors were requested as soon as the publication announcements were made. As to biography, there was always a waiting list for such books as Maupassant's "Byron," Aston's "Marshall Foch," Hackett's "Henry the Eighth," Ludwig's "Napoleon, Heloise's "Richelieu."

Third on the list of popular books were those on travel. Many of our borrowers have taken a number of pleasant trips by "book route" during the last eight

we expect that more attention will be paid to books on gardening, birds, animals, etc., in the early spring, when there is a greater interest in out-of-door life.

"The use of books in the useful arts class was not very great, due probably to the fact that we have very few tradesmen in our locality. Nevertheless, we did have a few calls for books on cookery, boatbuilding and surveying.

"Books on games and sports have a reasonable circulation, as interest in these books depends a good deal on stimulation from the sporting world outside the library. While our collection of books on religion, law and medicine is limited, we are very much pleased with the use the public made of these volumes. The Harvard Classics were used a great deal, and many persons have followed the reading course recommended by the editor.

We have gained many patrons through our file of periodicals. Not a few of our readers confined themselves to this type of literature, and they also made use of the privilege of taking out the back numbers on their library cards.

"The 10,870 books of fiction which were issued amounted to about 60 per cent of our total circulation. Deeping, Waipole, Dine were among the most popular of the modern authors. There were also many calls for older fiction, such as "Tom Jones," "Jane Eyre," "Anna Karenina," "Quo Vadis" and "Little Dorrit." Personal service to readers, an up-to-date book col-

One Good Branch Boosts Another

This Model of the West Roxbury Branch Is Now Displayed in the Window of the Kirstein Memorial Library on City Hall Avenue. The Accompanying Caption Reads: "One of Boston's Thirty-Two Branch Libraries. From Each of These Books Can Be Drawn on Your Library Card."

branch, could not be ascertained until after the experiment. Whether or not the business man and woman would have time for reading general literature and whether or not they would regard such books as either superfluous or complementary to the more specialized books of the business library was the question.

"A survey of circulation figures is a conclusive proof of the need for a branch library in this part of the city. During the 181½ days the branch has been opened, 18,020 books have been issued—10,870 fiction and 7,150 non-fiction. Nine hundred and seventy-seven books were also obtained from the Central Library in response to requests for titles which were not in our collection or which were in circulation when asked for. Month by month we noticed a steady and persistent growth in our circulation. The figures noted below are an indication of the progress in the number of books issued from May to December.

Month	Fiction	Non-Fiction	Total
May	919	728	1,647
June	1,213	856	2,069
July	1,486	865	2,351
August	1,454	874	2,328
September	1,333	903	2,236
October	1,454	891	2,345
November	1,408	974	2,442
December	1,545	1,169	2,712
Total	10,870	7,150	18,020

months and they evidently enjoyed their journeys, for the circulation in this class has grown noticeably since we opened. There was a continual call for books on philosophy, popular psychology, behaviorism, as well as numerous applications for books on astrology. Actual experience has demonstrated that books on etiquette were used more by men than women.

"Because of the Boston Tercentenary celebration, much interest was shown in the history of early Boston and other historic cities and towns. Revolutionary disturbances in Russia, India and China caused many persons to seek information from books on these countries. Since we opened in May, no copy of Wells's "Outline of History" has remained on the shelf for more than one day.

"Books in the fine arts section were used extensively by the many merchants, interior decorators and architects in the district, and most of the time all the volumes on commercial art were in circulation.

"Located practically next door to City Hall, we have supplied the various city departments with books on municipal government, citizenship and general sociology. There was an interest shown in books on general science, but no great use of the separate divisions. However fiction and enticing book exhibits have been the chief stimuli for our increase in circulation.

"Borrowers have availed themselves of our telephone service by calling to find out whether or not particular titles were 'on shelf,' asking us to send to central for books not in our collection, requesting reference information. We planned about fifty lists for patrons who wished to read systematically on various subjects, such as "Russia," "Modern Poetry," "Newspaper Writing," "Masters of Painting," etc. Classified lists of new books were distributed from time to time, informing the public of the new titles added to the branch.

"Our attractive book exhibits in the street window have persuaded many passers-by to acquaint themselves with the library and to renew their reading habits. The value of our last exhibit, which was on "Travel," can be measured by the increased number of books circulated on this subject during the period of the exhibit. 170 volumes were issued through the publicity received from this display.

"All present signs point to a continuance of the progress we have made during the past eight months. With our policy of service, we hope to increase our circulation through the commendation of a satisfied public."

PROGRAM
THURSDAY, 2:30 O'CLOCK
DRAMATIZATION OF A SESSION OF THE WORLD COURT
Presented by the Massachusetts League of Women Voters and the Educational Committee of the League of Nations Association
THE LOTUS CASE

Introduction:
Mrs. Lewis Jerome Johnson
Scene I. Opening of the Court:
Queen of the Netherlands
Prince Consort
Princess Julianna
Judges
Bernard Cornelius Johannes Loder (Holland), President.
Dr. Hans Max Huber (Switzerland), Judge
Dr. Charles Andre Weiss (France), Vice-President
Sir Herbert B. Ames
Viscount Robert B. Finlay (Great Britain), Judge
Commendatore Dionisio Anzilotti (Italy), Judge
Charles F. D. Belden
Dr. Rafael Altamira y Crevea (Spain), Judge
Didrik Galtrup G. Nyholm (Denmark), Judge
Dr. Yorozu Oda (Japan), Judge
Dr. John Bassett Moore (United States), Judge
James A. Moyer
Charles W. Putnam
Mary Tenney Healy
George Grafton Wilson
Epitacio de Silva Pessoa (Brazil), Judge
Dr. Antonio S. de Bustamante (Cuba), Judge
Frederik Valdemar N. Reichmann (Norway), Deputy Judge
Ellen Fitz Pendleton
Demetrie Negulesco (Rumania), Deputy Judge
Mikhailo Jovanovitch (Yugoslavia), Deputy Judge
Bernice V. Brown
Rose Darney Forbes
Dr. Wang Ch'ung-hui (China), Deputy Judge
Ake Hammarskjold (Sweden), Registrar
Feizi Daim Bey (Turkey), National Judge
H. Kexan Hallet Bey
Representatives of the League of Nations:
Sir Eric Drummond, Secretary-General
M. Da Cunha, representing the Council of the League of Nations
Eldon R. James
Carlos F. Weiman
M. Villalonga, representing the International Labor Organization
M. Van Karnebeck, Dutch Foreign Minister and President of the Assembly
Diplomatic Corps
Representatives of the Carnegie Endowment
Attendants of the Court
Scene II. The Lotus Case: Presentation of the French Argument
M. Basdevant, Professor at the Faculty of Law of Paris
Charles O. Roger
Scene III. The Lotus Case: Presentation of the Turkish Argument
Mahmout Essat Bey, Minister of Justice at Stamboul
A. F. Kurt Bey
Scene IV. Judgment of the Court and Dissenting Opinions

BOSTON POST,
JANUARY 1, 1931

Rare Spanish Book
in Library Display

In connection with the 14th annual meeting of the American Association of Teachers of Spanish, an exhibition of rare Spanish books has been arranged in the Treasure Room of the Boston Public Library. About 60 volumes have been displayed, chiefly the earliest editions of Cervantes, Lope de Vega, Jorge de Montemayor, and collections of popular ballads.
Two little volumes, printed in 1606 at Madrid by Ivan de la Cuesta, are the earliest editions of "Don Quixote" owned by the library; the one is the second issue of the first part, and the other is the first edition of the second part. The library also owns the earliest Valencia, Brussels, Barcelona, etc., editions of this immortal story. The oldest English translation, made by Shelton and printed in 1629 in London, has also been displayed at the exhibit.

January, 1931
THE CHURCH MILITANT

FRANK HERBERT CHASE.

A Devoted Layman

In the death of Frank Herbert Chase at his home in Hingham on December 12, 1930, the Diocese has lost one of its most active lay workers. He was secretary of the Church of St. John the Evangelist in Hingham, clerk of the congregation at St. Paul's Cathedral, member of the Bishop's Committee, and since the death of the late Irving P. Fox, secretary of the Episcopal Club. At the Cathedral he had been from the beginning a member of the Diocesan Council and active in the Lawrence Men's Club.
Mr. Chase was born in Portland, Maine, in 1870, and secured his preparatory education in Haverhill, Massachusetts. He received his A.B. degree from Yale in 1894 and a Ph.D. from the same university in 1896. He married Mary Holland McLean, head of the English Department in the Haverhill High School in 1903. The first fifteen years of his career were spent in teaching at Cheshire Academy, at Yale University, Bates College and Beloit College.
Since 1911 Mr. Chase had been connected with the Boston Public Library, most of that time as custodian of Bates Hall. He was well known as a teacher of English and a librarian, and contributed to many magazines in addition to publishing two books of a bibliographical character. The following resolution speaks for itself:
"The members of the Council of the Episcopal Club of Massachusetts, assembled in a meeting on December 1, 1930, wish on their own behalf and as on behalf of all of the members of the Club to place upon the record this expression of their sense of the occasion by the death of their Secretary on December 12, 1930. His loyal and conscientious attendance, cheerful and able assistance at the meetings of both the Club and the Council will cause a void which will be very difficult to fill. Greater than that, the loss of his kindly and friendly spirit it will be impossible to replace. The members universally always cherish the memory of his friendship and wish to extend to Mrs. Chase their highest esteem and sympathy."
J. GILBERT SWAN
Secretary pro tem

Boston Transcript
WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1931

THE LIBRARIAN

FROM the extraordinary success of the Kirstein Branch, it is evident that Bostonians appreciate the idea of a public library so convenient to the business district. As a neighbor who has dropped in at various hours of the day, the Librarian is in a position to note how the clientele has increased since the opening. Indeed, in recent months, during the noon hours there has often been what amounts to a library "run on the bank." Every chair is occupied by an intent reader sampling fiction, non-fiction or magazines. Lines form at the charging desk and the agreeable attendants are kept hustling to check books in and out. This, in spite of the fact that there is no public elevator and the patrons must plod up three flights of stairs—even though they are as creaky in the joints as the Librarian.
We quote with pleasure certain paragraphs from the report of Miss Grace C. Brady, Librarian of the Kirstein Branch: "Eight months have elapsed since the Kirstein Branch, on the third floor of the Kirstein Memorial Library, was first opened to the public. Situated in the heart of the business district, the value of a general circulating branch, housed in the same building with a business

"An analysis of the classes of non-fiction books we have given out indicates the types of books in which the public is interested."

Class	Number
Literature	1,475
Biography	1,421
Travel	818
Philosophy	578
History	567
Natural Science	578
Fine Arts	357
Sociology	304
Useful Arts	241
Periodicals	228
Religion	165
Language	143
Amusements	127
Medicine	89
Reference	42
Law	21
Total	7,150

It is interesting to note that borrowers drew more books from the literature class than from any other. Books on drama and poetry by contemporary authors were requested as soon as the publication announcements were made.
"As to biography, there was always a waiting list for such books as Maupassant's 'Hippolyte', Aston's 'Marshall Poch', Hackett's 'Henry the Eighth', Ludwig's 'Napoleon', Belloc's 'Richelieu'.
"Third on the list of popular books were those on travel. Many of our borrowers have taken a number of pleasant trips by 'book route' during the last eight

we expect that more attention will be paid to books on gardening, birds, animals, etc., in the early spring, when there is a greater interest in out-of-door life.
"The use of books in the useful arts class was not very great, due probably to the fact that we have very few tradesmen in our locality. Nevertheless, we did have a few calls for books on cookery, boatbuilding and surveying.
"Books on games and sports have a reasonable circulation, as interest in these books depends a good deal on stimulation from the sporting world outside the library. While our collection of books on religion, law and medicine is limited, we are very much pleased with the use the public made of these volumes. The Harvard Classics were used a great deal, and many persons have followed the reading course recommended by the editor.
"We have gained many patrons through our file of periodicals. Not a few of our readers confined themselves to this type of literature, and they also made use of the privilege of taking out the back numbers on their library cards.
"The 10,870 books of fiction which were issued amounted to about 60 per cent of our total circulation. Deeping, Walpole, Dine were among the most popular of the modern authors. There were also many calls for older fiction, such as 'Tom Jones,' 'Jane Eyre,' 'Anna Karenina,' 'Quo Vadis' and 'Little Dorrit.' Personal service to readers, an up-to-date book col-

One Good Branch Boosts Another
This Model of the West Roxbury Branch Is Now Displayed in the Window of the Kirstein Memorial Library on City Hall Avenue. The Accompanying Caption Reads: "One of Boston's Thirty-Two Branch Libraries. From Each of These Books Can Be Drawn on Your Library Card."

branch, could not be ascertained until after the experiment. Whether or not the business man and woman would have time for reading general literature and whether or not they would regard such books as either superfluous or complementary to the more specialized books of the business library was the question.
"A survey of circulation figures is a conclusive proof of the need for a branch library in this part of the city. During the 181½ days the branch has been opened, 18,020 books have been issued—10,870 fiction and 7,150 non-fiction. Nine hundred and seventy-seven books were also obtained from the Central Library in response to requests for titles which were not in our collection or which were in circulation when asked for. Month by month we noticed a steady and persistent growth in our circulation. The figures noted below are an indication of the progress in the number of books issued from May to December.

Month	Fiction	Non-Fiction	Total
May	919	728	1,647
June	1,213	656	1,869
July	1,486	585	2,071
August	1,454	574	2,028
September	1,332	663	2,296
October	1,454	591	2,345
November	1,168	974	2,442
December	1,535	1,169	2,702
Total	10,870	7,150	18,020

months and they evidently enjoyed their journeys, for the circulation in this class has grown noticeably since we opened. There was a continual call for books on philosophy, popular psychology, behaviorism, as well as numerous applications for books on astrology. Actual experience has demonstrated that books on etiquette were used more by men than women.
"Because of the Boston Tercentenary celebration, much interest was shown in the history of early Boston and other historic cities and towns. Revolutionary disturbances in Russia, India and China caused many persons to seek information from books on these countries. Since we opened in May, no copy of Wells's 'Outline of History' has remained on the shelf for more than one day.
"Books in the fine arts section were used extensively by the many merchants, interior decorators and architects in the district, and most of the time all the volumes on commercial art were in circulation.
"Located practically next door to City Hall, we have supplied the various city departments with books on municipal government, citizenship and general sociology. There was an interest shown in books on general science, but no great use of the separate divisions. However fiction and enticing book exhibits have been the chief stimuli for our increase in circulation.

"Borrowers have availed themselves of our telephone service by calling to find out whether or not particular titles were 'on shelf,' asking us to send to central for books not in our collection, requesting reference information. We planned about fifty lists for patrons who wished to read systematically on various subjects, such as 'Russia,' 'Modern Poetry,' 'Newspaper Writing,' 'Masters of Painting,' etc. Classified lists of new books were distributed from time to time, informing the public of the new titles added to the branch.
"Our attractive book exhibits in the street window have persuaded many passers-by to acquaint themselves with the library and to renew their reading habits. The value of our last exhibit, which was on 'Travel,' can be measured by the increased number of books circulated on this subject during the period of the exhibit; 170 volumes were issued through the publicity received from this display.
"All present signs point to a continuance of the progress we have made during the past eight months. With our policy of service, we hope to increase our circulation through the commendation of a satisfied public."

Reviving Defoe

It is an impressive fact that the Boston Public Library should be able to place on exhibition in its treasure room a selection of books and pamphlets from a collection of the works of Daniel Defoe, its own possession, that is more complete than any other in the world—greater than that possessed even by the British Museum. Our Boston collection, which in chief part is the one which through a long course of years was made by Professor William P. Trent, of Columbia University, contains 1600 examples or editions of books or pamphlets written by Defoe, or attributed to him. Those who know "Robinson Crusoe" and nothing else of Defoe's will be seized with a sense of wonder that he could have written so much, or that so much of him should be preserved and treasured. As a matter of fact, he was one of the most prolific journalists, pamphleteers and promiscuous publicists that England ever produced. He had kept the presses, as it were, groaning with his productions for many years before, at the age of nearly sixty, he published, merely as a pot-boiler, "The Life and Strange Surprising Adventures of Robinson Crusoe." It is not too much to say that nothing but the desperation of very hard luck drove him to the production of this masterpiece.

Born in 1659, the son of a butcher, Defoe became a merchant or broker, and in 1703 was put in the pillory in London for financial irregularities. He early began to write pamphlets on all subjects, most of them attacking something, and he also became a copious writer for the newspapers of the day. He was an extremely "cranky" individual, and sometimes turned a penny by writing pamphlets against his own pamphlets. The populace, in his public exigencies, often sympathized with him. Capitalizing his own humiliation, he wrote a "Hymn to the Pillory," which today graces the show-cases at our Public Library. He spent some time in Newgate Prison, and was very much down on his luck when, in 1719, he produced "Robinson Crusoe." The best known of his other works are his "True Born Englishman," in verse, and his novels "Moll Flanders" and "Captain Singleton." Though he had made a great deal of money, he died, in 1731, a bankrupt.

It is extremely doubtful whether Defoe would ever have been known to fame in any degree but for "Robinson Crusoe." That fascinating story has been translated into every civilized language on earth and into several that are not civilized. Founded on the story of Alexander Selkirk, a Scotchman who was marooned on the island of Juan Fernandez, belonging to Chile, it took all sorts of liberties with that true tale. Defoe transported Selkirk's island to the mouth of the Orinoco river, and invented the greater part of the absorbing incidents that made the life and the fame of his story. That his poor and promiscuous pamphleteering should at this age of the world prove the motive for so monumental a collection as that which is now to be seen at our Public Library is past comprehension. For that matter, "Robinson" itself has probably lost its grip on the imagination of this generation. It is no longer popular with children, who weary of what they call its big words and its literary touch; their lack of appreciation, however, is in no sense a compliment to the intelligence of the present youthful generation, for the work is beyond all doubt extremely clever and essentially interesting. We may rejoice, perhaps, if the present exhibition in some degree stimulates the interest of our local youth in so admirable a classic.

† FRANK HERBERT CHASE †

At the annual meeting of the Parish in January, the following beautiful resolution on Mr. Chase was offered by Mr. George Cunningham, and unanimously adopted. We are printing it here for the benefit of many who were unable to be present at the meeting. It gives such adequate expression to what we all felt in regard to our late Senior Warden.

RESOLUTION

Whereas, it has pleased God to call to a life of higher service the soul of Frank Herbert Chase, our beloved Senior Warden, We, therefore, the Rector, Wardens and Vestry and members of the Parish of Saint John the Evangelist in Hingham, at its annual meeting this twelfth day of January in the year of our Lord the nineteen hundred and thirty-first, wish to preserve in the parish records for years to come our feeling of gratitude for the fellowship and example of a blithe and courageous Christian; and to determine that, by the grace of God so fully bestowed upon him, we continue his work for Christ and the Church in this parish which lay close to his heart. He who gave generously and gladly of himself would be the first to bid us not to grieve our loss.

Be it resolved, that we extend to his widow, Mary McLean Chase, our deepest sympathy and our thanks for sharing him so freely with us all.

Into Thy hands O Lord, we commit his spirit.

ANNOYANCE TO READERS

To the Editor of the Star:

The mutilation of public library books has become an increasing and serious source of annoyance to readers.

Through the courtesy of the local librarian and the Inter-Library Loan management, I borrowed recently from the Boston Public Library a book which I expected would be a valuable contribution to my study of a certain psychological matter. When the book was delivered to me it appeared to be in good condition, but before I had reviewed half of its contents I found that, at widely separated intervals, whole pages were missing, torn out, two pages at a time, mostly, but, in two cases, a half dozen or more pages successively—in all about 30 pages. Moreover, the missing pages seemed to be related to important phases of the matter preceding and succeeding correlative text. At any rate, the book, as valuable as it might have been, in its entirety, was spoiled for me, and I so, reported to Miss Quimby, the local librarian, though I willingly paid the postage cost of the loan, realizing that the fault of mutilation did not lie with the local library management.

But I had come to know that the Winchester Library management has its troubles also, with vandals who attack books and magazines. In the local library reading-room, which, by the way, has a most excellent assortment of periodicals and works of reference, there was, until recently, on file with other magazines, a copy of the Illustrated London (England) News, a weekly periodical of unusual typographical and pictorial beauty. I know of nothing, in this country, that will compare with it, and it is a magazine of great interest to those who are interested in noting the progress of the times in the old mother country. But week after week, upon looking over its pages, I found them mutilated, by the tearing out of single half-tone pictures, or something of unusual beauty, which happened, I suppose, to strike the fancy of some conscienceless vandal. When I called the attention of the librarian to the matter, she expressed her grief and despair at such an exhibition, but confessed her inability to cope with the situation, as she and her assistants could not keep their eyes in two places at the same time, and when their backs were turned the mischief in the reading-room was done. The London magazine was an expensive one and I was not surprised when the library management withdrew it from the reference room altogether.

I have frequently taken books from the library and found whole pages torn out, utterly destroying the coherent continuity of the text oftentimes illustrations were torn out also.

Who has not seen the work of the congenial idiots who persist in writing and penciling their names, or drawing disfiguring sketches and scrawls upon the walls of public buildings, etc., but it is a very common thing to read at the top of the page of some book in the Winchester Library this idiotic penciled line, "If my name you wish to see, look on page 53," etc. If an innocent child reader does look he find an insolent instruction, to look further—to page so-and-so, and then ad libitum, repetitions, to the same effect.

Everybody, of course, knows the law relating to the subject and yet I have some respect for the reader who writes at the head of the page, or the end of a volume, "This is a good book," or the word "Good" only, after a paragraph he deems particularly worthy of approval. I have the complete works of Gibbon, the historian, and the famous DeQuincey, bequeathed me by a friend, so closely and learnedly annotated, in pencil upon nearly every page, that I value the impromptu notes of the former owner of the books almost as much as the volumes themselves, and I believe that the law relating to library books should be amended, to distinguish between honestly penciled comment and the mischievously made defacement and mutilation of the vandals, but some one might consider this an impracticable indulgence, though I doubt if it would invite any such general practice as to make it a nuisance, while the distinction in law would call for attention to the present vandalism in libraries and decrease the practices of the vandals.

I remember stopping, about 40 years ago, over night, in New York City, at what was called the "Grand Union Hotel," close to the Grand Central depot of that time. That hotel disappeared about 20 years ago, with the improvements made in that part of the city, but the hotel I refer to was owned and managed by a genius named Ford. In the hotel directory he had stenciled some large instructions to patrons and transient visitors, some of whom made themselves so obnoxious to lovers of business, law and order. One of Ford's blackboard stencillings was more sensible than poetical—more in the interest of cleanliness than artistry of personal conduct, and I will not repeat it here, for obvious reasons. There was one blackboard left perfectly blank, at the head of which were the words: "For the use of the dandies and fools who are not satisfied with placing their names in the hotel register." Mr. Ford was evidently determined to keep the walls of his hotel clean and he was.

For obvious reasons a public library management could not avail itself of a similar method of keeping the vandals and idiots who deface and mutilate books, but it might, for awhile, to put a good plan in place, detective in charge, to examine the books and scrutinize suspicious characters, especially when the Winchester Library takes possession of a new building, as it is hoped will sometime before another year.

Charles Forbes Walker
14 Fenwick road
Jan. 16, 1931

THE LIBRARIAN

FEW realize the scope of the Defoe collection in the Boston Public Library. Not even the British Museum possesses as many of the books and pamphlets by the author of "Robinson Crusoe." At present, the show cases in the Treasure Room of the library are stocked with the works of this one author, and with few exceptions they are first editions.

Zoltan Haraszti, editor of the library bulletin, More Books, devotes his leading article this month to a description of the Defoe collection and its acquisition by the library, followed by a critical survey of the man himself. Commenting on the number of Defoe items now on view, the editor declares that the Boston Public Library could arrange another—and perhaps even a third—exhibit that would be an almost exact duplicate of the present exhibit. A large number of the books and pamphlets displayed exist only in four or five copies, it appears, and of these the library owns two or three. In some cases the library owns the only known copy.

This splendid collection of Defoe's works was acquired when the library of Professor William Peterfield Trent went on the market. For several decades this great Defoe enthusiast has been working on a life of the English author. For two years Mr. Michael McCarthy chief classifier of the library, has been sorting and arranging the collection with the aid of various members of the Catalogue and Ordering departments. The books and catalogues now await their final cataloging, and meanwhile temporary lists are available for scholars.

Of the display in the Treasure Room Mr. Haraszti says: "Spread out in the showcases lie some four hundred volumes, each opened at the title page, with large headlines and thickly set subtitles clamoring for attention. Their variety is bewildering. Defoe the patriot reflects upon the origin of royal authority; Defoe the man of conscience inquires into the occasional conformity of dissenters; Defoe the reformer proposes a whole array of projects about the founding of country banks, relief societies, the establishment of insane asylums and the education of women; Defoe the tribune defends the poor man against the over-bearing Parliament; Defoe the economist discusses the causes of the financial panic; Defoe the statesman argues for the conclusion of peace or continuation of war; Defoe the moralist discourses upon the right conduct in matrimony—from 1659, when his first pamphlet appeared, till 1731, when he died, there was no question in the life of England upon which Defoe did not pronounce his opinion."

From the beginning of the eighteenth century until today, controversy has raged as to whether Defoe did or did not write certain pamphlets. One of the great games of the bibliophiles has been alternately attributing a pamphlet to Defoe, or denying that he wrote it. Certainly the man displayed extraordinary ingenuity in eluding the criticism of his contemporaries.

Professor Trent, Defoe's biographer, explains this: "After 1703 Defoe adopted tactics of dissimulation which, save for one brief period, secured him from immunity from all punishment. He not only took refuge in anonymity, but he wrote in all sorts of assumed characters; for example, as a high churchman, a merchant, a member of Parliament, an officer in the army. Whenever, as often happened, he was detected in his disguise, he used in his denials of authorship every resource of casuistry and effrontery. He would lie with a straight face, or else admit only an advisory connection with the tract in question, or invent out of whole cloth an author for the offending book. He kept up surreptitious connections with rival newspapers and publishers, and he supplied them with an almost inexhaustible stream of copy. . . . As a result, in the case of a large number of pamphlets, declares Mr. Haraszti, nobody knows as yet whether Defoe was the author or not."

Considering the youthful vigor of the style, it is astonishing to realize that Defoe was nearly sixty years old when The Life and Strange Surprising Adventures of Robinson Crusoe was written. The Library owns a set of the first edition of the First, Second and Third Parts. For the sake of those, as the editor of More Books puts it, who like to know the money value of rare books, a similar set was sold two years ago, at the Kern Sale, in New York, for $11,500. The exhibit in the Treasure Room contains one whole case filled with the early editions of Robinson Crusoe. One may see a copy of the first edition, described as the third variant; also a copy of the second edition; copies of the two separate issues of the third edition; copies of the A and B issues of the fourth edition; also a copy of the fifth edition. There is, however, no copy of the very rare sixth, which, for the first time, had a red and black title-page and contained illustrations.

Early copies of the many abridgments and chapbooks fill a second showcase. A third is reserved for the translations, which include the first French, German, Italian and Portuguese editions.

How the veteran embattled librarian came to write a novel which has never been surpassed in popularity is something of a miracle, Mr. Haraszti explains. He lays its success to the plain, matter-of-fact style Defoe developed in his journalistic work. "A controversialist, whose reliability was notoriously uncertain, he proceeded to exercise his proofs even before they were asked for. He thus early recognized the value of details in creating verisimilitude—and so he became a 'realist,' even when farthest from reality. 'Truth' was a mania with him, as it is with many a prevaricator. His technique in telling a fib had grown perfect with continuous practice. What he needed in order to write a novel—an author of fictitious stories—was a fit subject upon which to exercise his technique. When he was restricted to petty party squabbles, the result was to be a journalistic juggle, galling or amusing to people, according to their political affiliations. But given a universal theme, the work of the pamphleteer was bound to be a masterpiece."

Defoe's career as a novelist lasted only about six years. Nevertheless, in that brief time, he produced about ten or twelve novels. In the year 1723 alone, he published "Moll Flanders," "Colonel Jack," "The Journal of the Plague Year," and "Religious Courtships." In his sympathetic, graceful tribute which closes the article, Mr. Haraszti says of Defoe that with all his prodigious ability, he did not possess the distinction which would qualify him to the position of great. He had learning, inventiveness and an amazing energy, yet his mind was burdened with conventional ideas. His imagination—as a French critic wrote—was that of a man of affairs, not that of an artist. Perhaps here lies the secret of his shortcoming. He had greater versatility than almost any other writer, and yet he was lacking in freedom of mind.

The Defoe exhibit will continue for three months, as the Library is anxious to bring the collection to the attention of scholars and the public alike. The present time is particularly appropriate for the exhibit. On April 24 of this year, Mr. Haraszti reminds us, will be the two hundredth anniversary of the day when Daniel Defoe—bankrupt merchant, pilloried and jailed journalist, hack writer and government spy, but also the author of Robinson Crusoe and one of the chief founders of the English novel—died in a country place outside London.

Why was the Public Library built? This is the way the poet of City Club Life, the weekly bulletin of the Boston City Club, is tempted to account for it from the way that all the rurals keep looking at the murals.

Oh! Stanford White sat down one night
And drew some snappy plans.
A library we'll build," said he,
"Where Peewee de Shavannes
With murals great shall decorate
The walls where Sargent's chin—
And Sargent's art shall do its part Where Peewee doesn't paint!"

He Wrote "Robinson Crusoe"

The British people are about to celebrate the two-hundredth anniversary of the death of Daniel Defoe, author of the immortal "Robinson Crusoe," and many other works, myriads of pamphlets on every conceivable subject, poems, leaflets of denunciations of men and matters to whom and to which he was ardently opposed. He was also the first real journalist, and his Review, edited originally while in prison, may be regarded as the basis for many a famed periodical of later times. It is said that Richard Steele framed his publications on the format and contents of the Review, the latter, of course, being somewhat on a milder scale. Defoe was all inventive and Steele always courteous and suave, critical, but moderate. The two men had nothing in common except a desire for the emancipation of what appeared to them as truth, but their modes of expression varied.

Defoe's pamphlet, "The Shortest Way With the Deserter," in which he satirized the Lord Mayor of London in 1697, got him into trouble. The House of Commons directed the libel to be burned by the common hangman and an Old Bailey judge sentenced him to three days' exposure in the pillory and to be imprisoned during good Queen Anne's pleasure. So popular, however, was Defoe that the great crowd that gathered each day brought him garlands and wreaths. It did not take long for the Government to realize that it would not injure its reputation to give the author his freedom, and Harley, later Earl of Oxford, not only provided Defoe and his family with the means of living but befriended him in various other ways. Harley, indeed, may have been moved by a not altogether unqualified altruism. He was one of the first British statesmen to appreciate the power of the press and he saw in Defoe an able and willing assistant to promote his ambition.

The originality of Defoe's "Robinson Crusoe" has been disputed often enough. The foundation of the story has been ascribed to Alexander Selkirk who spent several years on the island of Juan Fernandez, living a life similar to that of Robinson's and undergoing experiences not far removed. Granting that, the glamour that surrounds Defoe's hero, his way of thinking, his philosophy, his method of expression, his description of minute details, are all Defoe's. What Selkirk sets down in calm, unpoetical language Defoe reveys in thrills that move men reading the book long after their boyhood. The story is fascinating to a degree hardly reached by the writers of modern mystery tales. And here is a verisimilitude of life as one can imagine it on a lonely isle in the vast ocean, and all presented in language that schoolboys understand and stay up secretly all night to absorb its sensations. Defoe's "History of the Great Plague" was for many years regarded as a veritable account of the ravages of a plague which devastated not only London but many Continental centers. The facts are given with such lucidity and an air of reality that even today when we all know that the narrative is pure fiction, based only on an actual historical event, the blood curdles on its perusal. It is a dreadful picture of a fearful day. In his novels Defoe wrote of the underworld of his day and he made himself sufficiently acquainted with evil-doers and their ways to present scenes and men of living, subterranean criminal dramas.

Daniel Defoe was a vigorous opponent of slavery and while in Virginia he spoke for the Negro slaves in a manner which did not gain for himself any particular friendships in the South. He did not remain in America very long, and so no doubt showed wisdom in that.

Our author was a native of London and in that city he died in 1731, at the age of seventy. He lies in Bunhill Fields, a few yards separating his tomb from that of John Bunyan, author of "The Pilgrim's Progress."

Little Walks
About Boston

BY WILLIAM JUSTIN MAN

There is much to make especially interesting the Washington's birthday anniversary of this year, which falls on next Sunday. Mount Vernon is being reproduced at Paris for the French International Colonial Exposition, to open there this spring. The room occupied by Lafayette at Mount Vernon while visiting there, the Key of the Bastille sent by Lafayette to Washington, who had just entered upon his high duties as President—those are among the reproductions which will arouse keen interest in the life of Washington will receive careful and minute attention.

For this present anniversary now almost at hand, the Boston Public Library will put on exhibition in the treasure room next Saturday, the beautiful Washington gold medal presented by Congress to Washington, in recognition of his high service in freeing Boston from the British occupation. The medal will remain on exhibition during the following Sunday and Monday. It is only once a year that there is given opportunity to see this precious treasure, which is at all other times kept securely locked up in a safe.

No other city has quite so much reason as Boston for tenderly cherishing the name of Washington. Here began the Revolution, and here were those dark and crucial days when the success of our struggle for independence seemed to hang upon the outcome of what was taking place here. Had Washington failed in his efforts here, how well-nigh hopeless would have been the outlook. He saved the town, he saved the cause, and he won a fame which made all subsequent jealousies and attacks upon him, fall harmless.

Nor has any other city such intimately interesting Washington memorials as are here to be found. Next Sunday and next Monday will be days when one may well go once more to stand before the Stuart portrait of Washington in our Art Museum, the portrait which holds its own unique pre-eminence. And they are also days in which to pause before the noble equestrian statue of Washington, in our Public Garden, and to rejoice that one of the world's great statues is thus dedicated to his memory, and finds its fitting place in the city which owes him so much, and that holds him so reverently and tenderly in its heart.

Transcript
18 February 1931

At the Public Library

Current at the Boston Public Library are, in the treasure room, first editions of Daniel Defoe's works and, in the exhibition room, a collection of thrift stores, displayed under the auspices of the Savings Bank Association. This will be seen only this week, through Feb. 22.

Art, Artists and Fine Art Exhibitions

Impressions of Boston Events

Lithographic Crayon Drawings by Virginia Lee Burton Teem with Life and Activity.

By Albert Franz Cochrane

VIRGINIA LEE BURTON, known to Transcript readers by the signature "VleeB" attached to innumerable drawings appearing in this paper during the past several years, is holding an extensive exhibition of sketches in the Fine Arts room of the Boston Public Library.

Nearly all the work included in the group is related to her newspaper assignments. Miss Burton, who is the daughter of A. E. Burton, former dean of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and who is but twenty-one years old, spent many years on the Pacific coast, returning to Boston in 1928. In San Francisco she was a scholarship student at the California School of Fine Arts where she developed an easy style of sketching which aims at rapid notation of uninterrupted motion by the enumeration of the essential lines of action and volume.

Upon coming to Boston, Miss Burton continued her studies at the studio of George Demetrios, a brilliant young instructor at the Boston Museum School. She also made a practice of making at least one hasty sketch a day of people busy in their daily occupations or passing along the city streets. Her work soon came to the attention of the editors of the Transcript and she was assigned to execute a group of impressionistic drawings of players and audiences at the "Pop" concerts.

A Page of Sketches by Virginia Lee Burton, Transcript Artist

Random Notes in Crayon Made at the Theater, the Concert Hall and Sports Arena Included in Miss Burton's First Exhibition Current For the Fortnight at the Boston Public Library

Miss Burton's facile crayon has since been kept busy in pictorially recording for the Transcript a longhoning series of symphonic performances, plays, operas, lectures, sporting events and other activities of general interest.

Among some of the most successful of

Miss Burton's sketches of stage productions were those of Jane Cowl in "Jenny," "The Age of Innocence" with Katherine Cornell, Jack Donahue and his "Sons o' Gun," Donald Meek in "Broken Dishes," Ziegfeld's "Smiles," the "Vanties," "Little Show," "Strike Up the Band," "Follow Through," "Chocolate Soldiers," "Fifty Million Frenchmen," "Pleasure Bound," "The 915 Review," and Fred Stone and his brood of "Stepping Stones."

She has also caught the rhythm of the Duncan Dancers, of Harold Krutzberg and Yvonne Giorgi, Agna Enters and La Argentina, and has made rapid notes of Paderewski, Schamie and other artists of the music halls. Besides these Miss Burton has made many studies of boxing, wrestling, hockey and other sporting events, and has recorded her impressions of the Dartmouth Carnival and Harvard drawings now on view at the Public Library reveal Miss Burton's gift of catching fleeting action and transferring it in line to paper. It is interesting in this connection to note that the young artist never studied, in her days at the art academy, from the cast, but entered directly into life classes, specializing in ten minutes sketches and memory work.

As a result of this training—a training far more beneficial than that had from dreary weeks of painstaking studies of inanimate casts—she learned to observe in terms of fundamental lines and volumes, and learned as well that humanity in all its varying phases is an inexhaustible field of study for the artist.

The display of Miss Burton's drawings, augmented by a small group of linoleum block prints, will remain on view at the library for two weeks.

nine years, and that was written entirely by himself. It is claimed that he was the first to introduce the editorial, or "leading article," into journalism.

One edition of his works runs into 20 volumes, and a chronological catalogue of his writings lists 24 numbers. It is the one book, however, that has made him enduringly famous, and but for Robinson Crusoe the name of Daniel Defoe would today be but little known or remembered.

THE BOSTON HERALD

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1931

BOSTON PERSONALITIES

By MASON HAM

It seems that the Museum of Natural History expends no little energy in seeing to it that their patrons leave the building with fewer fallacies than when they entered. We poked around there the other day—among the whales' skeletons, stuffed skunks and plaster-cast frogs. There were a score or more of bats on display, and under each was posted this little sign:

"Bats do not get into people's hair." And can it be that any one actually does take seriously what the newspapers talk about on Feb. 3? The museum officials apparently believe that some one may, for a card underneath the woodchucks informs us:

"The popular superstition concerning 'Ground Hog day' has no scientific foundation."

The locomotive habits of one other New England animal seem particularly intriguing. In travelling over snow in the winter, we are informed, the otter "may progress by means of a series of slides, gliding on its stomach."

That little item on the front page of The Boston Herald early this week caught our eye—that one about the Bostonian who had coined a word at a meeting of the National Puzzlers League in Baltimore. To think that any one would travel 100 or 200 miles round trip and give up four days in the middle of the winter, all for the sake of talking things over with a lot of other puzzle fans. But it is done. More than 60 delegates from the North as far as Toronto and from the West as far as Ohio were present. The league has 500 members in all.

The Boston man who went is Everett M. Smith of Jamaica Plain, a newspaper man. His new word was "ergophile"—a man who loves his work. Words are among the most important materials used by puzzlers and they're always suggesting new ones. One of the most recent, it surprised us to learn, was "refree." The dictionary hadn't recognized it and the puzzlers league called it to their attention only a year ago. Six months ago the puzzlers noticed that there was no single word for a "folding of the earth's surface," so they got up "geosere," which the dictionary publishers promised to include in future editions.

There are two other members of the puzzle league who live in Greater Boston. One of them is Lewis C. Hall of 34 Mount Vernon street, Malden, a postal employee. The other is Hardy Ropes, a Tech student.

Real puzzlers don't know each other by their real names so much as by their nicknames, which are all but universal among the serious addicts. Mr. Smith is "Puzzlesmith," Mr. Hall is "Kee Pon" and Mrs. Ropes is "Ajax."

The nicknames are used at the conventions, a circumstance which adds greatly to the informality and good fellowship of these semi-annual occasions. The last conference, by the way, was the 95th. The society, you see, is no fledgling, and it has traced the art of puzzling back to several hundred years before Christ. Men and women of all occupations belong to it. Mr. Smith named specifically farmers, doctors, dentists, newspaper men, teachers and a woman civil engineer.

A farmer member, Mr. Smith told us, reported winning a $3500 puzzle prize since the last conference.

Department of Useless Information: The wood of which a policeman's billy is made is the cocobola wood. It comes from British Guiana. It is very hard and heavy. It burns unusually well. Its grain is "coarse but close and even." Nobody knows much about the tree it comes from. The wood is used also in turnery, inlaying and turnbridge ware.

The billy costs 75 cents in all—40 cents for the wood and 35 for the leather thong. The man who buys them for the police department is William H. Gowell, property clerk. The club is 14 inches long from tip to tip and weighs about 11 ounces. It is not loaded. The department purchases from 125 to 150 new ones a year.

And now nobody who gets in trouble can say that he didn't know what hit him.

In one of Zoltan Haraszti's essays for the Boston Public Library, we noticed a passage of peculiar significance in these days of tabloid journalism.

"Printing," it reads, "had been practised in Europe ever since the end of the 14th century. . . . The pictures were their (the books) most important features. Everybody could understand these, while the few lines under the pictures could be read or left alone. . . ."

The analogy between the oldest and the newest products of the press, however, must not be carried too far. The subjects of those 14th and early 15th century works were chiefly biblical.

Art, Artists and

Impressions of Boston Events

Lithographic Crayon Drawings by Virginia Lee Burton Tecu with Life and Activity.

By Albert Franz Cochrane

VIRGINIA LEE BURTON, known to Transcript readers by the signature "VleeB" attached to innumerable drawings appearing in this paper during the past several years, is holding an extensive exhibition of sketches in the Fine Arts room of the Boston Public Library.

Nearly all the work included in the group is related to her newspaper assignments. Miss Burton, who is the daughter of A. E. Burton, former dean of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and who is but twenty-one years old, spent many years on the Pacific coast, returning to Boston in 1928. In San Francisco she was a scholarship student at the California School of Fine Arts where she developed an easy style of sketching which aims at rapid notation of uninterrupted motion by the enumeration of the essential lines of action and volume.

Upon coming to Boston, Miss Burton continued her studies at the studio of George Demetrios, a brilliant young instructor at the Boston Museum School. She also made a practice of making at least one hasty sketch a day of people busy in their daily occupations or passing along the city streets. Her work soon came to the attention of the editors of the Transcript and she was assigned to execute a group of impressionistic drawings of players and audiences at the "Pop" concerts.

Miss Burton's facile crayon has since been kept busy in pictorially recording for the Transcript a lengthening series of symphonic performances, plays, operas, lectures, sporting events and other activities of general interest.

Among some of the most successful of ordinary lot of conceptions, most of which he should deny admittance to the country. But he lets them in and there is no telling what a duty of grief they will earn before they are banished. At the risk of seeming encyclopedic, this day's space will be devoted to some of the untold misadventures of beauty, the things that make the enjoyments of travel possible.

The American visiting England for the first time is very much in the same position as the Englishman visiting America for the first time; that is to say, he does not, and in the nature of things, he cannot understand all the small details of traveling and life in general which are different in the two countries. The common language is, of course, a great simplifier, but the very fact that the language is common to both countries throws the slight difference of customs into stronger relief, and is apt, at first sight, to magnify the contrasts.

+

The moment the American lands, he will perceive that England is England as surely as America is America; a country with its own inalienable but strong personality, with its own customs that have naturally evolved, with its own national attitude, and its own way of doing things. And this, admittedly, may seem a little confusing to an American settling foot on these shores for the first time. Because he hears English spoken he is less likely to allow for the differences than if he were to hear French or German. And yet the fact that the language is his language proves that the stock of both countries is the same, and the fact that the stock is the same shows that the differences are only on the surface. It is easy for the American to adjust himself to English life, for its strangeness is not the strangeness of a foreign land but a strangeness which conceals a fundamental similarity.

Many Americans of moderate means are kept from visiting England, just as many English people of moderate means are kept from visiting America, because they have a vague idea that everything will be very expensive, because they feel they will be rather lost in a strange country, and because they do not know how to set about seeing, with the time and money at their disposal, the particular sights which they wish to see.

It is undoubtedly true that travel between the two countries would be far greater if before the traveler started out, he could be given clear and accurate help on all those small points which are of such importance in the understanding of another country's customs, facilities and points of interest.

Rich people, with plenty of time at their disposal, over such matters this was the only way that was chiefly grown up a year for granted that England requires. But it is common of limited means in England it is excessive and the strangers in a traveler by the at a remarkable land also is of such visitors.

It is possible, month away from voyage out and many of the in England and view of their in fact a cost, should be drawn carefully, down to the hotel prices and tourists for shopping should use a dry and so on within a matter of a little time, whom time and ing concern where they are. They are sure, but it is a Such matters, tipping, and the prehensible, but able to learn is little fear of cheating. If one of things in units, and more each other that our scheme of and one will be dental losses as

Prices in the as greatly but, just as about the restaurants, apt to suppose hotels and the standard ing could be Inconclusive board and $5 to $8 a day

TOURS

L EXPENSES

A PaDays—$145 up

Random Notes in Crayon MadDays—$150 up

150 Tours of 13 to 17 days available

"CASTLE"—"ORIENTE"

Band, Soldier, sweet, finest and fastest turbo-electric Please a new pace in sea-going elegance. And Fring St. Petersburg by day and night that and its countryside. Low "All- She include shipboard accommodations, the Durwith meals at hotel in Havana and berg every Wednesday and Saturday. RISE via "Oriente" from New York.

LUXE ROUBER

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1931

THE LIBRARIAN

In the latest issue of More Books, the Bulletin of the Boston Public Library, the Librarian finds this sincere tribute to the colleague who, for so many years, wrote the Bibliographer department on this page.

"Through the death of George Henry Sargent the book world has lost a distinguished character, an authority on rare books, whose weekly column 'The Bibliographer' in the Wednesday Boston Transcript has won a unique reputation. This column—expert, full of news, invaluable to collectors, bibliophiles, and librarians—was at the same time lively enough to attract the general reader. According to the Publishers' Weekly, Mr. Sargent was the most widely reprinted writer on bibliography in the world."

George Henry Sargent was born in 1857, a descendant of a William Sargent who came to Ipswich in 1639. Though his schooling was in the East, he began his newspaper career at St. Paul, Minn., first as reporter and later as city editor of the Pioneer-Press. In 1895 he returned to Boston and joined the Transcript staff as a reporter. It was in 1903 that he started his column 'The Bibliographer,' which has greatly contributed to making book collecting popular. For Mr. Sargent emphasized especially that book collecting was not exclusively a rich man's game. Besides his column, he wrote numerous special articles for the Transcript on topics of bibliographical interest. He was the author of nine books; the most recent are 'Modern Tendencies in Book Collecting,' 'Amy Lowell, a Mosaic,' 'A. Edward Newton, a Bibliography,' and 'A Busted Bibliophile and His Books.' Since 1914 Mr. Sargent lived at Elm Farm, Warner, N. H., in the beautiful White Mountain region. His house, filled with antiques and rare books, attracted collectors and book lovers to whom it was hospitably open.

BOSTON POST, FEBRUARY 27, 1931

Little Walks About Boston

BY WILLIAM JUSTIN MANN

The Boston Public Library has recently bought a fine new exhibit in its new treasure room, rare editions of the works of Daniel Defoe, author of that ever-famous book, Robinson Crusoe. These books are from the library of William P. Trent, who devoted many years to the building up of this unusual collection.

Numberless boys and girls have read 'The Strange Adventures of Robinson Crusoe,' and many of us older ones cherish the memory of that much-prized book of our youth. Yet how few there are who know much about the author or perhaps the most widely popular story for young people that was ever written, or who realize the extent of his other writings.

Daniel Defoe was born in London in 1660. He was nearly 60 years old when he wrote Robinson Crusoe, but his life up to that time had been a sufficiently varied and exciting one. He studied for the ministry, but abandoned the idea of entering upon that profession. He became successively, merchant, writer, journalist, and a free lance in the disturbed politics of his times.

He wrote a controversial pamphlet which caused him to be thrown into prison and thrice exposed in the pillory. The mob, however, treated him as a hero, and eagerly bought up the copies of 'A Vindication of the Pillory,' written by him for the occasion, and hawked about the scene of his punishment.

In spite of this popular favor and applause, Defoe's imprisonment had a disastrous effect upon the business he had successfully conducted up to that time, and he was left practically without means, and without occupation. He turned to literature and to journalism. He established his celebrated newspaper 'The Review,' which he carried on as a tri-weekly for some eight or nine years, and that was written entirely by himself. It is claimed that he was the first to introduce the editorial, or 'leading article,' into journalism.

One edition of his works runs into 20 volumes, and a chronological catalogue of his writings lists 24 numbers. It is the one book, however, that has made him enduringly famous, and but for Robinson Crusoe the name of Daniel Defoe would today be but little known or remembered.

THE BOSTON HERALD

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1931

BOSTON PERSONALITIES

By MASON HAM

It seems that the Museum of Natural History expends no little energy in seeing to it that their patrons leave the building with fewer fallacies than when they entered. We they got up "geosers," which the dictionary publishers promised to include in future editions.

There are two other members of the puzzle league who live in Greater Boston. One of them is Lewis C. Hall of 34 Mount Vernon street, Malden, a postal employee. The other is Hardy Ropes, a Tech student.

Real puzzlers don't know each other by their real names so much as by their nicknames, which are all but universal among the serious addicts. Mr. Smith is "PuzzleSmith," Mr. Hall is "Kee Pon" and Mrs. Ropes is "Ajax."

The nicknames are used at the conventions, a circumstance which adds greatly to the informality and good fellowship of these semi-annual occasions. The last conference, by the way, was the 95th. The society, you see, is no fledgling, and it has traced the art of puzzling back to several hundred years before Christ. Men and women of all occupations belong to it. Mr. Smith named specifically farmers, doctors, dentists, newspaper men, teachers and a woman civil engineer.

A farmer member, Mr. Smith told us, reported winning a $3500 puzzle prize since the last conference.

Department of HOLY Information: The wood of which a policeman's billy is made is the cocobila wood. It comes from British Guiana. It is very hard and heavy. It burns unusually well. Its grain is "coarse but close and even." Nobody knows much about the tree it comes from. The wood is used also in turnery, inlaying and turnbridge ware.

The billy costs 75 cents in all—40 cents for the wood and 35 for the leather thong. The man who buys them for the police department is William H. Gowell, property clerk. The club is 14 inches long from tip to tip and weighs about 11 ounces. It is not loaded. The department purchases from 125 to 150 new ones a year.

And now nobody who gets in trouble can say that he didn't know what hit him.

In one of Zoltan Haraszti's essays for the Boston Public Library, we noticed a passage of peculiar significance in those days of tabloid journalism.

"Printing," it reads, "had been practiced in Europe ever since the end of the 14th century. . . . The pictures were their (the books) most important features. Everybody could understand these, while the few lines under the pictures could be read or left alone. . . ."

The analogy between the oldest and the newest products of the press, however, must not be carried too far. The subjects of those 14th and early 15th century works were chiefly biblical.

Would Honor McKim by Restoring Bacchante to Library Court Pool

107

The Boston Public Library Fosters Printing

lapsed into her mystery story.
 Mrs. Mc. Library Columnist, I c

Would Honor McKim by Restoring Bacchante to Library Court Pool

on to books

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 4, 1931

Wants Bacchante Back at Library

March, 1931

[THE NEW ENGLAND PRINTER]

107

NEW TREASURE ROOM—BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY

The Boston Public Library Fosters Printing

The Treasure Room is in the upper part of the extension into the courtyard of the Library. It is reached from the third floor. In general construction the room seems to have been planned for its present purposes, although it was used for many years for music reference. The interior has been entirely refinished with new lighting fixtures, and fireproof shelving and display

The bookcases along the walls shelve 6,000 volumes of supreme bibliographic interest. These are selected from the special collections of Shakespearian and Elizabethan literature from the Barton collection; Americana from the Prince collection; also volumes from Theodore Parker, Bowditch, Longfellow Memorial, Thayer, and other treasure hoards. To the right and left of the windows are two wall safes, and down the main floor are low safes, over which are permanent exhibit cases. These provide proper safeguards for the large volumes and illustrated work, yet are within easy access.

At the time of the opening of the Treasure Room last summer, a general display was made to represent some of the Library's most choice treasures. Medieval manuscripts on parchment and with illuminated miniatures were shown in one case; fifteenth-century books printed in Germany, Italy, France, Spain, the Netherlands, and England were placed on view in another; Shakespeare folios and quartos and other precious Elizabethan and

THE LIBRARIAN

It cheers the Librarian greatly to hear from one American tourist who does not regard Bermuda as Bar-muda or pass the time dashing from one cocktail party to another. From that enchanted land comes a communication from a lover of travel and of books, who went searching for a rare volume, yet managed to enjoy the beauties of the "still vexed Bermoothes" and chat with many of its inhabitants who are among the most gracious and soothing people in the world.

Dear Library Columnist—In my wanderings over the earth I often come upon a copy of the Boston Evening Transcript in most unexpected places.

I always read the library column, because public libraries are a sort of hobby of mine and wherever I may be, one of the first places I look for is a library.

Saturday week I arrived in Bermuda, that best group of islands where there are neither automobiles, airplanes, nor loud-speaking radios. As I wandered about Hamilton, almost the first building that met my eye was a low, orange-colored structure bearing the sign, "Bermuda Library." I entered the grounds, passed what is said to be the largest rubber tree in Bermuda, and went up the broad outside flight of stairs which lead to the library. When I approached the desk the attendant did not look up and smile as your librarian in the Kips-Bay Branch did when I climbed the three flights which lead to that library. I recall with pleasure how an alert young person found me a nice guide book and some travel folders and when I wanted a book which was not on her shelves, she telephoned the main library and arranged to have it sent down to me the next day.

I read the guide book and made several notes, one in particular about a very old book to be found in the Bermuda Public Library; a book I decided to look up as soon as I arrived.

Well, to get back to Bermuda, the attendant, still continuing to read what looked like a mystery story, I said "Ahem," and then "Will you please tell me whether you have here any very old books?"

"I can't say," she replied. "You can look in the reference room."

"I understand," I persisted, "that you have a book printed in London in 1613." "I don't know," she said. "I'll show you some books which were printed in London," and she began leading me to the shelves.

"Never mind," I said, thinking to myself that she was probably taking the desk while the librarian went to lunch.

At five o'clock I returned and asked the same question of another young person, who was also reading. "No, we haven't any very old books," she said. "You can look at what we have on Belmont; they are over there."

"The book I refer to," I replied, "is too valuable to be on open shelves."

"Well, if we have it, it is on the shelf with the books on Bermuda," she affirmed and returned to her book with never a smile.

After a few moments I humbly presented myself at the desk again and showed her the following quotation which I had copied:

"In the public library at Hamilton Bermuda, there can be seen a quaint little book dated, London, 1613.

"The red morocco binding seems quite new; and so it is. But open the book and look at its pages. The old English letters, and the old paper, tell their own story; and as we count back nearly three hundred years, we handle it with a feeling of reverence.

"On the title page we read: 'A Plain Description of the Bermudas, now called Sommer Islands. With the manner of their discovery. Anno, 1609. . . .'

"Ecclesiastes: 3. 11.

"God hath made everything beautiful in His time."

"After a hurried glance through the pages, we acknowledge it to be one of the rare productions worth preserving and interesting to read. It is too valuable to be much used, and for this reason, among others, you will find the contents reproduced in Lefroy's Memorials, Vol. 1.

"The narrative was written by Sylvanus Jourdan, and first published in 1610. This, with another account by William Strachey, was the foundation of Shakespeare's play, The Tempest, which has immortalized Bermuda.

"The writers were among a party of English people who accompanied Sir George Somers, Sir Thomas Gates and Captain Newport to supply the infant colony at Virginia. On their way they were turned aside and the Admiral Ship, 'Sea Adventure,' guided by an unseen hand, with all on board found a haven in 'The Inhabited Land.'

The attendant, still unthrilled, returned the quotation to me without comment. "Might this book be at the historical society in St. George's?" I ventured.

"I don't know," she replied and repeated into her mystery story. —

Now Mr. Library Columnist, I couldn't

Jacobean works were displayed, and next to them some of the rarest productions of the early American press; and finally autograph letters and poems by such writers as Poe, Longfellow, Dickens, Browning, and Emily Dickinson.

The Library has about two hundred fifteenth-century books, many of these being prized by type designers for the humanistic quality of early types. These include Jenson's roman type, which has long been used as an inspiration for book types, and a special treasure is a leaf of the Gutenberg Bible of 1450-55. While complete Gutenberg Bibles are out of reach, financially valued in the hundreds of thousands, the Library's single leaf, according to recent auction sales, would be appraised at over $600. There are also Shakespeare folios and other works in which the Library's collections are unrivaled.

For the student of printing the Boston Public Library offers comprehensive resources in the original works of the world's foremost printers. There are representative works by the early Venetian printers, specimen books of the types and decorations by Plantin, and the unrivaled collection of Baskervilles bequeathed to the Library by a former trustee, Josiah H. Benton. The private presses of Europe and the United States, representing the modern revival of the arts of the book, are also well represented.

The Treasure Room and the collections of the Barton-Ticknor Library afford a resource from which students of printing can obtain an intimate knowledge of the world's best printing. The study of such works is not merely academic, but is today the greatest inspiration for the printing craftsman. Later articles in THE NEW ENGLAND PRINTER will give information about special resources and typographic reference material in the Boston Public Library.

For information on other items of interest to printers at the Boston Public Library, readers are referred to the October, 1930, issue of THE NEW ENGLAND PRINTER.

Binding as Experts Find It

Printers Can Obtain Much of Value from Craftsmen Lecture Series

PRINTERS will find much of value in the volume on "Bookbinding" which is in preparation by the Boston Club of Printing House Craftsmen, as the third of their series of printing books. Material for this book is developed largely from the stenographic notes taken at the lecture series conducted by the Craftsmen during the past two months. John B. Curry, president of the Boston Club of Printing House Craftsmen, has announced that the material in these lectures will be amplified by many additional practical examples and that other phases of the subject will be included.

Due to the fact that Elbridge W. Palmer of the Kingsport (Tenn.) Press was unable to appear, a variation in the program was made. On January 26, Frank J. Barnard of F. J. Barnard & Co., Boston, spoke on "Library Binding." On Monday, February 2, R. M. Weiser, superintendent of the National Blank Book Company, of Holyoke, was the speaker. On February 9, Mrs. Katherine Osborn of Boston spoke on "Unusual Binding," and Roy C. Baker of the Colonial Press of Boston spoke on "Edition Binding." On February 16, Paul A. H. Shults of the Berkshire Embossing & Finishing Co., Holyoke, described "Super-finish and Embossed Cover." The final speaker was C. A. Mershon of Braunworth & Company, Inc., of Brooklyn, N.Y., who outlined the trade customs.

Through the courtesy of the Boston Club of Printing House Craftsmen, THE NEW ENGLAND PRINTER has been permitted to summarize some of the high lights of these lectures.

Library Binding, said Mr. Barnard, is the youngest branch of the trade, with the possible exception of loose-leaf binding. Public libraries created this branch, during the last half-century, in order to bind and rebind library publications. There are three phases of this work: (1) rebinding fiction and textbooks; (2) binding periodicals or newspapers; (3) reconstruction of publishers' bindings.

In the first instance, large lots of fiction books arrive at the binders, who must mark them for ownership and requirements. Next the book is carefully pulled apart, section by section, and all torn leaves mended. It is then inspected to determine how it will be bound. Then it is "benched"; that is, the ridge (or back) is pounded, pressed, or rolled out. Sewing is the next process, which is practically all done by machine. By the oversewing process, where the stitches pass over the backs of successive sections, greater strength is gained. In fact, this is the strongest sewing devised and accounts for the fact that rebound books last longer. New books are seldom oversewn. Next the book is lined and backed. For the covers, only solid binders' board is used by the reputable concerns. Then the book is covered and pressed for drying. In the finishing process, the book is lettered. This is generally done by hand, as until recently no successful machines have been developed. Binders are growing away from the uniformly plain covers, and modern rebound books are often more attractive than originals.

(Continued on page 130)

these collections, and the rooms were furnished in a manner which will encourage their use as a gathering place for those interested in poetry. In these rooms will be given each year the several talks by poets brought by the Morris Gray fund to speak to undergraduates. Two rooms will be set aside by the library, near the Child Memorial Library of English Literature.

The gift has significance as a memorial to a member of the Harvard class of 1877 who was not only a poet of distinction, with a high place among American critics, but one who was a leading exponent of Shelley among American men of letters. It commemorates, too, a man who held a very significant place in the annals of higher education through his influence during ten years teaching at Columbia when he built up around himself a group of students inspired by him with a literary fervor scarcely equalled at any other institution.

When his classmate, Morris Gray, gave Harvard a fund to provide for talks by poets on poetry the natural person to

It was to the late Mr. McKim that MacMonnies presented the statue after he had declined 150,000 francs for it in Paris. McKim's presentation of the bronze to the library committee and its subsequent erection brought an attack on the propriety of placing such a statue of the priestess of Bacchus before public gaze. Protests of artists, architects and others were of no avail, and the statue went to New York for the Metropolitan Art Museum. Later, it was returned to Boston and now is in the Museum of Fine Arts.

the desk attendant and the three flight attendants in the kitchen. When I climbed the stairs I found with pleasure how an alert young person found me a nice guide book and some travel folders and when I wanted a book which was not on her shelves, she telephoned the main library and arranged to have it sent down to me the next day.

I read the guide book and made several notes, one in particular about a very old book to be found in the Bermuda Public Library. A book I decided to look up as soon as I arrived.

Well, to get back to Bermuda the next day, I went to the library. The attendant, still continuing to read what looked like a mystery story, I said, "Hello, I don't know you, but you have here any very old books?"

"I can't say," she replied. "You can look in the reference room."

"I understand," I persisted. "I want to have a book printed in London in 1613."

"I don't know," she said. "I'll show you some books which were printed in London," and she began leading me to the shelves.

"Never mind," I said, thinking to myself that she was probably taking the desk while the librarian went to lunch.

At five o'clock I returned and asked the same question of another young person, who was also reading. "No, we haven't any very old books," she said. "You can look at what we have on Bermuda; they are over there."

"The book I refer to," I replied, "is too valuable to be on open shelves."

"Well, if we have it in the shelves with the books on Bermuda," she affirmed and returned to her book with never a smile.

After a few moments I suddenly presented myself at the desk again and showed her the following quotation which I had copied:

"In the public library at Hamilton, Bermuda, there can be seen a quaint little book dated, London, 1613."

"The red morocco binding seems quite new, and so it is. But open the book and look at its pages. The old English letters, and the old paper, tell their own story; and as we count back nearly three hundred years, we handle it with a feeling of reverence."

"On the title page we read: 'A Plain Description of the Bermudas, now called Sommer Islands. With the manner of their discovery, Anno, 1609.'"

"Ecclesiastes 3, 11."

"God hath made everything beautiful in His time."

"After a hurried glance through the pages, we acknowledge it to be one of the rare productions worth preserving and interesting to read. It is too valuable to be much used, and for this reason, among others, you will find the contents reproduced in Lefroy's Memorials, Vol. I."

"The narrative was written by Selvanus Jourdan, and first published in 1610. This, with another account by William Strachey, was the foundation of Shakespeare's play, The Tempest, which has immortalized Bermuda."

"The writers were among a party of English people who accompanied Sir George Somers, Sir Thomas Gates and Captain Newport to supply the infant colony at Virginia. On their way they were turned aside and the Admiral Ship, 'Sea Adventure,' guided by an unseen hand, with all on board found a haven in 'The Inhabited Land.'"

The attendant, still unthrilled, returned the quotation to me without comment. "Might this book be at the historical society in St. George's?" I ventured.

"I don't know," she replied and relapsed into her mystery story.

Now Mr. Library Columnist, I couldn't rest till I found whether or not that book was in Bermuda, so I hired a horse and buggy and started for St. George's, that being the oldest settlement on the island.

About noon we clattered through the narrow streets of St. George's and drew up at the door of St. Peter's Church.

"I don't want the church," I said. "I want the historical society."

"But the church is very historical," said Clifton Trotter. I obediently entered the ancient structure, escorted by way of the cemetery, and found myself in a high-walled lane. An old Negro woman was wailing in a gay-colored washing directed me to the Featherbed Lane, and on the corner I found the historical society. The librarian was at lunch, but the assistant was most cordial and anxious to please. When I exhibited my quotation she said I would have to wait for the librarian to show me the old books, but most belatedly, which she proceeded to do, explaining that at the time that monumental piece of furniture was in use it was the custom on the husband's death for the widow to be lifted into the four-poster and placed in the middle of the bed. Sheets were then pinned all around the bed, making a tent of it, and in this the widow remained till after the funeral.

As the young lady was preparing to charge of the collection was from a shipmate. "No, she had never heard of the book and she doubted if it was still in existence. Books in Bermuda were very hard on books and consequently Bermuda did not attempt to collect books because the books migrated from the books into the lamps of the houses and I soon wouldn't even have it."

In her endeavor to comfort me the young caretaker showed me many real treasures in old china, furniture and clothing. At last she said, "You better go to Miss — at the Treasure Chest. She will help you."

When Miss — had read my quotation she said, "I never heard that the book was in Bermuda. The librarian would know but she has been out all for some time. I know of a lady who bought a copy in London some years ago and paid a thousand dollars for it."

I remarked that whoever said it might possibly have picked it off the Bermuda shelves if it had ever been there.

She smiled tolerantly and said, "Miss — over at the 'Power' might know something about it." So over to the "Power" I went.

"No, I don't know about it," said "my sister," but the library used to be in the custom house and perhaps they have the book in the safe. You'll know the building by the sign in front of it." At the custom house no less a person than the colonial secretary smoked his pipe at the quotation and disposed of it finally.

"Never heard of it," he said. I passed my scotch and for the time being ended my search.

Now I'm sending this to you, Mr. Columnist, because I know many librarians read this column and for the honor of the profession I think some one of them should locate this book for me, don't you?

I'm not in a hurry to get it any more, as just now I'm touring the island with a copy of "The Tempest" in my pocket, trying to locate Prospero's Cave and Ariel's tree and Caliban's rock.

A gift of $50,000 in memory of George Edward Woodberry has just been received from Harry Harless, Plagiarist of Millbrook, New York, to endow a poetry room in the Harvard Library. Here will be placed the books of the Morris Gray foundation, the books left to the library by Mr. Woodberry himself, and the collection of Amy Lowell. Through this gift, the poetry room becomes a memorial not only to Prof. Woodberry, but to his classmate Morris Gray and to Amy Lowell, the sister of a third classmate, President Lowell.

The fund will provide for a curator for these collections, and the rooms will be furnished in a manner which will encourage their use as a gathering place for those interested in poetry. In these rooms will be given each year the Morris Gray fund to speak to undergraduates. Two rooms will be set aside by the library, near the Child Memorial Library of English Literature.

This gift has significance as a memorial to a member of the Harvard class of 1877, who was not only a poet of distinction, with a high place among American critics, but one who was a leading exponent of Shelley among American men of letters. It commemorates, too, a man who held a very significant place in the annals of higher education through his influence during ten years teaching at Columbia when he built up around him self a group of students inspired by him with a literary fervor scarcely equalled at any other institution.

When his classmate, Morris Gray, gave Harvard a fund to provide for talks by poets on poetry the natural person to give the first was his classmate, George Edward Woodberry, who had been living in Beverly since his withdrawal from active teaching. On this occasion he was covered that in spite of his long period of absence from public activity, a roomful of undergraduates at his own apartment, for which his affection had grown with the years, were familiar with his poetry. All this gave him a renewed interest in life and made the last year one of the happiest of his entire life.

It was an aftermath of this visit to Cambridge which led to the publication of a facsimile of the Harvard Shelley notebook which had formed the subject of the first publication on Shelley which Woodberry made after graduation. His original description of this notebook was reprinted as an introduction to the facsimile, and to it he appended his recollection of circumstances attending the acquisition of the manuscript. It was his last publication on Shelley, and a copy of this book reached him in the hospital on Christmas Eve, 1929, about ten days before his death.

Mr. Fingler's gift is in a measure an expression of the grateful recognition by Woodberry's loyal disciples of the pleasure which that visit to Harvard gave to the graduate of the Class of 1877.

Librarians, who for some reason or other, feel apologetic because their patrons prefer fiction to any other kind of reading matter, have a backer in Margaret Cullen Manning, who has supplied libraries with charming fiction, herself. At the North Central Library Conference held recently in St. Paul, Minnesota, the novelist addressed the delegates, pleading for a greater toleration toward fiction. According to her belief, the novel is the greatest and most important literary form. "I am confronted a good deal of the time," said Mrs. Manning, "by the attitude of many educated people toward it. They are often hesitant, and tolerant and mildly superior. It is not safe to be dogmatic about anything that feeds the human imagination. Nor is any piece of writing that honestly attempts to interpret life basically unimportant." The novelist was also of the opinion that all great literature is the result of experiments by many writers. The librarian can encourage the production of works of genius by dealing justly and understandingly with the experiments that precede them and by recommending them to readers. They can help build up a public for the work of a really supreme writer.

A man who had an actual hand in the installation of the then shameful bronze Bacchante, William Mitchell Kendall, of the firm of McKim, Mead & White, also related his part in placing the statue at the pool's edge, poised for her fall. Although not formally received for the statue, which formed in the dead of night, newspapers reported the erection of the bronze the next morning, and hundreds of Back Bay folk flocked to the library to register their vigorous disapproval of the "nude, drunken woman." Thus, in 1897, started a controversy by which guardians of the civic morals of Bostonians finally brought about the rejection of the figure.

The late President Eliot of Harvard and Charles Eliot Norton, Mr. Morse disclosed last night, were principally responsible for the removal of the infamous figure. Subsequently, in 1910, it was placed on exhibit in the Fine Arts museum, and has been there since, without upward objection.

TABLET IN WALL

After Thomas Mullen, representing Mayor Curley, and Messrs. Morse and Kendall had spoken, the tablet was formally received for the statue by Frank W. Buxton, chairman of the trustees. W. Stanley Peters, president of the Boston Society, presided at the dinner.

The guests and speakers then adjourned to the library, where the tablet was unveiled by Mr. Peters. Set off from the second floor corridor by the Statues murals, its inscription reads: "Charles Follen McKim, architect, 1817-1909. Faithful servant of the art, a comparable friend to youth, honored master of his profession, in this building, is enduringly revealed the splendid amplitude of his genius, an aspiration to all men."

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 4, 1931

Wants Bacchante Back at Library

Charles Moore of Washington, chairman of the national Fine Arts Committee, last evening suggested at the dinner meeting of the Boston Society of Architects at the Copley-Plaza, that the society start a campaign to restore the MacMonnies Bacchante statue to the pool in the courtyard of the Public Library. Other speakers were Robert D. Kohn, president, American Institute of Architects; Thomas Mullen, representative Mayor Curley, and William W. Kendall, president of the society, presiding. And the tablet in memory of Charles F. McKim, designer of the library, had been unveiled. F. S. Buxton, chairman of the trustees, accepted the gift on behalf of the board.

"The brazen husk," said Mr. Moore, "is now incorporated in a rear exit of the Fine Arts Museum. It would be a tribute to you, fellow architects, greater even than carving McKim's name on the wall, if you of the Boston society should start a campaign to honor the little lady in the museum and place her on the pool's edge, where she ought also to please the summer residents who frequent that court. By doing so you would also soothe the outraged feelings of the donor, George K. White, carried even beyond the grave."

It was to the late Mr. McKim that MacMonnies presented the statue after he had declined $50,000 for it in Paris. McKim's presentation of the bronze to the library committee and its subsequent erection brought an attack on the propriety of placing such a statue of the goddess of Bacchus before public gaze. Protests of artists, architects, and others were of no avail, and the statue went to New York for the Metropolitan Art Museum. Later, it was returned to Boston and now is in the Museum of Fine Arts.

NEW TRV. POST. BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY

The Boston Public Library Fosters Printing

ONE of the world's best opportunities for inspection of the treasures of the art of printing is to be found in the Room of the Boston Public Library. For a long series of years representative examples of the art of writing and printing. These range from the earliest inscriptions, scrolls, and illuminated manuscripts to the work of the foremost American and American printers.

Heretofore these rare and increasingly scarce specimens have been kept in restricted storage. In 1929 the more important specimens were gathered in the newly constructed Treasure Room. The appointment of this room provide permanent display cases, in which varying exhibits will give the public knowledge of the Library's treasures.

The Treasure Room is in the upper part of the extension into the courtyard of the Library. It is reached from the third floor. In general construction the room seems to have been planned for its present purposes, although it was used for many years for a music reference. The interior has been entirely refitted with new lighting fixtures, and fireproof shelving and display

On the wall at the left of the entrance hang portraits of Benjamin Franklin by Duplessis and Copley. To the right is Copley's painting of Charles I in the House of Commons demanding the expulsion of the five impeached members.

The bookcases along the walls shelves 6,000 volumes of extreme bibliographic interest. These are selected from the special collections of Shakespearean and Elizabethan literature from the Barton collection; Americana from the Prince collection; also volumes from Theodore Parker, Bowditch, Longfellow Memorial, Thayer, and other treasure boards. To the right and left of the windows are two wall safes, and down the main floor are low safes, over which are permanent exhibit cases. These provide proper safeguards for the large volumes and illustrated work, yet are within easy access.

At the time of the opening of the Treasure Room last summer, a general display was made to represent some of the Library's most choice treasures. Medieval manuscripts on parchment and with illuminated miniatures were shown in one case; fifteenth-century books printed in Germany, Italy, France, Spain, the Netherlands, and England were placed on view in another; Shakespeare folios and quartos and other precious Elizabethan and

Urge Bacchante Statue Be Returned to Library

A suggestion that the Boston Society of Architects start a campaign to borrow McKim's statue of Bacchante from the Museum of Fine Arts and place it at the pool in the Boston Public Library courtyard, for which it was originally destined, was made to the society last night by Charles Moore, secretary of the Fine Arts Commission.

Moore was one of the speakers at a dinner meeting in honor of Robert D. Kohn, president of the American Institute of Architects, and which was part of the ceremonies attendant upon the unveiling in the library of a tablet in memory of Charles Follen McKim, designer of the building. The terrible fight which started when the Bacchante was placed in the courtyard years ago was reviewed by Moore and by William Mitchell Kendall, associate of McKim, and the verdict which sent the statue out of the library was scored as a blot upon the history of the famous building.

THE BOSTON HERALD

THURSDAY, MARCH 5, 1931

THE McKIM TABLET

The late Charles F. McKim, to whose memory the Boston Society of Architects has dedicated a tablet in the central Public Library building, had great talents in other fields than architecture. He was an excellent organizer. He administered well. He had a genius for friendship. Men of business, the arts and the professions took pride in their association with him. Major Higginson was particularly devoted to him and proved his attachment by a liberal gift to the American Academy in Rome, which Mr. McKim established.

He was the inspiring force of the great firm of McKim, Mead and White, who designed 6000 buildings all over the country—the Algonquin Club and Symphony Hall in Boston, the Rhode Island State House, the old Madison Square Garden, the American Library and University Club in New York. He was very proud of the Boston library. The long-deferred memorial which our Society of Architects unveiled is especially appropriate in this city, for Boston and Mr. McKim were mutual admirers.

It cannot fairly be said that the country failed to appreciate him. Realization of his remarkable qualities would have been greater and more general, however, but for the dreadful Stanford White tragedy, with all its implications, and its effects on Mr. McKim's physical health and attitude toward life. His fame is safe enough, but how much better our American architecture would be if he had come happily to a mellowed, mature age!

Boston Daily Globe

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 4, 1931

RETURN 'BACCHANTE' TO LIBRARY URGED

Moore of Art Commission
Makes Plea at Dinner

Bronze, Now in Museum, Removed in 1897 After Protests

Still smarting under her chilling and punitive ejection from the courtyard fountain of the Boston Public Library back in 1897, the famous bronze "Bacchante" heard last night the rumblings of a movement to bring her back—grapes, unadorned child and all—to the library courtyard.

This life-sized original bronze, the work of the eminent sculptor, Frederick MacMonnies, brought the attention of the whole Nation to Boston when a united front of opinion caused the statue to be taken away from the library.

Restoration of Bacchante was urged last night by Charles Moore, secretary of the Fine Arts Commission, speaking at a dinner of the Boston Society of Architects at the Capewich Plaza hotel.

Charles Follen McKim, architect of the library, was the subject of a memorial inscription in the Public Library to Charles Follen McKim, architect of the library.

Gift to McKim

It was to the late Mr. McKim that MacMonnies presented the statue after he had declined 150,000 francs in Paris for it. McKim's presentation of the bronze to the library committee and the subsequent erection in the foundation brought a seething attack upon the propriety of placing such a statue in the courtyard.

Protests of artists, architects and others were of no avail, and the famous nude went to New York for the Metropolitan Art Museum. Later it came back to Boston and now is in the Museum of Fine Arts here.

"It would be a tribute to your fellow architect, greater even than carving his name on the walls of the library," said Mr. Moore last night, "if you of the Boston Society of Architects should start a campaign to borrow the little lady from the Art Museum and place her on the pool's edge, where she might give pleasure to the summer readers who frequent that court."

"By so doing you would also soothe the outraged feelings of the donor, George K. White, carried even beyond the grave."

Tribute to McKim

Mr. Moore's suggestion came during his tribute to Mr. McKim. A distinguished group of architects and artists, including Robert D. Kohn, president of the American Institute of Architects, had gathered at the hotel for a dinner previous to unveiling the society's memorial to McKim.

Tracing the many voices of architectural art left behind by McKim, Mr. Moore told of the tragedies which befell the library. He told first of the "crude blocks of stone on the main steps that destroy the unity and detract from the beauty of the entrance."

After the dinner, Mr. Moore discussed with other Boston architects the possibility of borrowing the statue and it was agreed that this probably would not be difficult. Mr. Moore said that he will at once start plans for this action.

Memorial Unveiled

The unveiling of the McKim memorial at 10:30 last night brings to public gaze on the second floor of the library this inscription: "Charles Follen McKim, 1847-architect-1899... faithful servant of the arts... generous friend to youth... honored master of his profession... in this building enduringly revealed the splendid amplitude of his genius... an inspiration to all men."

W. Stanley Parker, president of the Boston Society of Architects, did the unveiling, while the guests assembled in a semicircle.

Mr. Kohn, in his speech at the dinner, made a strong plea for the removal of architectural divisions from the Government employ. If the profession of the architect is to advance to the fullest extent, the work of designing the public buildings of the country better could be placed in the hands of private architects, he said.

Such a move would enable each section of the country to have its buildings designed on sectional lines, and Florida or the Pacific Coast would not have the same type of public buildings as Massachusetts, for instance, would have.

"Architects cannot work efficiently under Government supervision, hampered by Civil Service requirements, and their employees and the large and often incompetent staffs that must be maintained at Washington," he declared. "It would mean that New England would have New England architecture, that California would have California architecture."

Plea for Statue

Then he turned to the Bacchante episode. "The statue tragedy," he said, "is not unmixing with comedy. It is needless to go into the details, which in 1897 convulsed the country, but I will suffice to say that McKim planned as a feature of this building a court of rare charm, for which he gave a pool and on the edge of the basin placed MacMonnies' now just famous Bacchante, the sculptor's gift to him."

"The hue and cry raised in Boston and Cambridge over the proposed location of this temple of knowledge by the introduction into its sacred precincts of a shameless, husky, red-haired woman, who had been brought to withdraw his gift from Boston and bestow it on New York, where it could possibly bring contamination."

"Chagrined for his city, the late George K. White, a large benefactor of the Boston Art Museum, borrowed the Bacchante off the first having gone to the Luxembourg and bestowed it upon that institution."

"Now she is incarcerated in a corner, a confinement on the chilly main axis of the Boston museum."

'Not Enough Good Men'

"There are not enough good men in Washington to keep this country in the forefront, architecturally speaking," he asserted.

"The United States will have a true democracy only when architects and others interested in the national and artistic welfare of the Nation cooperate for the interests of the library," he declared.

Thomas Mullen brought a great treat to the dinner by reading a letter of the firm of McKim, Mead and White to McKim's widow, Mrs. Frank W. Boston, chairman of the Boston Public Library, officially accepted the memorial inscription on behalf of the trustees.

Since McKim died the Boston society has planned to erect this memorial but it was not until a few months ago that it became possible.

Boston Transcript

THURSDAY, MARCH 5, 1931

THE THIRD BACCHANTE

To the Editor of the Transcript:

The letter, "The Third Bacchante," in the Transcript of March 3, is a fine example of the possibilities of a woman for about the Boston Public Library. I am sure that institution does not want it. As a work of art it is a masterpiece of sculpture, and it is a masterpiece of sculpture. It would be a masterpiece of sculpture. It would be a masterpiece of sculpture. It would be a masterpiece of sculpture.

The Third Bacchante is in Paris, in the Luxembourg gardens.

Needham, March 16.

Boston Daily Globe

FRIDAY, MARCH 6, 1931

RECEPTION TENDERED LITHUANIAN VISITOR

Prof Birziska Honored at South Boston Dinner

More than 500 gathered last evening in Lithuanian Hall, E. St. South Boston, to honor Prof Michael Birziska, who recently arrived from his native country for a tour of America, to study American education and to report at home his impressions of the system here. A banquet was served in the hall and there was a general good time, in which speechmaking was interspersed. Kazimer Sidlauskas, general chairman of the committee, presented Vincent Jenkins, following his welcome to the distinguished scholar of his native country. Mr. Jenkins extended a welcome to the professor and then presented Mrs. Anthony Shalina as toastmaster.

She told of the activity of Americans of Lithuanian descent, in behalf of their parents' country, and then presented Edith A. Stone as the speaker of the evening.

Mr. Stone's Talk

Mr. Stone, a native of Lithuania, formerly assistant United States District Attorney, urged the Lithuanians to stand united to foster ideals that will aid the home country in its progress among the Nations of the world. He paid tribute to Prof Birziska as a representative of the country in which he was born. He spoke of the act he presented to the Massachusetts Legislature, which was passed, making this State the first in the Union to ask for the independence of Lithuania as a Nation, in the peace conference which followed the World War. He was most warmly applauded.

Other speakers included F. J. Bagossus, Rev. Joseph Zelechosky, Stanley Michaelson, A. Paulauskas and Anthony Kneivas.

All speakers touched on the splendid progress that Lithuania has made and expressed hope for greater prosperity in its self-government of the future.

Prof Birziska's Message

The special guest brought a message of cheer from Lithuania. He said that he was especially pleased at the fine treatment he had received on arriving in Boston and that he was especially impressed with the progress Boston demonstrates.

He expressed his thanks for the fine reception the Governor of the Commonwealth gave to him in the morning and the wonderful greeting which came from the Mayor of the city. Then he spoke of the Boston Public Library, where he visited in the afternoon, and he expressed his thanks to Librarian Charles F. Bolden, who took him through the library in Copley sq and explained the general scheme of library activity in the city.

He said that he was pleased that the Lithuanian people of the city and in Greater Boston are so well united and that they hold such a fine spirit toward their native country.

He explained that the new country is prospering and that every effort is being made to educate the youth of the land. There are 50 high schools in the country. A school system quite similar to that in this country, is in vogue. There is a kindergarten for the children and graded schools for them as they grow older. Higher education, including a college course, has been made most attractive.

He promised that his tour of America would be a great benefit to those at home, because he already has learned a great deal that could easily be put into practice at his home country and will be a material asset in the training of the men and women of that country to be better citizens.

He said that one of the requirements in higher educational schools will be a study of the English language. This, he declared, is already in practice but, on his return, he will advocate it more strenuously.

There was a fine musical program. Violin selections were given by Alfred Kisikis, accompanied by Frank Ryan at the piano.

THE DORCHESTER BEACON

SATURDAY, MARCH 14, 1931

BOOKS OF EVACUATION DAY AT DORCHESTER BRANCH LIBRARY

A collection of books and pictures relating to the Siege of Boston are being displayed at the Dorchester Branch Library for the next two weeks. In the days of the Revolutionary War the residents of Dorchester took an active part in the defense of Boston harbor. It is said that they covered the main highways with hay so that the movement of troops and ammunition during the night would not be heard by the enemy. The story of Dorchester Heights never grows old.

No exhibition on this subject is complete without the Stuart portrait of Washington standing beside his horse. Other views include the Washington medal, a view of Boston Harbor showing the troops landing in 1768, a copy of a map of Boston and its environs and old print of the State House.

Among the books it is only possible to mention briefly special features. Toomey and Rankin's "History of South Boston" has always been invaluable. The Letter from Washington to the President of Congress, March 19, 1776, is particularly valuable as the Commander's own story of the Evacuation. Rev. George Ellis has compiled a chronicle of the siege in an accurate and detailed form. This adds greatly to the "Anniversary Program of 1876." "The Story of the Washington Medal" written by Former Mayor, Samuel C. Cabot, and extracts from British magazines are special features in "The Celebration Program of the one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary in 1901."

Abigail Adams, the wife of John Adams tells the story as she viewed the operations from a hill in Braintree in her "Familiar Letters." She quotes General Howe as saying, "These fellows have done more work in one night than I could make my army do in three months." Her letters are a real diary of Revolutionary affairs written in a keen observant manner.

These are just a taste of the many books relating to Boston History of the Revolutionary period that can be found at the Dorchester Branch Library, 1 Arcadia Street. Come and investigate the material on local history at Dorchester's oldest branch library!

Mme. Beale-Morey of Malden Prominent in Musical Work

Madame Ellen Beale-Morey, widow of Herbert E. Morey and long well known in musical circles in Boston and throughout the State, died this morning in her eighty-first year at a private hospital in Malden, as the result of injuries received early in March, when she tripped on a rug, at her home at 34 Hillside avenue, Malden, and broke her hip. She was taken at that time to the Deaconess Hospital, after going to a private hospital in Aspinwall avenue.

Born in Oxford, N. H., she was the daughter of Royal and Josephine (Johnson) Beale. She was married to Herbert E. Morey, who was a prominent musician and composer. She was a member of the Boston Musical Association and the Malden Musical Association. She was a devoted mother and a devoted wife. She was a prominent figure in the musical world of Malden and Boston. She was a member of the Boston Musical Association and the Malden Musical Association. She was a devoted mother and a devoted wife. She was a prominent figure in the musical world of Malden and Boston.

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 18, 1931

The Nomad

THE great collection of Washingtoniana made by the late Walter Epilke Lewison and bequeathed by him to the Boston Public Library, is the subject of an interesting article in the current number of More Books, the bulletin of the library, by Mr. Haraszti. The wealth of this collection in contemporary matter about Washington is very great, and is well set forth in this article. One point raised by Mr. Haraszti's article is worthy of note for the historical questions which it may raise. After telling the story of the insurrection in Pennsylvania and Virginia occasioned by the levying of a Federal excise tax on the domestic manufacture of whiskey, and known in history as the Whiskey Rebellion, and after recording the manner in which it was suppressed, with a firm military hand, by President Washington, the article says: "It happened for the first time that the President used Federal force to subdue lawlessness in the States, and the suppression of the insurrection was regarded as a proof of his powers. Indeed, the Democrats believed that the whole incident was provoked for this very purpose by the Federalists themselves." This charge seems to suggest that some of the Democrats believed that Washington was capable of being the head of a conspiracy against the rights of the States. No doubt many of them believed that. But was there anything to sustain the charge that the Federalists provoked the insurrection?

+ + +

Probably there was nothing of the sort. The insurrection was practically confined to the four Scotch-Irish counties of Pennsylvania, though there were demonstrations of resistance and violence in Virginia and North Carolina. The sturdy Presbyterians there made their own liquor, and they thought they had a right to go on making it. They burned buildings, robbed the mails, and tarred and feathered the Government officers. They were encouraged, aided and abetted by the governor (then called the "president") of Pennsylvania, Thomas Mifflin, and by Albert Gallatin and other prominent personages. They took the field with arms in their hands, to the number of about 16,000. Governor Mifflin, when called upon by President Washington to do so, at first refused to call out the militia against the rebels, but afterward called out and joined the militia under the command of General Henry Lee. When they found out that the armed forces of the Republic were coming against them, the rebels submitted, and the war was over. Mifflin and Gallatin subsequently acknowledged that they were wrong. Their action in doing so indicated that they had no sympathy with the idea that the rebellion had been cooked up by the Federalists. It was a perfectly genuine and a thoroughly spontaneous resistance. Of Washington had not suppressed it with a strong hand, the whole power and authority of the Federal Government would have been knocked into a cocked hat. He never did anything more just and commendable. Unquestionably his action did tend to strengthen the Federal authority at a very critical introductory period. But that, if it had been a fault, would not have been the fault of Washington or of the Federalist party. All rebellions against the nation's authority have had the effect to strengthen the Federal principle.

+ + +

make outside contacts. The only publicity that can be squeezed into her crowded days is the arrangement of the window or the display of recently received book jackets on a bulletin board in the entrance hall. In time, she hopes to be able to distribute each month mimeographed lists of books received.

Librarians who had not hitherto had the opportunity to visit the Business Branch became acquainted with its treasures at the October meeting of the Boston Special Libraries Association which was held there. Mrs. Brewster was able to publish at further showing at the June meeting of the Massachusetts Library Club, at Swampscott and to the librarians of the general branches in December. Mrs. Dietrichson likewise manages to keep Boston's first Business Branch in the forefront of the attention of colleagues through her services this year as vice-president of the local Special Libraries Association and on a committee of the National Special Libraries Association which is making a selected list of trade directories for use in libraries.

[illegible]

Good Use of the Valuable, Up-to-Date Directories and Reference Material on First Floor of the Kirstein Business Library

The following questions are among those recently answered by telephone, at Kirstein Branch. If you wish to add to the list, call Hubbard 0860.

Specific gravity of granite.
When was the Kennebec Canoe Company incorporated in Maine.
Statistics for five years of the world's produc-

Bank at St. Vincent, Cape Verde Islands.
Current price of nickel.
Automobile registration for England and Wales.

Address of the American Hotel Association.
Newspaper of Kingston, Jamaica.
Value of $1000 at 5% at the end of 17 years.
compounded semi-annually
Manufacturer of asphalt by James

Manufacturer of asphalt in France.
Personnel of Senate Committee appointed to investigate the stock exchange.
What was the total dividend paid by U. S. Steel in 1930.

Chain store sales in October, 1930, as compared with October, 1929.

Teak exporters of Slam and Burma.
Address of the Billimore School of Forestry.
What securities are used as a basis for the New York currency.

Dow Jones averages.
New officers elected within two weeks of American Woolen Mills
Amount of exports from Boston.
Spanish equivalent of elephant's tusk.

Owner of the "Lady Bird" steamship.
Rate of tax on individual incomes in Missouri.
Are municipal bonds taxed there?

Antique furniture dealers in England
Decoding of a Bentley code calligrapher

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 25, 1931

Public Lecture Monday
by Ralph Adams Cram

The omitted lecture in the Boston Public Library course by Dr. Ralph Adams Cram on "A Greek and Byzantine Pilgrimage" will be given in the lecture hall of the central library building, Copple square, on Monday, at 8 P. M.

Appeal by Boston Library Official Fails to Gain Entry for Irish Poetess

An appeal by Miss Alice M. Jordan, chief of the children's department of the Boston Public Library, to the state department at Washington in an effort to aid Miss Ella Young, Ireland's foremost woman poet, to re-enter this country, has been turned down by Secretary Stimson, she said last night.

Word had been received by Miss Jordan that Miss Young had been refused a visa at Berlin, B. C., by the American consul, George A. Bucklin, on the grounds that the noted writer was a "subversive" and was on public charge. She seeks re-entry into the United States, where she has lived as a temporary visitor for the last five years.

(At right) TWO DRAWINGS in charcoal from the recent exhibition of Miss V. Lee Burton held at the Boston Public Library. Miss Burton is the daughter of Ex-Dean Burton of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Left to right: Harald Kreutzberg in "Three Mad Figures"; and "Supper Dancing."

SUNDAY, MARCH 22, 1931

WASHINGTONIANA

Under the will of the late Walter Uplike Lexisow of Boston, who died in October last, the public library now has come into possession of a great collection of books, pamphlets, newspapers, broadsides and clippings dealing with President Washington. There are some 5000 items in all, of unequal value, of course, but including at least 600 which would command high prices in the book markets.

It seems that Mr. Lewisson made two huge collections of materials relating to the Father of His Country. One was sold a few years ago to the great Huntington Library in California. Data for comparison are lacking, but the one now in the Barton gallery in the Copley square building is understood to be of equal value with that which went to the far coast. What is more, the collection is completely catalogued, readily accessible and available for public consultation.

Practically every phase of the life of Washington is covered. Here the twelve big volumes of writings collected by Jared Sparks may be compared with the Worthington C. Ford edition in fourteen volumes. Here are the spurious letters alleged to have been found in the bag of Billy, the mulatto servant, when he was made a prisoner in the revolution. A large collection of papers deals with the Whiskey Insurrection. There are many editions of the Farewell Address. The number of biographies is pronounced by the author of an article in the Library Bulletin to be "enormous." And, what may surprise most of us, we are informed that "the most complete and the most valuable part of the collection is made up of eulogies and funeral orations."

THE
CHRISTIAN SCIENCE
MONITOR

Simmons Girls Work in Libraries

While other students were returning to classes yesterday at the end of the Simmons College spring recess, 74 girls in the school of library science were beginning a two-week period of intensive practice work in libraries of the eastern United States.

Eighteen graduate students and 56 seniors, some of them assigned to posts in cities as far distant as Baltimore, Washington, Pittsburgh, New York, Buffalo, and Evanston, Ill., will have no more class work until they have obtained a practical working knowledge of their subject, and have had 14 days of actual experience in dealing with library problems. Then they will return to Simmons to complete the work of the spring term.

Fifty-six libraries, including the Boston and New York public libraries, the Philadelphia Free Library, and 12 college libraries, are cooperating with Miss June R. Donnelly, director of the school, by giving the girls employment.

SATURDAY, MARCH 28, 1931

WILL DISCUSS THE HOME

The home as an expression of the individuality of its owner will be discussed by Burrill S. D. Martin, Providence architect, in a lecture at the Boston Public Library, Sunday, at 3:30 P. M. His topic will be, "Your Home—It's Beauty and Peace."

The Sunday Post

SUNDAY, MARCH 22, 1931

Little Walks About Boston

BY WILLIAM JUSTIN MANN

The Boston Public Library has just received a notable bequest of material concerning Washington. There are some 6000 items in the collection which was brought together by Walter Updike Lewissan, a Boston man, who died last October. This collection furnishes the subject for the leading article in the current number of "More Books," the bulletin of the Public Library.

The library recognizes the unequal value of the items comprising this collection, but points out that at least 600 of them have a distinct bibliographical and also a high monetary value. The collecting of Washingtonians seems to have been a real passion with Mr. Lewisson. Some years ago he sold a similar collection to the Henry E. Huntington Library in California. This present collection is kept in one of the alcoves of the Barton Library, and is now available for public use.

One interesting item is a sermon on "Religion and Patriotism" preached by Samuel Davies on Aug. 17, 1755, to Captain Overton's company of volunteers, raised in Hanover county, Va.

After speaking of those who were engaged for this expedition as instances of the sparks of martial fire then beginning to kindle in the country, he says in a foot-note: "As a remarkable instance of this I may point out to the public that heroic youth Colonel Washington, whom I cannot but hope Providence has hitherto preserved in so sig-vice to his country."

Items relating to the war of the Revolution, and printed contemporaneously, are especially numerous, such as orders, proclamations, and letters and addresses of the commander-in-chief. One of these items is a letter written by Washington to General Burgoyne, who had just surrendered, and wishing him "a safe and agreeable passage, with a perfect restoration of his health." A contemporaneous printed copy of Washington's final address to the army, in 1783, is also at hand.

Of Washington's "Farewell Address" there are over a dozen different editions in the collection, all printed in 1796, and a like number printed before 1800. Of the 1796 editions the one published by John Russell in Boston. Again we have to thank Mr. Haraszti, the editor of the Bulletin, for keeping us in touch with the treasures and new acquisitions of the library. It is well worth your while to make a habit of securing the issues of "More Books," as they appear, for they always contain important and interesting matter.

THE LIBRARIAN

It would be interesting to compute the exact amount of time and money that the business branch of the Boston Public Library has saved its neighbors in the brief period of its existence. Who—You might paraphrase the biblical question—are its neighbors? Not only those who use the splendid collection of financial and trade material arranged on two floors and a gallery of the Kirslein Memorial Building in City Hall avenue, but anyone at the end of a telephone.

Efficient Bostonians long ago learned that they might call Hubbard 0860 for addresses in any part of the world, so complete is the business library's directory section, or statistics, tax rates, prices of commodities, or even information about make outside contacts. The only publicity that can be squeezed into her crowded days is the arrangement of the window or the display of recently received book jackets on a bulletin board in the entrance hall. In close, she hopes to be able to distribute each month mimeographed lists of books received.

Librarians who had not hitherto had the opportunity to visit the Business Branch became acquainted with its treasures at the October meeting of the Boston Special Libraries Association which was held there. The librarian was able to publicize it further through short talks given at the June meeting of the Massachusetts Library Club, at Swampscott and to the librarians of the general branches in December. Mrs. Dietrichson likewise manages to keep Boston's first Business Branch Library before the eyes of her colleagues through her services this year as vice-president of the local Special Libraries Association and on a committee

Boston's First Branch Business Library

▲ Interested Clientele Makes Good Use of the Valuable, Up-to-Date Directories and Reference Material on the First Floor of the Kirslein Business Library

the income tax. In recent weeks, so much valuable assistance, advice and comfort, not to mention income tax blanks, have been distributed by the attendants at Kirslein that the percentage of suicides among distraught Boston business men is bound to be somewhat lessened this year.

Secure in the cunning knowledge that the best way to appeal to the interest is through the eye, Mrs. Mary W. Dietrichson, librarian at the business branch, has arranged a display in the window, centered about a reproduction of Alexander Graham Bell's original telephone of 1875 and the latest 1931 model. "When days are stormy and time is pressing, call Hubbard 0860," a legend above the exhibit suggests. Also displayed in the window is a representative array of reference tools: trade publications, investment sheets, atlases and directories, including the ever-useful Kelly's, which is not a listing of all of that name in the world, whatever you may think.

The Business Branch is eager to increase its telephone service and welcomes inquiries of this kind. Of course, it would prefer you to be reasonable and not expect them to read you pages of information or long lists of names, but should you desire the address of a competitor in Detroit, the height of a New Hampshire mountain, or the date of incorporation of a particular company, they would be only too glad to save your time and energy.

Mr. Louis E. Kirslein, whose generosity made possible the Business Branch, should be most gratified at the way the attendance and circulation have grown. However, this particular library is one of the few in this country which does not bow down at that word-of-power circulation. Mrs. Dietrichson believes that in a library of this type, reference work is much more important. And this is no sour grapes attitude, for the circulation of books has consistently increased ever since the building opened last May. In a month, for example, the average daily circulation was 614.

Already the patronage of Boston's Business Library is greater than that of the famous branch at Newark. This, in spite of the fact that the staff at Kirslein is about half that of Newark. Work on the catalogue has necessarily been slow because of the smallness of the tee of the National Special Libraries Association which is making a selected list of trade directories for use in libraries. The following questions are among those recently answered by telephone, at Kirslein Branch. If you wish to add to the list, call Hubbard 0860.

Specific gravity of granite.
When was the Kennelwood Canoe Company incorporated in Maine.
Statistics for the years of the world's production of petroleum.

Bank at St. Vincent, Cape Verde Islands.
Automobile registration for England and Wales.
Address of the American Hotel Association.
Newspaper of Kingston, Jamaica.

Value of $1000 at 5% at the end of 17 years, compounded semi-annually.
Manufacturer of asphalt in France.
Personnel of Senate Committee appointed to investigate the stock exchange.

What was the total dividend paid by U. S. Steel in 1929.
Chain store sales in October, 1929, as compared with October, 1928.
Distance from London to New Zealand.

Is the Blue Bird Mining Company still in existence.
Teak exporters of Siam and Burma.
Address of the Billmore School of Forestry.

What securities are used as a basis for the Dow Jones averages.
Navy officers killed within two weeks of American War in Asia.
Amount of exports from Boston.

Number, equivalent of sleeping "abandonment" of a ship.
Rate of the "Trade Index" as compared with the rate of the "Trade Index" in 1929.
Are municipal bonds issued here?

Where is the headquarters of the British code department.
Densities of a Bentley code machine.

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 25, 1931

Public Lecture Monday by Ralph Adams Cram

The omitted lecture in the Boston Public Library course by Dr. Ralph Adams Cram on "A Greek and Byzantine Pilgrimage" will be given in the lecture hall of the central library building, Copley square, on Monday, at 8 P. M.

THE BOSTON HERALD, SUNDAY, MARCH 22, 1931

Appeal by Boston Library Official Fails to Gain Entry for Irish Poetess

An appeal by Miss Alice M. Jordan, chief of the children's department of the Boston Public Library, to the state department at Washington in an effort to aid Miss Ella Young, Ireland's foremost woman poet, to re-enter this country, has been turned down by Secretary Stimson, she said last night.

Word had been received by Miss Jordan that Miss Young had been refused a visa at Victoria, B. C., by the American consul, George A. Bucklin, on the grounds that the noted writer of children's stories might become a public charge. She seeks re-entry into the United States, where she has lived as a temporary visitor for the last five years.

Miss Jordan said that she met Miss Young here three years ago when she lectured at the Women's City Club and the Bookshop for Boys and Girls. She said that she has a high regard for the writings of Miss Young, whom she considers an outstanding student of Celtic mythology, and whose books are likely to continue in demand. Her writings have been on the shelves of the library here for many years, she said, and have always been very popular and particularly appealing to children. Secretary Stimson told Miss Jordan he could do nothing, but suggested she write the consul. A group of San Francisco friends of Miss Young have telegraphed offers to the state and labor department to post bonds that the Irish writer will not become a public charge.

MARCH 22, 1931
THE BOSTON HERALD

(At right) TWO DRAWINGS in charcoal from the recent exhibition of Miss V. Lee Burton held at the Boston Public Library. Miss Burton is the daughter of Ex-Dean Burton of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Left to right: Harold Kreutzberg in "Three Mad Figures"; and "Supper Dancing."

THE BOSTON HERALD

SUNDAY, MARCH 22, 1931

WASHINGTONIANA

Under the will of the late Walter Updike Lewisson of Boston, who died in October last, the public library now has come into possession of a great collection of books, pamphlets, newspapers, broadsides and clippings dealing with President Washington. There are some 6000 items in all, of unequal value, of course, but including at least 600 which would command high prices in the book markets.

It seems that Mr. Lewisson made two huge collections of materials relating to the Father of His Country. One was sold a few years ago to the great Huntington Library in California. Data for comparison are lacking, but the one now in the Barton gallery in the Copley square building is understood to be of equal value with that which went to the far coast. What is more, the collection is completely catalogued, readily accessible and available for public consultation.

Practically every phase of the life of Washington is covered. Here the twelve big volumes of writings collected by Jared Sparks may be compared with the Worthington C. Ford edition in fourteen volumes. Here are the spurious letters alleged to have been found in the bag of Billy, the mulatto servant, when he was made a prisoner in the revolution. A large collection of papers deals with the Whiskey Insurrection. There are many editions of the Farewell Address. The number of biographies is pronounced by the author of an article in the Library Bulletin to be "enormous." And, what may surprise most of us, we are informed that "the most complete and the most valuable part of the collection is made up of eulogies and funeral orations."

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

TUESDAY, MARCH 23, 1931

Simmons Girls Work in Libraries

While other students were returning to classes yesterday at the end of the Simmons College spring recess, 74 girls in the school of library science were beginning a two-week period of intensive practice work in libraries of the eastern United States.

Eighteen graduate students and 56 seniors, some of them assigned to posts in cities as far distant as Baltimore, Washington, Pittsburgh, New York, Buffalo, and Evanston, Ill., will have no more class work until they have obtained a practical working knowledge of their subject, and have had 14 days of actual experience in dealing with library problems. Then they will return to Simmons to complete the work of the spring term.

Fifty-six libraries, including the Boston and New York public libraries, the Philadelphia Free Library, and 12 college libraries, are cooperating with Miss June R. Donnelly, director of the school, by giving the girls employment.

THE BOSTON HERALD

SATURDAY, MARCH 28, 1931

WILL DISCUSS THE HOME

The home as an expression of the individuality of its owner will be discussed by Harriet S. D. Martin, Providence architect, in a lecture at the Boston Public Library, Sunday, at 3:30 P. M. His topic will be, "Your Home—It's Beauty and Peace."

The Sunday Post

SUNDAY, MARCH 22, 1931

Little Walks About Boston

BY WILLIAM JUSTIN MANN

The Boston Public Library has just received a notable bequest of material concerning Washington. There are some 6000 items in the collection which was brought together by Walter Updike Lewisson, a Boston man, who died last October. This collection furnishes the subject for the leading article in the current number of "More Books," the bulletin of the Public Library.

The library recognizes the unequal value of the items comprising this collection, but points out that at least 600 of them have a distinct bibliographical and also a high monetary value. The collecting of Washingtonians seems to have been a real passion with Mr. Lewisson. Some years ago he sold a similar collection to the Henry E. Huntington Library in California. This present collection is kept in one of the alcoves of the Barton Library, and is now available for public use.

One interesting item is a sermon on "Religion and Patriotism" preached by Samuel Davies on Aug. 17, 1755, to Captain Overton's company of volunteers, raised in Hanover county, Va.

After speaking of those who were engaged for this expedition as instances of the sparks of martial fire then beginning to kindle in the country, he says in a footnote: "As a remarkable instance of this I may point out to the public that heroic youth Colonel Washington, whom I cannot but hope Providence has hitherto preserved in so signal a manner, for some important service."

Items relating to the war of the Revolution, and printed contemporaneously, are especially numerous, such as orders, proclamations, and letters and addresses of the commander-in-chief. One of these items is a letter written by Washington to General Burgoyne, who had just surrendered, and wishing him "a safe and agreeable passage, with a perfect restoration of his health." A contemporaneous printed copy of Washington's final address to the army, in 1783, is also of interest.

Of Washington's "Farewell Address" there are over a dozen different editions in the collection, all printed in 1783 and a like number printed before 1800. Of the 1783 editions one was published by John Russell in Boston. Again we have to thank Mr. Harvill, the editor of the Bulletin, for keeping us in touch with the treasures and new acquisitions of the library. It is well worth your while to make a habit of securing the issues of "More Books," as they appear, for they always contain important and interesting matter.

Boston's First Branch Business Library

An Interested Clientele Makes Good Use of the Valuable, Up-to-Date Directories and Reference Material on the First Floor of the Kirstein Business Library

the income tax. In recent weeks, so much valuable assistance, advice and comfort, not to mention income tax blanks, have been distributed by the attendants at Kirstein that the percentage of suicides among distraught Boston business men is bound to be somewhat lessened this year.

Secure in the canny knowledge that the best way to appeal to the interest is through the eye, Mrs. Mary W. Dietrichson, librarian at the business branch, has arranged a display in the window, centered about a reproduction of Alexander Graham Bell's original telephone of 1875 and the latest 1927 model. "When days are stormy and time is pressing, call Hubbard 0860," a legend above the exhibit suggests. Also displayed in the window is a representative array of reference tools: trade publications, investment sheets, atlases and directories, including the ever-useful Kelly's, which is not a listing of all of that name in the world, whatever you may think.

The Business Branch is eager to increase its telephone service and welcomes inquiries of this kind. Of course, it would prefer you to be reasonable and not expect them to read you pages of information or long lists of names, but should you desire the address of a competitor in Detroit, the height of a New Hampshire mountain, or the date of incorporation of a particular company, they would be only too glad to save your time and energy.

Mr. Louis E. Kirstein, whose generosity made possible the Business Branch, should be most gratified at the way the attendance and circulation have grown. However, this particular library is one of the few in this country which does not bow down at that word-of-never circulation. Mrs. Dietrichson believes that in a library of this type, reference work is much more important. And this is no grapes attitude, for the circulation of books has consistently increased ever since the building opened, last May. Last month, for example, the average daily circulation was 614.

Already, the patronage of Boston's Business Library is greater than that of the famous branch at Newark. This, in spite of the fact that the staff at Kirstein is about half that of Newark. Work on the catalogue has necessarily been slow because of the smallness of the staff. However, as the Kirstein Business Branch librarian philosophically admits, the fact that there was no complete catalogue to fall back on, made all the attendants learn their reference material more thoroughly than they might otherwise have done. Cataloguing is not done there in the usual placid remoteness from the public, but constantly interrupted by reference and desk work.

The Boston Business Branch, from its beginning, has been the most heavily used of all similar institutions. So great is the press of business between eleven-thirty and two, that none of the attendants is able to take more than half an hour for lunch. March 2 was a record day for attendance, with 724 on the two floors.

Before the Business Branch opened, there were doleful prophecies that the curbstone lawyers and traders would transfer their allegiance to its comfortable interior. This never happened, fortunately. This clientele has always been business-like and well-mannered. All who came had a definite purpose in mind and wasted no time. There have never been chronic idlers snoozing over the daily papers or abstractedly turning the pages of a directory.

Victims of unemployment have made good use of the Business Library. Many have made good use of their involuntary idleness studying and preparing themselves for a better job when conditions improve. Fewer women than men use the Business Library, but the former have lately become interested in the investment services. They have probably come to the conclusion that limited as their experience has been, they could not possibly make a worse mess of things than the bulls and bears.

Because of constantly increasing business, it has been impossible for the librarian to leave the business library to the National Special Libraries Association which is making a selected list of trade directories for use in libraries. The following questions are among those recently answered by telephone, at Kirstein Branch. If you wish to add to the list, call Hubbard 0860.

Specific gravity of granite.
When was the Kennebec Cane Company incorporated in Maine.
Statistics for five years of the world's production of petroleum.
Automobile registration for England and Wales.
Address of the American Hotel Association.
Newspaper of Kingston, Jamaica.
Value of $1000 at 3% at the end of 17 years, compounded semi-annually.
Manufacturer of asphalt in France.
Personnel of Senate Committee appointed to investigate the stock exchange.
What was the total dividend paid by U. S. Steel in 1920.
Chain store sales in October, 1920, as compared with October, 1920.
Distance from London to New Zealand.
Is the Blue Bird Mining Company still in existence?
Teak exporters of Siam and Burma.
Address of the Baltimore School of Forestry.
What securities are used as a basis for the Daw Jones averages.
New offices closed within two weeks of American Wooden Mills.
Amount of exports from Boston.
"Equal" equivalent of "Daily Light" in Germany.
Rate of tax on individual income in Missouri.
Are municipal bonds taxed there?
Vintage furniture dealers in England.
Densities of a butterfly collection catalogue.

THE BOSTON HERALD, SUNDAY, MARCH 22, 1931

Appeal by Boston Library Official Fails to Gain Entry for Irish Poetess

An appeal by Miss Alice M. Jordan, chief of the children's department of the Boston Public Library, to the state department at Washington in an effort to aid Miss Ella Young, Ireland's foremost woman poet, to enter this country, has been turned down by Secretary Stimson, she said last night.

Word had been received by Miss Jordan that Miss Young had been refused a visa at Victoria, B. C., by the American consul, George A. Bucklin, on the grounds that the noted writer of children's stories might become a public charge. She seeks re-entry to the United States, where she has lived as a temporary visitor for the last five years.

Miss Jordan said that she met Miss Young here three years ago when she lectured at the Women's City Club and the Bookshop for Boys and Girls. She said that she has a high regard for the writings of Miss Young, whom she considers an outstanding student of Celtic mythology, and whose books are likely to continue in demand. Her writings have been on the shelves of the library here for many years, she said, and have always been very popular and particularly appealing to children.

Secretary Stimson told Miss Jordan he could do nothing, but suggested she write the consul. A group of San Francisco friends of Miss Young have telegraphed offers to the state and have department to post bonds that the Irish writer will not become a public charge.

THE BOSTON HERALD

SUNDAY, MARCH 22, 1931

WASHINGTONIANA

Under the will of the late Walter Updike Lewiss of Boston, who died in October last, the public library now has come into possession of a great collection of books, pamphlets, newspapers, broadsides and clippings dealing with President Washington. There are some 5000 items in all, of unequal value, of course, but including at least 600 which would command high prices in the book markets.

It seems that Mr. Lewiss made two huge collections of materials relating to the Father of His Country. One was sold a few years ago to the great Huntington Library in California. Data for comparison are lacking, but the one now in the Barton gallery in the Copley square building is understood to be of equal value with that which went to the far coast. What is more, the collection is completely catalogued, readily accessible and available for public consultation.

Practically every phase of the life of Washington is covered. Here the twelve big volumes of writings collected by Jared Sparks may be compared with the Worthington C. Ford edition in fourteen volumes. Here are the spurious letters alleged to have been found in the bag of Billy, the mulatto servant, when he was made a prisoner in the revolution. A large collection of papers deals with the Whiskey Insurrection. There are many editions of the Farewell Address. The number of biographies is pronounced by the author of an article in the Library Bulletin to be "enormous." And, what may surprise most of us, we are informed that "the most complete and the most valuable part of the collection is made up of eulogies and funeral orations."

(At right) TWO DRAWINGS in charcoal from the recent exhibition of Miss V. Lee Burton held at the Boston Public Library. Miss Burton is the daughter of Ex-Dean Burton of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Left to right: Harald Kreutzberg in "Three Mad Figures"; and "Supper Dancing."

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

TUESDAY, MARCH 31, 1931

Simmons Girls Work in Libraries

While other students were returning to classes yesterday at the end of the Simmons College spring recess, 74 girls in the school of library science were beginning a two-week period of intensive practice work in libraries of the eastern United States.

Eighteen graduate students and 56 seniors, some of them assigned to posts in cities as far distant as Baltimore, Washington, Pittsburgh, New York, Buffalo, and Evanston, Ill., will have no more class work until they have obtained a practical working knowledge of their subject, and have had 14 days of actual experience in dealing with library problems. Then they will return to Simmons to complete the work of the spring term.

Fifty-six libraries, including the Boston and New York public libraries, the Philadelphia Free Library, and 12 college libraries, are cooperating with Miss June R. Donnelly, director of the school, by giving the girls employment.

THE BOSTON HERALD

SATURDAY, MARCH 28, 1931

WILL DISCUSS THE HOME

The home as an expression of the individuality of its owner will be discussed by Burritt S. D. Martin, Providence architect, in a lecture at the Boston Public Library, Sunday, at 3.30 P. M. His topic will be, "Your Home—It's Beauty and Peace."

The Sunday Post

SUNDAY, MARCH 22, 1931

Little Walks About Boston

BY WILLIAM JUSTIN MANN

The Boston Public Library has just received a notable bequest of material concerning Washington. There are some 600 items in the collection which was brought together by Walter Updike Lewiss, a Boston man, who died last October. This collection furnishes the subject for the leading article in the current number of "More Books," the bulletin of the Public Library.

The library recognizes the unequal value of the items comprising this collection, but points out that at least 600 of them have a distinct bibliographical and also a high monetary value. The collecting of Washingtonians seems to have been a real passion with Mr. Lewiss. Some years ago he sold a similar collection to the Henry E. Huntington Library in California. This present collection is kept in one of the alcoves of the Barton Library, and is now available for public use.

One interesting item is a sermon on "Religion and Patriotism" preached by Samuel Davies on Aug. 17, 1755, to Captain Overton's company of volunteers, raised in Hanover county, Va.

After speaking of those who were engaged for this expedition as instances of the sparks of martial fire then beginning to kindle in the country, he says in a footnote: "As a remarkable instance of this I may point out to the public that heroic youth Colonel Washington, whom I cannot but hope Providence has hitherto preserved in so significant to his country."

Items relating to the war of the Revolution, and printed contemporaneously, are especially numerous, such as orders, proclamations, and letters and addresses of the commander-in-chief. One of these items is a letter written by Washington to General Burgoyne, who had just surrendered, and wishing him "a safe and agreeable passage, with a perfect restoration of his health." A contemporaneous printed copy of Washington's final address to the army, in 1783, is also of interest.

Of Washington's "Farewell Address" there are over a dozen different editions in the collection, all printed in 1796, and a like number printed before 1800. Of the 178 edition one was published by John Russell in Boston. Again we have to thank Mr. Hamazil, the editor of the Bulletin, for keeping us in touch with the treasures and new acquisitions of the library. It is well worth your while to make a habit of securing the issues of "More Books" as they appear, for they always contain important and interesting matter.

Among those who criticized the situation was Councillor John I. Fitzgerald of the West End, who said he had been unable to find out where all this money goes to and therefore it was time to call a halt.

Pee-wee Books May Solve Issue Of Libraries for Cliff Dwellers

PART OF JAMES D. HENDERSON COLLECTION

Note the Large Book in Background in Comparison With Shakespeare's Complete Works in 40 Volumes in Miniature Bookcase. A Copy of Miniature Hamlet Against the First Folio. "A" is the Smallest Book Printed in Movable Type and Is Compared With "B," a Thimble and Thread and Needle.

Nowadays when city dwellers live in pueblos, or what they prefer to call apartments, they are neither amazed nor shocked when they find no shelves provided for books and no space available for book shelves.

The public library now supplies the needs of millions of readers and large valuable collections of books are being turned over to public libraries to administer.

One man, however, has solved the problem of having as many books as he wants in the smallest possible space and in such form that several dozen of them in one of his pockets are imperceptible. That man is James D. Henderson, who spends his days in his Boston real estate office and by night produces an XLIVMOS book lovers' magazine, receives bibelots from all over the world, rearranges his collection of over 3000 books, and reads with the aid of a small but powerful magnifying glass the books he loves best.

Mr. Henderson began collecting XLIVMOS in earnest about three years ago. He had at the time in his possession a complete set of Shakespeare in forty miniature volumes, and today he is reputed to have the largest Lilliputian library in the world.

Some choice items from his library are now on view at the Kirstein Branch of the Boston Public Library. Occupying the most conspicuous place, if so tiny a book can be said to occupy a conspicuous place, what is said to be the smallest book in the world, printed from movable type, a book eleven-sixteenths of an inch long by seven-sixteenths of an inch wide by four-sixteenths of an inch thick, entitled "Galileo a Cristina di Lorena," being a letter from Galileo written about 1614 to Cristina di Lorena, Dowager Grand Duchess of Tuscany. In this treatise he defends the Copernican theory against theological objections.

Among the Japanese items are several little books which are supposed to provide answers to every question under the sun. These, Japanese students are said to hide in their sleeves when taking examinations.

The Law of Moses is contained in a tiny gold case with a ring at the back which can be attached to a watch chain.

Should a Muhammadan stroll into the library he will find many copies of the Koran at his disposal, three of the most beautifully bound volumes being contained in David Bryce's snuff box.

Now David Bryce was a bookseller in Glasgow who became a publisher in 1876. Realizing the ordinary person's keen enjoyment of novelties, he started to print and publish Lilliputian books in attractive bindings. Among the hundreds of titles he published in wee form are what are declared to be the smallest dictionary and the smallest Bible in the world. His press is represented in the collection by the New Testament, beautifully bound in red morocco, which is inclosed in a small leather case. Ter-nyson's and Burns's poems, the smallest dictionary and Gray's Elegy and a Bhakavadgita in Sanskrit.

Mr. Henderson is himself a publisher of a newspaper devoted to the inter-

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 22, 1931

M. S. P. C. A. Posters Shown at Library

Posters prepared by school children in connection with the annual observance of "Be Kind to Animals Week," are on exhibition at the Boston Public Library. The walls of the Fine Arts Department and Sargent Hall are covered with hundreds of multicolored compositions submitted by parochial and public school children throughout the State in the contest conducted annually by the M. S. P. C. A. The exhibit, however, embraces but a small percentage of the 5,533 posters submitted.

Three classes of prizes have been awarded: first, gold medals; second, silver medals; third, honorable mention, with a year's subscription to Our Dumb Animals. The object has been to judge the posters independently, by schools, or by grades wherever possible. In all, 825 first prize medals, 850 second prize medals, and 1213 honorable mentions have been awarded. The exhibition will continue through next week.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, APRIL 25, 1931

Lt.-Col. McEntee to Speak on Italy's Part in War

Lieutenant Colonel Girard L. McEntee, an American Army officer, who saw service during the World War, will speak on "Italy's Part in Winning the World War," at the Boston Public Library, next Tuesday evening, at eight o'clock. His talk, which will be illustrated, will be given under the auspices of the Italian Historical Society of Massachusetts, Inc., of which Professor J. D. M. Ford of Harvard is president.

Colonel McEntee is an officer of twenty-nine years' commissioned service. He completed three tours of duty in the Philippine Islands; was with General Funston's expedition to Vera Cruz, and saw service in France as a staff officer of the Seventh Division. He holds an A. B. from George Washington University and an A. M. degree from New York University. He was graduated from the Army Signal School, Fort Leavenworth, in 1912, and has had two details in the Signal Corps since that time. In 1921, he was graduated from the Army School of the Line, and in 1922 from the General Staff College, both at Fort Leavenworth. He was graduated from the Army War College at Washington, D. C., in 1923.

BLOCH PUBLISHING CO., NEW YORK April

JEWISH BOOK WEEK EXHIBIT, 1930
Public Library, West End, Boston, Mass.

BOSTON POST

APRIL 24, 1931

Gossip of the Town

Louis E. Kirstein, and Boston Public Library.

It is a fact that the Boston Public Library is particularly rich in treasures relating to the Bible and Hebrew scholarship. Many of these priceless possessions will be displayed during Jewish Book Week, in the Main Exhibition Room of the Central Library. Special exhibitions of suitable books, photographs, periodicals, clippings, and ceremonial objects will be featured at all the branches that have Jewish communities. Books in Hebrew, Yiddish, English and other languages bearing upon Jewish life through the ages will be available. A selected list of 100 books of Jewish significance offered for circulation may be had upon request at either the Central Library or its branches.

It is planned to have the Faneuil Hall observance of the 275th anniversary of the settlement of the Jew in America tell its own story of the occasion in a memorial volume which is to be issued in the near future. Suffice it to say that President Hoover sent the following greeting from the White House:

"The Jewish people have brought to this country both the treasures of their ancient tradition and the pioneer spirit which looks forward hopefully into the future. They have thrown themselves wholeheartedly into the task of the nation's uplifting. In every national crisis they have shown their loyalty and devotion to the home of their choice, and they have made valuable contributions in every worthwhile field of endeavor. I felicitate the gathering of those who celebrate the passing of the 275th year of the Jewish participation in American life."

When the new emphasis on Jewish festivals, and their revival and observance, again penetrated the life of the Jew and recolorated the social fabric of his life with a new dye, the Boston Public Library not only kept pace, but anticipated their cultural value by assembling picturesque, esthetic and informative exhibits which appealed to both Jew and non-Jew. Utilizing the idea of the importance of books and scholarship to a people who have always held learning as a cardinal virtue and the scholar as the most respected member of the community, it stressed its Jewish collections of books, and introduced them to the public.

The official opening of the Jews' share in the Massachusetts Tercentenary was launched with the observance of Jewish Book Week. The following notice appeared in the press:

"In New England, where colleges and academies have for many years offered their students courses in Hebrew and Aramaic, a strong scholarly interest in Hebrew studies may be found to this day among many educated people. The Boston Public Library is particularly rich in treasures relating to the Bible and Hebrew scholarship. Many of these priceless possessions will be displayed during Jewish Book Week, in the Main Exhibition Room of the Central Library. Special exhibitions of suitable books, photographs, periodicals, clippings, and ceremonial objects will be featured at all the branches that have Jewish communities. Books in Hebrew, Yiddish, English and other languages bearing upon Jewish life through the ages will be available. A selected list of 100 books of Jewish significance offered for circulation may be had upon request at either the Central Library or its branches."

Throughout the entire year the library continued to assemble and to make available all suitable material bearing upon the history of the Jew in America and the contemplated observance of the 275th anniversary of his settlement in America. In commemorating this event it again took the initiative and held an exhibit of the "Jew in Contemporary Art and Literature" which has perhaps never been equaled as a Jewish cultural interpretation and ensemble in America. The keynote of the exhibit was literature, grouped around a striking portrait of an old rabbi painted by Louis Novak, and augmented by the works of contemporary Jewish artists, ranging from pencil sketch to oil. Architecture was emphasized by architects' models of two of the leading congregations. The entire exhibition was characterized by good taste.

It is planned to have the Faneuil Hall observance of the 275th anniversary of the settlement of the Jew in America tell its own story of the occasion in a memorial volume which is to be issued in the near future. Suffice it to say that President Hoover sent the following greeting from the White House:

"The Jewish people have brought to this country both the treasures of their ancient tradition and the pioneer spirit which looks forward hopefully into the future. They have thrown themselves wholeheartedly into the task of the nation's uplifting. In every national crisis they have shown their loyalty and devotion to the home of their choice, and they have made valuable contributions in every worthwhile field of endeavor. I felicitate the gathering of those who celebrate the passing of the 275th year of the Jewish participation in American life."

When the new emphasis on Jewish festivals, and their revival and observance, again penetrated the life of the Jew and recolorated the social fabric of his life with a new dye, the Boston Public Library not only kept pace, but anticipated their cultural value by assembling picturesque, esthetic and informative exhibits which appealed to both Jew and non-Jew. Utilizing the idea of the importance of books and scholarship to a people who have always held learning as a cardinal virtue and the scholar as the most respected member of the community, it stressed its Jewish collections of books, and introduced them to the public.

The official opening of the Jews' share in the Massachusetts Tercentenary was launched with the observance of Jewish Book Week. The following notice appeared in the press:

"In New England, where colleges and academies have for many years offered their students courses in Hebrew and Aramaic, a strong scholarly interest in Hebrew studies may be found to this day among many educated people. The Boston Public Library is particularly rich in treasures relating to the Bible and Hebrew scholarship. Many of these priceless possessions will be displayed during Jewish Book Week, in the Main Exhibition Room of the Central Library. Special exhibitions of suitable books, photographs, periodicals, clippings, and ceremonial objects will be featured at all the branches that have Jewish communities. Books in Hebrew, Yiddish, English and other languages bearing upon Jewish life through the ages will be available. A selected list of 100 books of Jewish significance offered for circulation may be had upon request at either the Central Library or its branches."

Throughout the entire year the library continued to assemble and to make available all suitable material bearing upon the history of the Jew in America and the contemplated observance of the 275th anniversary of his settlement in America. In commemorating this event it again took the initiative and held an exhibit of the "Jew in Contemporary Art and Literature" which has perhaps never been equaled as a Jewish cultural interpretation and ensemble in America. The keynote of the exhibit was literature, grouped around a striking portrait of an old rabbi painted by Louis Novak, and augmented by the works of contemporary Jewish artists, ranging from pencil sketch to oil. Architecture was emphasized by architects' models of two of the leading congregations. The entire exhibition was characterized by good taste.

It is planned to have the Faneuil Hall observance of the 275th anniversary of the settlement of the Jew in America tell its own story of the occasion in a memorial volume which is to be issued in the near future. Suffice it to say that President Hoover sent the following greeting from the White House:

"The Jewish people have brought to this country both the treasures of their ancient tradition and the pioneer spirit which looks forward hopefully into the future. They have thrown themselves wholeheartedly into the task of the nation's uplifting. In every national crisis they have shown their loyalty and devotion to the home of their choice, and they have made valuable contributions in every worthwhile field of endeavor. I felicitate the gathering of those who celebrate the passing of the 275th year of the Jewish participation in American life."

When the new emphasis on Jewish festivals, and their revival and observance, again penetrated the life of the Jew and recolorated the social fabric of his life with a new dye, the Boston Public Library not only kept pace, but anticipated their cultural value by assembling picturesque, esthetic and informative exhibits which appealed to both Jew and non-Jew. Utilizing the idea of the importance of books and scholarship to a people who have always held learning as a cardinal virtue and the scholar as the most respected member of the community, it stressed its Jewish collections of books, and introduced them to the public.

The official opening of the Jews' share in the Massachusetts Tercentenary was launched with the observance of Jewish Book Week. The following notice appeared in the press:

"In New England, where colleges and academies have for many years offered their students courses in Hebrew and Aramaic, a strong scholarly interest in Hebrew studies may be found to this day among many

VOLUME 45

APRIL, 1931

NUMBER 7

THE B'NAI B'RITH MAGAZINE

The National Jewish Monthly

Library Celebrates Jewish Anniversary

By FANNY GOLDSTEIN

MASSACHUSETTS has just closed its Tercentenary Year, which coincidentally also marked the 275th anniversary of the landing of the Jews in this country.

"The Jewish people in America," said Dr. Cyrus Adler, "themselves have but scant information about their own history, and the general world at large has almost none at all. On purely educational grounds this omission should be remedied. . . . Anyone who has read and studied the public statements of Jewish writers and thinkers in America is made plainly aware of the fact that the great mass of them have no notion at all that Jews in America have a distinct historical tradition of their own, linked up, of course, with the whole Jewish tradition, but nevertheless of sufficient dignity and importance to make a true understanding of it worth while."

It is apropos at this time to mention the part which the Boston Public Library has played as a collector and disseminator of Jewish information and material. It was perhaps the first library in the country to recognize at an early date the importance of the Jewish renaissance movement in America, and the rebirth of Jewish nationalism through the Zionist movement.

When the new emphasis on Jewish festivals, and their revival and observance, again penetrated the life of the Jew and recolorated the social fabric of his life with a new dye, the Boston Public Library not only kept pace, but anticipated their cultural value by assembling picturesque, esthetic and informative exhibits which appealed to both Jew and non-Jew. Utilizing the idea of the importance of books and scholarship to a people who have always held learning as a cardinal virtue and the scholar as the most respected member of the community, it stressed its Jewish collections of books, and introduced them to the public.

The official opening of the Jews' share in the Massachusetts Tercentenary was launched with the observance of Jewish Book Week. The following notice appeared in the press:

"In New England, where colleges and academies have for many years offered their students courses in Hebrew and Aramaic, a strong scholarly interest in Hebrew studies may be found to this day among many educated people. The Boston Public Library is particularly rich in treasures relating to the Bible and Hebrew scholarship. Many of these priceless possessions will be displayed during Jewish Book Week, in the Main Exhibition Room of the Central Library. Special exhibitions of suitable books, photographs, periodicals, clippings, and ceremonial objects will be featured at all the branches that have Jewish communities. Books in Hebrew, Yiddish, English and other languages bearing upon Jewish life through the ages will be available. A selected list of 100 books of Jewish significance offered for circulation may be had upon request at either the Central Library or its branches."

Throughout the entire year the library continued to assemble and to make available all suitable material bearing upon the history of the Jew in America and the contemplated observance of the 275th anniversary of his settlement in America. In commemorating this event it again took the initiative and held an exhibit of the "Jew in Contemporary Art and Literature" which has perhaps never been equaled as a Jewish cultural interpretation and ensemble in America. The keynote of the exhibit was literature, grouped around a striking portrait of an old rabbi painted by Louis Novak, and augmented by the works of contemporary Jewish artists, ranging from pencil sketch to oil. Architecture was emphasized by architects' models of two of the leading congregations. The entire exhibition was characterized by good taste.

It is planned to have the Faneuil Hall observance of the 275th anniversary of the settlement of the Jew in America tell its own story of the occasion in a memorial volume which is to be issued in the near future. Suffice it to say that President Hoover sent the following greeting from the White House:

"The Jewish people have brought to this country both the treasures of their ancient tradition and the pioneer spirit which looks forward hopefully into the future. They have thrown themselves wholeheartedly into the task of the nation's uplifting. In every national crisis they have shown their loyalty and devotion to the home of their choice, and they have made valuable contributions in every worthwhile field of endeavor. I felicitate the gathering of those who celebrate the passing of the 275th year of the Jewish participation in American life."

When the new emphasis on Jewish festivals, and their revival and observance, again penetrated the life of the Jew and recolorated the social fabric of his life with a new dye, the Boston Public Library not only kept pace, but anticipated their cultural value by assembling picturesque, esthetic and informative exhibits which appealed to both Jew and non-Jew. Utilizing the idea of the importance of books and scholarship to a people who have always held learning as a cardinal virtue and the scholar as the most respected member of the community, it stressed its Jewish collections of books, and introduced them to the public.

The official opening of the Jews' share in the Massachusetts Tercentenary was launched with the observance of Jewish Book Week. The following notice appeared in the press:

"In New England, where colleges and academies have for many years offered their students courses in Hebrew and Aramaic, a strong scholarly interest in Hebrew studies may be found to this day among many educated people. The Boston Public Library is particularly rich in treasures relating to the Bible and Hebrew scholarship. Many of these priceless possessions will be displayed during Jewish Book Week, in the Main Exhibition Room of the Central Library. Special exhibitions of suitable books, photographs, periodicals, clippings, and ceremonial objects will be featured at all the branches that have Jewish communities. Books in Hebrew, Yiddish, English and other languages bearing upon Jewish life through the ages will be available. A selected list of 100 books of Jewish significance offered for circulation may be had upon request at either the Central Library or its branches."

educated people. The Boston Public Library is particularly rich in treasures relating to the Bible and Hebrew scholarship. Many of these priceless possessions will be displayed during Jewish Book Week, in the Main Exhibition Room of the Central Library. Special exhibitions of suitable books, photographs, periodicals, clippings, and ceremonial objects will be featured at all the branches that have Jewish communities. Books in Hebrew, Yiddish, English and other languages bearing upon Jewish life through the ages will be available. A selected list of 100 books of Jewish significance offered for circulation may be had upon request at either the Central Library or its branches."

Throughout the entire year the library continued to assemble and to make available all suitable material bearing upon the history of the Jew in America and the contemplated observance of the 275th anniversary of his settlement in America. In commemorating this event it again took the initiative and held an exhibit of the "Jew in Contemporary Art and Literature" which has perhaps never been equaled as a Jewish cultural interpretation and ensemble in America. The keynote of the exhibit was literature, grouped around a striking portrait of an old rabbi painted by Louis Novak, and augmented by the works of contemporary Jewish artists, ranging from pencil sketch to oil. Architecture was emphasized by architects' models of two of the leading congregations. The entire exhibition was characterized by good taste.

It is planned to have the Faneuil Hall observance of the 275th anniversary of the settlement of the Jew in America tell its own story of the occasion in a memorial volume which is to be issued in the near future. Suffice it to say that President Hoover sent the following greeting from the White House:

"The Jewish people have brought to this country both the treasures of their ancient tradition and the pioneer spirit which looks forward hopefully into the future. They have thrown themselves wholeheartedly into the task of the nation's uplifting. In every national crisis they have shown their loyalty and devotion to the home of their choice, and they have made valuable contributions in every worthwhile field of endeavor. I felicitate the gathering of those who celebrate the passing of the 275th year of the Jewish participation in American life."

When the new emphasis on Jewish festivals, and their revival and observance, again penetrated the life of the Jew and recolorated the social fabric of his life with a new dye, the Boston Public Library not only kept pace, but anticipated their cultural value by assembling picturesque, esthetic and informative exhibits which appealed to both Jew and non-Jew. Utilizing the idea of the importance of books and scholarship to a people who have always held learning as a cardinal virtue and the scholar as the most respected member of the community, it stressed its Jewish collections of books, and introduced them to the public.

The official opening of the Jews' share in the Massachusetts Tercentenary was launched with the observance of Jewish Book Week. The following notice appeared in the press:

"In New England, where colleges and academies have for many years offered their students courses in Hebrew and Aramaic, a strong scholarly interest in Hebrew studies may be found to this day among many educated people. The Boston Public Library is particularly rich in treasures relating to the Bible and Hebrew scholarship. Many of these priceless possessions will be displayed during Jewish Book Week, in the Main Exhibition Room of the Central Library. Special exhibitions of suitable books, photographs, periodicals, clippings, and ceremonial objects will be featured at all the branches that have Jewish communities. Books in Hebrew, Yiddish, English and other languages bearing upon Jewish life through the ages will be available. A selected list of 100 books of Jewish significance offered for circulation may be had upon request at either the Central Library or its branches."

Throughout the entire year the library continued to assemble and to make available all suitable material bearing upon the history of the Jew in America and the contemplated observance of the 275th anniversary of his settlement in America. In commemorating this event it again took the initiative and held an exhibit of the "Jew in Contemporary Art and Literature" which has perhaps never been equaled as a Jewish cultural interpretation and ensemble in America. The keynote of the exhibit was literature, grouped around a striking portrait of an old rabbi painted by Louis Novak, and augmented by the works of contemporary Jewish artists, ranging from pencil sketch to oil. Architecture was emphasized by architects' models of two of the leading congregations. The entire exhibition was characterized by good taste.

It is planned to have the Faneuil Hall observance of the 275th anniversary of the settlement of the Jew in America tell its own story of the occasion in a memorial volume which is to be issued in the near future. Suffice it to say that President Hoover sent the following greeting from the White House:

"The Jewish people have brought to this country both the treasures of their ancient tradition and the pioneer spirit which looks forward hopefully into the future. They have thrown themselves wholeheartedly into the task of the nation's uplifting. In every national crisis they have shown their loyalty and devotion to the home of their choice, and they have made valuable contributions in every worthwhile field of endeavor. I felicitate the gathering of those who celebrate the passing of the 275th year of the Jewish participation in American life."

When the new emphasis on Jewish festivals, and their revival and observance, again penetrated the life of the Jew and recolorated the social fabric of his life with a new dye, the Boston Public Library not only kept pace, but anticipated their cultural value by assembling picturesque, esthetic and informative exhibits which appealed to both Jew and non-Jew. Utilizing the idea of the importance of books and scholarship to a people who have always held learning as a cardinal virtue and the scholar as the most respected member of the community, it stressed its Jewish collections of books, and introduced them to the public.

The official opening of the Jews' share in the Massachusetts Tercentenary was launched with the observance of Jewish Book Week. The following notice appeared in the press:

"In New England, where colleges and academies have for many years offered their students courses in Hebrew and Aramaic, a strong scholarly interest in Hebrew studies may be found to this day among many educated people. The Boston Public Library is particularly rich in treasures relating to the Bible and Hebrew scholarship. Many of these priceless possessions will be displayed during Jewish Book Week, in the Main Exhibition Room of the Central Library. Special exhibitions of suitable books, photographs, periodicals, clippings, and ceremonial objects will be featured at all the branches that have Jewish communities. Books in Hebrew, Yiddish, English and other languages bearing upon Jewish life through the ages will be available. A selected list of 100 books of Jewish significance offered for circulation may be had upon request at either the Central Library or its branches."

Throughout the entire year the library continued to assemble and to make available all suitable material bearing upon the history of the Jew in America and the contemplated observance of the 275th anniversary of his settlement in America. In commemorating this event it again took the initiative and held an exhibit of the "Jew in Contemporary Art and Literature" which has perhaps never been equaled as a Jewish cultural interpretation and ensemble in America. The keynote of the exhibit was literature, grouped around a

"The Jew in Contemporary Art and Literature"—an exhibit in the Boston Public Library to mark the 275th anniversary of the settlement of the Jew in America. The architects' models on right and left are of "Temple Israel" and "Temple Mishkan Tefila."

RAREST BOOK IN PUBLIC LIBRARY

First Folio Volume of Shakspeare's Works, One of 14 Existing Now Valued at More Than $100,000

The most valuable book in the Boston Public Library is a first folio volume of Shakspeare's dramatic works. This book, despite its typographical and editorial imperfections and its lack of pictorial embellishments, is worth $100,000.

Very few of the hundreds who visit the library every day of the year get an opportunity to see this volume and it is seldom read. With the exception of a period of about two weeks each year the book, enclosed in a protecting case, reposes in a locked safe. Once a year it is brought out for public exhibition. During this period it rests beneath a glass case in the treasure room, with a guard standing over it.

ONLY 14 EXIST

In all probability there are many who view the book while it is on exhibition without discovering why it is valued so highly, for there is nothing unusual about the first folio volume as far as appearance goes. The binding is morocco. The paper, though of good quality, is not of the finest texture. There are typographical errors and capital letters frequently used without reason.

But the book is one of 14 copies in existence.

It was printed more than three centuries ago, in 1623, seven years after Shakspeare's death, when for the first time the comedies, tragedies and histories of the bard were collected and published in folio form. The book has been characterized as the greatest contribution made in a single volume to the secular literature of any age or country. It is regarded as the fountain source of knowledge of Shakspeare's complete achievement.

The Boston Public Library copy is one of the Barton collection. Thomas Pennington Barton, an American diplomat, bought the book from one Benjamin Rind, an Englishman, in 1855, for 119 pounds, about $500. When the diplomat died, in 1873, his entire collection, including the first folio Shakspeare, went to the local library. Since then the value of the volume has increased steadily and it is now worth $100,000.

Highly Valued Painting

In addition to its books, the Boston Public Library also boasts some valuable paintings. The most valuable is one of John Singleton Copley's, which hangs in the treasure room above the safe wherein the $100,000 volume lies. This painting, which depicts Charles the First, in the House of Commons demanding the five impeached members, has been in the library for 70 years.

The picture was bought by a group of distinguished citizens for $500 and presented to the trustees of the Public Library in 1859 on the condition "that it shall be forever preserved in some one of the rooms and never be removed from said library." The value of the painting at present can not be easily estimated, but it is known to be worth many times the original price.

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 29, 1931

Gordon Abbott and C. K. Bolton Resign

Former Gives Up Post as Library Trustee and Latter Leaves Commission on Historic Sites

Gordon Abbott, member of the Board of Library Trustees, and Charles K. Bolton, member of the Commission on the Marking of Historic Sites, today resigned their positions because of their health, and, in letters to Mayor Curley, each expressed his regret at being obliged to leave the city's service in these unpaid posts. The mayor expressed appreciation of their services.

Mr. Abbott told the mayor that nothing would give him greater pleasure than to continue his present duties for another term. "Your consideration for the Board of Trustees and the interest of the library has been perfect," Mr. Abbott said, "and our personal relationship has been such that I shall look back upon it with very great pleasure."

In reply Mayor Curley said: "The character of service which you rendered could not be purchased and the payment which I extend in the form of 'thanks' represents the highest reward which a grateful community can bestow for services of a high order given unselfishly."

Mr. Bolton, who is librarian of the Boston Athenaeum, informed the mayor he is soon to sail for Europe and felt that the need of a long rest should prevail against his desire to serve the city longer. In his place Mayor Curley appointed Charles B. Muggins, the architect.

THE BOSTON HERALD

SUNDAY, APRIL 26, 1931

DEFOE, 200 YEARS LATER

Today is the 200th anniversary of the death of Daniel Defoe. His position in literature is as undefined today as when he died. Bankrupt, disgraced, imprisoned at Newgate, a careless, hasty and often slipshod writer, a paid propagandist, a spy for the government—still he was the author of "Robinson Crusoe" and one of the chief founders of the English novel.

Millions of children the world over have read and reread the fascinating mixture of fact and fancy in "Robinson Crusoe." It has become their ideal book. No novel before or since has surpassed it in popularity. Just why this 60-year-old hack writer should suddenly have paused for two or three months in the spring of 1719 and written a novel which he entitled, "The Life and Strange Surprising Adventures of Robinson Crusoe," has never been satisfactorily explained. The success of this prompted him to write a sequel, "The Further Adventures of Robinson Crusoe." It is known to comparatively few. The third novel in the series, with the imposing title of "Serious Reflections During the Life and Surprising Adventures of Robinson Crusoe," is virtually unknown.

Although known today only as a novelist—and as the author only of a single novel, Defoe primarily was an untiring writer of pamphlets. He composed hundreds of them, and on almost every conceivable subject. Had he lived 200 years later he would have been a famous contributor to the columns of newspapers, and doubtless he would have been regarded as a common scold.

From 1689, when his first pamphlet appeared, until 1731, when he died, there was not a single question affecting the life of England on which Defoe did not express his opinion, and usually it was most violent. He was constantly in trouble. It mattered little which side he took. Often it was both sides. Of necessity much of his writing was anonymous. During his last twenty-five years he is supposed not to have signed more than half a dozen pamphlets. He left Newgate prison at middle age, with his business and his reputation wrecked. For the rest of his life he wrote frantically to support his large family. He possessed apparently endless information on almost any subject. His energy was inexhaustible. His writing was colorful and usually commonplace. Yet he was the forerunner of Richardson and Fielding, and Swift, Addison and Steele imitated him.

No library in the world possesses such a complete collection of Defoe's works as does the Boston Public Library. His books and pamphlets fill four large showcases. There are more than 400 of them, and with very few exceptions they are all first editions. Even a more amazing fact is that the library could arrange a second and possibly a third collection that would be almost exact replicas of the first. There are only four or five copies of many of Defoe's books and pamphlets, and of these the Boston library possesses two or three. In addition it has 300 other works which have been ascribed to Defoe at one time or another, or the authority of which still is doubtful. These also have their duplicates and variants, bringing the number of Defoe items in the library to 1600. This Trent collection is enough in itself to make a library notable.

THE PUBLIC LIBRARY

Bright, vaulted ceilings,
And windows fine and high,
Color and light and air,
My home!
Long oaken tables,
And walls all lined with books—
My books!

My family,
Drawn together by the bond of books—
Our books—
In our big, warm, cheerful home.

FRANCIS HOLBROOK PRITCHER.

Quiet people:
Some fine, scholarly and clean
And others, the rain drives in
From out the Square—
These, so prodigal of time,
Shabby, with tousled hair—
My family:

THE BOSTON HERALD

SATURDAY, APRIL 25, 1931

MAYOR REAPPOINTS SEVEN BOARD MEMBERS

W. P. Long to Head Park Commission Till 1934—Others Named

Reappointment of seven members of municipal boards and commissions was announced by Mayor Curley yesterday as follows:

William P. Long, chairman of the park commission until April 30, 1934; Gordon Abbott, trustee of the Public Library until April 30, 1934; Frederick W. Rugg, of Cambridge, trustee of the statistics department until April 30, 1935; Walter S. Gerry, member of the board of appeal until April 30, 1936; James R. Gibson, member of the board of zoning adjustment until April 30, 1936; Joseph P. Manning, trustee of the City Hospital until April 30, 1936, and James P. Balfe, trustee of the statistics department until April 30, 1936.

Boston Daily Globe

SATURDAY, APRIL 25, 1931

CURLEY APPROVES SOME REAPPOINTMENTS

Mayor Curley yesterday approved the following reappointments:

Gordon Abbott, trustee of Boston Public Library, for the term ending April 30, 1934; Frederick W. Rugg, trustee of Statistics Department, for term ending April 30, 1935; William P. Long, chairman of Park Commissioners, for term ending April 30, 1934; Walter S. Gerry, Board of Appeal, for term ending April 30, 1936; James R. Gibson, Board of Zoning Adjustment, for term ending April 30, 1936; Joseph P. Manning, trustee of Boston City Hospital, for term ending April 30, 1936; and James P. Balfe, trustee of Statistics Department, and chairman, for term ending April 30, 1936.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, APRIL 25, 1931

Curley Retains Well Known Heads

With the smiling comment that "they have all proved good boys," Mayor Curley announced the reappointment of several of the best known city officials whose present terms will expire on April 30. They are Gordon Abbott, trustee of the Boston Public Library, for the term ending April 30, 1934; Frederick W. Rugg, trustee of the Statistics Department, for term ending April 30, 1935; William P. Long, chairman of the Park Commission, for term ending April 30, 1934; Walter S. Gerry, Board of Appeal, for term ending April 30, 1936; James R. Gibson, Board of Zoning Adjustment, for term ending April 30, 1936; Joseph P. Manning, trustee of Boston City Hospital, for term ending April 30, 1936; and James P. Balfe, trustee of Statistics Department, and chairman, for term ending April 30, 1936.

NEW YORK TIMES, SUNDAY, MAY 3, 1931.

A FIRST FOLIO SHAKESPEARE.

This Book, Valued at $100,000, Is One of Fourteen Now in Existence and Is Owned by the Boston Public Library. It Is One of the First Folio Volumes of Shakespeare's Works, and Is Brought Out Once a Year for Public Display. It Was Printed in 1623. Harriet Swift, Its Custodian, Is Shown With the Volume, Which Is Steadily Increasing in Value.

HERE'S ONE TO HAND TO OPTIMIST

Just Try to Read All Newspapers at Library

The next time that one of those effervescent, dynamic and ebullient persons slaps you on the back when you are in the doldrums and tells you that nothing in this world is impossible, hand him this one.

"Go up to the newspaper room on the first floor of the Boston Public Library in Copley Square and in one week read all the newspapers received there."

233 ON FILE

If he is as game as he is peppy and accepts your offer, you win. For there are 233 newspapers on file at the Public Library. There are 182 American newspapers and 51 foreign, of that number 118 are American daily newspapers and 35 are foreign.

On file there is at least one newspaper from each State in the United States and one from practically every country of any size in the world. One of these comes all the way from Australia, N. Z., and takes two weeks to get to Boston. There is a newspaper from Kobe, Japan, one from Shanghai, China, one from Alexandria, Egypt, one from Cape Town, South Africa and one from Bombay, India.

Of all the foreign countries England has the most newspapers on file, 11 in number, of which seven are from London. There are five from Ireland and two from Scotland, four from France, four from Germany, three from Italy, two from Sweden, three from Australia, and one from each of the following: Canada, Spain, Portugal, Spain, Bermuda and two from Switzerland.

Outside of the Boston papers, New York papers are in the greatest demand. Before the New York World was sold it was in greatest demand of all the New York newspapers, with the Times running second. The London Times is in greatest demand among the foreign newspapers.

Four copies of all Boston newspapers are in service. Copies of all Boston newspapers are saved and bound and stored in the file rooms. All other newspapers are held for two weeks after the date they are received. If anyone for a cent and people often do for some special bit of information in them, otherwise they are destroyed.

There are some great newspaper fans. Some of them visit the newspaper room daily and read. Women come and stay all day. The women read chiefly the Boston papers, but the men folks roam about the file rooms.

Boston Daily Globe

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 29, 1931

LIBRARY INSTITUTE OPENS CONFERENCE AT HYANNIS

HYANNIS, April 28—Some 50 delegates from all parts of the State are attending the annual library institute conducted at the State Normal School here by the State Division of Public Libraries.

The sessions opened today with classes planned by Mrs. Ruth McQuarrie, Mrs. Robert Selfe, Miss E. Louise Jones and Miss Edna Phillips, all of the State division.

This afternoon, Miss Alice M. Jordan, children's librarian of the Boston Public Library, and John J. Cronan of Boston, both spoke.

Mrs. Dorothy G. Wayman of Falmouth, who passed some years in Japan, spoke tonight on "Things Japanese."

Lectures by librarian Leo R. Etzkorn of Fall River and Miss Avis M. Pillsbury of the Millicent Library at Fair Haven will be given tomorrow.

ALDRICH NAMED MEMBER OF BOSTON ART COMMISSION

William T. Aldrich, 30 Newbury st., was named yesterday by Mayor Curley for a five-year term as a member of the Boston Art Commission. Mr. Aldrich's name was one of three submitted by the trustees of the Boston Public Library.

THE LIBRARIAN

FROM the tip of East Boston where by night and day airships hum overhead, to the west end of Fenway from the shadow of Bunker Hill Monument on the north to the South, the thirty-two branches of Boston's Book Tree are operating with the Boston committee of Better Homes in America to make "Better Homes Week in America," April 26 to May 2, a success.

Schools have contributed projects, compositions and posters, and stores have lent furniture, settees, houses, associations and clubs have sent in examples of home industries, woven objects, embroidered linens, and handwoven fabrics. Librarians have busily mounted two-foot standards when the janitor was not to be found, hanging curtains. They have done extensive research to discover every readable book in print which has to do with making better homes, and best of all, they are doing it so popular in their book-twa districts. "Never before," said one of these fifty-two librarians, "has our branch felt itself so much a part of the community. Every one has wanted to do something for us."

In the adult's room of the North End branch a bust of Dante looks down upon a dainty luncheon table set with pink glass dishes and embellished with fetching paper decorations. Clearly a proper library exhibit, for on a nearby of this are from Jordan Marsh Company. The display comprises a bedroom of maple in early American style, a living room and a modern kitchenette, and is under the supervision of Miss Fannie Goldstein, librarian.

West would Ray, Charles Lowell and Dr. Evans Bartol, former clergyman of the West church, think of such an exhibition?" I questioned.

"That would doubtless think," replied the librarian, "that while the building is for the most part unchanged the congregation is no longer composed of perfect Unitarians of one race and one language, but of men, women and children from many countries, speaking many tongues, who have come here to make homes and who love anything which gives them home thoughts in an understandable language. Dr. Bartol's grand-daughter was so interested in the living room that she came down from Beacon Hill to bring us runners for the tables and a handsome plan for the window sill. Everybody has helped," she went on, "the Beacon Hill Garden Club has brought us a window box filled with flowers."

"The Social Service agencies have contributed articles made from wood, cloth and clay. The retail stores have loaned us anything we asked for, and did you ever see anything more interesting than this model of a boy's room made by the boys of the West End House?"

I agreed with the librarian that the boy's room is a most naive and revealing confession of a real boy's dream of what a real boy's room should be. No modern and ready cover appears on the bed in this room but a fine dainty Project made by school children, one of many exhibits on display.

How the West End Branch of the Boston Public Library Combines the Old with the New to Celebrate Better Homes Week in America, April 26 to May 2 shelf are the books which tell how to set a table, how to cook a luncheon and how to serve it attractively for a very modest sum.

At East Boston in the reference alcove 123 women were seen neatly packed into the space intended for four dozen readers. Behind them, where the reference books line the shelves, was a white gas stove, a white sink and a white kitchen cabinet. Before them stood a lecturer talking about calories, proteins, carbohydrates and the family market basket. Two librarians remarked, with a beaming smile: "Not a single book on homemaking is left on our shelves. They are all in circulation."

At Fellowes Athenaeum is a miniature house which I challenge anyone, old or young, to see and not want to play with at once. Two rooms and a bath room are furnished as one furnishes dream houses, and everything works as it should work in real life, doors open without creaking, the thickest of drawers pull out as if on oiled bearings, bed covers are just the right size to tuck in with box like neatness. "Best of all," said the librarian, "we have dozens of other chairs, tables, cupboards, bookshelves, pictures for the walls and more for the floors, and no mention little cats, dogs, and pink-scented mice with white silk tails for innocent interest."

Every day at 4 P. M. the noise goes on exhibition and the rooms are near the benefit of an audience of wondering children whose faces of wonder a house might look like are being drawn. This ravishing bit of a dream ship was loaned by the "The Needle Shop Lady."

This large and comfortable book is one of the week library is well advertised in the department stores of the city where, as a prominent feature of its model living-rooms window display, a large book case stocked with a carefully selected with ruffled valance. On the headboard is an electric lamp so he can read himself to sleep. On the bureau the only object is a very small empty ball. On the walls are Yale, Dartmouth and Princeton banners and in the middle of the floor is one large ball pin with red, red missing, which omission produces the good lighter.

The compositions on "How to Make the Home Better" have sufficient quotable material to fill a column. One gem from the collection reads as follows:

"Peace and tranquility in the home is very important. If a person entered a home where everything and everyone is in a state of confusion everyone arguing at the top of his lungs trying to outdo the rest. The visitor would feel like clapping his hands to his ears to shut out the din. But if he entered a quiet, cheerful home where all the children obeyed their parents the visitor would sigh with relief and he would be thankful for the contrast. It is everybody's duty to act and help others to act in such a way that people would smile gladly when invited to visit. For a person library and tired a quiet home with of daily needs is a blessing. If he knows he is coming home to noise he would rather eat outside and gradually the family drifts apart. Help to make your home pleasant so that your family will stay at home."

Brief as these notes are they have been collected how near to the heart of the community is the public library and how much a part of each home it aims to be and is.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, MAY 2, 1931

Posters for Jewish Week.

Posters from Hecht Neighborhood House and books by and about Jews, will go on view Monday in the exhibition room at the Boston Public Library, to remain through May 10 in observance of Jewish Book Week.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

MAY 4, 1931

Music

Gordon String Quartet

Yesterday afternoon in the South End Branch of the Boston Public Library, The Gordon String Quartet (Jacques Gordon and Edwin Ideler, violins, Josef Vieland, viola, and Nathaniel Benditky, cello) gave the first of a double series of concerts sponsored by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, each program of which will be presented in the afternoon of next

The President's Pledge

"The Family is the unit of American life and the Home is the sanctuary of moral inspiration and of American spirit."

"The true conception of America is not a country of one hundred and ten million people, but a nation of twenty-three million families, living in twenty-three million homes."

"I pledge my services to these homes."

PRESIDENT HERBERT HOOVER
Honorary Chairman of the Board of Directors
Better Homes in America

"We have to count on individual homes to do their share, if children are to be healthy, and grow up well fitted to take their places as men and women in our social and economic life. With our growing appreciation of beauty, the American home can be raised to higher levels than ever before."

DR. RAY LYMAN WILBUR
President, Better Homes in America

THE

JEWISH BOOK WEEK EXERCISES

Exercises in observance of Jewish Book Week will be held in the lecture hall of the Public Library at 8 o'clock. Dr. Alvin Karpis is chairman of the program. The speakers will be: Dr. D. Belden, director of the Public Library; Dr. Alvin Karpis, chairman of the program; and Dr. D. Belden, director of the Public Library.

Poetry and Religion

By WILLIAM H. BODDY

Pastor, First Presbyterian Church
Chicago, Illinois.

Pastors Courtesy, Boston Library Trustees

PASTORAL POETRY

Pastors Courtesy, Boston Library Trustees

EPIC POETRY

PROGRAM

MONDAY, APRIL 27, 1931

BEACON HILL AND BACK BAY UNIT

Mrs. Emma Tobin, Chairman.

1.00 P. M.

LUNCHEON, Perkins Hall, 264 Boylston St., Boston.

Mrs. Eva Whiting White, Presiding.

"WHAT IS TO BE THE FUTURE OF BOSTON AS A PLACE IN WHICH TO LIVE?"

Illustrated lecture.

Speakers:

Mr. ROBERT WHITTEN

President, American Institute of City Planning.

Miss ELIZABETH HERRICK

Secretary, Planning Board, City of Boston.

Under the auspices of the Women's Educational and Industrial Union.

Tickets $1.00. Call KEN more 5651, before April 22, 1931.

BOSTON HOME INFORMATION CENTER

87 Beacon St., Boston.

2.30 P. M.

"WHICH WALL PAPER AND WHY?"

Suggesting color schemes for spring redecorating.

Mrs. CAROLYN DAWSON

Interior Decorating Consultant, Henry Bosch Company.

TEA.

BOSTON HOME INFORMATION CENTER

87 Beacon St., Boston.

8.00 P. M.

"WHAT A NEW HOME OWNER SHOULD KNOW."

MR. WILLIAM W. DRENNAN

Member, American Institute of Architects.

Consulting Architect, American City Magazine.

BRIGHTON UNIT

Mrs. THOMAS McMAHON, Chairman.

8.00 P. M.

PUBLIC LIBRARY, Fenway Branch, 100 Brooks St., Brighton.

"THE SIGNIFICANCE OF HOME OWNERSHIP IN A PERIOD OF DEPRESSION."

Speaker—Dr. LUCILE EAVES, Director, Research Department

Women's Educational and Industrial Union.

"EXPERIENCES IN MAKING A LIVABLE HOME AT A MINIMUM COST."

Miss FREDY PECK and Miss RUTH KOTERLING

Lectures in Research Department

Women's Educational and Industrial Union.

(All expenses were met by these two workers at a cost of $7.35 per week in this experiment carried on at 42 Genesee St., Boston.)

CHARLESTOWN UNIT

Miss LEONA MULLISE, Chairman.

8.00 P. M.

HEALTH UNIT, 12 Elm St., Charlestown.

"HEALTH AND THE HOME."

Speaker

Dr. CHARLES WILINSKY, Deputy Health Commissioner

Boston Health Department.

This program will have many special features.

BETTER HOMES COMMITTEE is assisted by the nurses at the HEALTH UNIT.

DORCHESTER UNIT

Miss ANN BARRY, Chairman.

8.00 P. M.

DORCHESTER WOMAN'S CLUB HOUSE, Center Street.

"THE SANCTITY OF THE HOME."

[ 4 ]

How the West End Branch of the Boston Public Library Combines the Old with the New to Celebrate Better Homes Week in America, April 26 to May 2

shell are the books which tell how to set a table, how to cook a luncheon and how to serve it attractively for a very modest sum.

At East Boston in the reference alcove 123 women were seen neatly packed into the space intended for four dozen readers. Behind them, where the reference books of the shelves, was a white gas stove, a white sink and a white kitchen cabinet. Before them stood a lecturer talking about calories, proteins, carbohydrates and the family market basket. The librarian remarked, with a beaming smile, "Not a single book on homemaking is left on our shelves. They are all in circulation."

At Fellowes Athenaeum is a miniature house which I challenge anyone, old or young, to see and not want to play with at once. Two rooms and a bath room are furnished as one furnishes dream houses and everything works as it should work in real life, doors open without creaking, the thinnest of drawers pull out as if on oiled bearings, bed covers are just the right size to tuck in with the nicest of neatness. "Best of all," said the librarian, "we have dozens of other chairs, tables, cupboards, bedsteads, pictures for the walls and mats for the floors, not to mention little cats, dogs, and pink-eyed mice with white silk tails for human interest."

Every day at 4 P. M. the house goes on exhibition and the rooms are rearranged in styles of different periods for the benefit of an audience of wide-eyed, wondering children whose ideas of what a house might look like are being daily revised. This ravishing bit of craftsmanship was loaned by the "Thread and Needle Shop Lady."

The large and comfortable book room of the real library is well advertised in one of the department stores of the district where, as a prominent feature of its model living-room window display, is a large book case stocked with a carefully selected collection of books labelled "Ask for these books at the Fellowes Athenaeum Branch of the Boston Public Library, corner of Millmont street and Lambert avenue."

At the Mt. Pleasant Branch two neighboring furniture stores and the Edison Company have provided furniture and lamps for a home library in which, an unlabelled exhibit, a very contented young man had seated himself in the softest and most reposeful chair and was reading so absorbedly that he never raised his eyes to see who was exhibiting over comfortable chairs and adjustable lamps in a public library.

West Roxbury Branch deserves a prize for its well kept lawns and lovely garden stocked with plants contributed from many a neighboring estate. The librarian is never too busy to show any one the wonders of this exhibition which begins with the first breath of spring and lasts until snow covers the ground. This branch, by the way, has the most complete collection of garden books in the Branch System.

If you've never made a dish garden, you will after looking at the wee gardens in the window of Kipstein Branch and if you have a real out-of-doors garden do climb the three flights to the top floor and get a book on how to grow iris, roses, dahlias, chrysanthemums, annuals, perennials or wild flowers and incidentally how to fertilize the soil and how to get rid of insect pests.

If the West Roxbury Branch deserves a prize for exterior attractions, the West End Branch, at the foot of Beacon Hill, deserves a prize for interior decorations. Occupying the most conspicuous place is a project from a neighboring school which tells a story of the evolution of the home in a number of man's dwelling and ends with a very modern living room. At the first it seemed a bit incongruous to find a fully furnished life-size bedroom and living room in the corner of the fine and dignified interior of this library. The furniture and accessories boarded with a tiled valance. On the board is an electric lamp so he can read himself to sleep. On the bureau the only object is a very small comb. Beside the stand are a baseball bat and a bat. On the walls are Yale, Dartmouth and Princeton banners and in the middle of the floor is one large ball pin with fine the shelves, was a white gas stove, a white sink and a white kitchen cabinet. Before them stood a lecturer talking about calories, proteins, carbohydrates and the family market basket. The librarian remarked, with a beaming smile, "Not a single book on homemaking is left on our shelves. They are all in circulation."

The compositions on "How to Make the Home Better" have sufficient quota of material to fill a column. One item from the collection to be as follows: "Peace and tranquillity in the home is very important. If a person entered a home where everything and everyone is in a state of confusion everyone arguing with everyone else, someone screaming at the top of his lungs, trying to quiet the rest. The visitor would feel like clapping his hands to his ears to shut out the din. But if he entered a quiet, peaceful home where all the children played their parents and visitors would sigh with relief and he would be thankful for the contrast. It is everybody's duty to act and help others to act in such a way that people would smile gladly when invited to visit. To a person library and lived a quiet home with orderly meals is a blessing. If he knows he is coming home to noise he would rather eat outside and gradually the family units apart. Help to make your home pleasant so that your family will stay at home."

Brief as these notes are they have perhaps indicated how near to the heart of a community is its public library and how much a part of each home it aims to be and is.

THE BOSTON HERALD

MONDAY, MAY 4, 1931

JEWISH BOOK WEEK EXERCISES PLANNED

Exercises in observance of Jewish book week will be held in the main lecture hall of the Public Library this evening at 8 o'clock. Dr. Albert Ehrenfeld is chairman of the program.

The speakers will be: Dr. Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Public Library on "Jewish Literary Treasure in the Boston Public Library"; Rabbi Jacob

Sonderling of the Temple Beth Israel, Providence, on "Jewish Literary Backgrounds"; Henry P. Schatzman, Ph.D., on "The Need for Better Jewish Books"; Rabbi Louis M. Epstein of the Temple Kehillath Israel, Brookline on "National Expression in Jewish Literature"; Miriam Franc Skirball, Ph.D., on "The Jewish Woman in Literature"; Dr. M. Friedman, L.L.B., on "Jewish Book Collecting"; and Rabbi Harry Levin of Temple Israel, Boston, on "The Jewish Current Literature."

have been known to fame

BETTER HOMES IN AMERICA
BOSTON COMMITTEE

BETTER HOMES WEEK

April 26 to May 2, 1931

HON. RAY LYMAN WILBUR
President, Better Homes in America
MRS. JAMES J. STORROW
Chairman, Massachusetts Better Homes Committee
MISS MARY E. DRISCOLL
Chairman, Boston Better Homes Committee
87 Beacon St., Boston
May 4, 1931

Special Jewish Book Week Program to Be Held On Monday

Exercises in Observance of Annual Jewish Book Week, May 3-9, at Public Library

Group of Prominent Educators to Discuss Various Phases of the Jew In Literature—Radio Broadcast Feature Sunday

Dr. Albert Ehrenfried, Chairman Boston Committee
(From Painting by Jacob Bander)

Let Us Become Familiar With Jewish Books

Lag B'Omer, often referred to as the Scholar's Festival—the holiday marking the episodes in Jewish history in which our people suffered bitter persecutions and massacres, and commemorating, in particular, the Jews' unsuccessful struggle for independence and freedom against Rome, under the leadership of Bar Kochba and Rabbi Akiba—seems an appropriate time for the People of the Book to revive an interest in Jewish literature.

Somewhat, in our day, we seem to be losing our traditional attachment for the printed word. There are Jewish homes where even the Bible and a set of prayer books are not to be found, to say the least of books by Jews, for Jews, and about Jews. Compare this situation with the days of the Ghetto, when a Jewish home without a collection of representative books was unthinkable.

Judaism is a philosophy of learning and knowledge. No one can come to understand and appreciate the Jew and his faith and his beliefs without careful, devoted study.

Let us, then, popularize the Jewish book. Let us become acquainted with the Jewish literature available today in the English language. Let us read Jewish books and let us initiate ourselves during the week especially dedicated to this purpose. In another section of this issue will be found a particularly fine selection of recent books of Jewish character and content covering a wide range of topics, such as fiction, biography, history and travel, religion and philosophy, et cetera. Here is a nucleus for the Jewish book shelf, if one has not already been started!

WHY NOT BEGIN NOW?

A special evening devoted to a program on "The Jew In Literature" in connection with Jewish Book Week, being observed from May 3 through May 9 throughout the country, has been planned by the Boston Jewish Book Week Committee for Monday evening, May 4, to take place in the main Lecture Hall of the Boston Public Library at 8 o'clock.

Every phase of Jewish literature will be covered in talks by the following personalities, who are prominent in the community: Dr. Charles F. D. Bebb, Lit. D., director of the Boston Public Library, whose subject will be "Some Jewish Books in the Boston Public Library"; Rabbi Jacob Sonderling of Temple Beth Israel, Providence, R. I., who will discuss "Jewish Literary Backgrounds"; Dr. Henry T. Schmittkind, who will deal with "The Need for Better Jewish Books"; Rabbi Louis M. Epstein of Temple Kehillath Israel, Brookline, whose topic will be "National Expression in Jewish Literature"; Dr. Miriam Frank Skirball, who will talk on "The Jewish Woman in Literature"; Lee M. Friedman, who will discuss "Jewish Book Collecting"; and Rabbi Harry Levi of Temple Israel, who will take "The Jew in Current Literature" for his subject.

A musical program will feature Eli Kassman in a group of piano solos. Dr. Albert Ehrenfried, who is chairman of the Boston committee, will preside throughout the exercises.

The public is cordially invited to attend this program, and thus influence a revival of interest in Jewish books. Emphasis on Jewish literature is bound to arouse more thought, and to cultivate a better racial consciousness.

RADIO PROGRAM

As part of the Jewish Book Week observance in this city will be featured a radio broadcast from Station WBZ-WBZA on Sunday afternoon from 3:10 to 3:45 o'clock. Talks will be given by Fanny Goldstein and Alexander Brin, and the musical program will feature the Boston Jewish Choral Society directed by Professor S. Braslavsky.

ADVOCATE

ZIONIST FORUM

Conducted by the Palestine Society of Boston

For the past few months there have appeared in this Forum a series of weekly articles and letters dealing with a wide variety of Zionist problems. Undoubtedly the readers of the Forum have their own ideas and opinions regarding the subject matters dealt with. In some cases, their opinions must differ from those expressed in the articles that appear herein.

We hope that our readers will not hesitate to write concerning their reactions to the articles which we print. We will be happy to publish such letters, which should be addressed to the Zionist Forum, care of The Jewish Advocate, 251 Causeway street, Boston.

THE EDITOR.

Zionist Forum Editor:

In your column of Friday, April 17, entitled "Young Blood," the writer, Robert Morrison, asks for the solution to the old problem—the participation of youth in Zionist activities. In answer, I will quote a translation from a letter that appeared in the Jewish "Day" sometime ago, signed by Abraham Friedman of New York.

The editorial in the "Day" asked the same question that Mr. Morrison asks, and Mr. Friedman's answer follows:

"The writer of the editorial is justified in his question, but the fault lies entirely with our responsible Zionist institutions. They neglect and ignore certain Jewish youth organizations which do exist but could develop, if only they were supported materially and morally by the older Zionists. I mean in particular, such an organization as the Hashomer Hatzair with branches in New York, Boston, Detroit and other Jewish centers in the United States and Canada.

"By chance, I happened to come into contact with their organization and I was amazed at the wonderful work performed by them. I also learned that they get absolutely no assistance at all from any Zionist institution. And in spite of that, are now organizing and developing new branches, established a Halutzim training farm, conduct propaganda in schools and high schools and in higher Hebrew institutions—their educational work is simply astounding. And where are the older Zionists to help them?

"I am assured that this youth organization is partaking in active Zionist work, such as J. N. F. and Palestine labor campaigns.

"Why condemn the youth for not being close to us, when the youth that is close, is entirely ignored by the older Zionists?

(Signed) "Abraham Friedman." What is the use of organizing more unsuccessful organizations when we have Avukah and Young Judea? Why not concentrate our energy to strengthen the ranks of those who could succeed more rapidly by uniting all youth organizations with Zionist tendencies and working under the wing of a real Zionist organization that should comprise all the Jewish elements. Let there be less politics in the Zionist ranks, more deeds and less speeches and we may then be successful!

Very truly yours,
IRVING AXELROD.

Brotherhood Ohabei Shalom Meeting Well Attended

About 225 guests and members of the Brotherhood Ohabei Shalom attended its meeting last Tuesday, April 28, to hear Professor David

D. Vaughan of Boston University discuss "What Is An American?" Professor Vaughan outlined the six American ideals: Truth, Freedom, Justice, Equality, Fraternity and Service. For more than an hour he gave an interesting and instructive outline of each phase of ideals and stressed the point that a good American is a state of mind more than a matter of birth.

Rabbi Samuel J. Abrams in the series of monthly talks discussed "Jews and Cremation." He explained the attitude of the ancient Egyptians, the ancient Persians, the ancient Greeks, and the Jewish view. He stressed that while there is nothing against cremation, tradition among Jews is for burial. He pointed out that in times of epidemics cremation was resorted to. He made it clear, however, that burial or cremation was a matter of personal choice.

Rabbi Abrams also discussed "Who Is Adolph Hitler," and told something of the history and plans of this anti-Semite who is causing so much ill-will in Germany.

Rabbi Abrams announced that next year will mark 90 years of existence for Temple Ohabei Shalom, the oldest Jewish congregation in Massachusetts, and also will mark 25 years of service by John Nathan as president of the Temple.

The evening was designated as "John Nathan Night" in honor of his 70th birthday celebrated on April 16. The excellent qualities of John Nathan were extolled by the president, Harold Lipkin, who presented Mr. Nathan with flowers as an expression of good will by the Brotherhood members.

Herman Geist, chairman of the membership committee, announced that as a result of the recent drive the present membership is nearly 600. He presented numerous gifts to the prize winners. Community singing was under the leadership of Park Nathan. Greetings to the new members were extended by Leonard Goldberg, chairman of the Religious Extension Committee, and felicitations to the guests were conveyed by Harold M. Linsky, financial secretary.

Friday, May 1, 1931

Among the special guests present were Samuel S. Eisenberg, president of Brotherhood Beth El of Chelsea, and Jack Werlin, representing the president of the Brotherhood of Nightingale Street Synagogue, Dorchester.

Music Group T. B. Sanatorium Active

The music group of the Jewish Tuberculosis Sanatorium of Massachusetts spent an enjoyable evening at the home of the Kessler sisters in Chelsea. Vera I. Baron, chairman of this group, announced the program.

Josef Ryzman, well known teacher of pianoforte, accompanist and radio performer, favored the group with a reading of Mendelssohn's life. To add color to his talk Mr. Ryzman played several of the composer's numbers with a great deal of beauty of tone, expression, and technique. Among the compositions which he played were: Scherzo and Rondo Capriccioso. As an encore, Mr. Ryzman played a Prelude by Scriabine.

Harry Kriedberg gave several violin selections, and other members also entertained.

The music group will sponsor a composer's contest on May 14 at the National Institute, 190 Beacon street, Boston. The contestants will read the life of the composer and illustrate his music instrumentally or vocally, and the winner will be awarded with a bust of a famous composer. The judges will be Professor Lacock of the Boston School of Expression and Dramatic Art; Hans Ebel, well known in the music world, and Mischa Tulin, pianist and Theresmin artist.

The next musicale will be held on May 12, at the home of Mrs. Anne Stone, 36 Maple street, Roxbury.

Anyone desiring information concerning this particular group may communicate with the secretary, Lillian Cohen, at Geneva 7472.

A wonderful Radio Program every Sunday at 12.30 on Station WNAC
Given by the BLUE AND WHITE FRONT

NATIONAL STORES
VALUE SERVICE

Prices effective Week of May 2nd to 8th

Special Jewish Book
Friday, May 1, 1931

It has been the difficult task of scholars from time immemorial to endeavor to sum up the Jew's contribution to the world's civilization. The culture of the Jew is bound up with all antiquity, and the world's civilization is largely founded upon its ethics and ideals. From the earliest historical period Israel has given to humanity the Bible, the finest achievement in literature, which still remains without a peer.

The Jews have been known through the ages as the "People of the Book." The Torah has been called the "Fountain of Life." The Bible must justly be called the National Hebrew Library. It is, in truth, a literary mosaic. It represents all forms of literature, poetry and prose.

It is highly significant that this primitive people, the Jews, formulated in the Bible a code of moral laws which has ruled the world. The Bible has been called "The Magna Carta of the poor and oppressed," it is the most democratic book in the world. It has served as a pattern to all mankind. A world epic, inspiring, educational, whose cultural influences are incalculable in the history of the world.

It is, therefore, very fitting that the Jews alone of all peoples should have a "Scholars' Festival." The genius of our people has always expressed itself in the writing and the love of books. A people is known by its literature. If Judaism in this country has lost some of its power of appeal, it is largely due to the fact that we have ceased to give proper emphasis to the power of the book. Jewish Book Week, which was first observed in 1927, has now become a fixed annual event. It will be observed this year during the week of May 3 to 9.

It is highly significant of the modern renaissance movement in America that Lag B'Omer has been selected for broadcasting of this ideal of literature. This holiday which has often been referred to in history as the "Scholars' Festival" has now been chosen as an appropriate time to revive a nation's latent literary spirit, to stimulate its interest in the book, and especially in such books as are of a Jewish character of significance, and which are available in English.

Let Us
Familiarize Jewish people so commemorate struggle of under the seems an revive an

Some
ational at homes who not to be f
and about the Ghetto representa

Judaism
No one can his faith a Let us
come acqu
in the Eng us initiate to this pu
found a pa character a as fiction, et shelf, if or
WHY

A Good Book Important

As a character builder in the home there is nothing to compare with a good book. As a matter of fact it has been said that no man has a right to bring up children in a home where there are no books. Let us, then, at this special time of Jewish Book Week, stress the importance of a Jewish bookshelf in every Jewish home, and the importance of selected organized reading as an aid to culture and knowledge.

An invaluable educational and cultural contact is thus established through literature with the past, the present and the future. We must face the problem today, that many of our Jews are Jewish only by birth—and that there is very little else about them that is racially suggestive. It is necessary to stir the attitude of our youth especially to a knowledge of the fact that history is life, and that life is history. Not only is Judaism a question of the remote Bible days and factual history, but Jews today continue to make history. It is necessary to orientate, to evaluate, and to discriminate between such facts as are pertinent to the welfare of the race, and then to interpret these facts so that they will enrich the mental content, and lend a philosophic approach to life with a conscious Jewish-mindedness that will succeed in tying up the past with the future.

An emphasis on Jewish literature is bound to arouse more thought and vivid interest, and also to cultivate a better racial consciousness, which in the last analysis is a very essential asset to the Jew. In addition to all this a good

It is hoped that this list may serve the reader both as a stimulus to a happy, useful purpose, and as guide-posts to other and more varied avenues of Jewish literature and knowledge.

Fiction

ASCH, SHOLOM—"The Mother." New York, Liveright, 1930, $2.50. (Translated from the Yiddish by Nathan Asch.)

This is the first selection of the newly formed Jewish Book of the Month Club recently organized in America. Sholom Asch is one of the great contemporary Yiddish writers who understands the psychology of the Jewish soul. The story is a translation from the Yiddish, and aims to delineate the spirit of Universal Motherhood. The action shifts from a Russian town to the East Side of New York.

BEAUMONT, WILLIAM L.—"Ben Ezra or The Midnight Cry." Boston, Stratford, 1930, $2.50.

The book is intended as a sequel to the old romance, "Ben Hur." It is replete with Scripture quotations, and references to living customs and manners, but chistological in motive. The setting in modern New York and Palestine.

BLOCH, JEAN-RICHARD—"The Jew and Company." New York, Simon & Schuster, 1929, $3.00. (Translated by C. K. Scott-Moncrief.) The story of the Simlers, a family of Jewish weavers who form one solid racial unit. Presents excellent characterization coupled with a strong conflict between the individual and industrialism.

BERCOVICI, KONRAD—"For A Song." New York, Dodd, Mead, 1931, $2.50.

The story of a young Italian-American girl. The action takes place in New York and in Italy against a background of wild passions and emotions. The book contains several Jewish characters.

BRING, MYRON—"Wide Open Town." New York, Farrar and Rinehart, 1931, $2.50.

This book by the author of "Singerman" shows some literary restraint and polish. It is the story of life in a western mining town when men's morals were loose and blood ran hot.

COHEN, HYMAN and LESTER—"Aaron Traum." New York, Liveright, 1930, $2.50.

A joint novel by father and son of a poor Jewish immigrant in America who after many hardships and struggles conquers circumstances and attains a measure of beauty in life.

ELLSBERG, COMMANDER EDWARD—"Pig-Boats." New York, Dodd, 1931, $1.85.

A swift-moving tale of the under-seas exploits of the pig-boats during the World War. It is a highly dramatic story of adventure and heroism.

EHRENBURG, ILYA—"The Love of Jeanne Ney Gard." City, Doubleday, 1930, $2.50.

A powerful novel by a Russian Jew which presents in a penetrating and soul-stirring manner the tragedy of love between a French girl and her Bolshevik lover.

FERBER, EDNA—"Cimarron." Garden City, Doubleday, 1930, $2.50.

An old-fashioned chronicle of life in Oklahoma from the days of the "run" through the rich days of oil. A picture of a phase of American history.

FERBER, NAT—"Spawn." New York, Farrar & Rinehart, 1930, $2.50.

A story of depravity and degeneration emphasizing sordidness, ignorance and immorality in a group of people affected by in-breeding.

FEUCHTWANGER, LEON—"Success." New York, Viking, 1930, $3.00.

A problem story dealing with German politics and character by the author of "Power," appears to embody in one volume a criticism of the human race as typified by Bavarian standards; and the fulfillment of the dream of the woman

Jewish Books of Especial Significance During the Week Set Aside for This Purpose --- May 3 to 9

A Selected List of Recent Books of Jewish Character and Content Compiled by Librarian of the West End Branch, Boston Public Library
By FANNY GOLDSTEIN

GUTTMAN, BERNHARD—"Ambition." New York, Harper, 1930, $2.50. (Translated by Ludwig Lewisohn.)

The $2,500 German prize novel, which presents an historical picture of all Europe, with its secret alliances and court intrigues.

HURST, FANNIE—"Back Street." New York, Cosmopolitan, 1931, $2.50.

Portrays in vivid realistic detail the story of Ray Schmidt and her unworthy Jewish lover Walter Saxel. In telling the story of a woman who loved if not too wisely, then too well, Miss Hurst has ably contrasted feminine steadfastness and loyalty with the selfish weaknesses of the male. The book is not so much a plea for morality as it is an indictment of masculine cruelty in the name of love, and the well known theory that the "woman always pays," and is doomed to walk in the back streets of life.

JABOTINSKY, VLADIMIR (Alta-Jena, pseud.)—"Judge and Fool." New York, Liveright, 1930, $2.50. (Translated from German by Cyrus Brooks.)

A colorful picture against a convincing background of a brutal disolute age when life was cheap and passions unnumbered. Samson's and character of Judge in Dan and Fool in Philistia does not add to the wholesome of the narrative, but does present a vivid impression of a heroic figure not untouched by pathos.

KOMROFF, MANUEL—"Coronet." New York, Coward-McCann, 1930, $3.00.

A magnificent romantic pageant. Contrasts vividly the life of a man in Europe during four centuries and gives one of the finest descriptions of Napoleon's retreat from Moscow to be found anywhere.

KOMROFF, MANUEL—"Two Thieves." New York, Coward-McCann, 1931, $2.50.

An historical novel which presents a picture of the Holy Land at the time of Christ and tells the story of the superknaves, a Jew and Mohammedan, who were crucified with him at Calvary.

LEVIN, MEYER—"Yehuda," Jonathan Cape & Harrison Smith, 1931, $2.50.

Portrays the work of the Chalmutzim in Palestine. Permeated with modern Judaism and the spirit of Zionism.

LEWISOHN, LUDWIG—"Last Days of Shylock." New York, Harper, 1930.

"The Last Days of Shylock" reveals Ludwig Lewisohn, a Jew, hurt in his inmost soul seeking comfort in the fact that at last he steps forth from the trial scene in the Court of Venice, Lewisohn recreates those turbulent times in a vivid narrative, from there tying it up with Jewish history. Shylock becomes a mediated by religious zeal and patriotism. The book is a piece of pure literature in narrative form, during its originality and certain to prove popular.

LEWISOHN, LUDWIG—"Stephen Escott." New York, Harper, 1930, $2.50.

A vibrant novel of marriage, penetrating and analytical, dealing almost entirely with sex, the tendency of reproduction, the man and the erotic life of modern man and woman. Lewisohn points out that the desire for sex emancipation is the real of the woman has included here, won the $10 Henry Memorial Award.

REZNICKOFF, CHARLES—"The Waters of Manhattan." New York, Boni, 1930, 50 cents.

An outline, simple, unframed narrative of two years in the life of an entire family of Russian Jews who struggle against poverty and oppression abroad, and the life of the grandson in New York East Side.

ROSENBERG, J. D.—"Kiss Americans." New York, A. S. Pub., 1930, $2.50.

Depicts the type of "nouveau riche" American Jew who is ways well intentioned, harmless and humorous.

SIWERTZ, SIGFRID—"Gelman's." New York, Cosmopolitan, 1930, $2.00.

A novel with a Swedish setting of a department store in Stockholm; sympathetic and humorous.

SPITZER, MARION—"A Honey Young Lady." New York, Liveright, 1930, $2.50.

A picture of a true modern romance. The heroine has some talent and a colossal amount of conceit which make even her failures appear triumphs to her. A satire on stage-struck girls, a story is entertaining.

STERN, G. B.—"Mosaic." New York, Knopf, 1930, $2.50.

This book brings the story of "The Matriarch" up to date, a reporting the frailties of human nature, the book is permeated with a delicious sense of humor, the characters of the two Calvary characters are well drawn and colorful.

STRAUSS, ROBERT LEE—"The American Remnant." New York, Bloch, 1930, $2.00.

Sixteen stories of current Jewish life in America. Simply but convincingly written.

WALLIS, LOUIS—"By the Waters of Babylon." New York, Macmillan, 1931, $2.00.

A story of ancient Israel at the time of the Babylonian Exile. Eclectic and romantic pictures of life of the ancient people.

WATSON, J. L. GRANT—"A Prophet and His God." Liveright, 1930, $2.00.

A national biography of Moses where he is depicted as a national hero and a visionary, and which relates the life and times of the Jewish people through the ages.

ZUGSMITH, LEANE—"Goodbye, Goodbye." New York, Liveright, 1930, $2.00.

The story of a woman whose creative powers were thwarted early in life, and who tries to find herself by adding others to a full realization of artistic life and expression.

ZWEIG, ARNOLD—"Claudia." New York, Viking, 1930, $2.50.

An earlier novel by the author of "Sergeant Grisham" and a modern type of intellectual German woman who is devoted to art and music.

GOLDIN, HYMAN E.—"Illustrated Bible Stories." New York, Bloch, 1930, $1.50.

Fifty-three Bible stories simply retold for very young children. The illustrations are by the famous French artist, Gustave Dore.

GUGGENHEIM, HARRY F.—"The Seven Skies." New York, Putnam, 1930, $2.50.

Guggenheim is another proof that Jews are authorities in every field of endeavor. Lt.-Commander Guggenheim's enthusiasm for flying helps to make this book delightful reading.

HEWES, AGNES DANFORTH—"Spice and the Devil's Cave." New York, Knopf, 1930.

Here is one of the few good books for the young people which presents a kinder picture of the Jewish money lender of medieval society. It is a story which teems with the romance and action of an extremely colorful period.

LEBERMAN, NORBERT—"New German Fairy Tales." New York, Knopf, 1930, $2.00.

A fine book. All the stories are original and modern. They are full of imagination and humor, and the subjects are much, very much different from the usual fairy tale.

LEVINGER, ELMA E.—"In Home and Synagogue with the Jewish Child." New York, Bloch, 1930, $1.50.

Introduces in a manner easily intelligible for the child, those things which make up the life of the Jew—ceremonies, customs, festivals, and celebrations of all kinds.

LOBAGOLA—"Folk Tales of a Savage." New York, Knopf, 1930, $2.50.

The author is a black African Jew who was educated like a white man. These tales which he tells are simple and direct ones of these supposedly savage folk who really know more than white men think they do. The book is illustrated with sharp black and white pictures which suggest foreign lands. Youngsters who enjoy animal stories will like this book.

MAUROIS ANDRE—"The Country of Thirty-Six Thousand Wishes." New York, Appleton, 1930, $2.50.

Andre Maurois is a French Jew who has written a number of important and fascinating books for grown-ups which have been translated into English. "The Country of Thirty-Six Thousand Wishes," is however, his first book for little children in English. It is the story of a little French girl who dreamed a strange and fantastic dream, which reminds one very much of our dear old friend, "Alice in Wonderland."

PETERSHAM, MAUD and MISKA—"The Ark of Father Noah and Mother Noah." New York, Doubleday, Doran, 1930, $2.00.

A picture book about Father Noah and his Ark, his family and his animals, illustrated in five colors. A gorgeous and wholly

WATSON, E. L. GRANT—"A Prophet and His God." New York, Liveright, 1930, $3.00.

A national biography of Moses where he is depicted as a national hero and a visionary, and which relates the life and times of the Jewish people through the ages.

ZUGSMITH, LEANE—"Goodbye, Goodbye." New York, Liveright, 1930, $2.00.

The story of a woman whose creative powers were thwarted early in life, and who tries to find herself by adding others to a full realization of artistic life and expression.

ZWEIG, ARNOLD—"Claudia." New York, Viking, 1930, $2.50.

An earlier novel by the author of "Sergeant Grisham" and a modern type of intellectual German woman who is devoted to art and music.

RASOVICH, ISRAEL—"The Eternal People." New York, Jordan Pub., 1929, $3.00.

An autobiography. A faithful naive Yiddish story gives expression to his Jewish experiences and aspirations.

KAYSER, JACQUES—"The Dreyfus Affair." New York, Covici Friede, 1931, $5.00.

An authoritative account of the famous case written by Dreyfus' nephew. Illustrated and contains a chronological summary of the entire affair.

KERKHOFF, JOHNSTON D.—"Traitor! Traitor!" New York, Greenberg, 1930, $3.50.

A vivid account of the Dreyfus tragedy which stirred the world in the latter part of the 19th century.

KESSLER, COUNT HARRY—"Walter Rathenau." New York, Bloch, 1930.

A biography of one of the greatest Jews of his time, a master in the art of business and political economy.

LAZARON, MORRIS S.—"Seed of Abraham." New York, Century, 1930, $2.50.

Ten biographical sketches of Jews of the ages which the world has claimed as its own. A very worthwhile layman's volume with a certain dramatic sincerity and informal appeal.

LEBESON, ANITA LIBMAN—"Jewish Pioneers in America." New York, Brentano, 1931, $4.00.

A record of the Jews' contributions to American life.

PHILLIPSON, RABBI DAVID—"Letters of Rebecca Gratz." Philadelphia Jewish Publishing Society, 1930, $2.50.

Rebecca Gratz, the beautiful American Jewess, is generally supposed to be the original of the character of famous heroine "Rebecca" in Scott's novel, "Ivanhoe." These letters of Rebecca Gratz range from the year 1808 to 1866, and in addition to family interests reflects much of the life of those days.

REISER, ANTON—"Albert Einstein." New York, Boni, 1930, $2.50.

A biographical study of the famous German scientist which strives for an accurate human portrait of the man, rather than a solution of his theory.

ROGOFF, H.—"East Side Epic" (Meyer London). New York, Vanguard, 1930, $2.50.

A biography of Meyer London, the Socialist member of Congress, who gave himself wholeheartedly to the service of his fellowmen. Although a dreamer and an idealist, he proved himself in time of need a practical and fearless man.

RUSSELL, CHARLES EDWARD—"Hyam Solomon and the Revolution." New York, Cosmopolitan, 1930, $3.50.

A biography of the Polish Jew whose financial aid was one of the chief factors in the success of the American Revolution.

WALTER, H.—"Moses Mendelssohn, Critic and Philosopher." New York, Bloch, 1930, $2.00.

A new biography of this great Jew of the 18th century, his friendship with Lessing, his correspondence and his efforts on behalf of his own people.

WATSON, E. L. GRANT—"A Prophet and His God." New York, Liveright, 1930, $3.00.

A national biography of Moses where he is depicted as a national hero and a visionary, and which relates the life and times of the Jewish people through the ages.

RAPPAPORT, ANGELO S.—"History of Palestine." New York, Dutton, 1931, $3.50.

This is a sincere and searching attempt to assemble in a more permanent form facts and figures of this contested area so dear to Jewish souls.

ROTH, CECIL—"Venice." Philadelphia Jewish Publishing Society, 1930, $1.50.

An exhaustive and fascinating history of Venice. From the earliest times to the present day. Contains a fine chapter on life in the Ghetto.

SACHAR, ABRAM LEON—"The History of the Jews." New York, Knopf, 1930, $5.00.

A fine piece of work. An opportunity and a complete objective study of the race aided by the latest research.

SAMUEL, MAURICE—"On the Rim of the Wilderness." New York, Liveright, 1931, $2.50.

An emotional but valuable presentation of this important political controversy. The book is in two parts and aims to give the Arab and Jewish points of view. A vital and interesting summary from first-hand knowledge.

WISE, STEPHEN S., and JACOB DEHAAS—"The Great Betrayal." New York, Brentano, 1930, $2.50.

Both authors, ardent Zionists, helped to secure public approval to the Balfour Declaration issued by the British Government, November 2, 1917. The book is an indictment of Passfield and the Colonial Office. It gives the history and background of the Balfour Declaration and the events leading up to the present debacle.

WIERNICK, PETER—"History of the Jews in America," from the period of discovery of the new world to the present times. New York, Jewish History Publishing Co., 1931, $2.50.

A revised edition of a noted volume covering the life of the Jew in America from its discovery in 1492 to the present day and his contribution to the growth and development of the United States.

WOLFSON, RABBI ISIDOR—"Broken Tablets." New York, Brentano, 1930, $2.00.

Using the "Decalogue" as a background, Rabbi Wolfson examines the various phases of civilization and reevaluates our moral standards in a thought-provoking fashion.

WOLFSON, HARRY A.—"Crescent Critique of Aristotle—Problems of Aristotle's Physics in Jewish and Arabic Philosophy." Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1930, $6.00.

A masterly contribution to the field of philosophy. It is a permanent and outstanding work of Jewish scholarship by a great American scholar.

HOLY SCRIPTURES, THE, Philadelphia Jewish Publishing Society, 1931, $1.00.

An abridgement of the Old Testament based upon the translations of the Hebrew Bible issued by the Jewish Publication Society. For use in the school and home.

Books for Many Moods

EWEN, DAVID—"Hebrew Music." New York, Bloch, 1931, $1.25.

The story of the growth and development of Hebrew music from Bible days until the present time.

FISHEIN, MORRIS—"Shattering Health Superstitions." New York, Liveright, 1930, $2.00.

Traces the development of superstitions and then proceeds to annihilate them.

GINZBURG, BENJAMIN—"The Adventures of Science." New York, Simon & Schuster, 1930, $5.00.

A history of science told in the lives and careers of some of the great scientists of all times.

GLAZER, ABRAM—"The Mosaic of Life." Boston, Badger, 1929, $2.00.

A book of mellowed reflections on the arts, sciences and worthwhile things of life.

GOLDBERG, ISAAC—"The Fine Art of Living." Boston, Stratford, 1930, $2.50.

A provocative unconventional book with a serious purpose on dis-

A popular description of the essential customs of the Jewish religion. Profusely illustrated.

LEVI, RABBI HARRY—"A Rabbi Speaks." Boston Brotherhood of Temple Israel, 1930, $2.00.

These sermons were preached by Rabbi Levi at Temple Israel, Boston, on broadcasting Sundays.

LUZATTI, LUIGI—"God in Freedom" (trans. by Alfonso Arbib-Costa). New York, Macmillan, 1930, $5.00.

Studies of church and state and their relationship to social welfare, a book for scholars.

MARTIN, ALFRED W.—"Seven Great Bibles." New York, Stokes, 1930, $3.00.

Sacred scriptures of the world's principal religions besides Christianity.

OSTERLEY, O. O. E., and ROBINSON, THEODORE H.—"The Hebrew Religion: Its Origin and Development." New York, Macmillan, 1930, $2.50.

A new edition of a standard, accepted and authoritative work on Israel's religious history as a part of universal religious thought and practice.

PHILLIPSON, RABBI DAVID—"The Reform Movement in Judaism." New York, Macmillan, 1931, $4.50.

This story of Reform Judaism from its earliest beginnings to the present day is practically the only book of its kind in English.

SILVER, ABBA HILLEL—"Religion in a Changing World." New York, Richard R. Smith, 1931, $2.50.

Emphasized with the depth of Jewish thought and training the complexity of the task which confronts all religion today. It is a constructive challenge to the religious leaders of America—Protestant, Catholic, Jewish.

WARSAW, RABBI ISIDOR—"Broken Tablets." New York, Brentano, 1930, $2.00.

Using the "Decalogue" as a background, Rabbi Warsaw examines the various phases of civilization and reevaluates our moral standards in a thought-provoking fashion.

WOLFSON, HARRY A.—"Crescent Critique of Aristotle—Problems of Aristotle's Physics in Jewish and Arabic Philosophy." Cambridge, Harvard University Press, 1930, $6.00.

A masterly contribution to the field of philosophy. It is a permanent and outstanding work of Jewish scholarship by a great American scholar.

HOLY SCRIPT

Let Us Family Jewish

people su-commemostruggle under the seems an revive an

Some
tional at-homes wh-not to be and about the Chett-representa

Juda
No one ca

Let
come acqu-
in the Eng-us initiate to this pu-found a p-character as fiction, osophy, if shelf, if o-
WH

ing and the love of books. At peple is known by its literature. If Judaism in this country has lost some of its power of appeal, it is largely due to the fact that we have ceased to give proper emphasis to the power of the book.
Jewish Book Week, which was first observed in 1927, has now become a fixed annual event. It will be observed this year during the week of May 3 to 9.

It is highly significant of the modern renaissance movement in America that Lag B'Omer has been selected for the broadcasting of this ideal of literature. This holiday which has often been referred to in history as the "Scholars' Festival" has now been chosen as an appropriate time to revive a nation's latent literary spirit, to stimulate its interest in the book, and especially in such books as are of a Jewish character of significance, and which are available in English.

Books in the home lend a charm and a cultural distinction that no other possession can equal. The mere presence of an intimate home library on racial topics is a guarantee of race solidarity, and a stimulus to a better faith and spiritual harmony.

A Good Book Important

As a character builder in the home there is nothing to compare with a good book. As a matter of fact it has been said that no man has a right to bring up children in a home where there are no books.
Let us, then, at this special time of Jewish Book Week, stress the importance of a Jewish bookshelf in every Jewish home, and the importance of selected organized reading as an aid to culture and knowledge.

An invaluable educational and cultural contact is thus established through literature with the past, the present and the future. We must face the problem today, that many of our Jews are Jewish only by birth—and that there is very little else about them that is racially suggestive. It is necessary to stir the attitude of our youth especially to a knowledge of the fact that history is life, and that life is history. Not only is Judaism a question of the remote Bible days and factual history, but Jews today continue to make history. It is necessary to orientate, to evaluate, and to discriminate between such facts as are pertinent to the welfare of the race, and then to interpret these facts so that they will enrich the mental content, and lend a philosophic approach to life with a conscious Jewish-mindedness that will succeed in tying up the past with the future.

An emphasis on Jewish literature is bound to arouse more thought and vivid interest, and also to cultivate a better racial consciousness, which in the last analysis is a very essential asset to Jewry. In addition to all this a good book affords also a better link of understanding between Jew and non-Jew.

Let us not suffer the charge that the modern Jew's home is dis-integrating and losing its historic spiritual implication through the absence of the book and the due evaluation of the real scholar. The Light of Israel has endured through all the centuries of the Diaspora with all its trials and tribulations. Jewish scholarship and literature have gone hand in hand through the ages. If the religious concepts of the Chosen People have remained inviolate, and if the fostering of ethical and spiritual ideals have carried on in spite of oppression—then, let our heritage remain intact and let our racial effort not weaken now, when the Yellow Badge is no longer superimposed, and it is easier than ever to be a Jew. Let knowledge then take its inspiration from the past, and let the present be a worthy link for transmitting the Light of Israel through its literature to the future. Let us do it with a renewed zeal, a strengthened spirit, a powerful integrating force, and a clear vision of unity, that shall be worthy of our heritage—the ideals set down in the written word by our sages.

Selected List

With these ideals in view the following selected list of recent books of Jewish character and significance has been especially prepared for Jewish Book Week. It aims to present some current subjects and worth while books in English suitable for the Jewish reader.
The list is sufficiently varied to appeal to men, women and chillated by C. K. Scott-Monierie.)

The story of the Simlers, a family of Jewish weavers who form one solid racial unit. Presents excellent characterization coupled with a strong conflict between the individual and industrialism.

BERCOVICI, KONRAD—"For A Song," New York, Dodd, Mead,
1931, $2.50.

The story of a young Italo-American girl. The action takes place in New York and in Italy against a background of wild passions and emotions. The book contains several Jewish characters.

BRINIG, MYRON—"Wide Open Town," New York, Farrar and Rinehart, 1931, $2.50.

This book by the author of "Singerman" shows some literary restraint and polish. It is the story of life in a western mining town when men's morals were loose and blood ran hot.

COHEN, HYMAN and LESTER—"Aaron Traum," New York, Liv-eright, 1930, $2.50.

A joint novel by father and son of a poor Jewish immigrant in America who after many hardships and struggles conquers circumstances and attains a measure of beauty in life.

ELLSBERG, COMMANDER ED-WARD—"Pig-Boats," New York,
Dodd, 1931, $1.85.

A swift-moving tale of the pig-boats during the World War. It is a highly dramatic story of adventure and heroism.

EHRENBURG, ILYA—"The
"Love of Jeanne Ney Gard,"
City, Doubleday, 1930, $2.50.

A powerful novel by a Russian Jew which presents in a penetrating and soul-stirring manner the tragedy of love between a French girl and her Bolshevik lover.

FERBER, EDNA—"Cimarron," Garden City, Doubleday, 1930,
$2.50.

An old-fashioned chronicle of life in Oklahoma from the days of "the run" through the rich days of oil. A picture of a phase of American history.

FERBER, NAT—"Spawn," New York, Farrar & Rinehart, 1930,
$2.50.

A story of depravity and degeneration emphasizing sordidness, ignorance and immorality in a group of people affected by inbreeding.

FEUCHTWANGER, LEON—"Sac-cess," New York, Viking, 1930,
$3.00.

A problem story dealing with German politics and character by the author of "Power," appears to embody in one volume a criticism of the human race as typified by Bavarian standards; and the fulfilment of the human struggle for the perfection of society. A stupendous piece of work, replete with all shades of life and living.

FINEMAN, IRVING—"This Pure Young Man," New York, Longmans, 1930, $2.00.

This is the $7,500 Longmans
Green prize winning novel by a Jewish young man. The story is not Jewish in subject matter, but is well conceived and ultra modern in tone. It is a wholesome attempt to portray a virtuous young man who persists in living according to his ideals in the face of temptations and current loose morality.
The book is a first novel, and probably autobiographical in a large measure.

GLASS, MONTAGUE M.—"You Can't Learn 'Em Nothing," Garden City, Doubleday, 1930, $2.00.

Eight more hilarious short stories of Jewish life in America stretching from New York to Hollywood. In the same manner—some imitable laugh-producing style as "Potash and Perlmutter."

GOLDING, LOUIS—"Give Up Your Lovess," New York, Cosmopolitan, 1930, $2.50.

Another book in the lighter
Golding style on the advantages of intermarriage.

GORKI, MAXIM—"Bystander,"
New York, Cape & Smith, 1930,
$3.00.

The book gives a picture of Russian life, strange and incomprehensible to readers who are unfamiliar with social inequalities and historic backgrounds. A stupendous, lengthy volume teeming with life of both the masses and classes.

nesses of the male. The book is not so much a plea for morality as it is an indictment of masculine cravity in the name of love, and the well known theory that the "woman always pays," and is doomed to walk in the back streets of life.

JABOTINSKY, VLADIMIR (Altan-lena, pseud.)—"Judge and Fool,"
New York, Liveright, 1930, $2.50.
(Translated from German by Cyrus Brooks.)

A colorful picture against a convincing background of a brutal dissolute age when life was cheap and passions unnumbered. Samson's dual character of Judge in Dan and Fool in Philistia does not add to the wholesomeness of the narrative, but does present a vivid impression of a heroic figure not untouched by pathos.

KOMROFF, MANUEL—"Coronet,"
New York, Coward-McCann,
1930, $3.00.

A magnificent romantic pageant.
Contrasts vividly the life of a man in Europe during four centuries and gives one of the finest descriptions of Napoleon's retreat from Moscow to be found anywhere.

KOMROFF, MANUEL—"Two Thieves," New York, Coward-
McCann, 1931, $2.50.

An historical novel which presents a picture of the Holy Land at the time of Christ and tells the story of the superknaves, a Jew and Mohammedan, who were crucified with him at Calvary.

LEVIN, MEYER—"Yehuda," Jonathan Cape & Harrison Smith, 1931, $2.50.

Portrays the work of the Chal-utzim in Palestine. Permeated with modern Judaism and the spirit of Zionism.

LEWISOHN, LUDWIG—"Last Days of Shylock," New York,
Harper, 1930.

"The Last Days of Shylock" reveals Ludwig Lewisoohn, a Jew, hurt in his deepest soul seeking comfort in the fact that at last he, too, belongs. Using Shylock as a basis, Lewisoohn recreates those turbulent times in a vivid narrative, from there tying it up with Jewish history. Shylock becomes a medium through which Jewish politics dominated by religious zeal and patriotism. The book is a piece of pure literature in narrative form, daring in its originality and certain to prove popular.

LEWISOHN, LUDWIG—"Stephen Escott," New York, Harper, 1930,
$2.50.

A vibrant novel of marriage, penetrating and analytical, dealing almost entirely with sex, the potency of reproduction, the psyche and the erotic life of modern man and woman. Lewisoohn points out that the desire for sex emancipa-tion on the part of the woman has unsexed both sexes, impoverished life, destroyed the intangible spiritual something, and left instead a freedom that is irksome.

MILLIN, SARAH GERTRUDE—"Adam's Rest," New York, Liv-
eright, 1930, $2.50.

Mrs. Millin, in her beautiful poetical style, again gives us a picture of South African life and the racial prejudices of the whites against the blacks.

NATHAN, ROBERT—"The Or-child," Indianapolis, Bobbs-Merrill, 1930, $2.00.

"The Spring" is always a herald of romance. A story of pure charm in Robert Nathan's delicate and inimitable style.

NEMIROVSKY, IRENE—"David Golder," New York, Liveright,
1930, $2.00.

Not the story of a man. He is rather the prototype of abnormally ambitious Jewish men who spend themselves in the pursuit of business and wealth, and spoil the females of their households. A swift moving, pathetic tale of a man who is dead while he is alive, because he fails to estimate life's proper values until tragedy over-takes him.

PARKER, DOROTHY R.—"Laments for the Living," New York, Viking, 1930, $2.50.

The first book of prose containing thirteen short stories and sketches combined with pathos and comedy, by a popular New York journalist. Delightfully rendered and entertaining. Some subjects are taboo, and only for the sophisticated. The story, "Big Blonde,"

An outline, simple, unframed narrative of two years in the life of an entire family of Russian Jews who struggle against poverty and oppression abroad, and of the life of the grandson in New York
East Side.

ROSENBERG, J. D.—"Kor Americans," New York, Ar-pub., 1930, $2.50.

Depicts the type of "nomu-riche" American Jew who is always well intentioned, harmless and humorous.

SIWERTZ, SIGFRID—"Gultan," New York, $2.00.

A novel with a Swedish setting of a department store in Stoholm; sympathetic and humorous.

SPITZER, MARION—"A Hurry Young Lady," New York,
Liveright, 1930, $2.50.

A picture of a true modern pa-sion. The heroine has some latent talent and a colossal amount of conceit which make even her li-ures appear triumphant to her. It is a satire on stage-struck girls, e-story is entertaining.

STERN, G. B.—"Mosaic," New York, Knopf, 1930, $2.50.

This book brings the story of "The Matriarch" up to date, in reporting the frailties of human nature, the book is permeated with a delicious sense of humor. The phrasing is delightful and the characters of the two Zelovars characters are well drawn and contrast.

STRAUSS, ROBERT LEE—"Le American Remnant," New York,
Bloch, 1930, $2.00.

Sixteen stories of current Jewish life in America. Simply but convincingly written.

WALLIS, LOUIS—"By the Waters of Babylon," New York, Mac-Millan, 1931, $2.00.

A story of ancient Israel at the time of the Babylonian Exile. Elcellent Old Testament pictures of life of the common people.

WATSON, E. L. GRANT—"A Prophet and His God," Liveright,
1930, $2.00.

A fictional biography of Moses where he is depicted as a nationalist and a visionary, and which recreates the life and times of the Jews in Egypt through the thoughts of the prophet.

ZUGSMITH, LEANE—"Goodbye and Tomorrow," New York,
Liveright, 1930, $2.00.

The story of a woman whose creative powers were thwarted early in life, and who tries to live herself by adding others to a full realization of artistic life and expression.

ZWEIG, ARNOLD—"Claudia,"
New York, Viking, 1930, $2.50.

An earlier novel by the author of "Sargeant Grisha," of a modern type of intellectual German woman and her life and times of the Jews in Egypt through the thoughts of the prophet.

For the Young

ALPER, MICHAEL—"The Bible
Retold," New York, Behrman,
1930, 75 Cents.

A text book for the young. Each chapter is supplemented by a Bible story in simple form, memory gems and Rabbinic legends which lighten the contents and help to introduce the reader to many interesting Jewish sources.

CALISH, EDITH LINDEMAN—"Bible Tales for the Very Young," New York, Behrman,
1930, 60 Cents.

Twenty-four stories well written and illustrated telling of the beginning of things, through the death of Moses.

ELLSBERG, COMMANDER ED-WARD—"Thirty Fathoms Deep," New York, Dodd, Mead,
1930, $2.00.

Commander Edward Ellsberg,
the Jewish hero of the submarine
S-51, has written a book for the young. He is an authority on ships and diving, hence "Thirty Fathoms Deep" is a swift moving story of an expedition, scientifically planned, in search of buried treasure which those who are interested in science will especially enjoy.

FOX, ETHEL—"Bible Primer for the Tiny Tots," New York,
Bloch, 1930, 60 Cents.

Stories of the Pentateuch, illustrated and simply told in brief, crisp sentences.

French artist, Gustave Doré.
GUGGENHEIM, HARRY F.—"The Seven Skies," New York, Putnam, 1930, $2.50.

"The Seven Skies" by Harry F.
Guggenheim is another proof that Jews are authorities in every field of endeavor. Lt-Commander Gug-genheim's enthusiasm for flying helps to make this book delightful reading.

HEWES, AGNES DANFORTH—"Spice and the Devil's Cave,"
New York, Knopf, 1930.

Here is one of the few good books for the young people which presents a kinder picture of the Jewish money lender of medieval society. It is a story which teems with the romance and action of an extremely colorful period.

LEBERMAN, NORBERT—"New German Fairy Tales," New York,
Knopf, 1930, $2.00.

A fine book. All the stories are original and modern. They are full of imagination and humor, and the subjects are much, very much different from the usual fairy tale.

LEVINGER, ELMA E.—"In Home and Synagogue With the Jewish Child," New York, Bloch, 1930, $1.50.

Introduces in a manner easily intelligible for the child, those things which make up the life of the Jew — ceremonies, customs, festivals, and celebrations of all kinds.

LOBAGOLA—"Folk Tales of a Savage," New York, Knopf,
1930, $2.50.

The author is a black African Jew who was educated like a white man. These tales which he tells
man. These tales which he tells
man. These tales which he tells

MAUROIS, ANDRE—"The Country of Thirty-Six Thousand Wishes," New York, Appleton,
1930, $2.50.

Andre Maurois is a French Jew who has written a number of important and fascinating books for children. These tales which he tells man. These tales which he tells

RUSSELL, CHARLES EDWARD—"Hyam Solomon and the Revolution," New York, Cosmopolitan, 1930, $3.50.

A biography of the Polish Jew whose financial aid was one of the chief factors in the success of the American Revolution.

WALTER, H.—"Moses Mendelssohn, Critic and Philosopher,"
New York, Bloch, 1930, $2.00.

A new biography of this great Jew of the 18th century, his friendship with Lessing, his correspondence and his efforts on behalf of his own people.

WATSON, E. L. GRANT—"A Prophet and His God," New York, Liveright, 1930, $2.00.

A fictional biography of Moses recreating the life and times of the Jews in Egypt through the
thoughts of the prophet.

History and Travel

ADLER, ELKAN NATHAN—"London"
(Jewish Communities Series), Philadelphia Jewish Publishing Society, 1930, $1.50.

A comprehensive, authoritative and particularly readable book on London from the earliest days to the present decade.

BRAVER, HIRSCH—"Great Figures and Events in Jewish History," Vol. 1. From the Gaonic period through the Golden Age,
New York, Bloch, 1930, $2.50.

A new and enthusiastic presentation of material which lends the book an increased adaptability for student and class-room use.

GOODMAN, PAUL—"A History of the Jews," New York, Dutton, 1930, $1.50.

A compact story of the Jewish race through the centuries. A new and revised edition of a useful and popular Jewish handbook.

LEVINGER, LEE J.—"A History of the Jews in the United States," Cincinnati Union of American Hebrew Congregations, 1930,
$2.00.

From the discovery of America to the present day.

NEWMAN, E. M.—"Seeing Egypt and the Holy Land," Chicago,
Jewish Book Club, 1930, $3.00.

A superb travel book with about 300 splendid illustrations.

Both authors helped to secure public approval to the Ralford Declaration issued by the British Government, November 2, 1917. The book is an indictment of Passfield and the Colonial Office. It gives the history and background of the Balfour Declaration and the events leading up to the present debacle.

WIEHNICK, PETER—"History of the Jews in America," from the period of discovery of the new world to the present times,
New York, Jewish History Publishing Co., 1931, $2.50.

A revised edition of a noted volume covering the life of the Jew in America from its discovery in 1492 to the present day and his contribution to the growth and development of the United States.

Literature

ASCH, SHOLOM—"Sabbatai Zevi," Philadelphia Jewish Publishing Society, 1930, $1.50.

An historical drama of the pseudo-medieval prophet.

BURSTEIN, ABRAHAM—"Un-pastoral Lyrics," New York, $1.50.

A volume of light verse by a rabbi.

DEUTSCH, BARETTE—"Fire for the Night," New York, Cape
& Smith, 1930, $2.00.

This is the third book of verse by Barette Deutsch. She is a gifted poetess whose songs stir the intelligence as well as the emotions.

DUKES, ASHLEY—"Jew Suss,"
(a drama in five acts based on Leon Feuchtwanger's popular novel), New York, Viking, 1930,
$2.00.

This is a gorgeous piece of pageantry.

GOLDBERG, ISAAC—"Tin Pan Alley," New York, John Day,
1930, $3.50.

An entertaining chronicle of the American popular music racket from the early minstrel shows to present-day jazz, blues, and crooning at their worst. Contains a mucous of motley musical information.

GOLDIN, HYMAN E.—"The Book of Legends," 3 vols., New York,
Jordan Publishing Co., 1930,
$7.50.

A comprehensive collection in 3 volumes for young and old of the tales from the Talmud and the Midrash.

ISAACSON, CHARLES D.—"A Simple Story of Music," New York, Vanguard, 1930, $3.00.

The author, for many years critic and lecturer, has written book which makes music a simple thing for all who wish to understand it.

HOFFENSTEIN, SAMUEL—"Year
In, You're Out," New York,
Liveright, 1930, $2.00.

A drama in true Lewisohnian vein revealing the spiritual loneliness of a Jewish financier, and the happy outlook of the Chaltz in Palestine.

MAUROIS, ANDRE—"Conversation," New York, Dutton, 1930,
$1.00.

A short, brilliant and graceful essay on conversation as an art which will delight the reader.

WAXMAN, MEYER—"History of Jewish Literature," New York,
Bloch, 1930, $3.50.

Covers all phases of Jewish literature as expressed throughout the ages.

Religion and Philosophy

COHEN, BERYL D.—"Introduction to Judaism," New York,
Bloch, 1930, $2.00.

Gives in a simple but useful form a definition of Judaism, its customs, ideals, and institutions.

ENELOW, H. G.—"A Jewish View of Jesus," New York,
$1.50.

A fascinating study of the relation of Jesus to the Jews from the Jewish point of view. An authoritative work of great interest to both Jew and Christian.

IDELSOHN, A. Z.—"The Ceremonies of Judaism," Cincinnati National Brotherhood of American Hebrew Congregations, 1930

SATURDAY, MAY 2, 1931

Books of the Day

BOOK SECTION

Boston Evening Transcript

SATURDAY, MAY 2, 1931

Churchman Afield

Joseph Auslander

BOSTON POST.
MAY 4, 1931

JEWISH BOOK WEEK BEGINS

Observe Scholars' Festival
Today Everywhere

With impressive programmes, the fourth annual Jewish book week was officially launched yesterday by the Jews of Greater Boston in conjunction with those throughout the nation. The pulpits, the radio and the lecture platform were utilized to stimulate interest in the movement to acquaint the Jews and non-Jews with the contributions of the Jew to civilization and a knowledge of his literature which is so vast and contentful.

Today is the Jewish festival of Lag B'Omer, which is known as the Scholars' Festival, and recalls the fact that throughout the ages the Jews have been known as the "people of the book," and that the lawgiver, the teacher and the religious leader have always been regarded by the Jews as the representatives of culture and worthy progenitors of the Jewish people.

To assist the Jew in retaining his title as the "people of the book," to fortify the Jew with a knowledge of Jewish history, Jewish life and thought, Jewish book week will be observed all this week.

Boston Daily Globe

MONDAY, MAY 4, 1931

JEWISH BOOK WEEK CAMPAIGN OPENS

The radio broadcast from Stations WEZ-WBZA opened Jewish Book Week in impressive fashion yesterday. There were programs in all parts of Greater Boston and the pulpits, radio and lecture platform were used to stimulate interest in the movement to acquaint the Jewish people with literary treasures and present-day literature that is being produced by Jews.

The movement was established four years ago and judging by the widespread interest this year, the event has gained momentum and is expected to become a permanent institution in American Jewish life.

A powerful plea to the Jewish people to prove themselves worthy of the title as the "people of the book" was made by Rabbi Harry Levi in the course of his sermon at Temple Israel, Commonwealth av., yesterday morning. The outstanding feature of the observance yesterday was the radio program during the afternoon. The musical program was rendered by the Boston Jewish Choral Society, under the direction of Prof. S. Braslavsky. Addresses were made by Alexander Brin, editor and publisher, of this city.

Tonight at the main lecture hall of the Boston Public Library, Copley sq., the Jew in literature will be discussed by Charles F. D. Beidgen, Rabbi Jacob Sonderling, Dr. Henry I. Schmitkind, Rabbi Louis M. Epstein, Miriam Franc Skirball, Lee M. Friedman and Rabbi Harry Levi. Dr. Albert Ehrenfried will preside.

The Jew in Modern Literature

His Activities in Art and in the Making of Many Books

By Emmy Goldstein

Librarian, West End Branch, Boston Public Library

An Exhibit in Commemoration of the 275th Anniversary of the Jew in America

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, MAY 13, 1931

The Librarian congratulates the Boston Public Library on the appointment of Mr. John L. Hall to the board of trustees. A colleague on this paper tells of serving as a jurymen on cases for which Mr. Hall, who is a member of the law firm of Choate, Hall & Stewart, was counsel. The Transcript editor and other jurymen were deeply impressed by the attorney's courteous and considerate treatment of witnesses. The most aggrieved or flustered of these were put at ease by Mr. Hall's friendly approach. Such tact and kindness should prove useful in grappling with the intricate problems of a great library system.

Ludwig Lewisohn

ional outlet for much that had been inexplicably shimmering in the souls of many who joined the ranks, and who even had made it a point never to think, or to confuse Judaism with patriotism or nationalism. The younger generation, especially the stray sheep of Judaism, seized their opportunity for racial re-education. They crawled back into the old seared by their experiences of a well-earned knowledge that a Jew's heritage and racial responsibility cannot be swallowed up in self, or in intermarriage, or in disassociation from the race with an assumed indifference. In the Jew's case, more than in any other, race and religion are inseparable. Dogmas may be either nullified or elastically stretched, observances may be minimized, but race-consciousness cannot be wholly eliminated, nor racial responsibility wholly ignored. A Jewish individual may rise and soar by his own peculiar genius and his own distinctive efforts, but even Einstein is classed as a Jew and reflects the world's attitude to them in a crisis.

The World War, which was followed by discordant post-war conditions, brought about a greater racial unity and cohesion. The imaginations of many who were heretofore ignorant of their own history and heritage were fired and opened up to vistas, hitherto undreamed of, of racial backgrounds and possibilities. The atheist, the socialist, the ethical culturist, the Jewish scientist, the pseudo-Christian imitators, all staggered when they, too, were included in the sweeping racial indictments. Their boasted smug contacts did not save them from their Jewish stigma.

To the subsequent sorrow of many races the much heralded world peace and universal brotherhood hoped for did not materialize. All nations found it neceswork came a deeper, a truer race-consciousness, a greater devotion to race service, and a higher consecration as Jews to the standards of American life and ideals. Once started, the movement gained in an amazing degree. It penetrated all phases of American life and subtly influenced its art and culture in new forms of expression.

Every age has a spirit. The post-war decade was one of release. Individuals revolted. Inhibitions were overthrown. More than ever before the individual refused to follow a pattern. New patterns in literature were especially discernible, if not easily definable. Chesterton summed it up by saying that "the stupid people are sneering at the last generation, and the intelligent people are sneering at their own generation, but we must admit that most people are sneering." In all this the Jew sneered actively with his pen.

Not alone the former highly respected Puritan philosophy and literature, but the devotees of the later-day American Transcendentalist School were also slashed and dismembered. The momentum of all former American literary standards were much too slow to follow. The newer culture demanded newer, more

Over

NOW... read the Whole Story—by
The One Man Who Knows It

GENERAL JOHN J.

Pershing's

complete, finally revised account...

My Experiences in the World War

A GREAT human document—held back for 13 years by the Commander-in-Chief of the A.E.F. until every word was just as he wished it. A book for you—for your children and your children's children.

"A great story ably told"—Atlantic Monthly.

The book contains thousands of words which were necessarily omitted in the newspaper serial version owing to space limitations. 32 pages of notable illustrations and maps. 2 volumes, beautifully made, $10.00 per set.

(The Autographed Edition, limited to 2100 copies at $25.00, is oversubscribed)

Get it today at your bookshop

Joseph Auslander

BOSTON POST.

MAY 4, 1931

JEWISH BOOK WEEK BEGINS

Observe Scholars' Festival
Today Everywhere

With impressive programmes the fourth annual Jewish book week was officially launched yesterday by the Jews of Greater Boston in conjunction with those throughout the nation. The pulpits, the radio and the lecture platform were utilized to stimulate interest in the movement to acquaint the Jews and non-Jews with the contributions of the Jew to civilization and a knowledge of his literature which is so vast and contentful.

Today is the Jewish festival of Lag B'Omer, which is known as the Scholars' Festival, and recalls the fact that throughout the ages the Jews have been known as the "people of the book," and that the lawgiver, the teacher and the religious leader have always been regarded by the Jews as the representatives of culture and worthy progenitors of the Jewish people.

To assist the Jew in retaining his title as the "people of the book," to fortify the Jew with a knowledge of Jewish history, Jewish life and thought, Jewish book week will be observed all this week.

Boston Daily Globe

MONDAY, MAY 4, 1931

JEWISH BOOK WEEK CAMPAIGN OPENS

The radio broadcast from Stations WEE-WEEA opened Jewish Book Week in impressive fashion yesterday. There were programs in all parts of Greater Boston and the pulpits, radio and lecture platform were used to stimulate interest in the movement to acquaint the Jewish people with literary treasures and present-day literature that is being produced by Jews.

The movement was established four years ago and judging by the widespread interest this year, the event has gained momentum and is expected to become a permanent institution in American Jewish life.

A powerful plea to the Jewish people to prove themselves worthy of the title as the "people of the book" was made by Rabbi Harry Levi in the course of his sermon at Temple Israel, Commonwealth av., yesterday morning. The outstanding feature of the observance yesterday was the radio program during the afternoon. The musical program was rendered by the Boston Jewish Choral Society, under the direction of Prof. S. Braslavsky. Addresses were made by Alexander Brin, editor and publisher, of this city.

Tonight at the main lecture hall of the Boston Public Library, Copley sq., the Jew in literature will be discussed by Charles E. D. Deffen, Rabbi Jacob Sonderling, Dr. Henry T. Schmitt, Rabbi Louis M. Epstein, Miriam Franc Skirball, Lee M. Friedman and Rabbi Harry Levi. Dr. Albert Ehrenfried will preside.

Privateers and Prison

Kenneth Roberts Follows His Story of the March Against Quebec with a Novel of Later Scenes

By Dorothée Lawrence Mann

THE historical novel is a temptation and a snare. At best, it is so good that one asks to go on reading such books forever. At its worst, it is not worth even the wood-pulp paper upon which it is printed. There are other inherent dangers and temptations in it. It reads so much like history that now are we to know where history ends and fiction begins? Truth is more hard to come at than was even Captain Nason's Lacey Lady, but it is certain past doubt that the minds of the majority of readers are a hopeless confusion of impressions gained from fiction and casual biography far oftener than from authentic histories. Indeed, the odds are always with the fiction writer who is permitted to make use of more colorful methods than are allowed the man who must furnish authority for all his statements. The responsibility of the writer of historical novels is greater than he often appreciates.

Mr. Roberts is one of those fortunate writers possessed of the faculty of saying things in a memorable manner. Our second war with England is a subject about which seemingly only school children are expected to know. If Americans know little about it, the modern English know less. Many of them seem utterly ignorant of the fact that there was a second war. All of which adds, but is not responsible for the fact that Mr. Roberts's story of privateering and imprisonment in Dartmoor Prison is going inevitably to emphasize this war in the minds of Americans and color all their ideas of it. Impressment in terms of Captain Nason and Jody and their harsh treatment at the hands of English officers mean something very different from abstract argument concerning England's right to stop an American ship on the high seas and search it for English sailors. The fact that all our lives we have heard that they took off Americans as well as English has not a tenth the force of seeing Captain Richard Nason of Amherst suffer that fate.

Similarly, privateering, as we watch the escapes of the sloop and the brig, each of which bore the name of The Lacey Lady, takes on life and meaning. We know that the war was fought at least as effectively by the privateers as it was by the Army and Navy of the young nation. The idea comes to life under Mr. Roberts's handling. We see, as we did not see before, the position of the numbers of American captains who must lose their effectiveness if they offered their services to the Navy with its small number of boats. Acting each on his own, this time of Dartmoor and decided upon, Mr. Roberts has, at the same time, the part played by who should have could to all this. American privateers very different in two novels the efficiency. It might much whole truth would not be possible terms that the courage, of one against Quebec. In the intense force remains one of the tion which does much to the story. Those who read the the story of the comes to life.

more after all, a half-wide view of the presence of the the war to the

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, MAY 13, 1931

The Librarian congratulates the Boston Public Library on the appointment of Mr. John L. Hall to the board of trustees. A colleague on this paper tells of serving as a jurymen on cases for which Mr. Hall, who is a member of the law firm of Choate, Hall & Stewart, was counsel. The Transcript editor and other jurymen were deeply impressed by the attorney's courteous and considerate treatment of witnesses. The most aggrieved or flustered of these were put at ease by Mr. Hall's friendly approach. Such tact and kindness should prove useful in grappling with the intricate problems of a great library system.

To know literature is to know life. To know the history and racial backgrounds of one's own people is to belong. The desire for self-expression is inherent in every human being.

But it is not given to all to be articulate. Literature is the major mouthpiece for men's souls. Men turn to literature for information, for education, and for recreation. Many comparisons between books and other objects have been made, but in the last analysis it is literature more than any other art which repeatedly touches the hearts of men, and if good and well chosen stimulates the mind and emotions to the finer things of life.

"Reading," said Bacon, "maketh a full man."

"Make thy books thy companions," said Israel Abrahams. "Let thy book-cases and shelves be thy pleasure grounds."

The Puritan influences in American literature are making their last wobbling stand. The general impression of current American literature is one of confusion. Since the close of the war there has been a puzzling transformation. There has been a realistic groping for the truths of life through literature. It has produced a resultant mental activity and a profusion of printed matter without parallel in American intellectual life. The new racial elements in current literature are startling. Chief of these are the works of the intensive, analytical minds of the Jews who are substantially coloring and influencing the books of the day. One scans the literary horizon only to find that the last decade has been a Jewish literary decade. Not only have Jewish writers sprung up like mushrooms, but they are prolific beyond comparison. Not alone Jewish authors, but even non-Jewish writers have delved into Jewish and Hebrew sources and given us contemporary literature of a Jewish plot or significance.

Why, one is prone to ask, this current deluge of Judaism? The answer is self-evident. The human desire to explain coupled with the desire to belong. Jews everywhere and at all times have been diligent students and voracious readers. The virility of a race is expressed in its literature. It molds the philosophy of a people in its spiritual adaptation to daily life. Jewish literature, especially, is today filling the spiritual gap left open by a religiously careless generation.

Three potent forces, Americanization, assimilation and immigration, are responsible for the current rebirth of a race consciousness, and for the bridging of this unhappy gap by literature. The desire for individual and collective self-expression manifests itself in every age, in all the arts, but of all the humanistic studies, literature carries with it the most humanizing and cultural force and appeal to the greatest numbers. Perhaps because of his peculiar religious restrictions in the other arts, literature to the Jew has always been the language of his spirit, the mouthpiece of his soul.

The world at large, and America, too, in spite of her proverbial freedom, forced its social limitations on the Jew. Hence the earmarks of the Ghetto persisted to exist for years and to color the writings of Jewish origin or significance. America's too rapid processes of assimilation which for a generation has offered a means of escape for the younger generation, proved to them upon maturity only superficial social trappings. The older generation sought its intellectual and cultural satisfaction in the literature of the race—first, in Yiddish, and then in Hebrew, whose standards of literature have always been appreciably higher. The post-war conditions and terms of peace were highly disillusioning to the whole world, but to the Jew more than to any other race. In America the Jew, who had answered the call to arms unquestionably and unequivocally, suffered nevertheless in the days of readjustment, and had his patriotism challenged. A new-old form of anti-Semitism subtly couched and disseminated revealed only a superficial tolerance and absorption, on the part of non-Jewish friends and neighbors.

Jewish nationalists here and elsewhere seizing their opportunity resuscitated the Hebrew language which had long been in disuse and endowed it with a new life. It urged the people on emotionally and imbued them with a desire for something distinctly national. Little by little it seeped into the life of the American Jew and commenced to reassert itself through an emotional appeal which responded in a reawakening of the latent Jewish conscience. It made them Jewish-minded. Therefore, especially the young Jewish college youth had been drifting further and further away from Judaism. They found no spiritual outlet in any other concrete form of religious expression and consciousness in American life. They were on the outside. They did not belong.

A re-lease may do without much that the average mortal needs for his happiness. The average person more than anything else does not need isolation, or immolation, or social ostracism. The unit of society is not so much the individual as it is the family; and, after the family comes the particular racial or religious group of characteristics and loyalties. The desire to belong to a given something, or somebody, call it what one will, is human. The greater desire to serve others is thus stimulated until the individual finally loses self in service, and reaches a higher altruistic goal and appreciation from his fellow-men. Mass emotion has its disadvantages, but it also has its advantages. It releases inhibitions and lightens tension. It produces its lunacies and its fanatics, but at the same time it also produces its idealists whose visions color the thoughts and acts of many men, and foster true and permanent deeds of valiance.

The vision of Zionism in the last decade took on a new life. The spiritually impoverished of the world who had not believed were newly inspired and grasped at the ideals of Zionism. It was an emotional outlet for much that had been inexplicably simmering in the souls of many who joined the ranks, and who even had made it a point never to think, or to confuse Judaism with patriotism or nationalism. The younger generation, especially the stray sheep of Judaism, seized their opportunity for racial repatriation. They crawled back into the fold soared by their experiences of a well tested knowledge that a Jew's heritage and racial responsibility cannot be swallowed up in self, or in intermarriage, or in disassociation from the race with an assumed indifference. In the Jew's case, more than in any other, race and religion are inseparable. Dogmas may be either nullified or elastically stretched, observances may be minimized, but race-consciousness cannot be wholly eliminated, nor racial responsibility wholly ignored. A Jewish individual may rise and soar by his own peculiar genius and his own distinctive efforts, but even an Einstein is classed as a Jew and reflects the world's attitude to them in a crisis.

The World War, which was followed by discordant post-war conditions, brought about a greater racial unity and cohesion. The imaginations of many who were heretofore ignorant of their own history and heritage were fired and opened up to vistas, hitherto undreamed of, of racial backgrounds and possibilities. The atheist, the socialist, the ethical culturist, the Jewish scientist, the pseudo Christian imitators, all staggered when they, too, were included in the sweeping racial indictments. Their boasted smug contacts did not save them from their Jewish stigma.

To the subsequent sorrow of many races the much heralded world peace and universal brotherhood hoped for did not materialize. All nations found it necessary to readjust themselves anew to the times still full of intrigue and cloaked with a superficial quiescence—but it appeared that the Jew's lot was as difficult, if not even more so, than ever before. Hence a renaissance of things Jewish. A comeback. A newly discovered deep-rooted pride in the contribution of the Jew to the world's history—the dramatic rebirth of a race consciousness. A renaissance of physical and spiritual vitality forced itself through the arts, but above all an intensified, more articulate expression than ever before, through literature. The knowledge that a self-respecting well-informed Jew makes a better American was forced home alike to both Jew and Gentile. This new development and emphasis upon a real Jewish culture must in the last analysis be considered an asset in American life.

In the past generation the process of Americanization was much too rapid. Those growing up under the influence of non-Jewish associations and teachings were too prone to belittle the importance of Judaism. Otherwise, they completely lost sight of the value of their Jewish heritage and tossed it out by the roadside of life. Whatever the cause may be, it is apparent that these Jews are now anxious to redeem themselves—to develop their latent Jewish consciousness and to be of greater service in promoting a better race unity and cohesion. They must be heard, they must needs talk, they must needs read, they must needs write of themselves—not objective, but subjective,—introspectively,—drawing from the wealth of personal experience. Jewish signs of American adjustment; not imitation American, but, a newly created literature of American Jewry. They must supply the knowledge of the missing link—that spiritual and religious concept which had temporarily escaped; that inexplicable, immeasurable Jewish something; that sense of belonging which was nearly lost in their subsequent process of painful adjustment to contemporary American life through abnormal assimilation, and a blind acquiescence to the seemingly painless social anaesthetics administered in the name of Americanization. As a result of all these contradictory new forces at work came a deeper, a truer race-consciousness, a greater devotion to race service, and a higher consecration as Jews to the standards of American life and ideals. Once started, the movement gained in an amazing degree. It penetrated all phases of American life and subtly influenced its art and culture in new forms of expression.

Every age has a spirit. The post-war decade was one of release. Individuals revolted. Inhibitions were overthrown. More than ever before the individual refused to follow a pattern. New patterns in literature were especially discernible, if not easily definable. Chesterton summed it up by saying that "the stupid people are sneering at the last generation, and the intelligent people are sneering at their own generation, but we must admit that most people are sneering." In all this the Jew sneered actively with his pen.

Not alone the former highly respected Puritan philosophy and literature, but the devotees of the later-day American Transcendentalist School were also slashed and dismembered. The momentum of all former American literary standards were much too slow to follow. The newer culture demanded newer, more vigorous and realistic interpretations. Life was no longer a restful, reflective trip in a canoe down the Concord River, but rather a series of quick, dynamic, pulsating thrills. A poet's literary expression and as poet an end. Much he came from, but poetry soon freed itself from either rhythm or reason, prose became moving, educated, more, more, more. The emotions were far more literary, more and more were omitted, and gave way to much that was more not. New meters of expression were introduced, peculiar—perhaps—but original, unique, self-sufficient, self-assertive and at the same time forceful and commanding attention.

Over

The Jew in Modern Literature

Continued from Previous Page

The post-war decade contributed bloodless history. The sword gave place to the pen. The period proved one of literary adolescence. American literature was freeing itself during these years from its Puritan influence and at the same time from continental imitation. For a while chaos reigned. The poems were shifted. Poets and patterns in literary notes curiously took on a Judaizing. This is not a mere reflection. It is a fact. The Jew in the American literature of the last decade has tested his hand, shored up his pen and whittled his words—he has established himself definitely in the literature of America. Today a normal reaction to abnormal influences is asserting itself through a realistic groping for life's values in literature.

We have as yet no great Jewish writers on Jewish themes in contemporary American literature, because in retrospect they have not existed. To begin with, the Jewish author was over-ambitious. He sought to interpret America, not to interpret himself to America. He sought non-Jewish elements. He either ignored the racial equations, or colored them with such slight golden and silver tones that they became to the non-Jewish readers grotesque, incomprehensible literary figures and expressions. The earlier Jewish writers sought escape and attempted to explain personal disillusionment, rather than racial unity.

With the exception of Ludwig Lewisohn whose literary ability and versatility none can question, our outstanding American Jewish writers today are not so by virtue of their Jewish books. But even Lewisohn became an exponent of the new Jewish school of literature, because he is in the main an opportunist who was personally handicapped by racial maladjustment. Robert Nathan's charm and whimsicality of style have nothing of Jewishness in them. Joseph Auslander's lyrics are not tinged with Judaism, nor are Louis Untermeyer's poetic contributions, although his novel, "Moses," has strong Biblical roots. As a novelist, Fannie Hurst has the powers of characterization, but she has been too far removed from Jewish traditional life and contacts to respond much to race stimuli or emotions. We have accepted authorities and Jewish specialists who are contributing in many fold directions to the current literature of America. But, we have no distinctly great Jewish novelist. We have no one with Fenchelwanger's gift of dramatization, or Wassermann's capacity for psychic delineation and analysis.

Walter Lippmann's criticism has no Jewish flavor, neither has George Jean Nathan's slippery cynicism and satire. No, our Jewish writers are still in the formative period, but they are making rapid strides, and strongly coloring non-Jewish thought. Real modern Jewish scholars—with minds far better trained and steeped in diverse phases of human knowledge—will not only equal, but will probably eclipse the medieval literary figures. "Creative Critique of Aristotle," for example, by Harry A. Wolfson is a permanent literary contribution to the philosophical thought of the world, leaving Christian scholars, such as George F. Moore, working in the fields of Hebraica and Judaica have rendered the world a great permanent service in summing up the Jew's contribution to the world's civilization. Journalists like Heywood Brown, with books like "Christians Only," expose superstitions and superstitions and help to liberalize modern thought.

The thinking age of literature is on the verge. Post-war themes and sex organs in literature as they asserted themselves in the last decade, are also on the verge. The sickening, tabloid, lurid fashion has passed. The worthwhile looks devoid of health or vigor which are always a sin against the intelligence are rapidly being crowded out. Good books are coming back. The social realism of life's maelstroms and gutters is being cleansed by newer potentialities. The insistence on higher standards of literature on the part of the public will lend an enthusiasm and buoyancy, a new power to the literature of the future. If literature is a mirror of life, let it reflect in the works of our Jewish literary life that is clean, wholesome, significant, worthy of Israel's mission, not only as a "guide to the perplexed" but also as an American interpreter of the "ethics of the Jewish Fathers."

Many subtle underlying forces have been produced this Jewish literary decade whose trend is indelible. We cannot ignore or minimize its influence in current American letters. We are flooded with Jewish authors on all subjects. It is helping to release the human spirit from pressure. But what, one may ask, is present-day Judaism like? As yet not much to boast of. But it has great possibilities. That which is human, that which is permanent and worthwhile will remain. The next few years are destined to produce a new American school that will be unparalleled for its vitality in the history of the world. When that day dawns, the literary influences of the American Jew's contribution during the present formative period will be acknowledged an important component factor—the future of the Jew's place in current American literature.

Boston Daily Globe

TUESDAY, MAY 5, 1931

JEWISH BOOK WEEK PROGRAM AT LIBRARY

In connection with the observance of Jewish Book Week there was given last night in the main lecture hall of the Boston Public Library a program on "The Jew in Literature." Dr. Albert Ehrenfried, chairman of the Boston book-week committee, presided, and Miss Fanny Goldstein, secretary, was in charge.

Among the speakers were Dr. Charles F. D. Beldin, director Boston Public Library, who spoke on the "Jewish Literary Treasures in the Boston Public Library"; Rabbi Jacob Sonderling of Temple Beth Israel, Providence; Dr. Henry T. Schneidman, president of the Temple Beth Israel Congregation, Harvard St., Brookline; Dr. Miriam Franc Skirball, Lee M. Friedman, president of Temple Israel, Boston, and Rabbi Harry Levi of Temple Israel.

Included in the committee of the Jewish Book Week are Rabbi Samuel J. Abrams, Mrs. Esther Andrews, Alexander Erlin, Rabbi William Drazin, Adolph Ehrlich, Rabbi L. M. Epstein, Lee M. Friedman, Dr. Isaac Goldstein, G. Augusta Polzman, Prof. Nathan Isaacs, Rabbi Harry Levi, Dr. A. A. Roback, Dr. E. Schneidman, Dr. Ben Selekman, Prof. Harry A. Wolfson and Judge Francis S. Wyner.

Special exhibits will be shown at the Boston Public Library and its branches all this week, including not only books, but pictures and ceremonial objects.

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, MAY 6, 1931

THE LIBRARIAN

SOME of the choicest treasures of the Boston Public Library are now on view at Central and the Branches in honor of Jewish Book Week which ends on May 9. In the Exhibition Room of the Main Library may be seen a hundred or more Jewish books, or books of special Jewish interest. Many of these are great rarities. Among them are two Mesopotamian rolls, one of which dates from the middle of the sixteenth century. The display also includes a decorated vellum manuscript containing the Hebrew burial service, several fifteenth-century books, among them the works of Josephus Flavius; Bibles—the Complutensian, Plantin, Le Jay and Walton Bibles, printed respectively in 1517, 1572, 1645, and 1657, as well as early American works containing Hebrew texts or relating to the Old Testament.

Ten of the Branches, each of which has a substantial Jewish constituency, are showing special exhibits. The Jew in Fiction is being featured at Albion; "Current Jewish Books" at Codman Square; "The Jew in Travel and Literature" at Dorchester; Mattapan has material on "The Jew in Music" as well as books on Zionism. "The Bible, Service Books and Jewish History" may be seen at the Memorial Branch; "The Jew in Biography" at Mount Bowdoin; "The Jew in Drama" at Tyler street, and "The Jew in Poetry" at Upham's Corner Branch. The West End Branch is exhibiting a collection of current books of Jewish interest, along with specimens of the work of children of the Federated Art Classes.

Another important contribution of the Boston Public Library to the observance of Jewish Book Week is the publication of "Judaica," a booklet of fifty-six pages, containing a selected list of books of Jewish interest in the library. The list was compiled by Miss Fanny Goldstein, librarian of the West End branch, and it contains nearly five hundred items, grouped under the following headings: "The Jew in Fiction and Story," "Books for the Young," "Biography, History, Literature, Palestine and Zionism," "Religion and Philosophy," "Jewish Customs," "This list of Judaica presents a selection of popular and worth-while books of interest to Jewish readers." Dr. Charles F. D. Beldin, director, writes in the preface: "The books are selected for their permanent literary value. The Bible, Prayer Books, commentaries, incunabula and reference books were omitted because their primary appeal is to the scholar or research student."

Books were included when the subject matter was Jewish, or when there was some strong association with Jewish life, customs or manners. Some Jewish authors, whose writings are not distinctively Jewish, were included because they are outstanding authorities in various fields of endeavor. It was necessary to omit many books, either because they were too well known or else were not easily available. Where the library has a number of books by a single author, for example, Israel Zangwill, only one or two books were listed. Many books, especially children's fiction, were omitted because of the limitation in size of any selective reading list.

Boston Herald, May 4, 1931

Next week begins the fifth annual observance of Jewish Book Week throughout America. Such is the appropriate modern celebration of Jewish holidays of Lag B'Omer, which Jews knew in ancient days as the "Scholar's Festival." Synagogues, religious schools, libraries, study groups and other organizations will meet on this occasion and by general effort will do the value of books and reading as the Jew's cultural and literary heritage. A list of books suitable for Jewish readers is available upon request at the Boston Public Library. To be seen in special exhibits during the week at the library and its many branches. Next Monday evening there will be special exercises in the main lecture hall of the Boston Public Library with Dr. Albert Ehrenfried as chairman and addresses by half a dozen well known speakers.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT

WEDNESDAY, MAY 6, 1931

Art of Jewish Children at Library

Arranged in a special display coincident with the observance of Jewish Week at the Boston Public Library is an exhibition of art work by West End Jewish children, aged six to sixteen, who receive free instruction at the Hecht Neighborhood House in Bowdoin Square under the direction of Mr. Harold Rotenberg. The drawings at the library, mostly water-color sketches, are the result of a system of two-fold instruction devised by Mr. Rotenberg wherein religious teaching is united with creative artistic effort. Stories from the Old Testament—Adam and Eve in the Garden of Paradise, Noah and the Ark, the stories of Solomon, Moses and the Commandments, Abraham and Isaac, and others—are read to the students who, under the guidance of their teacher endeavor to translate them pictorially.

While various of the results of this method are more humorous than convincing, a visitor to the library exhibition cannot but observe the achievements of others. Few of the youthful draughtsmen fail to tell their story in an easily recognizable fashion, while to a surprising degree they capture the feeling of action in figures, however, historical, their childish presentation of the scene may be in dramatic intensity. In the work of several of the more advanced students, as in the study of Samson tearing down the pillars of the temple, a pencil sketch of Adam and Eve, and another of two giants wrestling, is found not only good action and composition, but excellent anatomical drawing as well.

Hebrew letters, long incorporated in Jewish designs, appear in various of the best designs, while here and there appears a picture done out of doors. Of the latter is a well-handled water-color group of subway riders. Mr. Rotenberg, who directed the Jewish Children's Art School until its demise last season due to lack of funds, deserves commendation for aiming high at accuracy of cast drawing, as so often the case in primary art instruction, but rather at the awakening of youthful imagination through individual creative endeavor.

Boston Transcript

324 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

(Entered at the Post Office, Boston, Mass., as Second Class Mail Matter)

THURSDAY, MAY 7, 1931

Announcement was made by the mayor that he had appointed John L. Hall of the law firm of Choate, Hall & Stewart as trustee of the Boston Public Library to fill the vacancy caused by the voluntary retirement of Gordon Abbott.

Boston Daily Globe

THURSDAY, MAY 7, 1931

NEW TRUSTEE OF THE PUBLIC LIBRARY

John L. Hall Appointed by Mayor Curley

John L. Hall, senior member of the law firm of Choate, Hall & Stewart, 30 State st., was appointed a trustee of the Boston Public Library today by Mayor James M. Curley. Mr. Hall will succeed Gordon Abbott, resigned.

Mr. Hall is a member of the board of directors of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad and for many years was counsel for the road. His father, the late Judge John M. Hall, was the president of the New Haven Railroad in 1900. He is a native of Willimantic, Conn.; a graduate of Yale with the class of 1894 and a graduate of the law school two years later. He began practice in Boston immediately, and in 1900 formed a partnership with the late Charles F. Choate Jr. He is a director of the Merchants National Bank, the Boston Publishing Company, the Union Freight Railroad and the Channing Home. He lives at 285 Clarendon st., Boston.

THE BOSTON HERALD

FRIDAY, MAY 8, 1931

LIBRARY TRUSTEES

The city lost the services of an accomplished, gracious gentleman when, against the urging of the mayor and fellow-trustees, Gordon Abbott felt constrained to decline a reappointment to the board of the Boston Public Library. He gave generously to it of his time and thought. It is a far better system, physically and otherwise, than when Mayor Nichols named him five years ago.

In appointing to the vacancy John L. Hall, head of the firm of Choate, Hall and Stewart, and a leader of the New England bar, Mayor Curley has also made an admirable choice. A city which can draft men of this kind for work which entails considerable drudgery, from which the only return is a sense of having made unselfish efforts to improve the community, is to be envied.

Both Mr. Abbott and Mr. Hall approached their trusteeships after serving as prentice hands on the examining committee. Although little is heard of this group, it is one of the most important factors in the system. It is named annually. It has complete liberty to examine every aspect of the library, from the budget to the condition of stairways at branch libraries. The roster of this committee and of the board of trustees since 1922 contains the names of outstanding leaders in the things which make a big city a great one.

Library Trustee

JOHN L. HALL
Boston attorney, member of law firm of Choate, Hall & Stewart, appointed trustee of public library by Mayor Curley to succeed Gordon Abbott, resigned.

Children to Exhibit At Public Library

An exhibit of creative Jewish art of pupils ranging in ages from 7 to 16 of the Hecht Neighborhood House at Boston will be held at the Public Library, Main Branch, this week until May 11. The children, under Harold Rotenberg's instruction, have illustrated Bible stories in an original and charming manner. John L. Hall 35-31

JEWISH BOOK WEEK TO OPEN ON SUNDAY

Exercises to Be Held at Library on Monday

The fifth annual Jewish Book Week will be observed during the week beginning May 3. This observance was first held in 1927 and has been marked since with considerable success throughout the country. A concentrated effort is being made this year for an appropriate observance of this current Jewish holiday of "Lag B'Omer," which, in the ancient days, was better known as the "Scholars' Festival." Synagogues, religious schools, book stores, study groups, libraries and other organizations are asked to feature the occasion and to lay special emphasis during this week on the Gospel of the Jewish Book.

Attention is being focused by the pulpit and press on the value of books and reading as the Jew's cultural and literary heritage. A list of books suitable for Jewish readers can be obtained upon request at the Boston Public Library. Special exhibits will be held at the Boston Public Library and its branches.

On Monday evening, May 4, in the main lecture hall of the Boston Public Library, exercises will be held in the observance of Jewish Book Week. Dr. Albert Ehrenfried is the chairman of this program.

On the program of the evening there will appear Dr. Charles F. D. Beldin, director of the Boston Public Library, who will speak on "Jewish Literary Treasures in the Boston Public Library." Rabbi Jacob Sonderling of Temple Beth Israel, Providence, will speak on "Jewish Literary Background."

Henry T. Schneidman, Ph.D., will speak on "The Need for Better Jewish Books." Rabbi Louis M. Epstein of the Kehilleth Israel Congregation, Brookline, will speak on "National Expression in Jewish Literature." Miriam Franc Skirball, Ph.D., will use the subject, "The Jewish Woman in Literature."

Lee M. Friedman, LL.B., will speak on "Jewish Book Collecting," and Rabbi Harry Levi will speak on "The Jew in Current Literature."

The Jewish Book Week Committee of Boston is Dr. Albert Ehrenfried, chairman; Miss Fanny Goldstein, secretary; Rabbi Samuel J. Abrams, Mrs. Esther Andrews, Alexander Erlin, Rabbi William Drazin, Adolph Ehrlich, Rabbi Louis M. Epstein, Lee M. Friedman, Dr. Isaac Goldstein, Herbert Herman, Mrs. G. Augusta Holzman, Prof. Nathan Isaacs, Rabbi Harry Levi, Dr. A. A. Roback, Dr. Henry Schneidman, Dr. Ben Selekman, Prof. Harry A. Wolfson and Judge Francis S. Wyner.

Broadcast Part of Jewish Book Week Program

Talks On Jew in Literature and Origin of Book Week Together With Musical Program Arranged For Sunday

One of the special features of Jewish Book Week planned by the Boston Jewish Book Week Committee is the radio broadcast program to take place on Sunday, May 3, from 3.10 to 3.45 p. m., from Stations WBZ and WBZA.

Fanny Goldstein, librarian of the West End Branch of the Boston Public Library, will talk on the "Origin of Jewish Book Week," and Alexander Erlin will take for his subject "The Jew in Literature and Music."

The musical program will be provided by Professor S. Braslavsky and his Boston Jewish Choral Society, including three pictures from "Rubinstein's 'Tower of Babel,'" "Alte Fidele" by Brunof, and a Yeminite song arranged by Professor Braslavsky.

Forwards May 4, 1931
אדריש, הענין, אדריש
ביכר וואך, דינט אוועק און
נאכטאן פארקום ליבערע

אין דעם נאכטאן פארקום ליבערע
פארקום ליבערע, וועט היינט אוועק פארקום
און פארקום מיט נאכטאן פארקום
דעוועק, צו דעם נאכטאן פארקום
אדריש, ביכר וואך, וואס קומט פאר
היינטיגע וואך.

דאס איבערשטע פארקום וועט זיין
טשערמאן פון דער פארקום און דאס
דעוועק וועט זיין דאס פארקום פארקום
פארקום, דעוועק פארקום פארקום
ליבערע; דאס דאס פארקום פארקום
ליב פון פארקום; דאס פארקום פארקום
פארקום, דאס פארקום פארקום פארקום
דאס פארקום פארקום פארקום פארקום
פארקום פארקום פארקום פארקום פארקום

מיט איין נאכטאן וועט שטיין
פארקום פארקום פארקום פארקום פארקום

Saturday, May 9, 1931.

Fellowes Athenaeum Highly Interested in Homes Week

Miniature House Completely Furnished is One of Many Features at Exhibit

Like all the other branches of the Boston Public Library, the Fellowes Athenaeum on Millmont St. has taken a special interest in the success of Better Homes Week. One of the most attractive features has been the exhibition in the library of a fascinating miniature home with all furnishings made to scale.

Both the house and its two hundred dollars' worth of furniture are generously loaned by Miss Edith Fisher of the Original Thruway and Needle Shop on Boylston St.

The house itself is small, consisting of but two finely finished little rooms, one with a large colonial fireplace. Each day the rooms change. On one day there may be seen a living room, and a dining room furnished in blue and gold Chinese lacquer, with a living room in gorgeous red Chinese Chippendale. Or, the eager young folks may have requested the bedroom in colonial magnificence, and a living room of the same period. Their wish is granted, four poster and all.

There are also charming sets in gay elzabian, and there are bewitching rush bottomed colonial chairs, and Windsor chairs, and Chippendale tea tables—representatives, in fact, of all the styles in furniture making from the time of Queen Anne down to the very present. With some of its popular brightly painted pieces, and even a kitchen in the prevailing mode of light green, completely modern from the bulletin ironing board to the porcelain sink with faucets that turn.

This exhibit, while giving special joy to the young, has been used primarily to suggest the history and development of furniture making as an art. In the display of old English oak furniture, time of Queen Anne, all the chairs, tables, highboys, and secretaries, tiny as they are, have been exactly reproduced from rare museum pieces of the actual period they represent.

Even to the trees and dovetailing they are correct in every detail. The little pieces of Chinese furniture are copied from some of the numerous originals brought from China by the famous Dutch East India Company. It was from such models that Chippendale himself gained inspiration for his beautiful Chinese work.

It is interesting to learn that these little reproductions of famous old furniture are considered so valuable, historically, that Queen Mary has bought an entire set as a gift to the South Kensington Museum.

It would be impossible to describe in detail all the delights of this miniature house. There is real beauty for the table to match the period. There is real table linen, with napkins, embroidered. There are tiny mantle ornaments from a famous English nursery, dishes in Chinese yellow pattern, five beyond belief, and genuine Limoges from France. And appropriate lawn and garden grow in front of the house.

One of the Library's pleasantest experiences this past week was a visit from the Art Club of the Millway School. After a brief talk on the history of furniture, the thirty-five young people were shown all details of the house furnishing and moved a very interesting and appreciative audience.

It is hoped that this unique exhibit will call attention to the Library's large supply of books on furniture, and all phases of home making.

Several fine books on interior decorating have been bought this week, and all the attractive books recently displayed in the window of the Timothy Smith Company, and Ferdinand's Store are now in place in the library and ready for circulation.

JEWISH DAILY BULLETIN

Sunday, May 3, 1931.

Special Program Planned for Jewish Book Week in Boston

Boston, May 1. In connection with Jewish Book Week, observed annually during the week of May 3 to 9 throughout the country, a group of prominent men and women have organized themselves into a committee for the purpose of sponsoring Jewish Book Week.

Monday evening, May 3, will be devoted especially to a program on "The Jew in Literature," the exercises to take place at the Boston Public Library Lecture Hall. Dr. Albert Ehrenfried, chairman of the Boston Jewish Book Week committee, will preside. Every phase of Jewish literature will be covered in talks by the following personalities, who are prominent in the community: Dr. Charles L. Belden, Litt. D., director of the Boston Public Library, on "Some Rare Jewish Books in the Boston Public Library;" Rabbi Jacob Soudring of Providence, R. I., on "Jewish Literary Backgrounds;" Henry T. Schmittkind, of the Stratford Publishing Company, on "The Need for Better Jewish Books;" Rabbi Louis M. Epstein on "National Expression in Jewish Literature;" Dr. Miriam Sklar on "The Jewish Woman in Literature;" Lee M. Friedman, who of one of the finest Jewish book collectors in the country, on "Jewish Book Collecting;" and Rabbi Harry Levi on "The Jew in Current Literature."

Several fine books on interior decorating have been bought this week, and all the attractive books recently displayed in the window of the Timothy Smith Company, and Ferdinand's Store are now in place in the library and ready for circulation.

Children's Art Work Exhibited

The work of children whose ages range from six to sixteen years constitute the special art exhibit which has been displayed at the Boston Public Library this week coincident with the observance of Jewish Book Week. The children of Jewish Book Week. The children of the most part have no other art instruction than that given by Harold Rotenberg at the Hecht Neighborhood House one or two afternoons a week after school.

The drawings at the library, mostly water-color sketches, are the result of a system of two-fold instruction devised by Mr. Rotenberg wherein religious teaching is united with creative artistic effort. Stories from the Old Testament—Adam and Eve in the Garden of Paradise, Noah and the Ark, the stories of Solomon, Moses and the Commandments, Abraham and Isaac, and others—are read to the students who, under the guidance of their teacher endeavor to translate them pictorially.

Hebrew letters, long incorporated in Jewish designs, appear in various repeat designs, while here and there appears a picture done out of class. Of the latter is a well-handled water-color group of subway riders.

The children who have contributed to this exhibit are Fred Press, Franklyn Robbins, Eliot Freedman, Charles Cutler, Berice Gelfand, Tony Carusovitz, Joseph Fisher, Israel Katz, Kenneth Fine, Teddy Swartz, Harry Ostrofsky, Ida Swartz, Sadie Swartz, Rose Perkowitz, Hyman Shore, Frances Plotkin, Doris Rivitz, Miriam Esselson, and Max Triger.

Mr. Rotenberg, who directed the Jewish Children's Art School until its demise last season due to lack of funds, is receiving commendation for aiming not at stupid accuracy of cast drawing, as so often the case in primary art instruction, but rather at the awakening of youthful imagination through individual creative endeavor.

Jewish Liberator
May 8-1931

The Boston Post

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 9, 1931

GYPS IN BOSTON

To the Editor of the Post:—Sir: What a big laugh, we New Yorkers get out of the city of Boston, once a year I spend my vacation there, and it is a big word when I go home, my friends will say, "Well, what is the new gyp in Boston?" Read in the paper this morning about the Governor and the Mayor going on the air about the compulsory insurance. Save your breath Mr. Governor and Mayor, for the compulsory insurance has gone up and they know they are going to stay up, and you and your people know that anything that increases in Boston will stay that way because your people are not fighters, just talkers. Boston was always noted for being gipped.

Read about discharging aliens at City Hospital. Why start there? Why not go to the Boston Public Library, where there are always holding the best positions, who refuse to become citizens and also aliens who took out first papers so they could hold their positions?

Now the Mayor's chauffeur has been suspended for a few days and doesn't even lose his job. How he must laugh. Another chauffeur would have been suspended forever. What a break!

See a picture of the Mayor giving the Jews huge bouquets. What did they care about them. Why didn't he give the money he paid for them to some poor family?

Wake up you people of Boston! Don't let him say all your lives. Act and don't talk so much! Boston is what you make it. Wonder what the next gyp will be? A FREQUENT VISITOR.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, MAY 11, 1931

Haydn and Brahms From the Gordons

THE persuasive art of the Gordon String Quartet played a convincing chamber music at the Boston Public Library. The program numbered three Haydn's Quartets from Op. 20, Op. 20, No. 1, Op. 20, No. 2, and Op. 20, No. 3, in G minor, Op. 20, No. 4, in A major, Op. 20, No. 5, in D major, Op. 20, No. 6, in E major, Op. 20, No. 7, in F major, Op. 20, No. 8, in G major, Op. 20, No. 9, in A major, Op. 20, No. 10, in B major, Op. 20, No. 11, in C major, Op. 20, No. 12, in D major, Op. 20, No. 13, in E major, Op. 20, No. 14, in F major, Op. 20, No. 15, in G major, Op. 20, No. 16, in A major, Op. 20, No. 17, in B major, Op. 20, No. 18, in C major, Op. 20, No. 19, in D major, Op. 20, No. 20, in E major, Op. 20, No. 21, in F major, Op. 20, No. 22, in G major, Op. 20, No. 23, in A major, Op. 20, No. 24, in B major, Op. 20, No. 25, in C major, Op. 20, No. 26, in D major, Op. 20, No. 27, in E major, Op. 20, No. 28, in F major, Op. 20, No. 29, in G major, Op. 20, No. 30, in A major, Op. 20, No. 31, in B major, Op. 20, No. 32, in C major, Op. 20, No. 33, in D major, Op. 20, No. 34, in E major, Op. 20, No. 35, in F major, Op. 20, No. 36, in G major, Op. 20, No. 37, in A major, Op. 20, No. 38, in B major, Op. 20, No. 39, in C major, Op. 20, No. 40, in D major, Op. 20, No. 41, in E major, Op. 20, No. 42, in F major, Op. 20, No. 43, in G major, Op. 20, No. 44, in A major, Op. 20, No. 45, in B major, Op. 20, No. 46, in C major, Op. 20, No. 47, in D major, Op. 20, No. 48, in E major, Op. 20, No. 49, in F major, Op. 20, No. 50, in G major, Op. 20, No. 51, in A major, Op. 20, No. 52, in B major, Op. 20, No. 53, in C major, Op. 20, No. 54, in D major, Op. 20, No. 55, in E major, Op. 20, No. 56, in F major, Op. 20, No. 57, in G major, Op. 20, No. 58, in A major, Op. 20, No. 59, in B major, Op. 20, No. 60, in C major, Op. 20, No. 61, in D major, Op. 20, No. 62, in E major, Op. 20, No. 63, in F major, Op. 20, No. 64, in G major, Op. 20, No. 65, in A major, Op. 20, No. 66, in B major, Op. 20, No. 67, in C major, Op. 20, No. 68, in D major, Op. 20, No. 69, in E major, Op. 20, No. 70, in F major, Op. 20, No. 71, in G major, Op. 20, No. 72, in A major, Op. 20, No. 73, in B major, Op. 20, No. 74, in C major, Op. 20, No. 75, in D major, Op. 20, No. 76, in E major, Op. 20, No. 77, in F major, Op. 20, No. 78, in G major, Op. 20, No. 79, in A major, Op. 20, No. 80, in B major, Op. 20, No. 81, in C major, Op. 20, No. 82, in D major, Op. 20, No. 83, in E major, Op. 20, No. 84, in F major, Op. 20, No. 85, in G major, Op. 20, No. 86, in A major, Op. 20, No. 87, in B major, Op. 20, No. 88, in C major, Op. 20, No. 89, in D major, Op. 20, No. 90, in E major, Op. 20, No. 91, in F major, Op. 20, No. 92, in G major, Op. 20, No. 93, in A major, Op. 20, No. 94, in B major, Op. 20, No. 95, in C major, Op. 20, No. 96, in D major, Op. 20, No. 97, in E major, Op. 20, No. 98, in F major, Op. 20, No. 99, in G major, Op. 20, No. 100, in A major, Op. 20, No. 101, in B major, Op. 20, No. 102, in C major, Op. 20, No. 103, in D major, Op. 20, No. 104, in E major, Op. 20, No. 105, in F major, Op. 20, No. 106, in G major, Op. 20, No. 107, in A major, Op. 20, No. 108, in B major, Op. 20, No. 109, in C major, Op. 20, No. 110, in D major, Op. 20, No. 111, in E major, Op. 20, No. 112, in F major, Op. 20, No. 113, in G major, Op. 20, No. 114, in A major, Op. 20, No. 115, in B major, Op. 20, No. 116, in C major, Op. 20, No. 117, in D major, Op. 20, No. 118, in E major, Op. 20, No. 119, in F major, Op. 20, No. 120, in G major, Op. 20, No. 121, in A major, Op. 20, No. 122, in B major, Op. 20, No. 123, in C major, Op. 20, No. 124, in D major, Op. 20, No. 125, in E major, Op. 20, No. 126, in F major, Op. 20, No. 127, in G major, Op. 20, No. 128, in A major, Op. 20, No. 129, in B major, Op. 20, No. 130, in C major, Op. 20, No. 131, in D major, Op. 20, No. 132, in E major, Op. 20, No. 133, in F major, Op. 20, No. 134, in G major, Op. 20, No. 135, in A major, Op. 20, No. 136, in B major, Op. 20, No. 137, in C major, Op. 20, No. 138, in D major, Op. 20, No. 139, in E major, Op. 20, No. 140, in F major, Op. 20, No. 141, in G major, Op. 20, No. 142, in A major, Op. 20, No. 143, in B major, Op. 20, No. 144, in C major, Op. 20, No. 145, in D major, Op. 20, No. 146, in E major, Op. 20, No. 147, in F major, Op. 20, No. 148, in G major, Op. 20, No. 149, in A major, Op. 20, No. 150, in B major, Op. 20, No. 151, in C major, Op. 20, No. 152, in D major, Op. 20, No. 153, in E major, Op. 20, No. 154, in F major, Op. 20, No. 155, in G major, Op. 20, No. 156, in A major, Op. 20, No. 157, in B major, Op. 20, No. 158, in C major, Op. 20, No. 159, in D major, Op. 20, No. 160, in E major, Op. 20, No. 161, in F major, Op. 20, No. 162, in G major, Op. 20, No. 163, in A major, Op. 20, No. 164, in B major, Op. 20, No. 165, in C major, Op. 20, No. 166, in D major, Op. 20, No. 167, in E major, Op. 20, No. 168, in F major, Op. 20, No. 169, in G major, Op. 20, No. 170, in A major, Op. 20, No. 171, in B major, Op. 20, No. 172, in C major, Op. 20, No. 173, in D major, Op. 20, No. 174, in E major, Op. 20, No. 175, in F major, Op. 20, No. 176, in G major, Op. 20, No. 177, in A major, Op. 20, No. 178, in B major, Op. 20, No. 179, in C major, Op. 20, No. 180, in D major, Op. 20, No. 181, in E major, Op. 20, No. 182, in F major, Op. 20, No. 183, in G major, Op. 20, No. 184, in A major, Op. 20, No. 185, in B major, Op. 20, No. 186, in C major, Op. 20, No. 187, in D major, Op. 20, No. 188, in E major, Op. 20, No. 189, in F major, Op. 20, No. 190, in G major, Op. 20, No. 191, in A major, Op. 20, No. 192, in B major, Op. 20, No. 193, in C major, Op. 20, No. 194, in D major, Op. 20, No. 195, in E major, Op. 20, No. 196, in F major, Op. 20, No. 197, in G major, Op. 20, No. 198, in A major, Op. 20, No. 199, in B major, Op. 20, No. 200, in C major, Op. 20, No. 201, in D major, Op. 20, No. 202, in E major, Op. 20, No. 203, in F major, Op. 20, No. 204, in G major, Op. 20, No. 205, in A major, Op. 20, No. 206, in B major, Op. 20, No. 207, in C major, Op. 20, No. 208, in D major, Op. 20, No. 209, in E major, Op. 20, No. 210, in F major, Op. 20, No. 211, in G major, Op. 20, No. 212, in A major, Op. 20, No. 213, in B major, Op. 20, No. 214, in C major, Op. 20, No. 215, in D major, Op. 20, No. 216, in E major, Op. 20, No. 217, in F major, Op. 20, No. 218, in G major, Op. 20, No. 219, in A major, Op. 20, No. 220, in B major, Op. 20, No. 221, in C major, Op. 20, No. 222, in D major, Op. 20, No. 223, in E major, Op. 20, No. 224, in F major, Op. 20, No. 225, in G major, Op. 20, No. 226, in A major, Op. 20, No. 227, in B major, Op. 20, No. 228, in C major, Op. 20, No. 229, in D major, Op. 20, No. 230, in E major, Op. 20, No. 231, in F major, Op. 20, No. 232, in G major, Op. 20, No. 233, in A major, Op. 20, No. 234, in B major, Op. 20, No. 235, in C major, Op. 20, No. 236, in D major, Op. 20, No. 237, in E major, Op. 20, No. 238, in F major, Op. 20, No. 239, in G major, Op. 20, No. 240, in A major, Op. 20, No. 241, in B major, Op. 20, No. 242, in C major, Op. 20, No. 243, in D major, Op. 20, No. 244, in E major, Op. 20, No. 245, in F major, Op. 20, No. 246, in G major, Op. 20, No. 247, in A major, Op. 20, No. 248, in B major, Op. 20, No. 249, in C major, Op. 20, No. 250, in D major, Op. 20, No. 251, in E major, Op. 20, No. 252, in F major, Op. 20, No. 253, in G major, Op. 20, No. 254, in A major, Op. 20, No. 255, in B major, Op. 20, No. 256, in C major, Op. 20, No. 257, in D major, Op. 20, No. 258, in E major, Op. 20, No. 259, in F major, Op. 20, No. 260, in G major, Op. 20, No. 261, in A major, Op. 20, No. 262, in B major, Op. 20, No. 263, in C major, Op. 20, No. 264, in D major, Op. 20, No. 265, in E major, Op. 20, No. 266, in F major, Op. 20, No. 267, in G major, Op. 20, No. 268, in A major, Op. 20, No. 269, in B major, Op. 20, No. 270, in C major, Op. 20, No. 271, in D major, Op. 20, No. 272, in E major, Op. 20, No. 273, in F major, Op. 20, No. 274, in G major, Op. 20, No. 275, in A major, Op. 20, No. 276, in B major, Op. 20, No. 277, in C major, Op. 20, No. 278, in D major, Op. 20, No. 279, in E major, Op. 20, No. 280, in F major, Op. 20, No. 281, in G major, Op. 20, No. 282, in A major, Op. 20, No. 283, in B major, Op. 20, No. 284, in C major, Op. 20, No. 285, in D major, Op. 20, No. 286, in E major, Op. 20, No. 287, in F major, Op. 20, No. 288, in G major, Op. 20, No. 289, in A major, Op. 20, No. 290, in B major, Op. 20, No. 291, in C major, Op. 20, No. 292, in D major, Op. 20, No. 293, in E major, Op. 20, No. 294, in F major, Op. 20, No. 295, in G major, Op. 20, No. 296, in A major, Op. 20, No. 297, in B major, Op. 20, No. 298, in C major, Op. 20, No. 299, in D major, Op. 20, No. 300, in E major, Op. 20, No. 301, in F major, Op. 20, No. 302, in G major, Op. 20, No. 303, in A major, Op. 20, No. 304, in B major, Op. 20, No. 305, in C major, Op. 20, No. 306, in D major, Op. 20, No. 307, in E major, Op. 20, No. 308, in F major, Op. 20, No. 309, in G major, Op. 20, No. 310, in A major, Op. 20, No. 311, in B major, Op. 20, No. 312, in C major, Op. 20, No. 313, in D major, Op. 20, No. 314, in E major, Op. 20, No. 315, in F major, Op. 20, No. 316, in G major, Op. 20, No. 317, in A major, Op. 20, No. 318, in B major, Op. 20, No. 319, in C major, Op. 20, No. 320, in D major, Op. 20, No. 321, in E major, Op. 20, No. 322, in F major, Op. 20, No. 323, in G major, Op. 20, No. 324, in A major, Op. 20, No. 325, in B major, Op. 20, No. 326, in C major, Op. 20, No. 327, in D major, Op. 20, No. 328, in E major, Op. 20, No. 329, in F major, Op. 20, No. 330, in G major, Op. 20, No. 331, in A major, Op. 20, No. 332, in B major, Op. 20, No. 333, in C major, Op. 20, No. 334, in D major, Op. 20, No. 335, in E major, Op. 20, No. 336, in F major, Op. 20, No. 337, in G major, Op. 20, No. 338, in A major, Op. 20, No. 339, in B major, Op. 20, No. 340, in C major, Op. 20, No. 341, in D major, Op. 20, No. 342, in E major, Op. 20, No. 343, in F major, Op. 20, No. 344, in G major, Op. 20, No. 345, in A major, Op. 20, No. 346, in B major, Op. 20, No. 347, in C major, Op. 20, No. 348, in D major, Op. 20, No. 349, in E major, Op. 20, No. 350, in F major, Op. 20, No. 351, in G major, Op. 20, No. 352, in A major, Op. 20, No. 353, in B major, Op. 20, No. 354, in C major, Op. 20, No. 355, in D major, Op. 20, No. 356, in E major, Op. 20, No. 357, in F major, Op. 20, No. 358, in G major, Op. 20, No. 359, in A major, Op. 20, No. 360, in B major, Op. 20, No. 361, in C major, Op. 20, No. 362, in D major, Op. 20, No. 363, in E major, Op. 20, No. 364, in F major, Op. 20, No. 365, in G major, Op. 20, No. 366, in A major, Op. 20, No. 367, in B major, Op. 20, No. 368, in C major, Op. 20, No. 369, in D major, Op. 20, No. 370, in E major, Op. 20, No. 371, in F major, Op. 20, No. 372, in G major, Op. 20, No. 373, in A major, Op. 20, No. 374, in B major, Op. 20, No. 375, in C major, Op. 20, No. 376, in D major, Op. 20, No. 377, in E major, Op. 20, No. 378, in F major, Op. 20, No. 379, in G major, Op. 20, No. 380, in A major, Op. 20, No. 381, in B major, Op. 20, No. 382, in C major, Op. 20, No. 383, in D major, Op. 20, No. 384, in E major, Op. 20, No. 385, in F major, Op. 20, No. 386, in G major, Op. 20, No. 387, in A major, Op. 20, No. 388, in B major, Op. 20, No. 389, in C major, Op. 20, No. 390, in D major, Op. 20, No. 391, in E major, Op. 20, No. 392, in F major, Op. 20, No. 393, in G major, Op. 20, No. 394, in A major, Op. 20, No. 395, in B major, Op. 20, No. 396, in C major, Op. 20, No. 397, in D major, Op. 20, No. 398, in E major, Op. 20, No. 399, in F major, Op. 20, No. 400, in G major, Op. 20, No. 401, in A major, Op. 20, No. 402, in B major, Op. 20, No. 403, in C major, Op. 20, No. 404, in D major, Op. 20, No. 405, in E major, Op. 20, No. 406, in F major, Op. 20, No. 407, in G major, Op. 20, No. 408, in A major, Op. 20, No. 409, in B major, Op. 20, No. 410, in C major, Op. 20, No. 411, in D major, Op. 20, No. 412, in E major, Op. 20, No. 413, in F major, Op. 20, No. 414, in G major, Op. 20, No. 415, in A major, Op. 20, No. 416, in B major, Op. 20, No. 417, in C major, Op. 20, No. 418, in D major, Op. 20, No. 419, in E major, Op. 20, No. 420, in F major, Op. 20, No. 421, in G major, Op. 20, No. 422, in A major, Op. 20, No. 423, in B major, Op. 20, No. 424, in C major, Op. 20, No. 425, in D major, Op. 20, No. 426, in E major, Op. 20, No. 427, in F major, Op. 20, No. 428, in G major, Op. 20, No. 429, in A major, Op. 20, No. 430, in B major, Op. 20, No. 431, in C major, Op. 20, No. 432, in D major, Op. 20, No. 433, in E major, Op. 20, No. 434, in F major, Op. 20, No. 435, in G major, Op. 20, No. 436, in A major, Op. 20, No. 437, in B major, Op. 20, No. 438, in C major, Op. 20, No. 439, in D major, Op. 20, No. 440, in E major, Op. 20, No. 441, in F major, Op. 20, No. 442, in G major, Op. 20, No. 443, in A major, Op. 20, No. 444, in B major, Op. 20, No. 445, in C major, Op. 20, No. 446, in D major, Op. 20, No. 447, in E major, Op. 20, No. 448, in F major, Op. 20, No. 449, in G major, Op. 20, No. 450, in A major, Op. 20, No. 451, in B major, Op. 20, No. 452, in C major, Op. 20, No. 453, in D major, Op. 20, No. 454, in E major, Op. 20, No. 455, in F major, Op. 20, No. 456, in G major, Op. 20, No. 457, in A major, Op. 20, No. 458, in B major, Op. 20, No. 459, in C major, Op. 20, No. 460, in D major, Op. 20, No. 461, in E major, Op. 20, No. 462, in F major, Op. 20, No. 463, in G major, Op. 20, No. 464, in A major, Op. 20, No. 465, in B major, Op. 20, No. 466, in C major, Op. 20, No. 467, in D major, Op. 20, No. 468, in E major, Op. 20, No. 469, in F major, Op. 20, No. 470, in G major, Op. 20, No. 471, in A major, Op. 20, No. 472, in B major, Op. 20, No. 473, in C major, Op. 20, No. 474, in D major, Op. 20, No. 475, in E major, Op. 20, No. 476, in F major, Op. 20, No. 477, in G major, Op. 20, No. 478, in A major, Op. 20, No. 479, in B major, Op. 20, No. 480, in C major, Op. 20, No. 481, in D major, Op. 20, No. 482, in E major, Op. 20, No. 483, in F major, Op. 20, No. 484, in G major, Op. 20, No. 485, in A major, Op. 20, No. 486, in B major, Op. 20, No. 487, in C major, Op. 20, No. 488, in D major, Op. 20, No. 489, in E major, Op. 20, No. 490, in F major, Op. 20, No. 491, in G major, Op. 20, No. 492, in A major, Op. 20, No. 493, in B major, Op. 20, No. 494, in C major, Op. 20, No. 495, in D major, Op. 20, No. 496, in E major, Op. 20, No. 497, in F major, Op. 20, No. 498, in G major, Op. 20, No. 499, in A major, Op. 20, No. 500, in B major, Op. 20, No. 501, in C major, Op. 20, No. 502, in D major, Op. 20, No. 503, in E major, Op. 20, No. 504, in F major, Op. 20, No. 505, in G major, Op. 20, No. 506, in A major, Op. 20, No. 507, in B major, Op. 20, No. 508, in C major, Op. 20, No. 509, in D major, Op. 20, No. 510, in E major, Op. 20, No. 511, in F major, Op. 20, No. 512, in G major, Op. 20, No. 513, in A major, Op. 20, No. 514, in B major, Op. 20, No. 515, in C major, Op. 20, No. 516, in D major, Op. 20, No. 517, in E major, Op. 20, No. 518, in F major, Op. 20, No. 519, in G major, Op. 20, No. 520, in A major, Op. 20, No. 521, in B major, Op. 20, No. 522, in C major, Op. 20, No. 523, in D major, Op. 20, No. 524, in E major, Op. 20, No. 525, in F major, Op. 20, No. 526, in G major, Op. 20, No. 527, in A major, Op. 20, No. 528, in B major, Op. 20, No. 529, in C major, Op. 20, No. 530, in D major, Op. 20, No. 531, in E major, Op. 20, No. 532, in F major, Op. 20, No. 533, in G major, Op. 20, No. 534, in A major, Op. 20, No. 535, in B major, Op. 20, No. 536, in C major, Op. 20, No. 537, in D major, Op. 20, No. 538, in E major, Op. 20, No. 539, in F major, Op. 20, No. 540, in G major, Op. 20, No. 541, in A major, Op. 20, No. 542, in B major, Op. 20, No. 543, in C major, Op. 20, No. 544, in D major, Op. 20, No. 545, in E major, Op. 20, No. 546, in F major, Op. 20, No. 547, in G major, Op. 20, No. 548, in A major, Op. 20, No. 549, in B major, Op. 20, No. 550, in C

Boston, Mass.

SERVICES

Saturday, May 2

10:30 A.M.

RABBI LEVI

"NEGLECTED VIRTUES."

Sunday, May 3

11:00 A.M.

RABBI LEVI

"PEOPLE OF THE BOOK."

The Discussion Group

Sunday 10.00 A.M.

"SPAIN AND THE JEWS."

W E L C O M E

WEDNESDAY, MAY 13, 1934

Among those scheduled to speak are Newton D. Baker, president of the association, Mrs. Dorothy Canfield Fisher, vice president, Nicholas Murray Butler, John H. Finley, associate editor of the New York Times, Lyman Bryson, director of the National Association for Adult Education, Austin J. F. Smith, assistant director, United States Bureau of Education, W. M. Lewis, president of Lafayette College, Arthur E. Morgan, president of Antioch College, Robert D. Leigh, president of Bennington College, and Rev. Ralph W. Sockman, the Rev. Father George Johnson and the Rev. Louis Wolsey.

The public is invited to attend the sessions so far as the capacity of the meeting rooms permit. Officers of the association are: President, Newton D. Baker, vice presidents, Dorothy Canfield Fisher, Charles F. D. Belden, Everett Dean Martin, Leon J. Richardson, Walter Hill Scott; chairman, James E. Russell; secretary, Margaret E. Burton; treasurer, John H. Puelleher.

The Librarian congratulates the Boston Public Library on this appointment of Mr. John L. Hall to the position of trustee. A colleague on this paper tells of serving as a jurymen on cases for which Mr. Hall, who is a member of the law firm of C. C. Hall & Stewart, was counsel. The Transcriber and other jurymen were deeply impressed by the attorney's courteous and considerate treatment of witnesses. The most awkward or flustered of these were put at ease by the lawyer's friendly approach. Such tact and kindness would prove useful in grappling with the intricate problems of a great library system.

THE MULTIPLE USRYAL

MAY 13

Jewish Book II

The Freezing Point was a very interesting exhibit which lasted throughout the entire week. Concerned that the point would be a bland, elaborate one week. Much of the entire local celebration highlighted our libranal Month.

and Bedroom Furniture

The trustees of the Boston Public Library, and particularly the Librarian, Mr. Charles F. D. Belden, are to be complimented upon the broad-mindedness which they have displayed through the publication of this booklet. The Jew in America is a small minority element, representing less than three percent of the entire population, and yet a large number of these are published annually dealing with the Jew and his faith. These books are bought very largely by non-Jews who evidently consider Judaism a unique contribution to American culture. The generous recognition accorded to Judaism by non-Jews will of necessity wake up also the Jew to an appreciation of the beauty and nobility of his ancient heritage.

$195	/	9-Piece Set of Walnut (veneerd on gumwood)
$295	/	9-Piece Set of Walnut (veneerd on gumwood)
$315	/	10-Piece Set of Walnut (veneerd on gumwood)
$385	/	9-Piece Set of Oak (veneerd on gumwood)

OTHERS UP TO $395

OTHERS UP TO $395

9-Piece Set of Walnut (venneered on gunnwood)	$195
9-Piece Set of Walnut (venneered on gunnwood)	$295
10-Piece Set of Walnut (venneered on gunnwood)	$315
9-Piece Set of Oak (venneered on gunnwood)	$385

$165	1	4-Piece Old Colony Set of Mahogany (veneer on rumwood)
$295	1	4-Piece Set of Mahogany (veneer on rumwood)
$275	1	4-Piece Set of Walnut (veneer on rumwood)
$250	1	4-Piece Set of Maple (veneer on rumwood)

OTHERS UP TO $420

OTHERS UP TO $420

165	1-l-Piece Old Colony Set of Mahogany (venerated on kumwood)	$295
275	4-l-Piece Set of Walnut (venerated on kumwood)	$275
250	4-l-Piece Set of Maple (venerated on kumwood)	$250

Wednesday, May 5, 1931

es, printed respectively in 1517, 1645 and 1657; and early American works containing Hebrew text or relating to the Old Testament. Ten of the branches, each of which has a substantial Jewish constituency, will have special ex-

The Allston Branch will feature "The Jew in Fiction"; the Codman Branch, "Current Jewish Writings"; the Dorchester Branch, "The Jew in Travel and Literature"; the Mattapan Branch, "The Jew in Music" and books on Zionism; the Memorial Branch, "The Jew in Service Books, and Jewish History"; the Mount Bowdoin Branch, "The Jew in Biography"; the Tyler Street Branch, "The Jew in Drama"; the Uphams Corner Branch, "The Jew in Poetry." The West End Branch will have on its current books of Jewish interest. In this branch will be also exhibited various works of the children of the Federated Art Classes.

The Dodgers' baseball team won a hard-fought game from the Cardinals, the score being 11-10. The highlight of the game was a home run by the Dodger, which was the only run scored by the team, having pitched eight innings, was taken out. Nelson, his necessary, was not so fortunate, having no one out and a man on third base. He retired the side shortly and pitched through a series of innings. The starting lineup for the game was as follows: 1st, Capi Simmons; 2nd, Wiggam; 3rd, Albin; 4th, Kapman; 5th, Marm; 6th, Albin; 7th, Albin; 8th, Albin; 9th, Albin. After a hard-

[illegible]

CLUB JOTTINGS

By MAX HENRY NEWMAN

The second social meeting of the Dra-Sa-Lettes of Winthrop was held on April 17 at the home of Beatrice Silverman. All joined in the fun and laughter. Refreshments were served. The last two meetings were held at the homes of Irene Fleischer and Ruth Paul. At these meetings old and new business was discussed, and many plans for the future were made. After the meetings were adjourned refreshments were served.

On April 12 the Hillside Seniors defeated the strong Viking team in a game that developed into a slugfest. The Hillside's trading in the second frame 8-1 staged a tremendous uphill battle to defeat the Vikings 13-11. George Cohen featured the Hillside attack with three hits. Though hit hard, Gladstone went the route for the winners. The Hillside's added another victory when they defeated the Dorchester Braves, 9-8, on April 19. The Braves opened the game with a rush scoring four runs on two hits, two passes and two errors before Needel was yanked out of the game and was replaced by Gladstone. The latter stopped the Braves from scoring. The Hillside's went on a rampage in the sixth inning to score six runs and then added two more in the seventh. Gladstone weakened in the ninth inning to allow three runs to cross the plate. With bases loaded Allen replaced Gladstone and did a "Frank Morris" rally. The game featured the attempt of "Sluggo" Factoroff to shatter the home run record of Babe Ruth.

Miss Sadie Nierman of Roxbury, a charter member of the Evobians, has set the date of her marriage to Ray Leaffer. Miss Nierman has held, during the club's existence, offices as vice-president, secretary and treasurer, and has been an active and willing worker in all club activities. A leave of absence was granted Miss Nierman, but the girls expect to see her back at meetings in a short while. All Evobians wish Sadie and Ray a most happy and prosperous future!

The Sheridians elected a committee of three to get their letters as follows: William Hoffman, chairman, Hyman Bennett and Frank Soroco. The letters are of red with white trimmings and are block, size 6x4. Many favorable comments have been made concerning the letters. The director of the Sheridians, Mr. Cohen, is going to California for quite a while. The members wish him sincere wishes for a pleasant journey and an enjoyable vacation.

At the last meeting of the Association Public Library on the appointment of Mr. John L. Hall to the board of trustees. A colleague on this paper tells of serving as a jurymen on cases for which Mr. Hall, who is a member of the law firm of Choate, Hall & Stewart, was counsel. The Transcript editor and other jurymen were deeply impressed by the attorney's courteous and considerate treatment of witnesses. The most aggrieved or flustered of these were put at ease by Mr. Hall's friendly approach. Such tact and kindness should prove useful in grappling with the intricate problems of a great library system.

day, April 22. Capt. Horenstein first put the seven infield candidates through a workout. After the workout the following infield was picked: Katz, 1st base; Gootman, 2nd base; Sivack, 3rd base; and Glassoff, shortstop. Horenstein will do the pitching and Schultz the catching. The outfield is to be chosen from the following: Hill, Maged, Schneider, and Schumann. The practice was held at Carter Field in Chelsea. After the practice the captain picked two teams and they had a practice game. Gootman and Glassoff pitched for one side with Maged catching; Sivack and Horenstein pitched for the other team while Schultz did the catching. The Nationals would like to obtain games with teams, preferably away from home, from the age of 15-17. Teams wishing to arrange games communicate with Assistant Manager Schultz, 112 Florence street, Everett, or call Everett 4981. The Everett Nationals baseball team defeated the Everett Collegians at Bryant Street Park, Malden, Friday morning, April 24. The score was 13 to 12. In the first inning hits by Morris, Horenstein, Katz, and a pass to Gootman forced in a run. The Nationals had a big third inning, scoring four runs. Hits by Schultz, Sivack, Horenstein, and Gootman accounted for the four runs. The Nationals were leading 5 to 2 at the end of the fourth inning. At the end of the sixth the Collegians were leading, 6 to 5. The Nationals had another big inning in the seventh, scoring four runs. Those were made by the hits of Hill, Schneider, Maged, Katz, Schultz, and a pass to Schumann. The Collegians scored in the seventh and eighth innings and the score at the end of the eighth inning was 9 to 8 in favor of the Nationals. In the first half of the ninth inning the Nationals scored four runs to make sure of winning the game. Singles by Schultz, Glassoff, Katz, followed by the doubles of Gootman and Schumann ended the scoring. The Collegians came within one run of tying the score but lacked the necessary hit. Horenstein pitched a great game for the Nationals, striking out 15 of the Collegians. He was well supported by the Nationals' infield who made three double plays. With the bases loaded in the fourth inning Horenstein struck out the batter and the next man hit into a double play. Horenstein, Schultz, and Katz collected many base hits. Joe Glassoff was the only casualty of the game, injuring his foot when he tripped over second base in the ninth inning. The line-up of the Nationals: Katz, 1b; Gootman, 2b; Sivack, 3b; Glassoff, ss; Schultz, cf; Horenstein, p; Schneider, lf; Maged, cf; Morris, rf; Hill and Schumann, who came down after the game had already started, were put in the game later on. Sivack caught two foul flies in the

On the evening of Wednesday, April 22, the Olympians held their third anniversary club social at the Lotus Bungalow. Each member, in addition to his own escort, invited a couple as his guest, making a total of about 30 couples present. Entertainment was provided by the well known amateur stars: Arthur Stern rendered several songs played on the harmonica and several whistle selections by Saul Tappin. Acknowledgment is hereby given to the fine work of the social committee. The social committee consists of: Chairman, Barnett Baskies, Philip Liss, Abraham Nemrow, Simon Zibel, Dave Gale. The club has reached its high standing, due to the fine work of the directors, Mr. Irving L. Radin and Mr. Victor Oakman. Preparations are now being made to have a truck party sometime in June.

At the intermediate all-star night the Sedarmoes were awarded second prize. Thelma Huberman, one of the members was chosen the best actress of the evening. The Sedarmoes are planning to have a speaker at their next meeting and are looking forward to their social on May 30 which will close a very successful club year. The girls are all a bit sunburned already as a result of having gone on a hike to the Blue Hills on Monday, April 20. They are also planning to have a parents' night soon.

On Saturday, April 17, the Eagles played an outside team. The former winning to the tune of 28 to 6. The leading batter of the game was Red Miller. On Sunday, the Eagles were not as successful when they lost to the Falcons. This loss was a great inspiration for the Eagle nine to beat its next opponents. They were very successful in achieving this by swamping the Crimions 15-3.

The Hawks defeated the Solistes by a score of 9-4. The battery men were: Kaplan, Rich, Fraudin, Zesserson and Daniels. The next day the Hawks tied the Hillside Cubs in a two-game series. The score of the first was 9-8, which was the Hawks' margin of victory and the second game was lost by a score of 6-4. In both these games Zesserson played his usual steady game. A few days later the Hawks won a game from the Young Israel Intermediates by the score of 13-12. Lieberfarb played an exceptionally fine game for the Hawks, hitting a triple and a homer.

Will the Hawks and Belmonts, Spartans and Pioneers please send their reports in pen written or typewritten, on one side of the paper, please?

The Belmonts were to have played the Hawks a baseball game April 26, but was postponed on account of the rain. The games between the Hawks and Belmonts

THE JEWISH

estring and was a large crowd. The club has been getting newing bar and baseballs. The de- bise with the West End House has of one of the members of sickness posing team. The debate was scheduled for April 30, "Sonny" Round, teacher and cheer, all will be back next Fall. Reeming was a great help on the basketball team and was also a member of The lake held on Sunday, April 19, was a great success. A big party has been arranged for May 24, the destination as yet has not been decided upon.

The Ciththa Juniors, assembling at the Sarah Greenwood School every Wednesday evening have recently gone in swimming and have enjoyed the sport. The play will be presented at all-star night. The characters are as follows: Rose Shymon, heroine of the play; Alice Wiansky, mischievous sister of the heroine; Annette Kander, friend of the heroine; Sylvia Alshuler, French comedienne of the play; Fritz Levitt, director. Plans are being made for the last get-together of the year which is to be a week-end party at the summer residence of Rose Shymon. The camp is on the outskirts of Plymouth and is on the edge of a lake and woods. A social was held in the form of a baby party. Although a Dutch supper is not exactly the proper food for tots, it was very much enjoyed. Prizes were distributed for the funniest, most childish, and prettiest costumes.

The Spartans won their first game of the season by administering a sound trouncing to the Argonauts, by a score of 14-1. Marge Winston, on the mound for the victors, allowed only one hit and struck out seven. Zettler had a perfect day at the bat, collecting a homer, double and two singles. Battaloni starred in the outfield, making all the outfield punts. The Spartans have now hit their stride and bear watching in the future. The next game will be with the Eagles.

The Pioneers unsuccessfully started their baseball season April 12 and lost again April 19. The first win was captured at the expense of the Satans with H. Levy starring. The team expects to win all their other league games as M. Starr, hard-hitting first baseman, and M. Frank will be ready to start. The starting line-up for the coming Belmont game will be: M. Starr, 1st; M. Levy, 2nd; M. Frank, ss; B. Kohn, 3rd; A. Silverman, lf; H. Levy, cf; A. Green, rf; A. Coleman, c; and S. Wanserson, p.

Many Books Are Obtained in Drive Of Merchant Marine Library Ass'n.

While the Massachusetts book week of the American Merchant Marine Library Association, now nearing its end, has been very productive, Mrs. R. Gilpin Erwin of Manchester, chairman of the Junior League, under whose auspices the drive is conducted, said last night that there was no such thing as too many books being received. Massachusetts and particularly Boston are naturally interested in this worthy American organization, Mrs. Erwin said. The first office of this "public library of the seas" was established in the city. There are now 11 offices and agencies at Atlantic, Gulf and Pacific ports and one on the Great Lakes.

Charles F. D. Belden, librarian of the Boston public library, is chairman of the national advisory board, and Cardinal O'Connell and Rear Admiral William S. Sims are members.

A veritable circulating library on merchant marine vessels and at life-saving stations, lighthouses and lightships is maintained by the organization, supported by contributions of books and money.

Among the workers in the drive is Mrs. Charles Higginson of Cohasset.

COLLECTING BOOKS FOR U. S. SAILORS

Mrs. Charles Higginson of Cohasset, left, and Mrs. R. Gilpin Erwin, workers in the Massachusetts book drive for the American Merchant Marine Library Association, with Rear Admiral William S. Sims, a member of the association's national advisory board.

Popularizing Jewish Culture

On the occasion of Jewish Book Week, which was fittingly observed last week all over America, the Public Library of the City of Boston issued a beautifully printed booklet of fifty-three pages under the title, "Judaica: a Selected Reading List." The booklet, which was compiled by Miss Fanny Goldstein, the enterprising librarian of the West End Branch, contains lists of books found in the Boston Public Library divided under the following heads: The Jew in Fiction and Story; Books for the Young; For the Older Boys and Girls; Biography; History; Literature; Drama; Poetry and Music; Essays; Palestine and Zionism; Religion and Philosophy; Racial Backgrounds; Books for Many Moods. Each of the titles is briefly annotated with a succinct description of what the volume is about.

The trustees of the Boston Public Library and particularly the librarian, Mr. Charles F. D. Belden, are to be complimented upon the broad-mindedness which they have displayed through the publication of this booklet. The Jew in America is a small minority element, representing less than three percent of the entire population, and yet a large number of books are published annually dealing with the Jew and his faith. These books are bought very largely by non-Jews who evidently consider Judaism a unique contribution to American culture. The generous recognition accorded to Judaism by non-Jews will of necessity wake up also the Jew to an appreciation of the beauty and nobility of his ancient heritage.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, MAY 18, 1931

Beethoven, Ravel And the Gordons

LAST evening, again to a filled hall, the Gordon String Quartet played the last of the three chamber concerts of the current season. Beethoven (Op. 95, F minor) and Ravel stood at beginning and end of this program. Between one listened to a quartet in E-flat major, Op. 57, by David Stanley Smith, who is professor of music at Yale University.

Through Ravel's quartet entirely, through Beethoven's in high degree, these four players renewed the very favorable impressions of their first concert in Jordan Hall last winter. Indeed of the two concerts which this reviewer has heard out of the present series of three, Ravel's quartet easily stood as a high point. Fitting it is that it came at the end of the entire series. The opening movement brought the gentle suavities long grown familiar. But one passed soon beyond the familiar outlines into something very finely grained. One did not have to look at the printed sheet to read Ravel's direction, "Tres doux"; the players and their music embodied it. As much in the vein were the well-rhythmed pizzicati the animated tunes of the minuet. And not through these concerts have these four distinguished themselves more than in the slow movement. Dream-visions—and that in fairyland—the music here conjured up for one. This is "absolute" music—yes, oh, yes—but also music that is more than exercise in handling of themes. This slow movement, at least as it came from the Gordons, vitally gets at that part of man upon which music most potently works its spell. An adulated finale was perfect foil and summation for what had gone before.

In Beethoven's quartet the qualities of rhythm which were so much admired in the Gordons' playing last winter, were again much to the fore. If one must make exception, it would be in the case of the Allegretto. Occasionally Beethoven puts an Allegretto in the place of the more conventional slow movement. The temptation to performers is then to play the movement as a slow movement—a temptation to which the Gordons in part succumbed. The best known case of the kind is of course that of the seventh symphony. In the Allegretto of which an Allegretto-mood shined through the grave harmonies gives an effect unbelievably beautiful to those who have not experienced it. An equal effect lies in wait for ensemble players in this Opus 95. Otherwise, in this quartet the Gordons' Four distinguished themselves as once they had with Haydn and were again a few moments later to distinguish themselves with Ravel.

Between the quartet of Professor Smith. Of three longish movements it made—a Prelude and Allegro for beginning, an "Andante-Cadenza-Interlude" to continue, a Finale for conclusion. Mr.

Smith proves himself able in handling the four voices of a string quartet; his "instrumentation" is effective. And of course he is an "old hand" in the various arts of counterpoint. Over and above this skilful craftsmanship, the work appears to be a curious mixture of inspiration and technic. There is excellently conceived thematic matter—stirring, evocative—in the Andante, again in the Interlude. In the chief theme of the Finale. But in the intervening stretches (and they seem without exception unduly long) the composer falls back upon his craftsmanship. The result is somewhat less than inspiring to the listener. Nor is one convinced that the unusual succession of forms results in exactly the effect intended. One would not question the performance given the work by the Gordons.

A. H. M.

An important contribution of the reading list."

"SPAIN AND THE JEWS."

WELCOME

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, MAY 13, 1931

For the first time, since its organization six years ago, the American Association for Adult Education will hold its annual meeting in New York city. It is expected that about five hundred educators, librarians, Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. social workers from various parts of the country will attend the convention, which will continue from May 12 to May 21.

Mr. Morse A. Cartwright, director of the association, announces that sessions will be held on adult education in relation to the library, the public schools, the drama, museums and prisons. Religion and adult education, workers education, alumni education, art and adult education, adult education through correspondence methods, parent education and rural education are also to be discussed.

Among those scheduled to speak are Newton D. Baker, president of the association, Mrs. Dorothy Canfield Fisher, vice president, Nicholas Murray Butler, John H. Finley, associate editor of the New York Times, Lyman Bryson, director, California Association for Adult Education, Austin H. MacCormick, assistant director, United States Bureau of Prisons, W. M. Lewis, president of Lafayette College, Arthur E. Morgan, president of Antioch College, Robert D. Leigh, president of Bennington College, and Rev. Ralph W. Sockman, the Rev. Father George Johnson and the Rev. Louis Wolsey.

The final general session of the association will take the form of a joint session with the national advisory council on "Radio in Education." A joint session will also be held with the American Federation of Arts on "The Arts and Adult Education." Other organizations that will cooperate with the association are the educational division of the National Council of the Young Men's Christian Association and the National Community Conference.

The public is invited to attend the sessions so far as the capacity of the meeting rooms permit. Officers of the association are: President, Newton D. Baker, vice presidents, Dorothy Canfield Fisher, Charles F. D. Belden, Everett Dean Martin, Leon J. Richardson, Walter Hall Scott, chairman, James E. Russell, secretary, Margaret E. Burton, treasurer, John H. Pfeiffer.

The Librarian congratulates the Boston Public Library on the appointment of Mr. John L. Hall to the board of trustees. A colleague on this paper tells of serving as a jurymen on cases for which Mr. Hall, who is a member of the law firm of Choate, Hall & Stewart, was counsel. The Transcript editor and other jurymen were deeply impressed by the attorney's courteous and considerate treatment of witnesses. The most aggrieved or flustered of these were put at ease by Mr. Hall's friendly approach. Such tact and kindness should prove useful in grappling with the intricate problems of a great library system.

TEMPLE ISRAEL

May 13

Jewish Book

Jewish Book Week, which is observed in the Central Boston Jewish community, is a very interesting and varied affair. It is a week in which the synagogue is the center of the work, and the special services are held on each day. Much of the work is done in the library, and the librarians are very busy.

The trend of literature is towards the humanizing of knowledge. The aim of the library is to standardize in part, but above all to humanize its resources and to vitalize the whole to the end that every individual may feel that the library is a potent and neutral factor in the whole community.

Pioneer Work

The Boston Public Library has for many years done pioneer work with the foreign born in Boston. Long before Americanization and adult education were the passe-words, this library took upon itself the task of supplying reading matter in foreign languages. Later as an outgrowth of this development came the books and lists in English and Americanization.

When the vocational guidance movement arose, Boston was one of the first libraries in the country to offer its resources and co-operation in the development of this field as an aid to the foreign born. Practically every large public library in America has for a generation or more been confronted with the problem of devising ways and means to best attract and serve its foreign born readers. This problem was either intensified or minimized by the nature of which the library found more flexibility have lent themselves to methods, and to the testing out of methods, and responded. Whatever may be said of our polyglot foreign born citizens in America—it is safe to assume that all libraries agree that the Jew is a voracious reader and the Jew is an intelligent library user.

It might be apropos at this time to mention the part which the Boston Public Library played as collector and disseminator of Jewish information and material. This was perhaps the first library in the country to recognize at an early date the importance of the Jewish Renaissance movement in America.

new dye, the Boston Public Library not only kept pace but anticipated their cultural value by assembling the exhibits which appealed to both Jew and non-Jew. Utilizing the idea of the importance of who and scholarship to a people, who have always held learning as a cardinal virtue and to have the most respected member of the community, it stressed its Jewish collections of books and introduced them to the public.

Judaica Collection

The West End Branch has for many years served the Jew of the ghetto of Boston. It has one of the best standard Yiddish and Judaica collections to be found in any library. This branch is linked up with all the leading Jewish community life and cultural forces in the city, and is inconspicuously but surely rendering incomparable personal service. It has endeavored to anticipate the new trend of modern Jewish life in America. In this connection its Judaica collection has been utilized in both unique and aesthetic ways of service. Chanukah, the Feast of Lights, or Feast of Dedication, commemorating the victory of the Maccabees in 165 B. C., now somewhat stripped of its religious aspect, lent itself as a picturesque part of the library's holiday displays.

In November, 1925, a unique and outstanding exhibit of books was arranged for the Chanukah festival, grouped around the symbolic "Menorah," or nine-branched candelstick. Some two hundred titles in English of interest to Jewish readers, bright in their sparkling newness and gay jackets, were assembled. With these books a bibliography of several hundred more annotated titles was compiled and featured. Suitable placards in English and in Yiddish appeared. The result is that the library has been asked to repeat this exhibit each year and has since focussed on all the new books of Jewish interest published during the current year, with a special annual bibliography of these books in the Boston Evening Transcript.

The collection of Judaica, or books in English of interest to Jewish readers, has since been assembled and is continually being added to on the open shelves of this branch. These books are in constant circulation. Jewish study groups of all kinds, religious and secular, turn to this library for material along this phase of adult education. Reading with a purpose is definitely encouraged, and always ahead towards an American ideal, through the knowledge that a good Jew, well informed on racial and historic backgrounds of his become the accepted centralized medium in and around Boston for all Jewish reference questions. We are happy in the thought that this branch was the only agency in Boston to have anticipated in the observance in 1930 of the 275th anniversary of the settlement of the Jews in America, and to have met the needs of Boston Jewry.

Exhibit of Literature and Art commemorating the 275th Anniversary of the Jew in America on display at the West End Branch during the Tercentenary Year.

The Massachusetts Tercentenary observance was an expression of an abiding faith in that which is permanent. It was a call to the generation to heed, to turn hearts and thoughts to the past, to the time of the birth of free government and of tolerance in Massachusetts as a herald for the boasted democracy of the future. This Tercentenary year of the Massachusetts Bay Colony fortuitously also marked the 275th anniversary of the settlement of the Jews in America. Jewish citizens in this territory doubly interested in the first charter of free government of the first charter of American political ideals and progress, had a far reaching history, when the point in religious freedom and expression was rekindled in the heart of Israel.

The official opening of the Jew's share in the Massachusetts Tercentenary was launched in May, 1930, with the observance of Jewish Book Week. The following notice appeared in the press:

"In New England where colleges and academies have for many years offered their students courses in Hebrew and Aramaic a strong scholarly interest in Hebrew studies may be found to this day among many educated people. The Boston Public Library is particularly rich in treasures relating to the Bible and Hebrew scholarship. Many of these priceless possessions will be displayed during Jewish Book Week, in the main exhibition room of the Central Library. Special exhibitions of suitable objects will be featured at all the branches that have Jewish communities. Books in Hebrew, Yiddish, English and other languages bearing upon Jewish life through the ages will be available. A selected list of one hundred books of Jewish significance offered for circulation may be had upon request at either the Central Library or its branches."

Throughout the entire Tercentenary year the library continued to assemble and to make available all suitable material bearing upon the history of the Jew in America and the contemplated observance of the 275th anniversary of his settlement in America.

that one is not one whit less the American, because he is the better Jew. Even though we seem far removed from the early days of Jewish pioneering in America—even though we have travelled at a terrific speed unknown and undreamed of by our ancestors, the fundamental Jewish principles of faith and hope still endure. It has truly been said that "it was Hebrew mortar which cemented the foundations of American democracy."

The success of these library book and art exhibits has been very gratifying. Many libraries and individuals have been interested in the novelty of the idea. The newspapers have commented most favorably. The Jewish Advocate, writing of a recent exhibit, said: "To this library falls the credit of having been the first to inaugurate such a plan, and the Jewish community of Boston in general, as well as the West End in particular, owe the librarian a genuine debt of gratitude, not only for the splendid exhibition at the library, but also for compiling a list of several hundred titles of good Jewish books in English."

The Boston Public Library feels that these special exhibits have stimulated much interest in the reading and purchasing of Jewish books by library users, and have provoked good will and better racial understanding on the part of non-Jews. Questions on many phases of Jewish life, both ancient and modern, have since been received and are answered by the library throughout the year.

Much credit is due to Dr. Charles F. D. Belden, the director of the Boston Public Library, for his warmhearted interest in having helped to make these special exhibits possible. In the observance of the current Jewish Book Week this year, Boston has again taken the lead. Special book and art exhibits, both at the main library and the branches, of Jewish character and significance are being featured. An exhaustive bibliography of nearly five hundred titles has been especially compiled for this occasion and is available upon request.

At the Central Library about a hundred Jewish books—or books of special Jewish interest—have been placed on view. Many of these works are great rarities. The visitor to the exhibition room will see among other items two Megillot, one of which dates from the middle of the sixteenth and the other from the early eighteenth century. There are on view a decorated vellum manuscript containing the Hebrew burial service; several fifteenth century books, among them the works of Josephus Flavius; copies of the four famous polyglot Bibles—the Complutensian, Plantin, Le Jay and Walton Boston Public Library to the observance of the Jewish Book Week is the publication of "Judaica," a booklet of 56 pages containing a selected list of books of Jewish interest in the library. The list (the work of the librarian of the West End Branch) contains nearly 500 items, grouped under the following headings: The Jew in Fiction and Story—Books for the Young—Bibliography—History—Literature—Palestine and Zionism—Religion and Philosophy—Racial Backgrounds.

"This list of Judaica presents a selection of popular and worthwhile books of interest to Jewish readers," Dr. Charles F. D. Belden, director, writes in the preface. "The books were selected for their permanent literary value. The Bible, Prayer Books, Commentaries, Incunabula, and reference books were omitted because their primary appeal is to the scholar or research student."

"Books were included when the subject matter was Jewish or when there was some strong association with Jewish life, customs or manners. Some Jewish authors, whose writings are not distinctively Jewish, were included because they are outstanding authorities in various fields of endeavor."

"It was necessary to omit many books, either because they were too well known, or else were not easily available. Where the library has a number of books by a single author, for example, Israel Zangwill, only one or two books were listed. Many books, especially adult non-fiction, were omitted because of the limitation in size of any selective reading list."

The Confirmation Class

Here are the names and addresses of the members of this club's class:

Herbert Ames, 62 Birch Rd., Brookline
 John A. Barken, 61 Dean Rd., Brookline
 John A. Lemait, 122 Beacon St., Brookline Rip N. Baruch, 3 Abbot Ford St., Roxbury
 Max B. Barnes, 60 Brown St., Brookline
 Edgar R. Bell, 118 Pleasant St., Brookline
 John E. Clayton, 29 Raceway St., Brookline
 George C. Darned, 917 Commonwealth Ave.,
 Newton Center
 Ruth Darned, 917 Commonwealth Ave.,
 Newton Center
 Benjamin Darned, 39 Adams St., Brookline
 William Perkins Institute, Watertown
 Alfred L. Eak, 29 Fremont St., Dorchester
 Stuart Egan, 109 Winchester St., Brook-

Jewish Book Week

May 3—9, 1931

The Fifth Annual Jewish Book Week will be observed this year in America during the week of May 2nd to May 9th. It was first suggested in 1927 and has since then been featured annually with the same success throughout the country. An important reason is again being made this year for an appropriate observance of this current Jewish holiday of Lag B'Omer, which in the ancient days was better known throughout Jewry as the "Scholar's Festival". The Jewish religious schools, Book Stores, Study Societies, Yeshivas, and other communal organizations are asked to feature the occasion and to lay special emphasis during this week on the "Gospel of the Jewish Book". Attention is being focused by the Publishers, Patten and Press on the sale of books and reading as the Jews' cultural and literary heritage.

A committee has been organized to sponsor Jewish Book Week in Boston. Suitable plans are now being made. The Boston Public Library will exhibit its rare treasures of "Hebraica" and "Judaea" in the Exhibition Hall.

mscript

13, 1931

Jewish Book

WEDNESDAY, MAY 13, 1931

The final general session of the association will take the form of a joint session with the national advisory council on "Radio In Education." A joint session will also be held with the American Federation of Arts on "The Arts and Adult Education." Other organizations that will co-operate with the association are the educational division of the National Council of the Young Men's Christian Association and the National Community Conference.

Mr. Morse A. Cartwright, director of the association, announces that sessions will be held on adult education in relation to the library, the public schools, the drama, museums and prisons. Religion and adult education, workers education, alumni education, art and adult education, adult education through correspondence methods, parent education, and rural education are also to be discussed.

Among those scheduled to speak are Newton D. Baker, president of the association, Mrs. Dorothy Canfield Fisher, vice president, Nicholas Murray Butler, John H. Finley, associate editor of the Bookman, James Lyman Bryson, director, National Institute of Education, California, and the National Education Association, Austin H. MacCormick, assistant director, United States Bureau of Prisons, W. M. Lewis, president of Lafayette College, Arthur E. Morgan, president of Antioch College, Robert D. Leigh, president of Bennington College, and Rev. H. W. Sockman, the Rev. Father George Johnson and the Rev. Louis Wulger.

The public is invited to attend the sessions so far as the capacity of the meeting rooms permit. Officers of the association are: President, Newton D. Baker, vice presidents, Dorothy Canfield Fisher, Charles F. D. Belden, Everett Dean Martin, Leon J. Richardson, Walter Bill Scott; chairman, James E. Russell; secretary, Margaret E. Burton; treasurer, John H. Puelche.

The Librarian congratulates the Boston Public Library on the appointment of Mr. John L. Hall to the board of trustees. A colleague on this paper tells of serving as a jurymen on cases for which Hall, who is a member of the law firm of Choate, Hall & Stewart, was counsel. The Transcript editor and other jurymen were deeply impressed by the attorney's courtesy and considerate treatment of witnesses. Thus most aggrieved or flustered of these would at ease by Mr. Hall's friendly approach. Such tact and kindness should prove useful in grappling with the intricate problems of a great library system.

Jewish Book
Jewish Book Week, a recently observed national premium week, featured a Jewish exhibit of twelve of the titles of The Brookline. It was a very interesting one which lasted throughout all the summer week, concerned the special occasion and elaborate week. Much of the entire local celebration of the library was held.

BERKEY and GAY
and Bedroom Furniture

at  $\frac{1}{3}$  to  $\frac{1}{2}$

The response to Jordan's first Bed sale a year ago was so great that large supply did not begin to meet An unforeseen opportunity enabled more of this fashion-correct furni famous Berkey & Gay quality tion, materials all artistic design selection, BE HIE MONDAY A

Dining Room Furniture Bedroom Furniture

JORDAN

The trustees of the Boston Public Library, and particularly the librarian, Mr. Charles F. D. Belden, are to be complimented upon the broad-mindedness which they have displayed through the publication of this booklet. The Jew in America is a small minority element, representing less than three percent of the entire population, and yet a large number of books are published annually dealing with the Jew and his faith. These books are bought very largely by non-Jews who evidently consider Judaism a unique contribution to American culture. The generous recognition accorded to Judaism by non-Jews here of necessity wake up also the Jew to an appreciation of the beauty and nobility of his ancient heritage.

Friday, May 5, 1931

es, printed respectively in 1517, 2, 1645 and 1657; and early African works containing Hebrew or relating to the Old Testament. Ten of the branches, each of which has a substantial Jewish constituency, will have special ex-the Allston Branch will feature "The Jew in Fiction"; the Codman Square Branch, "Current Jewish Books"; the Dorchester Branch, "The Jew in Travel and Literature"; the Mattapan Branch, "The Jew in Music" and books on Zionism; the Memorial Branch, "The Holy Service Books, and Jewish History"; the Mount Bowdoin Branch, "The Jew in Biography"; the Tyler Street Branch, "The Jew in Drama"; the Upper Boston Branch, "The Jew in Poetry." The West End Branch will have on view current books of Jewish interest. In this branch will be also exhibited various works of the children of the Federated Art Classes.

The Dodgers baseball team won a hard-fought game from the Chicagoans, the score being 11-10. The highlight of the game was Alberts, the main pitcher of the team, who pitched eight innings, was taken out of the game with one out and a man on third base. He pitched the side shortly thereafter, and the starting lineup for the game was as follows: 1st, Capt. Wagners; 2nd, Wagners; 3rd, Alberts; 4th, Kaplan; 5th, Martorel; 6th, Alberts; 7th, Alberts; 8th, Alberts; 9th, Alberts. The starting lineup for the Dodgers was as follows: 1st, Alberts; 2nd, Alberts; 3rd, Alberts; 4th, Alberts; 5th, Alberts; 6th, Alberts; 7th, Alberts; 8th, Alberts; 9th, Alberts.

Franklin Field.
manager. Practice baseball team
May 18 at Statesville. The
tion is "resolvclub wishes on
Agar, Jones Ben
School Center, championship of members. In deof this club at charter member man Fritz, elecfor the welfare
now members
Kraetz, secretary
most successful of the club, be-is one of the was re-elected him another term
ability to conduct
Finn was re-
South Greenwood April 27 at them without exception unduly omposer falls back upon his
The result is somewhat desiring to be a listener. Nor induced that the unnumbered orms results in exactly the One would not question
ance given the work by the

WEDNESDAY, MAY 13, 1931

The Librarian congratulates the Boston Public Library on the appointment of Mr. John L. Hall to the board of trustees. A colleague on this paper has of serving as a jurymen on cases for which Mr. Hall, who is a member of the law firm of State, Hall & Stewart, was counsel. The transcript editor and other jurymen were deeply impressed by the attorneys' courteous and considerate treatment of witnesses. The most agreeable or flustered of these were put at ease by Mr. Hall's friendly approach. Such tact and kindness would prove useful in grappling with the intricate problems of a great library system.

TEMPLE ISRAEL

May 13

The Jewish Book Week, recently observed in a special program was held at the Central Boston Jewish exhibits was twelve of the 100. The Brookline Library, a very interesting which lasted the whole of the synagogue week concerned the special occasion and elaborate a week. Much of the entire local celebration of our Abraham M. Stein.

BERKEY and GAY
and Bedroom Furniture

Berkey & Gay Dining Room Sets

$195	{	9-Piece Set of Walnut (veneer on gumwood)
$295	{	9-Piece Set of Walnut (veneer on gumwood)
$315	{	10-Piece Set of Walnut (veneer on gumwood)
$385	{	9-Piece Set of Oak (veneer on gumwood)

OTHERS UP TO $395

Berkey & Gay Bedroom Sets

$165	{	4-Piece Old Colony Set of Mahogany (veneer on gumwood)
$295	{	4-Piece Set of Mahogany (veneer on gumwood)
$275	{	4-Piece Set of Walnut (veneer on gumwood)
$250	{	4-Piece Set of Maple (veneer on gumwood)

OTHERS UP TO $420

Friday, May 5, 1931

March Club, held April 27 at the North Greenwood School Center.
 How officers were elected. James E. Sims was re-elected president. His ability to conduct meetings won him another term. Joseph Penn was elected vice-president. He is one of the most popular members of the club. The most successful debating team, which has had a most successful year, is one of Krivitz, secretary, is one of the new members and is doing his best for the welfare of the club. Herman Fritz, elected treasurer, is a charter member and was treasurer of this club at the first election of officers. In debating this club will challenge the Hillside for the School Consistency of debating of the year. Joseph Penn, manager, Louis Jones, and Nathan Karlov are among the club wisest men in the district. That Umpirey-tion is "re-solved. That Umpirey-ment is Insurance Be Adopted by the States." The debate will take place
 May 13 at the School Center. Saul Kravitsky was elected captain of the baseball team and Joseph Penn manager.
 Dr. Franklin Field.

Finalo. But in the intervening stretches (and they seem without exception unduly long) the composer falls back upon his craftsmanship. The result is somewhat less than inspiring to the listener. Nor is one convinced that the unusual succession of forms results in exactly the effect intended. One would not question the performance given the work by the Gorcons.

The trustees of the Boston Public Library, divided under the following heads: The Jew in Fiction and Story; Books for the Young; For the Older Boys and Girls; Biography; History; Literature; Drama, Poetry and Music; Essays; Palestine and Zionism; Religion and Philosophy; Racial Backgrounds; Books for Many Moods. Each of the titles is briefly annotated with a succinct description of what the volume is about.

The trustees of the Boston Public Library and particularly the librarian, Mr. Charles F. D. Belden, are to be complimented upon the broad-mindedness which they have displayed through the publication of this booklet. The Jew in America is a small minority element, representing less than three percent of the entire population, and yet a large number of books are published annually dealing with the Jew and his faith. These books are bought very largely by non-Jews who evidently consider Judaism a unique contribution to American culture. The generous recognition accorded to Judaism by non-Jews will of necessity wake up also the Jew to an appreciation of the beauty and nobility of his ancient heritage.

Kirstein Heads Library Trustees

Always Interested In Work of Boston Public Library

LOUIS E. KIRSTEIN

At the annual meeting of the board of trustees of the Boston Public Library held on Friday, Louis E. Kirstein, president of the Associated Jewish Philanthropies, and an outstanding figure in public life and in the business world, was elected president of the board. In connection with his manifold activities in all phases of communal efforts, Mr. Kirstein has always been interested in the work of the Boston Public Library, and only recently donated a branch library that is located on the site of the old City Hall Police Station.

The Boston Post

TUESDAY, MAY 19, 1931

I spoke the other day of the cleansing that is being given the outside of St. Paul's Cathedral.

Now I observe a similar operation being performed on the ceiling and walls of Bates hall, in the Boston Public Library.

This last is no ordinary cleansing job. It requires the delicate hand of the artist, or havoc may be wrought.

The rich colors that have been covered for years under this grime will not bear harsh scrubbing.

♦ ♦ ♦ ♦

Thus far, the work of cleansing the walls and ceiling at the Public Library has not got beyond a panel or two in the western end of the room, where the law books, and books on psychology, philosophy, English, etc., are located.

I notice that the operation has already brought out some of the most exquisite coloring—coloring which the patrons of the library could not possibly know was there, so heavily has the grime of smoke and dust lain upon it.

The Boston Post

THURSDAY, MAY 21, 1931

MR. KIRSTEIN

To the Editor of the Post:
Sir—I was elated to know that Louis E. Kirstein was again chosen as president of the trustees of the Boston Public Library.

He is a man of broad affairs and good judgment was shown in selecting him.

The downtown branch library on City Hall avenue, which he gave as a gift to the city of Boston, seems to be gaining more popularity, as it is unique, and being in the heart of the business district, it is catering to over 650 persons a day.

I also notice ladies strolling in and out with books under their arms, and it was at first thought it should be for business men only.

Wonderful, I should think.
MORRIS MILLER.

BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN

FRIDAY, MAY 22, 1931

WOMEN IN HUB LIKE SEX BOOKS, BUT MEN DON'T

Boston women like their books sexy, rather than thrilling in the Edgar Wallace fashion, according to Pierce Buckley, assistant librarian at the Boston Public Library.

The mystery books are undoubtedly popular, according to Buckley, but their popularity can be traced mostly to the men readers. Even the young girls demand something of love motif in their reading matter.

And the highbrow of 60, if you really know her, invariably hides a sexy novel between her Browning and Strachey, he says, and reads it with the same avid appetite as the pert young thing. Of course, she is apt to read it when no one is looking, but you can't fool the librarian.

Buckley claims one would be surprised if one knew the literary tastes of some of the Hub's best. One very prominent educator, he says, who goes in for scientific treatises always has a blood-curdling thriller reserved for him. That's his hors d'oeuvre for a literary evening in his library. And, the same holds true of some of Boston's fair sex, only they are not interested in thrillers. They want something a bit hot and romantic.

"I don't believe the thriller will ever go out of popularity," said Buckley. "Edgar Wallace is the most popular. Men and boys like the murder mystery best, something that affords them a chance to play detective as they read it and solve it. It's their crossword puzzle."

SEXY BOOKS BEST LIKED BY WOMEN

Thrillers Not Favored —Men Like Murder
Mysteries

The juicy mystery thriller does not tempt the women readers, not even the young girl of 16, according to Pierce Buckley, assistant librarian at the Boston Public Library. He says the women demand something of love for their reading, either in fiction or biography.

SEXY NOVELS FOR Highbrows

And the highbrow of 60, if you really know her, invariably hides a nice little sexy novel between her Browning and Strachey, he says, and reads it with the same avid appetite as the pert young thing. Of course, she is apt to read it when no one is looking, but you can't fool the librarian.

Buckley claims you would be surprised if you knew the literary tastes of some of the Hub's best. One very prominent educator, he says, who goes in for scientific treatises always has a blood-curdling thriller reserved for him. That's his hors d'oeuvre for a literary evening in his library. And, the same holds true of some of Boston's fair blue stockings, only they are not interested in thrillers. They want something a bit hot and romantic. "I don't believe the thriller will ever go out of popularity," says Buckley. "Edgar Wallace is the most popular. Men and boys like the murder mystery best, something that affords them a chance to play detective as they read it and solve it. It's their crossword puzzle."

Mystery Stories Popular

"The demand for mystery stories grows larger all the time. Boys, of course, enjoy the westerns, but they, too, are fascinated by a good mystery thriller. Sex novels do not attract men readers."

"Of course, men read fiction, too, but it is a different variety of fiction that interests. When Sinclair Lewis won the Nobel prize, we were deluged with requests from men for the Sinclair Lewis novels. Men who had never read Lewis or evinced the slightest interest in his writings wanted to find out just why this chap was awarded the Nobel prize. It was a matter of intellectual curiosity."

"Women, I think, had been reading Sinclair Lewis for years, and some of the men, also, but the men were fewer in numbers, he stated. Buckley declared that if a book is really of merit, the public will call for it no matter if it is not exactly sensational. A book of merit will win out eventually. People as a whole are reading much more and their taste, he thinks, is improving. They may read mediocre books but their critical faculties are not deceived."

"You can't keep a good book on the shelves," he said. Biographies of famous men and women whose careers were frankly romantic appeal more to the women readers. Men are more interested in biographies of adventure, in politics, battle, and literature, he explained.

May 22, 1931

POST, BOSTON, MASS

THE WATCH ON THE RHINE

JUNE, 1931

THE BREEZE

OUR BOSTON DEVOTED TO CIVIC ACTIVITIES

Edited by DOROTHY WORRELL

ON APRIL THIRTIETH the governor signed the resolve which provides "for an investigation with a view to improving the procedure under the initiative and referendum provisions of the constitution for the purpose of rendering questions submitted thereunder more understandable to the voters and of eliminating certain inconsistencies in said provisions."

The voters who went to the polls last November do not need a reminder regarding the wording of the referendum. The impression received personally from a handling, both physical and mental, of the ballot, rendered deeper by subsequent discussion in the press, is easily recalled these six months later. Advocates of one side or the other of any one of those questions supposedly decided by the "people" on election day are not justified in attributing either the "yes" or the "no" result to a real "vox populi." It is common knowledge that a percentage only of the registered voters cast their ballots. Is it also known generally that, of those who visit the voting booths and make known their written choice of candidates, a considerable proportion entirely neglect to indicate an opinion on the referendum? It would cause us shame to make the third admission, but that the resolve outlined in the first paragraph saves us by placing the blame on the lawmakers. The admission is this, that many of those who braved the questions and answered them, some even from well-thought-out convictions, marked "yes" when the result they intended to indicate called for "no," and vice versa.

Now, election material should be prepared for the ordinary voter. But the questions on our ballot were not proper even for the governmental expert; even he (or she) was obliged to spend too much time figuring—yes, really figuring—whether "yes" or "no" conveyed the answer he (or she) intended.

Senator Bacon introduced a petition into the Legislature early in January, calling for a study of the matter toward simplification. This petition went to the Committees of the Senate and House on Rules, Acting Concurrently, was reported favorably, passed its several

ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Mrs. ESTHER M. ANDREWS

Member of Governor's Council

Miss ESTHER G. BARKOWS

Dr. JEREMIAH E. BURKE

Superintendent of Public Schools of Boston

Miss ADA L. COMSTOCK

President Radcliffe College

Mrs. ROBERT L. DE NORMANDIE

President Boston League of Women Voters

Mr. ERNEST G. HAPGOOD

Head Master Girls' Latin School

Miss ABBY C. HOWES

Former Head of English Department, Girls' Latin School

Mr. JOSHUA H. JONES, Jr.

Associate Editor City Record

Mrs. RONALD T. LYMAN

Prof. WILLIAM B. MUNRO

Mr. MACGREGOR JENKINS

Mr. ANDREW J. PETERS

Mrs. ELIZABETH W. PIGEON

Member Boston School Committee

Mr. CHARLES F. READ

Clerk and Treasurer Bostonian Society

Miss CATHERINE E. RUSSELL

Mrs. HENRY D. TUDOR

Mrs. EVA WHITING WHITE

readings in both branches, and is now, with the governor's signature, a full-fledged resolve. The commission, to be appointed to make the study, is to file its recommendations by the first Wednesday in December of the present year.

Election machinery is not uppermost in the minds of most of us at this season of the year; but we note with real satisfaction, nevertheless, the successful outcome of this move which started several months ago amidst deep concern on the part of all serious voters. This is, of course, but the first step. We can only hope that the commission may find a way to put into simple and concise language what now seems to the layman needlessly legal phraseology.

BRANCH LIBRARIES FOR BETTER HOMES

WHAT is Better Homes Week in America? was the heading on the first page of the program for the week April 26 to May 2.

All over Boston during that week individuals, organizations and big and little business joined in calling attention to the desirability of strengthening and making more attractive home life in our city; and to this effort the thirty-two branch libraries of the Boston public library system effectively lent their aid.

Let us relate the story of a visitor who made a round of calls at these Branches and her description of the exhibits.

The tour began at the Kirstein Branch on City Hall avenue. In the window were books on gardens, charming watercolor sketches of old-fashioned gardens and several "dish gardens" wherein miniature rabbits, storks, turtles, dogs and cats sported amid forest trees three inches high and hid in the crevices of two-inch cliffs.

The second stop was at the West End Branch, next door to the Otis House, at the corner of Cambridge and Lynde streets. This fine old building, erected in 1806, was known as the West Church. From 1806 to 1896, when the Library bought the building, four well-known Unitarian clergymen occupied its pulpit; one of them was Charles Lowell, father of the poet. The Better Homes Week exhibits occupied quite a space in the front of the reading room. The one which attracted most attention was the three-room apartment tastefully furnished for the sum of $300. A project prepared by the children of a neighboring school presented eight episodes, beginning with a cave dwelling and ending with the living room of a modern home.

All around the children's reading room were displayed compositions having to do with home life. Frieda Appel tells us what she thinks of it in the following words:

"When a young married couple start housekeeping they try to think of ways to make their home especially pretty, neat, and comfortable. A linoleum, some cans of wax, and small rugs for the floors are probably the first things they buy in furnishing their home. Then the furnishings of the kitchen, bedrooms, living room, and dining room are purchased after the bride has examined magazines to see what furni-

Kirstein Heads

Always Interested

LOUIS E. KIRSTEIN

The Boston Post

TUESDAY, MAY 19, 1931

I spoke the other day of the clear that is being given the outside of Paul's Cathedral.

Now I observe a similar operation being performed on the ceiling walls of Bates hall, in the Boston Public Library.

This last is no ordinary cleansing. It requires the delicate hand of an artist, or havoc may be wrought. The rich colors that have been eroded for years under this grimy coat bear harsh scrubbing.

***

Thus far, the work of cleansing walls and ceiling at the Public Lib has not yet beyond a panel or in the western end of the room, the law books, and books on psychology, philosophy, English, etc., located.

I notice that the operation has ready brought out some of the exquisite coloring—coloring which patrons of the library could not see. The grimy of smoke and dust upon it.

The Boston Post

THURSDAY, MAY 21, 1931

MR. KIRSTEIN

To the Editor of the Post: Sir—I was elated to know that I E. Kirstein was again chosen as president of the trustees of the Boston Public Library.

He is a man of broad affairs, good judgment was shown in selecting him.

The downtown branch library on Hall avenue, which he gave as a to the city of Boston, seems to be doing more popularly, as it is unique, being in the heart of the business district. It is catering to over 600 per a day.

I also notice ladies strolling in, out with books under their arms, it was at first thought it should be business men only.

Wonderful, I should think.
MORRIS MILLER

MAY 15, 1931

years later. In Victorian days a group of young Englishmen experienced and studied the English public schools and universities, as well as the educational forms of the Continent, and then undertook to develop a school which would take into account the best accomplishments of the past as well as the needs of the present and the probabilities of the immediate future. Albotsholme and Bedales in England and Die Deutsche Land-Erziehungs Heim and L'Ecole des Roches with a score or more of variants reaching even into America, have been the more evident results, but of greater significance have been the influences which have had an important part in reshaping educational technique even among those for whom the names of these schools have never come into consciousness. A genuine pioneer realizes better than do others that when society has caught up with a new idea it is more likely to be busy preserving this new treasure against attack and change than to take account of what it cost when it first emerged under the fire of the torries of an earlier day. Dr. Dewey used to say at the end of the last century that, when he became discouraged about the democratic movement, he found great aid by visiting the schools of Brookline. It was one of the producers of that important ferment, Daniel S. Sanford, who brought me into touch with the English school, Bedales—to my mind the best representative of the new movement. Its headmaster, John H. Badley, is the writer of the only set of letters I received during the war, concerning which I thought and said when I first read them: "These will be even more timely ten and twenty years from now than they are today." In his Rugby and Cambridge days Mr. Badley was valued as a painter and a poet. In his activities in many other fields he has never lost the qualities of these interests and now they add to the power of his latest book, The Will to Live, published by George Allen & Unwin Ltd., Museum street, London. I understand that Little Brown & Company will bring out an American edition. The work grew out of a request from a group of boys and girls in their last year of school for help on the psychoanalytic and similar material which jumps out of unexpected corners at almost every turn today. When Mr. Badley undertook to organize a course in the subject, he was impressed by the range of approaches and applications and has found in this pluralism ground for satisfactions as well as for difficulties. He has not hesitated to make use of old labels and old forms, but the spirit of what he has written is thoroughly modern. The present volume is really the foundation for an even more important book which will appear later, in which The Will to Live leads on into a study of The Values of Life.

VICTORIAN PEEP SHOW

E. F. BENSON is a master in helping us to understand past events in relation to present-moment personal issues. As We Were: A Victorian Peep Show (Longmans, 1930) carries the remarkable Benson family back to the 14th century—insisting all the time on the lack of distinctive persons in its membership before the appearance of its father, who, at the time of his death, was Archbishop of Canterbury. In each generation some limitation or superstition is presented in its significance to the period. Then a new day dawns, in which that particular debt has disappeared, but human nature still has plenty of follies and obsessions. It is fortunate to be able to deal so frankly with these matters in the lives of those who mean most to the author and always to be so kindly and understanding about them. This background serves well to lead us into the Victorian days in a very different mood from that of either the usual apologist or of the debunker. "The reticences and reserves which were practised in the intercourse between men and women in the Seventies seem now to our minds as remote and outlandish as whiskers and crinolines, for the habits of one generation are always a legitimate source of amusement to the next."

There is excellent psychology in the development of the author's own remembrances from the time when "early impressions are like glimpses seen through the window by night when lightning is about" to the clearly reasoned observations of mature life. One wishes that some one as understanding as Mr. Benson could give us a sketch of Frances Willard equal to the appreciative account he has written here of his and her intimate friend, Lady Henry Somerset.

THE APPEARANCE of J. M. Barrie in story and play was a great experience years ago for the youth of Britain and America. A Window in Thrums, The Little Minister, Marquett Ogilvy, Peter Pan—these brought their author into unusually immediate relations with great numbers of readers, and theater-goers. John Kennedy, for several years a minister at Forfar—one of Barrie's childhood homes—has written Thrums and the Barrie Country (Heath Cranton, London, 1930), in which the background and movement of Barrie's characters are presented in interesting and suggestive form. When so much is being written to glorify the past, it is well to consider what Barrie, the son of a weaver, has to say: "The first noticeable sign of the improvement steam had brought was that one could walk through Kirriemuir and see straight-backed men" in place of the weavers bent and old before their time. The Industrial Revolution has debts in its account, but there are also credits.

IRISH ANCESTRY

THE NEED of a clearing house in matters of local and family history is well illustrated by the general ignorance I find concerning The American Irish Historical Society, 132 East 10th street, New York City. The list of publications by this society covers a wide field and those of the studies which I have examined carefully have been very well done. A cousin in the South asked me to look up some data concerning Irish immigrant in a Pennsylvania city. I found an entire chapter on the German settlers, but the Irish had received only casual mention, although it was evident that one ward had few others than Irish in it. There has been a tendency to masquerade the Irish as Scotch-Irish, so that it is very satisfactory to find that, while many studies attempt to clear up results of this confusion, some of the best work on the real Scotch-Irish has been done in this connection. The Journal of the American Irish Historical Society, 1929-30 preserves the record of activities, and reports twenty or more historical studies of Andrew Jackson, Louise Imogen Guiney, and many other interesting persons. Valuable material is worked out from Canada to Virginia. One of the most helpful papers is by the society's librarian, J. D. Hackett, on How to Trace Your Irish Relatives and Ancestors.

WHO'S WHO IN AMERICA is a most convenient reference book, to the use of which many families have not yet been trained. I turned to it for information about Charles Lathrop Pack, author of Thomas Hatch of Barnstable (Society of Colonial Wars, New Jersey, 1930). How Jonathan Hatch of the second generation in America would have delighted in the forestry activities of this particular individual among his thousands of descendants. Apart from the value of the book to genealogists, it contains much of interest about the English background of the two Hatch pioneers and very readable material on life in the colonies. Not only the Hatches but such men as Stephen Hopkins of the Mayflower stand out clearly as real characters in a life it is worth our while to understand.

MAY 15, 1931

KIRSTEIN BRANCH

"If you haven't space for a real garden, plant a dish garden."

ture and colors are up-to-date. When the van appears, everything is put in order, and, as she looks around, she is pleased. When her eyes fall on the windows and the walls, she goes to buy curtains and gay pictures besides the fringed window shades. Now this young lady, with the aid of her husband, hangs the pictures and puts up the shades and curtains. When this is all done, the young couple sit down and look proudly at their new home."

From the West End the car threaded its way through traffic and sped across the bridge, arriving at the Charlestown Library, which faces the gray granite shaft of Bunker Hill. Here the librarian proudly called attention to many household articles made by neighborhood children.

Down hill to the Navy Yard dashed our car, over the bridge through Chelsea to the East Boston Library—the first branch library in the United States. When it opened in 1871, East Boston was a fine suburb with lovely homes and beautiful gardens. Now it is largely given over to manufacturing plants, machine shops and wharves and docks.

That there is still a home-loving community was manifested by the close interest nearly 150 women gave to a lecture on "The Family Market Basket," illustrated by colored slides. A model kitchen, a miniature model house, and a children's corner furnished with a low table, chairs and a collection of beautifully printed and illustrated books, were much admired by users of the library as well as by Better Homes visitors.

Past the long level marshes at the foot of the Heights, across the narrow-gauge railroad bridge, and there, almost at the water's edge, is the small Orient Heights Branch, a lovely, sunshiny, airy room with outlook on the marshes and the harbor. The librarian feels that a home without games is a dull place, and so she arranged a bridge luncheon table, gay with pink decorations. Conspicuous among these was a pile of bridge score-cards, with lists of books on home crafts, arts and recreations.

At a snail's pace, necessary to avoid running over little Italian boys and girls and babies who run, play and even sit fearlessly in the middle of the street, we reached the Jeffries Point Branch, on the very edge of the docks and scarcely a stone's throw from the airport. A tiny place, but "wondrous neat and clean," its contribution was a miniature home with a beautiful garden of real green moss, flanked with real cowslips.

It is always a joy to cross the main waterway of Boston on the North Ferry, which lands one in the heart of the old North End. The North End Branch, once a Portuguese Church, now one of the busiest of branch libraries, had in the middle of its room for adult readers a tempting luncheon table attractively set with everything but food. In a case close by were some fine examples of needlework and crocheting made by Italian women of the district.

At the Tyler Street Branch, where Chinese, Syrians and Greeks peacefully read books in the English language, a superlatively tidy miniature backyard offered its lesson.

Between Tyler street and the South End Branch, on Harrison avenue, is one of the most picturesque sidewalk markets in America. The South End Branch ministers to the flotsam and jetsam of a rooming-house district, and all the year round the room for adults is crowded to capacity with persons termed by some "derelicts," but by the librarian and her assistants "unfortunate gentlemen." As we walked down to the quarters below the street, in which the library is housed, we saw a sign which read "Follow the cord," and the cord led us to a corner of the children's room which had been converted into a small living room furnished very simply but in perfect taste and all for less than $25.

Across the Fort Point Channel, we reached the South Boston Branch, up a steep and dreary flight of stairs. This branch will have given sixty years of service in 1932, and we agreed with the librarian that, if ever a library needed a better home, it is the South Boston Branch. The fact that the service given could not be better is no excuse for not providing its patrons with a better home. A charmingly furnished miniature home and a carefully selected collection of colored prints of interiors and gardens were on display there.

At City Point a doll's house was being admired by the children, and at Andrew Square a clean and a dirty backyard pointed a moral so obviously that little Rollo's instructor would have hailed it with delight.

Gamaliel Bradford must have been thinking of our Boston cemeteries when he entitled his latest book The Quick and the Dead, and surely no cemetery

THE WATCH ON THE RHINE

JUNE, 1931

ANDREW SQUARE BRANCH

An untidy yard and a tidy yard suggests these words more than the North Dorchester Cemetery, lying in the midst of a traffic which ceases not by night or by day. A few steps beyond this last resting place of Richard Mather, founder of the Mather family, lies the municipal building in which the Uphams Corner Branch has quarters. A disused marble swimming pool, which has been converted into a children's room, had a unique display of kaleidoscopic color combinations painted by children of a neighboring school.

Neponset Branch, on the edge of one of Boston's large playgrounds, had in its front window flower gardens with real grass, flowers, beet and carrot plants and a real bathing pool three inches in diameter.

At Dorchester Branch, which occupies quarters in a municipal building between a police station and a baby clinic, a life-size baby doll reposed in a comfortable basket made of a clothes basket. The poor child had no pillow, but the librarian assured us that a pillow was a very bad thing for a child.

Mt. Bowdoin, Codman Square and Lower Mills Branches had arranged collections of books on home-making. In the window of Mattapan Branch a child's "dinetette" was the main attraction.

Behind the issue desk at Hyde Park was a porch-set of comfortable furniture with bright-colored canvas cushions. The librarian had not dared to substitute on the table home-making books for Adventures in Tibet and Great Religions of the World, because the latter were chosen by the interior decorator for the colors of their bindings.

Our drive lay through the woods of Stony Brook Reservation, which might have been hundreds of miles from Boston. It led us to the West Roxbury Branch gayly decked with flowers and bright pictures. On a corner of the issue desk was a small replica of a Chinese courtyard, with a moon door, a goldfish pond and a spirit wall to keep the devils out. A very unusual exhibit of dolls of all nations had the following explanatory caption:

Of the present population of Massachusetts, over two-thirds are foreign-born or of foreign-born parentage. From every land on earth these people have come to establish their homes in the Old Bay State. Not a race among them but has something of value to contribute to our national life.

Kirstein Heads

Always Interested

LOUIS E. KIRSTEIN

The Boston Post

TUESDAY, MAY 19, 1931

I spoke the other day of the clean that is being given the outside of Paul's Cathedral.

Now I observe a similar operation being performed on the ceiling walls of Bates hall, in the Boston Public Library.

This last is no ordinary cleaning. It requires the delicate hand of an artist, or have may be wrought. The rich colors that have been here for years under this grimy not bear harsh scrubbing.

♦ ♦ ♦ ♦

Thus far, the work of cleaning walls and ceiling at the Public Library has not got beyond a panel or two of the western end of the room, where the law books, and books on psychology, philosophy, English, etc., located.

I notice that the operation is ready brought out some of the exquisite coloring—coloring which patrons of the library could not easily know was there, so heavy the grime of smoke and dust upon it.

The Boston Post

THURSDAY, MAY 21, 1931

MR. KIRSTEIN

To the Editor of the Post: Sir—I was elated to know that E. Kirstein was again chosen as president of the trustees of the Boston Public Library.

He is a man of broad affairs, good judgment was shown in selecting him.

The downtown branch library on Hall avenue, which he gave as a gift to the city of Boston, seems to be doing more popularity, as it is unique being in the heart of the business district, it is catering to over 600 people a day.

I also notice ladies strolling in out with books under their arms. It was at first thought it should be business men only.

Wonderful, I should think.

MOHRIS MILLER

PENNA. AVE. AT BOARDWALK

THE Hotel STRAND Atlantic City

Most Admirably Situated on the Famous Boardwalk—Rates So Reasonable You'll Stay Longer—Music—Teas—Comfort—Courtesy—Noted For Its American Plan Table—European Plan, if Desired.

Booklet and Menu on Request

T. E. RANDOW Manager H. B. RICHMOND Proprietor

Massachusetts does much to foster the preservation of the best that they bring to us and much to help them adjust themselves in their new environment. The Division of Immigration and Americanization was created by statute to bring the Commonwealth into sympathetic relationship with the foreign born.

Each of these dolls represents a group of Massachusetts residents. A few of the racial groups are still without representation here, but efforts are being made to fill these vacancies as soon as possible.

With one or two exceptions each doll was dressed by, or under the direction of, a person of the race represented. Love for both fatherland and the adopted has been stitched into these costumes by women of many different races.

Members of all the racial groups represented have brought to the Division of Immigration and Americanization their problems of life in the new land.

Rosindale presented a doll house furnished after the manner of seventy-five years ago and a miniature replica of a room in the House of Seven Gables.

Jamaica Plain Branch had such a gorgeous display of house plants that it was in itself an object lesson to every plant-loving housewife in the district. Little Boylston Branch, under the railroad track and cheek-by-jowl to a gasoline station, had its collection of books and posters beside the entrance.

Fellowes Athenium Branch, the library given and endowed by Caleb Fellowes, a retired sea captain who believed in self education through the reading of good books, has quite the most literary air of any of the branches. The librarian handed us the following description of her exhibit:

On exhibition at the Fellowes Athenium for Better Homes Week is a miniature house with appropriate furnishings. Naturally the children adore it, but it is of interest to the older people too, as a study in the development of our present-day furniture. The tables, chairs, benches, highboys and secretaries in old English oak are exact reproductions copied from actual pieces of the period. Even the pegs and dovetailing are such as were used in those far-off days. The lovely pieces of Chinese lacquer are taken from models such as Chippendale used. Queen Mary has purchased an entire set of these miniature pieces as a gift to the South Kensington Museum, so highly is it esteemed as a bit of the history of furniture. The loan collection now at the library also contains models of Colonial mahogany and a number of reproductions of the homely Windsor chair, as well as the much-prized rush-bottomed chairs and settees. There is one piece of walnut veneer, to tie the periods together, and modern upholstered bedroom sets in several gay patterns. There is pewter for the table to match its period, tiny Chelsea mantle ornaments, dishes in Chinese willow pattern, tiny beyond belief, genuine Limoges from France, and to come down to the present, a modern bathroom and a kitchen done in green as vivid as a spring day. The two-room house itself presents a changed appearance every day, as the furniture is whisked about and when "At Home" hours are over, it closes right, the lawn folds up into a clapboarded front, with a door and windows just like a really truly cottage.

The Mt. Pleasant Branch Librarian had converted one corner of her library into a comfortably furnished living room with reading lamps, arm chairs, little tables and book cases filled with alluring books.

Space fails for describing the exhibits of handiwork, model houses, water colors, loaned by resident artists, and posters made by school children which were displayed at Memorial, Roxbury Crossing, Parker Hill, Allston, Brighton and Faneuil Branches.

At each Branch it was stressed that these exhibitions should be so arranged as to accomplish their main object, namely, that of advertising and getting into circulation books on home making and related subjects. An exhibition which does not connect with books is out of place in a library.

It was fitting that the trip should end at Faneuil Branch, since it was that Branch which first offered its cooperation to the Better Homes Committee several years ago.

IN REVIEW

Dr. JOHN DEWEY, writing in the May Scribner's on his proposal for a third party, finds in this proposal answer to the title of his article, Is there hope for politics?

Pointing out the growing disregard for politics as the most marked trait of our recent political life, he attributes this indifference, on the part of the normally desirous of helping to better conditions, to the feeling "What's the use?" accompanied by a shrug of the shoulder. And politics has become, has seemed to become a thing outside ourselves, crowded out of our lives by our more personal interests. Then, too, real governmental affairs are more technical than formerly, and the layman gives way to the decisions of an expert. Thus special interests have been able to have their way. The average citizen has lost faith in the political parties. Although difficult to start a new party, Dr. Dewey thinks such a cause identical with the revival of intelligent hope for political life.

The creators of a new party, however, must bear in mind that all vital political questions have an economic origin. That, in establishing principles, it must not fear to take up some measure now stigmatized as socialistic. The article particularizes certain matters that must be taken into account in writing the party platform. Dr. Dewey warns against a too hastily created party, without at first a long period of educational tactics, and by this he means, as he carefully explains, not only a planting of knowledge but a translating of it into emotion, interest, volition. Ideas must be linked with the practical. An interested minority is no cause for encouragement, for every worthwhile movement in history has been the work of minorities. Hope for politics lies finally in a "minority having the requisite courage, conviction, and readiness for sacrificial work."

World's Work is undertaking a series of personality sketches of cities, and sending Freeman Tilden on a tour of the United States to discover the human answers to the question of what makes a city interesting, and what are its most interesting cities. In an preliminary article in the May issue, Mr. Tilden makes several apt observations. "A city is essentially a multiplied person, and no two persons resemble each other in essentials." The "material facts"

PENNA. AVE. AT BOARDWALK

THE Hotel STRAND Atlantic City

Most Admirably Situated on the Famous Boardwalk—Rates So Reasonable You'll Stay Longer—Music—Teas—Comfort—Courtesy—Noted For Its American Plan Table—European Plan, if Desired.

Booklet and Menu on Request

T. E. RANDOW Manager H. B. RICHMOND Proprietor

Massachusetts does much to foster the preservation of the best that they bring to us and much to help them adjust themselves in their new environment. The Division of Immigration and Americanization was created by statute to bring the Commonwealth into sympathetic relationship with the foreign born.

Each of these dolls represents a group of Massachusetts residents. A few of the racial groups are still without representation here, but efforts are being made to fill these vacancies as soon as possible.

With one or two exceptions each doll was dressed by, or under the direction of, a person of the race represented. Love for both fatherland and the adopted has been stitched into these costumes by women of many different races.

Members of all the racial groups represented have brought to the Division of Immigration and Americanization their problems of life in the new land.

Rosindale presented a doll house furnished after the manner of seventy-five years ago and a miniature replica of a room in the House of Seven Gables.

Jamaica Plain Branch had such a gorgeous display of house plants that it was in itself an object lesson to every plant-loving housewife in the district. Little Boylston Branch, under the railroad track and cheek-by-jowl to a gasoline station, had its collection of books and posters beside the entrance.

Fellowes Athenium Branch, the library given and endowed by Caleb Fellowes, a retired sea captain who believed in self education through the reading of good books, has quite the most literary air of any of the branches. The librarian handed us the following description of her exhibit:

On exhibition at the Fellowes Athenium for Better Homes Week is a miniature house with appropriate furnishings. Naturally the children adore it, but it is of interest to the older people too, as a study in the development of our present-day furniture. The tables, chairs, benches, highboys and secretaries in old English oak are exact

JUNE, 1931

THE BREEZE

It was fitting that the trip should end at Faneuil Branch, since it was that Branch which first offered its cooperation to the Better Homes Committee several years ago.

IN REVIEW

Dr. JOHN DEWEY, writing in the May Scribner's on his proposal for a third party, finds in this proposal answer to the title of his article, Is there hope for politics?

Pointing out the growing disregard for politics as the most marked trait of our recent political life, he attributes this indifference, on the part of those normally desirous of helping to better conditions, to the feeling "What's the use?" accompanied by a shrug of the shoulder. And politics has become, has seemed to become a thing outside ourselves, crowded out of our lives by our more personal interests. Then, too, real governmental affairs are more technical than formerly, and the layman gives way to the decisions of an expert. Thus special interests have been able to have their way. The average citizen has lost faith in the political parties. Although difficult to start a new party, Dr. Dewey thinks such a cause identical with the revival of intelligent hope for political life.

The creators of a new party, however, must bear in mind that all vital political questions have an economic origin and that, in establishing principles, they must not fear to take up some measures now stigmatized as socialistic. The article particularizes certain matters that must be taken into account in writing the party platform. Dr. Dewey warns against a too hastily created party, without at first a long period of educational tactics, and by this he means, as he carefully explains, not only a planting of knowledge but a translating of it into emotion, interest, volition. Ideas must be linked with the practical. An interested minority is no cause for encouragement, for every worthwhile movement in history has been the work of minorities. Hope for politics lies finally in a "minority having the requisite courage, conviction, and readiness for sacrificial work."

World's Work is undertaking a series of personality sketches of cities, and sending Freeman Tilden on a tour of the United States to discover the human answers to the question of what makes a city interesting, and what are its most interesting cities. In his preliminary article in the May issue, Mr. Tilden makes several apt observations. "A city is essentially a multiplied person, and no two persons resemble each other in essentials." The "material facts"

Kirstein Heads

Always Interestec

LOUIS E. KIRSTEIN

The Boston Po

TUESDAY, MAY 19, 1931

I spoke the other day of the clean that is being given the outside of Paul's Cathedral.
Now I observe a similar operation being performed on the ceiling walls of Bates hall, in the Boston Public Library.
This last is no ordinary cleansing. It requires the delicate hand of an artist, for havoc may be wrought. The rich colors that have been eroded for years under this grime not bear harsh scrubbing.

Thus far, the work of cleansing walls and ceiling at the Public Library has not got beyond a panel or the western end of the room, the law books, and books on psychology, philosophy, English, etc., located.

I notice that the operation is ready brought out some of the exquisite coloring—coloring which patrons of the library could not possibly know was there, so heavily the grime of smoke and dust upon it.

The Boston Po

THURSDAY, MAY 21, 1931

MR. KIRSTEIN

To the Editor of the Post:
Sir—I was elated to know that E. Kirstein was again chosen as president of the trustees of the Boston Public Library.

He is a man of broad affairs and good judgment was shown in selecting him.

The downtown branch library at Hall avenue, which he gave as a gift to the city of Boston, seems to be doing more popularly, as it is unique being in the heart of the business district. It is catering to over 650 people a day.

I also notice ladies strolling in out with books under their arms. It was at first thought it should be business men only.

Wonderful, I should think.

MORRIS MILL

MAY 15, 1931

KIRSTEIN BRANCH

"If you haven't space for a real garden, plant a dish garden."

ture and colors are up-to-date. When the van appears, everything is put in order, and, as she looks around, she is pleased. When her eyes fall on the windows and the walls, she goes to buy curtains and gay pictures besides the fringed window shades. Now this young lady, with the aid of her husband, hangs the pictures and puts up the shades and curtains. When this is all done, the young couple sit down and look proudly at their new home.

From the West End the car threaded its way through traffic and sped across the bridge, arriving at the Charlestown Library, which faces the gray granite shaft of Bunker Hill. Here the librarian proudly called attention to many household articles made by neighborhood children.

Down hill to the Navy Yard dashed our car, over the bridge through Chelsea to the East Boston Library, the first branch library in the United States. When it opened in 1871, East Boston was a fine suburb with lovely homes and beautiful gardens. Now it is largely given over to manufacturing plants, machine shops and wharves and docks.

That there is still a home-loving community was manifested by the close interest nearly 150 women gave to a lecture on "The Family Market Basket," illustrated by colored slides. A model kitchen, a miniature model house, and a children's corner furnished with a low table, chairs and a collection of beautifully printed and illustrated books, were much admired by users of the library as well as by Better Homes visitors.

Past the long level marshes at the foot of the Heights, across the narrow-gauge railroad bridge, and there, almost at the water's edge, is the small Orient Heights Branch, a lovely, sunshiny, airy room with outlook on the marshes and the harbor. The librarian feels that a home without games is a dull place, and so she arranged a bridge luncheon table, gay with pink decorations. Conspicuous among these was a pile of bridge score-cards, with lists of books on home crafts, arts and recreations.

At a snail's pace, necessary to avoid running over little Italian boys and girls and babies who run, play and even sit fearlessly in the middle of the street, we reached the Jeffries Point Branch, on the very edge of the docks and scarcely a stone's throw from the airport. A tiny place, but "wondrous neat and clean," its contribution was a miniature home with a beautiful garden of real green moss, flanked with real cowslips.

It is always a joy to cross the main waterway of Boston on the North Ferry, which lands one in the heart of the old North End. The North End Branch, once a Portuguese Church, now one of the busiest of branch libraries, had in the middle of its room for adult readers a tempting luncheon table attractively set with everything but food. In a case close by were some fine examples of needlework and crocheting made by Italian women of the district.

At the Tyler Street Branch, where Chinese, Syrians and Greeks peacefully read books in the English language, a superlatively tidy miniature backyard offered its lesson.

Between Tyler street and the South End Branch, on Harrison avenue, is one of the most picturesque sidewalk markets in America. The South End Branch ministers to the flotsam and jetsam of a rooming house district, and all the year round the room for adults is crowded to capacity with persons termed by some "derelicts," but by the librarian and her assistants "unfortunate gentlemen." As we walked down to the quarters below the street, in which the library is housed, we saw a sign which read "Follow the cord," and the cord led us to a corner of the children's room which had been converted into a small living room furnished very simply but in perfect taste and all for less than $25.

Across the Fort Point Channel, we reached the South Boston Branch, up a steep and dreary flight of stairs. This branch will have given sixty years of service in 1932, and we agreed with the librarian that, if ever a library needed a better home, it is the South Boston Branch. The fact that the service given could not be better is no excuse for not providing its patrons with a better home. A charmingly furnished miniature home and a carefully selected collection of colored prints of interiors and gardens were on display there.

At City Point a doll's house was being admired by the children, and at Andrew Square a clean and a dirty backyard pointed a moral so obviously that little Rollo's instructor would have hailed it with delight.

Gamaliel Bradford must have been thinking of our Boston cemeteries when he entitled his latest book The Quick and the Dead, and surely no cemetery

May 22, 1931

POST, BOSTON, MASS

ANDREW SQUARE BRANCH
An untidy yard and a tidy yard

suggests these words more than the North Dorchester Cemetery, lying in the midst of a traffic which ceases not by night or by day. A few steps beyond this last resting place of Richard Mather, founder of the Mather family, lies the municipal building in which the Uphams Corner Branch has quarters. A disused marble swimming pool, which has been converted into a children's room, had a unique display of kaleidoscopic color combinations painted by children of a neighboring school.

Neponset Branch, on the edge of one of Boston's large playgrounds, had in its front window flower gardens with real grass, flowers, beet and carrot plants and a real bathing pool three inches in diameter.

At Dorchester Branch, which occupies quarters in a municipal building between a police station and a baby clinic, a life-size baby doll reposed in a comfortable basket made of a clothes basket. The poor child had no pillow, but the librarian assured us that a pillow was a very bad thing for a child.

At Bowdoin, Codman Square and Lower Mills Branches had arranged collections of books on home-making. In the window of Mattapan Branch a child's "dinetto" was the main attraction.

Behind the issue desk at Hyde Park was a porchset of comfortable furniture with bright-colored canvas cushions. The librarian had not dared to substitute on the table home-making books for Adventures in Tibet and Great Religions of the World, because the latter were chosen by the interior decorator for the colors of their bindings.

Our drive lay through the woods of Stony Brook Reservation, which might have been hundreds of miles from Boston. It led us to the West Roxbury Branch, gayly decked with flowers and bright pictures. On a corner of the issue desk was a small replica of a Chinese courtyard, with a moon door, a goldfish pond and a spirit wall to keep the devils out. A very unusual exhibit of dolls of all nations had the following explanatory caption:

Of the present population of Massachusetts, over two thirds are foreign born, of foreign-born parentage. From the land on earth these people have come to establish their homes in the Old Bay State. Not a race among them but has something of value to contribute to our national life.

THE WATCH ON THE RHINE

JUNE, 1931

Gossip From Boston

By JAMES P. MOOERS

Sometime ago, the last living member of a valiant regiment passed on to join his comrades in the Great Beyond. But through their works on earth as soldiers and later as members of their association, formed to preserve the comradeship they valued so much and that those comrades whose lives they saw go out in the great cause would never be forgotten, they left two memorials.

At the base of a huge lion, carved from blocks of precious Siena marble and the work of Louis St. Gaudens, that stands at the left turn of the beautiful main stairway in the Boston Public Library, there is inscribed, "In Memory of the Officers and Men of the 20th Regiment of Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, 1861-1865." Above this inscription, the principle battles that the regiment participated in are named.

One would be led to believe that such a monument in such a setting might be enough for an association to accomplish. But no, these comrades of yesterday, believed in doing something for the comrades of other days and wars. So today, on the third floor in this famous library among its great alcoves, one finds the "20th Regiment Collection." This collection was started from a fund left in 1897, by the Association of the 20th Regiment of Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, from which the interest was to be used to purchase books of a military and patriotic character. This collection of books is considered one of the best of its kind to be found in any library today. It includes all of our wars, and today, it might be easily said that the best collection of World War books are to be found there.

Here can be found the history of every unit that served in the American Expeditionary Forces, who had their story published and have been possible to find to purchase.

Mr. Louis F. Ranlett, chief of the Ordering Department, a former lieutenant of the 23d Infantry, 2d Division; also author of a popular war story, "Let's Go!"; has assisted me greatly in having all the books published by 3d Division men, added to the 20th Regiment Collection, as fast as we learn about their publication. The last one recently added was the "Keypoint of the Marne," by Colonel Butts, of the 30th Infantry.

With the "Watch on the Rhine," best of its kind in existence today, the unanimous opinion of all veterans in the know of such publications, members of the "Third" should show some of the spirit of the "20th Mass." and help McCarthy, DuBois, Marble and a lot of others that have been shepherding it for years.

Boston Branch turned out Memorial Day to lay a wreath on all known graves of 3d Division men around Boston. Each wreath had the Division insignia suitably designed on it, and one was sent to Washington to be put on General Dickman's grave.

Comments on dues that have been appearing from time to time in the paper, have been the personal views of individuals. Dues are an organization question. National Headquarters is a long way from most of its members; give the branches that are working too, some little mite of the National dues and they might be induced to work harder for subscribers to the "Watch on the Rhine."

BRANCH LIBRARY OPENED MONDAY

Will Serve Readville Residents

At two o'clock Monday afternoon, May 18, the thirty-fourth Branch of the Boston Public Library System was re-opened at 12 Hamilton street in Readville.

The citizens of that section have long been looking forward to the time when it would not be necessary to walk a mile to the Hyde Park Branch, corner of Harvard avenue and Winthrop streets, for their library books.

The sign "Phillips Brooks Memorial Reading Room" has a story behind it. Next door to the building is a chapel in which on Sunday afternoons the Blue Hill Evangelical Society holds union services. On January 15, 1893, the Society hearing that Bishop Brooks was to preach an inspiring sermon to the promptly invited him to speak at Readville in the afternoon. The Bishop accepted the invitation and preached an inspiring sermon to the small congregation which gathered to hear him.

The evening was bitterly cold and on his way to Dedham to keep another engagement, the Bishop caught cold and within a week was dead.

Mrs. Ellen F. Stetson, a resident of Readville and a parishioner of Trinity church, in memory of the Bishop's last afternoon service, caused a charming little building to be erected in the rear of the Chapel. This she gave in trust to the Blue Hill Evangelical Society with the understanding that it should be used as a reading room and be known as the Phillips Brooks Memorial Library.

For some years the Library was conducted by the joint efforts of the Society and the Boston Public Library. The results were not altogether satisfactory and the Library was closed in December, 1924. On Monday of this week it was reopened. The first visitor was Mr. J. Roland Corthell who looked about the charming room with its attractive furniture and book-lined shelves and said to the Supervisor of Branches, "Tell me if there is a more attractive reading room in any other Branch Library." I am informed that she promptly said, "No."

The Library will be open according to the following schedule of hours:

Monday, 2-9 P. M.; Tuesday, 9 A. M.-6 P. M.; Wednesday, 2-9 P. M.; Thursday, 9 A. M.-6 P. M.; Friday, 2-9 P. M.; Saturday, 9 A. M.-1 P. M.

There will be a daily delivery of books from Central Library, and it is the intention of Miss Peck, the librarian, and of her assistant, Miss Coffin, to see that every borrower is given individual attention.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, JUNE 2, 1931

Poster Exhibit at Norfolk County Health Camp Halls

Mrs. William C. Rogers, president of the Norfolk County Health Association, with offices at 322 Little Building, announces the annual meeting of the association to be held Wednesday at 3 P. M. at the Norfolk County Hospital, South Braintree. Dr. Walter A. Griffin, medical director of Sharon Sanatorium, and Dr. Dean S. Lane of Canton, will speak. In the recreation halls of Camp Norfolk will be exhibits of two hundred health posters made by students in nineteen towns for the association's second countywide health poster contest. The posters will be on exhibition at the Boston Public Library from June 15 to June 21.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT

JUNE 3, 1931

THE LIBRARIAN

Librarians who attended the A. L. A. convention in Los Angeles in June, 1930, were agreed that one of the most attractive developments in library planning had been effected by the library authorities of that city. It was apparent that they realized that the finishing touch to a beautiful building is sufficient open space surrounding it to set off the building in such a manner that its proportions may be seen and admired.

A library in the heart of a local business or closely populated residential district cannot always have both beautiful building and sufficient open space to provide proper air and light, to say nothing of an expanse of green grass and flower beds.

Los Angeles has solved this problem by placing its magnificent main building and many of its small attractive branch library buildings in the very center of city parks.

This arrangement is highly pleasing to the people as the parks add to the beauty of the buildings and the buildings add to the beauty of the parks and make them usable at all seasons and in all weathers. On May 25, 1931, the trustees of the Boston Public Library opened the first new branch library building to be situated in a playground—Parker Hill branch, 1497 Tremont street, on the Mission Hill Playground. The park commissioner, recognizing how successfully this combination of library and open space has worked in other cities, made it possible for the library authorities to beautify a rather bleak playground with an architectural gem of a building, designed by the firm of Cram and Ferguson.

It is hoped that this is only the first of a number of libraries where co-operation between the library and park authorities will add to the beauty of the city and the satisfaction of the citizens.

The New York Times

TUESDAY, JUNE 23, 1931.

MRS. EDWIN AUSTIN ABBEY.

Widow of American Painter Dies at Her Home in London.

Mrs. Mary Gertrude Abbey, widow of Edwin Austin Abbey, the American painter, died on Saturday at her home in London. She remained an American citizen until her death.

Mrs. Abbey was a daughter of the late Frederick Mead of this city. She was educated at Vassar College. She met Mr. Abbey while touring in Europe. After their marriage they made their home at Chelsea Lodge, the artist's London residence.

After Mr. Abbey's death in 1910 his widow returned to her home here for a short while to look after his estate, which was estimated at $1,000,000, including his paintings and drawings.

Burial services will be held in London today at Old Kingsbury Church Yard.

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 10, 1931

An announcement from the headquarters of the American Library Association concerning preparations for the forthcoming annual conference at New Haven, discloses that Boston speakers will have a prominent part on the program. Among these are E. Kathleen Jones, Mary Byers Smith and Edna Phillips of the Massachusetts Division of Public Libraries, State Department of Education; Richard H. Hensley and Alice M. Jordan of the Boston Public Library; Mrs. Frances Rathbone Coe of the Massachusetts State Library; Eldon R. James of the Harvard Law School Library; E. Louise Lucas of the Fogg Art Museum Library, Harvard University; Robert E. Rogers of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

President James Rowland Angell of Yale University will welcome delegates to the opening session of the conference. Stuart Chase, New York economist and author of "The Nemesis of American Business," and other books on the machine age, will also speak. An important feature of the conference will be the awarding of the John Newberry medal, given annually for the most distinguished contribution to children's literature written by an American citizen or resident.

As the oldest and largest library association in the world, the A. L. A. is working to provide "the best reading for the largest number at the least cost" through adequate book service in the United States and Canada. Since its foundation in 1876 by a small group of librarians meeting in Philadelphia, the association has grown steadily and now has members number more than 13,000.

THE BOSTON HERALD, TUESDAY, JUNE 16, 1931

Spirited Bronzes by White, and Posters By Children Are Exhibited Here

By F. W. COBURN

Bronzes, notably of racing horses, by Richardson White, at Doll & Richards, 138 Newbury street, and health posters made by Norfolk county school children in the art gallery of the Boston Public Library were late-season exhibitions opening in Boston yesterday, the former to continue through June 27; the latter through June 21.

This is Mr. White's second exhibition of his sculptures of racing horses and other animals. A Harvard man of recent class, a horse owner and fancier, he is putting both expert knowledge and artistic feeling into his spirited depictions. Some of these are closely modeled, as actual portraits of a horse should be. Others are more modernistically treated, with intent to convey a sense of the horse in motion, when one is not conscious of details of construction and surface.

The titles of Mr. White's pieces indicate the nature of his studies at the stable and in the pasture: "Falling Horse," "Jumping Horse," "Starting Horse and Jockey," "Running Bull," "Shire Stallion," "Standard-bred," and so on. The gusto with which the action of the running horse, the charging bull, has been studied and expressed imparted itself to the gallery goers, making this one of the stirring exhibitions of the season.

Children well and happy will be encouraged to become still more so by attendance at the showing this week of health posters by young artists at the Public Library. The collection has been arranged by the Norfolk County Health Association, of which Mrs. William C. Rogers of Cohasset is president. The objective, of course, is to develop health consciousness. The exhibition includes the two outstanding prize-winning posters, by William Burton Snow of Medway, and B. Alexander May of Avon, and other prize winners from first through fifth in the following classes: High school, Vera Henning Dedham; B. Alexander May, Avon; Ruth Kibbie, Milton; William B. Snow, Medway; Claire Christensen, Milton; grades 5 to 8, Edith May Crook, Franklin; Frank Ferreira, Scituate; George Dworvets, Brookline; Edward Waker, Dover; Dorothy Berry, Queney grades 1 to 4; Carl Sumner, Brookline.

Eleanor Williams, South Braintree; James Welch, Braintree; Gladys Reynolds, Braintree; Louise Anderson, East Braintree.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT

WEDNESDAY, JULY 29, 1931

Praise goes to the public library in Hammond, Indiana, for the unusual decision to name two new branch libraries for librarians who gave faithful service to the institution for years. The branches will be erected this summer, and one will bear the name of Mrs. Marie Foster, who had been the first librarian at Hammond in 1903 and who returned as head of the circulation department twelve years ago. The other branch will be named for Mrs. Jennie Sawyer, second librarian, who served from 1906 to 1924.

The Librarian hopes to see the day when this splendid way of paying tribute to hard work and efficiency will spread to this part of the country. Perhaps some time there will be dedicatory exercises of the Honoree P. Wadlin or the Frank Chase branch library. The Librarian sincerely hopes so.

The Boston Post

FRIDAY, JULY 31, 1931

The Boston Post of today has a special feature for its readers. It is a book of all opportunities in the city to be used except a certain one designated by the city authorities. It is a book of all opportunities in the city to be used except a certain one designated by the city authorities. It is a book of all opportunities in the city to be used except a certain one designated by the city authorities.

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 3, 1931

Parker Hill Branch of the Boston Public Library

Designed by Cram & Ferguson

On May 25, 1931, the trustees of the Boston Public Library opened the first new branch library building to be situated in a playground—Parker Hill branch, 1497 Tremont street, on the Mission Hill Playground. The park commissioner, recognizing how successfully this combination of library and open space has worked in other cities, made it possible for the library authorities to beautify a rather bleak playground with an architectural gem of a building, designed by the firm of Cram and Ferguson.

It is hoped that this is only the first of a number of libraries where co-operation between the library and park authorities will add to the beauty of the city and the satisfaction of the citizens.

Boston Transcript

FRIDAY, JUNE 19, 1931

Samuel A. B. Abbott Died Today in Rome

A cable message announces the death today in Rome, Italy, of Samuel Appleton Brown Abbott, formerly of Boston, who has made his home in the "Villa Lottiana" on the Ponte Milvio, in Rome, where since the late nineties he had lived. He had been ill during the past month.

Mr. Abbott was born in Lowell on March 6, 1846, the son of the late Hon. Josiah Gardner Abbott and Caroline (Livermore) Abbott. He was educated at Harvard University, where he was graduated in 1865, A. B., and where he received his A. M. degree in 1872. Following his graduation he studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1868 and then began to practice his chosen profession in Boston.

Mr. Abbott served here as police commissioner for two years, from 1887, and as trustee of the Boston Public Library from 1879 until 1892. He was president of the board from 1889 until 1894 and from 1899 was acting librarian for four years.

Other interests which occupied Mr. Abbott were his membership in the American Institute of Architects, also of the Boston Society of Architects and the Derby of England, daughter of Mr. Alphonse, son of the late George Derby. Others are Henry York and University in that city. In Adams and Miss Mary Ogden Adams of Concord, children of Mr. Abbott's late brother, Grafton St. Louis Abbott. He served as a director of the American Academy in Rome from 1887 until 1903.

Mr. Abbott married on May 21, 1869, Mary Goddard of Boston. Following her death, he married on Oct. 15, 1873, Abby Frances Woods of Providence, R. I. Mr.

LOOTING OF LIBRARIES IS CHARGED

Nation-Wide Thefts by Ring Alleged, Hub Man Arrested

The systematic looting of the shelves of public libraries all over the country of priceless first editions by American authors, which were sold to private collectors and foreign libraries through receivers of stolen books, was uncovered last night by the arrest of Dr. Harold B. Clark by Boston police on a charge of larceny of $2000 worth of books and manuscripts from the Lancaster Public Library.

THEFTS WIDESPREAD

The countrywide thefts were uncovered by the investigation of Inspector Warren H. Loe of Boston police headquarters, who a few months ago exposed the art theft ring. Clark, who has aliases of a Gordon Forrest and Rodney Livingston, has made a partial confession, police say, and told a story of disposing of the stolen first editions through dealers in New York, London, Paris, Berlin, Rio de Janeiro and Budapest. Clark, who has a diploma from the University of Chicago, and claims to be a licensed chiropractor, was arrested at a hotel in Revere, where he has been living for the past few weeks with his wife, Winifred, 35. Mrs. Clark was taken to police headquarters last night with her husband, and after questioning was released. Clark is charged in a warrant sworn by Miss Virginia Keyes, custodian of the Lancaster Library, with taking $2000 worth of American first editions and manuscripts from the shelves of the library. Assisted by Revere police, Inspectors Loe and Leo O'Neil went to the Hotel Pleasanton on Revere Beach and placed Clark under arrest. They recovered some of the stolen books and Clark had in his possession $2000 in cash.

N. E. Libraries Hit

The wholesale theft of books has been going on all over the country for about a year and a half, police say. The

BOSTON HERALD

SATURDAY, JULY 25, 1931

MAIN BURSTS NEAR LIBRARY

River of Water Rushes Down Blagden Street—Some Enters Annex Basement

The bursting of a high pressure water main at Exeter and Blagden streets, Back Bay, early this morning, the second such break in the city within a week, tore up a portion of the street pavement and caused a river of water, nearly two feet deep in places, to rush down Blagden street to the triangular grass plot in front of the public library. In less than a half hour, water department men shut off the water and no great damage resulted. Some of the water seeped into the basement of the library annex and little into the subway at the Copley station. Traffic was tied up in the vicinity for a short time only. The break was in an eight-inch main right at the corner of the B. A. A. building, but the down grade caused the water to flow in the other direction.

DR. HAROLD B. CLARK

Arrested by Boston police last night in connection with alleged countrywide theft of rare volumes from public libraries.

New England libraries have been hardest hit, some of them losing volumes that can never be replaced which date back to colonial times. Police say that Clark's method was to approach the librarian and announce himself as a doctor interested in looking over old manuscripts and books. He is alleged to have smuggled the books out of many libraries under his coat, sometimes taking as many as half a dozen at a time.

Clark is wanted in Lowell, police say, for the theft of books valued at over $2000 and the libraries of Boston, Hartford, Halifax, N. S., have also been looted. Other cities have reported similar losses. Among the papers and books seized last night by police was a holograph manuscript entitled "Startling Revelations of the Wholesale Looting of Priceless Literature from Maine to California." Clark stated that this was his own work, written from his own experience.

Police allege that in 1927 Clark was president of Radio Engineering of Canada, a company now defunct. They also assert that later he was head of the Radio Research Club of Halifax, also defunct.

Sales Through New York Dealers

Clark told the police that he is a New York man and had made many of his sales of the stolen library treasures through five New York book dealers. Some of his thefts, Clark stated, have found their way to the shelves of some of the country's most noted collectors of Americana.

Among the rare books taken by Clark, according to police, are: "Gleanings in Europe," James Fenimore Cooper, 1837; "Walden," Henry Thoreau, 1849; "Notes on the Western States," James H. Hill, 1858; "The Story of the Province of New York," William Smith, A. M., 1861; "A Letter to His Countrymen," James Fenimore Cooper, 1847; "Year's Life," James Russell Lowell, 1891; "Some Chinese Groups," Lafcadio Hearn, 1897, and many others.

Clark will be questioned at length concerning the theft of books from other cities. It is alleged that a year ago he was operating in the Boston Public Library, but at the first sign of missing library treasures, presentations were taken to put a stop to the thefts. Clark was lodged in the City Prison last night on a warrant issued by the police of Lancaster. Other cities and towns have been notified that Clark is in custody.

The arrest of Clark was brought about through a telephone tip that he was at the Revere Hotel. A warrant had been sworn for him in Lancaster under the name of Dr. Clark that he gave when he asked to examine books there.

THIS IS LIFE

PUBLIC LIBRARIES ARE FULL OF TRASH AND JUNK--THE REMEDY

By ROBERT E. ROGERS

ROBERT E. ROGERS

I SAID LAST WEEK that I wanted to write something about certain interesting conclusions some of the influential figures in our American public libraries seem to have come to about their responsibilities to the public. I went down to New Haven last week with some very definite ideas about what our public libraries ought to do in the matter of the selection of books.

They were, as I believed, rather heterodox ideas and not in accord with what I understand to be library policy. But to my astonishment—and I suspect, to theirs—two other speakers before the lending section on the same morning emphasized the same points. In other words, I found myself lending my amateur help to the strongly reasoned conclusions of two executives of large city libraries, Mr. Sherman of Providence and Mr. Lowe of Brooklyn.

I go on the assumption that when one person says something, it's usually wrong; when two persons say the same thing, it may be a coincidence, but when three persons without collusion say the same thing, it should be worth listening to. So much smoke, some fire.

Responsibilities of a Librarian

Apparently, library policy in the past has been worked out on the assumption that the customer is always right. It might be summed up in the phrase, "If a citizen asks for a book it is the business of the librarian to get it for him and immediately." This reminds one of the college president who said, "The students are our customers and we must give them what they want." This is obviously an unsound theory of education, just as some other is beginning to be seen by some as an unsound theory of librarianship.

Mr. Sherman said that he hoped that some small city library would try out a policy of planning a collection of some 30,000 books and stick to that, refusing to be stampeded into rapid enlargement by constant requests for all the newest books, most of which as a matter of fact are second rate and of ephemeral importance. He would have plenty of duplicates of the sound books which are largely in demand, frequent readings out, and the most careful scrutiny of new publications for those of lasting quality.

Both Mr. Sherman and Mr. Lowe agreed that it is not the business of the public library to furnish the public all the new books which come out, simply because they are so enormously advertised that an artificial demand for them is set up. Many of them are simply reprints of magazine articles or magazine fiction, and many more are of a literary quality which should never be admitted into a public institution which is supposedly educational in character.

Furthermore, people who want such books nowadays can get them easily in the private circulating libraries. The books which the library should stock should be of such character as the commercial library seldom furnishes. Such a course of carefully selective buying would set the library free for its real work, that of supplying worthwhile readers with worthwhile books, extending its readers service and its reference and consultation service.

Libraries and Text Books

Another thing the librarians seemed to agree upon, that it is not the business of a public library to furnish college students with their text books. Our students have got so into the habit of having school books furnished by the city that when they get to college they consider the cost of the text books the least of their charges. Instead of making their college life really efficient by buying the necessary books, they try to depend on the local library. The result is that either they are disappointed in securing them and so never get their work in on time (every teacher knows that exasperating excuse), or if their demands are met, the library has to stock up with volumes that are, to be frank, usually only elementary text books.

Furthermore, the librarians were inclined to agree that the stealing and mutilation of books is growing to an alarming extent, and they are inclined to put a good deal of the blame for this upon students who are too lazy or ignorant to make proper use of references in the library, and either steal them for permanent consultation or cut them up to save the trouble of copying down references. The project method in our public schools, said Mr. Sherman, is responsible for a good deal of this mutilation.

We Lose 12,000 a Year

For my own part I understand that the Boston Public Library loses some 12,000 books a year. When one considers

The New Mattapan Branch of the Boston Public Library

THE LIBRARIAN

DURING the past few weeks, three of the Boston Public Library branches have put forth new leaves. The Phillips Brooks Memorial Branch, which has been closed since December, 1924, reopened its hospitable doors on May 18, to the great joy and satisfaction of the residents of the district. A week later, the Parker Hill Branch, between Roxbury Crossing and Tremont street, moved from the ill-lighted, ill-ventilated room which it had occupied since 1907, to a splendid new building across the street. And on Monday of this week, the new Mattapan Branch was opened, just two blocks from the cramped quarters it had occupied for nearly a quarter of a century.

With the exception of the Kirscht Memorial Library, no branch except the one at Readville bears the name of an individual. Indeed, the Phillips Brooks Branch had been designated Readville Branch, when it was discovered that according to the will of the donor the name could not be changed. It appears that on Jan. 15, 1893, members of the Blue Hill Evangelical Society, of Readville, hearing that Bishop Brooks was to preach in Hyde Park in the morning, promptly invited him to speak at their chapel in the afternoon. The bishop accepted the invitation, and preached an inspiring sermon to the small congregation which gathered to hear him. The evening was bitterly cold and on his way to Dedham to keep another engagement, the bishop caught cold and within a week was dead.

In memory of Bishop Brooks's last afternoon service, Mrs. Ellen F. Stetson, a resident of Readville and a parishioner of Trinity Church, caused a charming little building to be erected in the rear of the chapel. This she gave in trust to the Blue Hill Evangelical Society with the understanding that it should be used as a reading room and be known as the Phillips Brooks Memorial Library. Some of the Readville children had never been in a public library before, and on the first school holiday after the Phillips Brooks Memorial Branch opened, they swarmed in promptly at nine o'clock. When lunch time came they asked, "If we go home, may we come back?" On being assured that they could, they galloped off and, in an incredibly short time, dashed back to stay till "supper time."

A borrower who drew books from the old Parker Hill Branch Library on Saturday night, remarked when she returned them at the new building at nine o'clock Monday morning that she was sure the library had Aladdin's lamp among its treasures. "Without an unrestricted genii service such a transformation as this would be impossible," she insisted. To the casual visitor the new library looks as if it had been established for every range is marked with its class, the current magazines are in the magazine rack, the assistants are all at their posts, the clocks are briskly ticking and the typewriter is busily clicking off new registrations. An attendant admitted that the staff room couch cover was not hemmed. That, however, hardly mattered, as the public wasn't going to use the point out those districts most in need of library service. This survey was accompanied by a report on the condition of the buildings occupied by existing branch libraries with recommendations for change of location or a new building for an old one after the manner of the Parker Hill and Mattapan replacements. In 1929 the survey was completed, and its recommendations have already resulted in the Parker Hill and Mattapan libraries, with the purchase of sites for buildings in the Faneuil district and the reopening of the Phillips Brooks Memorial Library.

It is fortunate for the citizens of Boston that the present mayor and City Council appear to believe in extending the city's opportunities for educational development to every point where, before many years, every resident will be living within a half-mile radius of a free public library.

Downstairs is a fine lecture hall with stage and dressing rooms, a small room for the staff and a well-equipped kitchen, as even librarians have to go off duty long enough to eat. The delight of the residents in their new library is evidenced by the fact that during the past two weeks 5134 books have been issued as against 1846 issued during the same period last year.

People visiting the new Mattapan branch for the first time, invariably exclaim: "What a beautiful building. I've never seen one like it before." Credit is due to the architectural firm of Putnam and Cox who, by the way, also designed the Jones Library, at Amherst, one of the most beautiful small libraries in Massachusetts.

Mattapan Branch is Georgian in style, of red brick with white trimmings. The prevailing colors of the interior are dark red and white. The floors are covered with a rich dark red linoleum and the wood trim throughout the building is white. The book cases, tables and chairs are natural finish birch. The floor layout is skillfully planned for the maximum efficient operation with a minimum of expenditure for service. The issue counter is so placed that the persons stationed there have an unobstructed view of both reading rooms and of the book stacks, as well as a fairly comprehensive view of the assembly room.

This assembly room can also be used as a reading room, since it is furnished with chairs equipped with broad arms which can be used to write on. When a lecture is in process here, steel mesh screens are drawn down like curtains over the book shelves.

The issue desk has several unique features, one being a "time tray" on wheels which may be used by two persons at the same time; a set of shelves arranged like steps for accommodating the books sent from the main library; and gates which are electrically opened and shut by foot pressure. Through these gates all persons leaving the library must pass. It is hoped that such careful control of the entrance and exits of this library will reduce to a minimum the number of books "permanently borrowed," of which no records have been made.

It is almost ten years since the city of Boston invested in a new branch library building. During that time the circulation of books through branches has increased from 1,897,586 to 3,428,675 and petitions have poured in from all over the city asking for extension of library service. It was not only difficult but impossible for the Library Board of Trustees to decide upon the relative merits of the designated locations. Therefore, they

Little Walks About Boston

BY WILLIAM JUSTIN MANN

The latest issue of "More Books," the Bulletin of the Boston Public Library, has for the title of its leading article, "Why Read?" by George H. Evans. This is a subject that has an appeal for many, and the article is likely to inspire in some a new enthusiasm for reading. It is a well-known fact that a taste for reading needs to be cultivated and that not a few who have neglected this in early life, lament that in their mature years they find reading a task rather than pleasure.

It is, indeed, the greatest and most satisfying pleasure of life, to those who have tasted its full satisfaction. It is interesting to see what the writer of the article in question gives as the reasons why many people do read. He gives as the first reason what he calls "the quest for power." He includes under this head the acquiring of valuable information concerning one's own occupation, and the gaining of knowledge which will give power and leadership among men.

A second reason he gives is, in order to acquire culture, "to enrich and perfect your lives." He speaks next of reading as an escape from the daily and often monotonous routine of life and from its fretting cares. He finds in it a valuable emotional outlet. The last reason he gives is, in order to gain friendly and worthwhile companionship.

WATER FLOODS CITY LIBRARY

Two Feet in Basement From Broken Main

The basement of the Public Library in Copley square was flooded early this morning when a water main at Exeter and Blagden streets burst and sent torrents of water into a new excavation on the front of the library.

An emergency crew shut off the flow, but not until water to the depth of two feet had covered the basement of the library building.

The torrents of water found easy access to the building, for a fortnight ago workmen engaged in repairing the foundations of the library ripped out the granite steps in front of the library and exposed the basement.

Fears that extensive damage might be caused to the thousands of books by the water flowing into the basement. A greater danger was feared in moisture seeping through the building and damaging the priceless mural decorations on the walls of the upper floors. Pumps were rigged hastily to rid the library basement of the inflow of water soon after the water main had been shut off. The water spread over Copley square and the adjoining streets after it had rushed down the slope of Blagden street and invaded the library basement.

TORRENT POURS IN UPON LIBRARY

Considerable Damage as Water Main Bursts

Considerable damage was done to the basement floor of the Boston Public Library soon after 3 this morning when torrents of water poured down Blagden st., beside the library building, after a water main burst at the junction of Exeter and Blagden sts. The exact amount of the damage will not be learned until later. Several inches of water were reported to have covered the basement floor of the library. Other cellars along the south side of Blagden st. also were flooded. The Public Works Department was notified and succeeded in shutting off the main within a short time.

In Library.

THEFTS WIDESPREAD

The countrywide thefts were investigated by the investigation of Inspector William H. Lease of Boston police headquarters, who a few months ago exposed the all theft ring.

Clark, who has aliases of a Gordon Forrest and Rodney Livingston, has made a partial confession, police say, and told a story of disposing of the stolen first editions through dealers in New York, London, Paris, Berlin, Rio de Janeiro and Budapest.

Clark, who has a diploma from the University of Chicago, and claims to be a licensed chiropractor, was arrested at a hotel in Revere, where he has been living for the past few weeks with his wife, Winifred, 25. Mrs. Clark was taken to police headquarters last night with her husband, and after questioning was released.

Clark is charged in a warrant sworn by Miss Virginia Keyes, custodian of the Lancaster Library, with taking two worth of American first editions and manuscripts from the shelves of the library.

Assisted by Revere police, Inspectors Lease and Leo O'Neil went to the Hotel Pleasanton on Revere Beach and placed Clark under arrest. They recovered some of the stolen books and Clark had in his possession $200 in cash.

N. E. Libraries Hit

The wholesale theft of books has been going on all over the country for about a year and a half, police say.

BOSTON HERALD

SATURDAY, JULY 25, 1931

MAIN BURSTS NEAR LIBRARY

River of Water Rushes Down
Blagden Street—Some Enters
Annex Basement

The bursting of a high pressure water main at Exeter and Blagden streets, Back Bay, early this morning, the second such break in the city within a week, tore up a portion of the street pavement and caused a river of water, nearly two feet deep in places, to rush down Blagden street to the triangular grass plot in front of the public library.

In less than a half hour, water department men shut off the water and no great damage resulted. Some of the water seeped into the basement of the library annex and little into the subway at the Copley station. Traffic was shut up in the vicinity for a short time only. The break was in an eight-inch main right at the corner of the B. A. A. building, but the down grade caused the water to flow in the other direction.

He looked down and immediately saw books. He is alleged to have brought the books out of many libraries under his coat, sometimes taking as much as half a dozen at a time.

Clark is wanted in Lowell, police say, for the theft of books valued at over $200 and the libraries of Boston, Hartford, Hallowell, N. S., have also been looted. Other cities have reported similar cases.

Among the papers and books found last night by police was a bibliography manuscript entitled "Studying Revelations of the Wholesale Looting of Private Libraries from Maine to California."

Clark stated that this was his own work, written from his own experience.

Police allege that in 1927, Clark was president of Radio Engineering of Canada, a company now defunct. They also assert that later he was head of the Radio Research Club of Halifax, also defunct.

Sales Through New York Dealers

Clark told the police that he is a New York man and had made many of his sales of the stolen literary treasures through five New York book dealers. Some of his thefts, Clark stated, have found their way to the shelves of some of the country's most noted collectors of American books.

Among the rare books taken by Clark, according to police, are: "Gleanings in Europe" James Evelyns Cooper, 1827; "Walden" Henry Thoreau, 1847; "Notes on the Western States" James Hill, 1837; "History of the Province of New York" William Smith, A. M., "A letter to the Convention" James Fenimore Cooper, 1827; "Yankee's Life" James Russell Lowell, 1837; "Some Chinese Legends" Lafcadio Hearn, 1887; and many others.

Clark will be questioned at length concerning the theft of books from other cities. It is alleged that a year ago he was operating in the Boston Public Library, but at the first sign of missing literary treasures, precautions were taken to put a stop to the thefts.

Clark was lodged in the City Prison last night on a warrant issued by the police of Lancaster. Other cities and towns have been notified that Clark is in custody.

The arrest of Clark was brought about through a telephone tip that he was at the Revere Hotel. A warrant had been sworn for him in Lancaster under the name of Dr. Clark that he gave when he asked to examine books there.

ROBERT E. ROGERS soned conclusions of two executives of large city libraries, Mr. Sherman of Providence and Mr. Lowe of Brooklyn.

I go on the assumption that when one person says something, it's usually wrong; when two persons say the same thing it may be a coincidence, but when three persons without collusion say the same thing, it should be worth listening to. So much smoke, some fire.

Responsibilities of a Library

Apparently, library policy in the past has been worked out on the assumption that the customer is always right. It might be summed up in the phrase, "if a citizen asks for a book it is the business of the librarian to get it for him and immediately." This reminds one of the college president who said, "The students are our customers and we must give them what they want." This is obviously an unsound theory of education, just as some other is beginning to be seen by some as an unsound theory of librarianship.

Mr. Sherman said that he hoped that some small city library would try out a policy of planning a collection of some 30,000 books and stick to that, refusing to be stampeded into rapid enlargement by constant requests for all the newest books, most of which as a matter of fact are second rate and of ephemeral importance. He would have plenty of duplicates of the sound books which are largely in demand, frequent readings out, and the most careful scrutiny of new publications for those of lasting quality.

Both Mr. Sherman and Mr. Lowe agreed that it is not the business of the public library to furnish the public all the new books which come out, simply because they are so enormously advertised that an artificial demand for them is set up. Many of them are simply reprints of magazine articles or magazine fiction, and many more are of a literary quality which should never be admitted into a public institution which is supposedly educational in character.

Furthermore, people who want such books nowadays can get them easily in the private circulating libraries. The books which the library should stock should be of such character as the commercial library seldom furnishes. Such a course of carefully selective buying would set the library free for its real work, that of supplying worthwhile readers with worthwhile books, extending its readers service and its reference and consultation service.

Libraries and Text Books

Another thing the librarians seemed to agree upon, that it is not the business of a public library to furnish college students with their text books. Our students have got so into the habit of having school books furnished by the city that when they get to college they consider the cost of the text books the least of their charges. Instead of making their college life really efficient by buying the necessary books, they try to depend on the local library. The result is that either they are disappointed in securing them and so never get their work in on time (every teacher knows that exasperating excuse), or if their demands are met, the library has to stock up with volumes that are, to be frank, usually only elementary text books.

Furthermore, the librarians were inclined to agree that the stealing and mutilation of books is growing to an alarming extent, and they are inclined to put a good deal of the blame for this upon students who are too lazy or ignorant to make proper use of references in the library, and either steal them for permanent consultation or cut them up to save the trouble of copying down references. The project method in our public schools, said Mr. Sherman, is responsible for a good deal of this mutilation.

We Lose 12,000 a Year

For my own part I understand that the Boston Public Library loses some 12,000 books a year. When one remembers that Copley sq. is the central reference point for dozens of schools and colleges, and that it must serve thousands of high school and college students every day, I have no hesitation in ascribing the larger part of this loss to students—underbred, irresponsible crowds of improperly educated boys and girls, whose home training is disgraceful and whose school discipline is slack and experimental. They have no hesitation in taking them, in cheating on their home work or on examination papers. Why should they hesitate a moment to steal a book they need or mutilate an encyclopedia to save them trouble? The time may soon come when every person leaving a public or a college library will have to be searched, so unfit are many of our supposedly more intelligent young people for their freedom and privileges and responsibilities.

These ideas of responsible library executives were of great interest to me, since I have held them and expressed them now for a good many years. In our public library system, as in our educational system, we have ridden a promising theory to death. The theory is that all the people are capable of responding to educational and cultural opportunities and can be trusted to act wisely when given them. Obviously it is not true. The colleges are beginning to learn that they must in self-defense restrict their dealings to a small, worthwhile minority. The public libraries are, apparently, beginning to discover the same truth.

The public library of 50 years ago was small, but it was well chosen. Only worthwhile books were selected and if people did not care for them they could do without. But many of our libraries today are full of trash and junk because the public asks for trash and junk. These people might just as well be eliminated and the library reserved for those who appreciate the best and are willing to have it chosen for them.

Copyright, 1931, by the Boston Evening American.

Branch. The Phillips Brooks Memorial Branch, which has been closed since December, 1924, reopened its hospitable doors on May 18, to the great joy and satisfaction of the residents of the Tremont street, between Roxbury Crossing and Branch, between Roxbury Crossing and Branch, moved from the ill-lit, ill-ventilated room which it had occupied since 1907, to a splendid new building across the street. And on Monday of this week, the new Mattapan Branch was opened, just two blocks from the cramped quarters it had occupied for nearly a quarter of a century.

With the exception of the Kirstein Memorial Library, no branch except the one at Readville bears the name of an individual. Indeed, the Phillips Brooks Branch had been designated Readville Branch, when it was discovered that according to the will of the donor the name could not be changed. It appears that on Jan. 15, 1893, members of the Blue Hill Evangelical Society, of Readville, hearing that Bishop Brooks was to preach in Hyde Park in the morning, promptly invited him to speak at their chapel in the afternoon. The bishop accepted the invitation, and preached an inspiring sermon to the small congregation which gathered to hear him. The evening was bitterly cold and on his way to Dedham to keep another engagement, the bishop caught cold and within a week was dead.

In memory of Bishop Brooks's last afternoon service, Mrs. Ellen F. Stetson, a resident of Readville and a parishioner of Trinity Church, caused a charming little building to be erected in trust to the Blue Hill Evangelical Society with the understanding that it should be used as a reading room and be known as the Phillips Brooks Memorial Library. Some of the Readville children had never been in a public library before, and on the first school holiday after the Phillips Brooks Memorial Branch opened, they swarmed in promptly at nine o'clock. When luncheon time came they asked, "If we go home, may we come back?" On being assured that they could, they galloped off and, in an incredibly short time, dashed back to stay till "supper time."

A borrower who drew books from the old Parker Hill Branch Library on Saturday night, remarked when she returned them at the new building at nine o'clock Monday morning that she was sure the library had Aladdin's lamp among its treasures. "Without an unrestricted genii service such a transformation as this would be impossible," she insisted.

To the casual visitor the new library looks as if it had been established for years. The shelves are filled with books, every range is marked with its class, the current magazines are in the magazine rack, the assistants are all at their posts, the clocks are briskly ticking and the typewriter is busily clicking off new registrations. An attendant admitted that Mattapan Branch is Georgian in style, of red brick with white trimmings. The prevailing colors of the interior are dark red and white. The floors are covered with a rich dark red linoleum and the wood trim throughout the building is white. The book cases, tables and chairs are natural finish birch. The floor layout is skilfully planned for the maximum of efficient operation with a minimum of expenditure for service. The issue counter is so placed that the persons stationed there have an unobstructed view of both reading rooms and of the book stacks, as well as a fairly comprehensive view of the assembly room.

This assembly room can also be used as a reading room, since it is furnished with chairs equipped with broad arms which can be used to write on. When a lecture is in process here, steel mesh screens are drawn down like curtains over the book shelves.

The issue desk has several unique features, one being a "time tray" on wheels which may be used by two persons at the same time; a set of shelves arranged like steps for accommodating the books sent from the main library; and gates which are electrically opened and shut by foot pressure. Through these gates all persons leaving the library must pass.

It is hoped that such careful control of the entrance and exits of this library will reduce to a minimum the number of books "permanently borrowed," of which no records have been made. It is almost ten years since the city of Boston invested in a new branch library building. During that time the circulation of books through branches has increased from 1,897,586 to 3,428,675 and petitions have poured in from all over the city asking for extension of library service. It was not only difficult but impossible for the Library Board of Trustees to decide upon the relative merits of the designated locations. Therefore, they sited in the Parker Hill and Mattapan libraries, with the purchase of sites for buildings in the Faneuil district and the reopening of the Phillips Brooks Memorial Library.

It is fortunate for the citizens of Boston that the present mayor and City Council appear to believe in extending the city's opportunities for educational development to every point where, before many years, every resident will be living within a half-mile radius of a free public library.

People visiting the new Mattapan branch for the first time, invariably exclaim: "What a beautiful building. I've never seen one like it before." Credit is due to the architectural firm of Putnam and Cox who, by the way, also designed the Jones Library, at Amherst, one of the most beautiful small libraries in Massachusetts.

A second reason he gives is, in order to acquire culture, "to enrich and perfect your lives." He speaks next of reading as an escape from the daily and often monotonous routine of life and from its fretting cares. He finds in it a valuable emotional outlet. The last reason he gives is, in order to gain friendly and worthwhile companionship.

The Boston Post

SATURDAY, JULY 25, 1931

WATER FLOODS CITY LIBRARY

Two Feet in Basement From Broken Main

The basement of the Public Library in Copley square was flooded early this morning when a water main at Exeter and Blagden streets burst and sent torrents of water into a new excavation on the front of the library.

An emergency crew shut off the flow, but not until water to the depth of two feet had covered the basement of the library building.

The torrents of water found easy access to the building, for a fortnight ago workmen engaged in replacing the foundations of the library ripped out the granite steps in front of the library and exposed the basement.

Fears that extensive damage might be caused to the thousands of books by the water flowing into the basement. A greater danger was feared in moisture seeping through the building and damaging the priceless mural decorations on the walls of the upper floors.

Pumps were rigged hastily to rid the library basement of the inflow of water soon after the water main had been shut off. The water spread over Copley square and the adjoining streets after it had rushed down the slope of Blagden street and invaded the library basement.

BY WILLIAM JUSTIN

The latest issue of "More Books," the Bulletin of the Boston Public Library, has for the title of its leading article, "Why Read?" by George H. Evans. This is a subject that has an appeal for many, and the article is likely to inspire in some a new enthusiasm for reading. It is a well-known fact that a taste for reading needs to be cultivated and that not a few who have neglected this in early life, lament that in their mature years they find reading a task rather than pleasure.

It is, indeed, the greatest and most satisfying pleasure of life, to those who have tasted its full satisfaction. It is interesting to see what the writer of the article in question gives as the reasons why many people do read. He gives as the first reason what he calls "the quest for power." He includes under this head the acquiring of valuable information concerning one's own occupation, and the gaining of knowledge which will give power and leadership among his fellows.

A second reason he gives is, in order to acquire culture, "to enrich and perfect your lives." He speaks next of reading as an escape from the daily and often monotonous routine of life and from its fretting cares. He finds in it a valuable emotional outlet. The last reason he gives is, in order to gain friendly and worthwhile companionship.

Boston Daily Globe

SATURDAY, JULY 25, 1931

TORRENT POURS IN UPON LIBRARY

Considerable Damage as Water Main Bursts

Considerable damage was done to the basement floor of the Boston Public Library soon after 3 this morning when torrents of water poured down Blagden st. beside the library building, after a water main burst at the junction of Exeter and Blagden sts.

The exact amount of the damage will not be learned until later. Several inches of water were reported to have covered the basement floor of the library. Other cellars along the south side of Blagden st. also were flooded. The Public Works Department was notified and succeeded in shutting off the main within a short time.

THE BOSTON POST

ON LIBRARY PILFERINGS

Boston Daily Globe

WEDNESDAY, AUG 12, 1931

BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY GROWTH IS OUTLINED

Trustees Urge Larger Appropriation For Book Purchases, More Pay For Employees

An increase in number of volumes on its shelves of more than 118,000 and a gain in home circulation of volumes of more than 200,000, were the outstanding marks of growth and activity of the Boston Public Library during 1930, according to the 77th annual report of the trustees, which has just been published.

Among the recommendations in the report are requests for a larger appropriation for the purchase of books, higher salaries for library employees, the establishment of an endowment system for the library similar to those organized for the Museum of Fine Arts and for the Symphony orchestra, and a cessation of building branch libraries until more adequate provision has been made for those already in existence.

According to the report of Director Belden to the trustees, the city appropriation for books was increased last year from $140,000 to $160,000, of which all, except seven cents, was expended. In addition, $21,588.77, income from various trust funds, was also used to purchase books for the library.

During the year the Kirstein Memorial Library, near the City Hall Annex, was opened, and work on two new branch libraries in Mattapan and Parker Hill was started. The erection of these two branches, which are now nearing completion, was made possible by special appropriation of $200,000, and is in accord with the program recommended by the Mayor to build two new branch library buildings every year until all the branches are properly located.

Among other figures contained in the 96-page report is the interesting item that February, the shortest calendar month of the year, was the library's busiest month, when the average daily circulation at the central building amounted to 1577, as compared with the daily average for the year of 954. More than 160,000 persons had "live" cards entitling them to borrow books for home use.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT
WEDNESDAY, JULY 22, 1931

THE LIBRARIAN

LIBRARY work with children is of unending fascination, and those who have had opportunity to find this out will delight in the yearbook on the subject from the American Library Association. All phases of juvenile reading are considered in this volume, which is the third in its series. On the title page is an appropriate sketch by the young artist, Pamela Blinn.

One section of the yearbook gives an evaluation of what a child's book should be, from the standpoint of author, illustrator, Charles J. Finger, whose own writings have given such pleasure to the young, believes that a child's book, to be successful, should be rich in incident, true to nature, as the young know nature, and written with integrity of purpose. "High thought and noble sentiment, generous and determined effort, healthy activity of body and mind, joy and cheerfulness, an insistence on the law of moral conduct, these, and much more, pervade the juveniles that have lived."

Dorothy Lathrop tells, from her rich experience, what the drawings of a child's book should be. "The most important thing is honesty, for children, the adults, will workmanship. Artists may have many things as we have to draw, and these subjects may be treated in many hundreds of different ways, simple or complex as there are hundreds of illustrations."

Allan M. Jordan, superintendent of the library work with children at the Boston Public Library, is well qualified to discuss the ideal book from the point of view of the children's librarian. Books must meet boys and girls at the point of some present interest and carry them further in perception and enjoyment and ultimate broadening of powers. Miss Jordan believes, though she does not expect, that all good books will do all of these things. Nor does she expect that any book will bring equal joy to every child.

"Books not too heavy and lumbering, some for small hands, flexible bindings which open easily, strength and durability combined with good form are tasks desired," Miss Jordan tells us, and she likewise impresses upon publishers the importance of clear print, paper of fair quality and illustrations that are best.

"We ask that the book which makes its first appeal to the imagination be the product of a fresh and true imagination," Miss Jordan puts into words the hope of children's librarians everywhere. "The traditional life of the day, the slowness when transmitted through a mind which has kept a clear vision and a childlike simplicity. An ideal book for children is well written, employing English that is simple and clear, free from mannerisms and bombast. Such books come to us in childhood or youth and no one can say what chance may bring them to our hands. The children's librarian may at least hope for still greater production of books that have this vital quality within them."

Boston Transcript

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1931

Library Statues Will Be Draped

To satisfy the demands of Roxbury residents who object to the nude statues above the main entrance of the new $100,000 Mission Hill Branch library, Mayor Copley has directed that the statues carved in artistic fashion over the two months guarding the city's seal, which is a replica of the carving over the entrance of the main public library in Copley square.

THE BOSTON SUNDAY GLOBE—JULY 26, 1931

TRAP FOR PEDESTRIANS AND MOTORISTS IN FENCE AT PUBLIC LIBRARY, COPLEY SQ

FENCE AROUND CONSTRUCTION WORK AT PUBLIC LIBRARY IN COPLEY SQ.

Pedestrians and motorists who traverse the Back Bay are wondering why the city has permitted one of its busiest and best constructed traffic corners to be transformed into a trap for both drivers and persons on foot.

The construction company, authorized by the city to do repair work on the property directly in front of the Boston Public Library at Copley sq., has effectively blocked the view of drivers on Boylston and Dartmouth sts. by a seven-foot wooden fence, erected to protect passersby from the machinery engaged in the repair task.

The question asked by many is whether the pedestrians on that section of the street would not be equally well kept from danger by a fence half the height of the present one, which would permit drivers to have an unobstructed view of approaching traffic.

The element of danger for those on foot is also present. The plank walk, which projects into the street, is only five feet wide, and permits only two or three persons to walk abreast, or pass. Automobiles making the right turn from Boylston st into Dartmouth st graze the edge of the improvised sidewalk, often at high speed.

A person might be struck while walking on the planks, and given the hypothetical case of a subway crowd from the Copley station, from a makeshift walk, and traffic speeding into Dartmouth st, it is not impossible to imagine a serious accident at that intersection.

The suggestion is made that if the height of the fence is reduced and some sort of a protective zone devised for the edge of the narrow walk, much of the danger will be automatically removed.

THE BOSTON HERALD

THURSDAY, AUGUST 6, 1931

Repairs on Library for Second Time In 3 Years Caused by Shifting of Earth

The Boston Public Library, standing on ground where the waters of the Back Bay flowed a century ago, is for the second time in less than three years undergoing repairs to rectify a "dangerous condition" which the slowly shifting earth beneath it has created.

Although the building itself is not affected, a firmer foundation beneath the Dartmouth street entrance platform is being laid at a cost of $50,000. The work, started by the Blankens Rollins Company, is expected to be completed in about four months.

The entire platform will be ripped up, and huge concrete slabs laid beneath as an additional support which at the same time will prevent the seepage of water which has weakened the present underground arches.

"The platform was in a dangerous condition and we are waterproofing it," was the explanation of the work last night by William F. Quinn, superintendent of buildings of the library. He said the gradual shifting of the earth beneath the structure was the primary cause of the weakening of the arches beneath it.

During the reconstruction work, the main entrance on the Dartmouth street side is accessible by a bridge left between the sections of the stone platform being ripped away.

In 1929, the library trustees obtained authority from the city to spend $200,000 to explore and repair all weakened pillars, after the city building department had declared the condition of the pillars to constitute a dangerous situation.

The trustees, in their 1929 report, declared, "Unless some method can be found and applied whereby the water-table underlying the Back Bay section of the city can be stabilized, future trouble with the underpinning of the library building is to be feared."

THE BOSTON HERALD

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 12, 1931

118,000 NEW BOOKS ADDED TO LIBRARY

Schools Department Urged in 77th Annual Report

The addition of 118,000 new books at the Boston public library last year increased the total number of volumes in the city library system to 1,529,000. The circulation of books last year was 4,133,000, a jump of more than 200,000 over 1929, according to the trustees' 77th annual report, which has just been published, filling 96 pages. The report recommends the establishment of a schools department.

"For a number of years it has been apparent that the library has outgrown the present method of caring for deposit requests from the schools," Director Belden declared. "The pressure of choosing and preparing the deposits is a heavy burden on the staffs of the branches."

The city appropriation for books and library material in 1930 was $160,000, as compared to $140,000 in the year previous. The total amount spent for purchase of books was $161,568.70, from municipal and trust funds.

At the end of the year 160,201 persons had cards permitting them to take books for home use. The average daily circulation at the central library was

September 17, 1931

POST, BOSTON, MASS.

I notice that the 79th annual report of the trustees of the Boston Public Library has recently come out. And despite the fact that it is crammed with statistical figures and dust-dry facts, it makes interesting reading. It seems to me that every citizen of Boston ought to read this report, so that he will be able to discuss intelligently what this institution, for the upkeep of which he pays taxes, is doing for the public.

Here are a few items that should interest everybody who holds a library card: The sum of $21,520.22 was collected last year in fines on overdue books. Ninety dollars and 85 cents were realized from the sale of waste paper. Sales of catalogues and the like brought the library $171.97. Commissions from the telephone booths in the lobby netted $601.45, while payments for lost books added $129.55.

Here is a significant item in the report of the library trustees. It is that the taste for standard literature among children has been raised considerably in recent years, many books formerly called for only by adults now being eagerly consulted by the youngsters. At the same time, we are told, the boys and girls do not neglect the reading matter especially reserved for juveniles; such works, for instance, as "Alice in Wonderland" and "Tom Brown." Some of the "grown up" books asked for by the children are Admiral Byrd's "Little America," Partlow's "Amundsen," and Eaton's "Daughter of the Seine."

THE BOSTON HERALD

TUESDAY, AUGUST 11, 1931

THE STATE HOUSE MURALS

It is to be hoped that a good-natured, educational, wholesome controversy will arise after artist Richard Andrews has placed his mural paintings of the sixth Massachusetts infantry in the State House corridor near the chamber of the House of Representatives. A competent artist, presumably Mr. Andrews, has done a good job in the two years which he has given to the painting. But will they be not only good pictures but good mural pictures?

That question will not be answered by his fellow-artists until the canvases are in place. If the verdict should be that they are not any better as murals than they ought to be, Mr. Andrews has a ready alibi. He can cite the case of the central branch of the Boston public library.

The Sargent and Abbey paintings in Copley square are good, especially the Abbey series in the delivery room. But they are not much as mural paintings. They do not seem to cling to the walls, to be an integral part of the place, to have been constructed with it, to look as if they belonged there as naturally as the doors and the windows and the tiled floor. They are in the building but not of it.

So with the Sargents. Even Architect Thomas A. Fox of Boston, who knew Sargent and the Sargent paintings better than anybody in Boston, would probably not uphold the merits of his idol as compared with those of Puvis de Chavannes. His wall paintings in the grand approach to the second floor are admirable as art and as wall art—simple, direct, charming, as essential a feature of the place as the beautiful marble or the two great lions. Indeed, it is said that, when Sargent and Abbey inspected the library together, the former remarked: "The Frenchman has beaten us. We painted pictures. He painted murals."

Adult Room in the New Mattapan Branch of the Boston Public Library

In the picture of the new Mattapan Branch Library reading room, two people at the first table may be seen studying alluring travel booklets. A sign on the magazine case reads, "If you haven't planned your vacation, see the other side of this case." As Mattapan is quite a distance from the travel agencies, the book of this case will undoubtedly be one of the most popular sections in the library. The information in the travel booklets displayed covers the entire world. With these and the "list of travel books worth reading" library patrons may either plan vacations or take trips in spirit, should the pocket book be weak.

The Kirstein Branch is likewise offering a travel information service that is interesting hundreds of busy men and women who pass the window at 20 City Hall Avenue. Travel posters and booklets are arranged about a small model of the Taj Mahal, which, even in miniature, does not look at all like a biscuit box, as Amanda Bryne, of "Private Lasses" feared it would.

One of the posters has a map of the hemispheres with place names which make one's eyes water with desire to see them—Haiti, Palma de Maiorca, Wao Sung and Miyadlinia. The caption announces "The Route of the S.S. 'Travel-book' Around the World, Kirstein Branch Line." Another poster informs the passerby that the S.S. "Librarybook" sails from the third floor any time Sunday 9 A.M. to 6 P.M., Saturdays 9 A.M. to 1 P.M. In addition to a large and well-selected collection of books of travel, the branch offers for use booklets, folders and maps suggesting trips to all parts of the world. The printed invitation: "Plan your vacation here" is accepted by many people.

BOSTON TRAVELER, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1931

Art Note

WITH a cold winter coming, we are in hearty accord with the persons who insisted that the nude figures of boy infants in a stone layout of the seal over the Parker Hill branch library have a pair of diapers chiselled on them.

BOSTON TRAVELER
SEPTEMBER 18, 1931

NUDITY NOT FOR LIBRARY TWINS

Parker Hill Citizens Demand Drapes for Boys Bearing Seal

The "Onium Lux Cidum" twins, appearing in carved relief over the entrance of the Parker Hill branch of the public library, will no longer disport in artistic nudity. Mayor Curley, in response to a protest of residents, has directed the contractor to add a bit of habiliment in the way of a bit of ribbon or sash drapery. The figures are similar to those over the entrance of the main library in Copley square but the objectors declare that the contractor has been a bit free in following or failing to follow the regular lines of the drawing. And the two boys, bearing the city seal between them, are to be properly draped so that they will no longer offend Bostonian sensibilities to the immodest.

Boston Transcript
FRIDAY, JUNE 26, 1931

Samuel A. B. Abbott

The passing of Samuel A. B. Abbott in Rome a few days ago is an impressive reminder of a civic obligation which should not be forgotten. It is so long since the completion of the Public Library Building in Copley square, and so many things have happened to disturb the even tenor of the way, that few of those actively interested in its administration, to say nothing of the world at large, realize that the just fame of the building and its high standing as an architectural landmark are due in a way as much to the steadfast purpose and intelligent direction as a trustee of Sam Abbott—so known among his friends—as to the vision of McKim, the architect, and his artistic associates.

From the inception of the actual undertaking to its completion it was Abbott who was the guiding power and he not only cheerfully assumed uncalculated responsibilities but provided always an inviolable background in spite of much useless criticism.

To use a homely but expressive phrase, "he saw it through" and at a personal sacrifice such as is rarely seen.

This is not the opportunity to set down the details of the trials and complications of the years devoted to an ideal, the activities of which were undertaken as a duty to his city and to one of its time-honored and valued institutions. When the work was done as he saw it he retired from the field of action, willing to leave the final judgment to those whom he felt competent to pass on the results. But it is the hope of those who knew and appreciated what Abbott had done that in the end his labors would receive their just recognition. Finis coronat opus. Thomas A. Fox

Boston Transcript
WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 19, 1931

THE LIBRARIAN

ONE more the Boston Public Library's annual report, in its blinding of restful blue, is at hand. Mr. Charles F. D. Belden, director, states that the past year has been one of growth and progress in every department of the library. The circulation of books shows a steady increase, with the total well over four million. There has likewise been an increase in the number of cardholders. As Mr. Belden says, "Many unemployed persons who had not made use of the library for several years renewed their cards. Not only has the economic situation acted as a stimulus for the use of the library in the adult departments, but also in the children's rooms."

Efforts to improve the physical condition of the library go on continually. Alterations of the Treasury Room, the new Music Room and the new North Gallery though brilliantly successful, serve however to show up the Cinderella condition of the Fine Arts Gallery and Technical Division, where there are antiquated wooden cases instead of the steel shelving which their neighbors enjoy. The Librarian

tion of knowing that they are aiding in the development of the child. Effects are likewise being made to satisfy the reading tastes of the finicky "teensters." Special collections of books for these older boys and girls are maintained in the adult divisions of the branches or in their children's rooms. These collections are being constantly strengthened by further addition of mature reading to hold the interest of those who have read widely among children's books but are not yet registered as adult borrowers. Would that this pleasant custom had been in vogue when the Librarian reached her teens! Then, you stayed put in the children's room until the age of seventeen when you abruptly graduated to grown-up books. Your correspondent had gone through the juvenile collection several times by her twelfth year and had to get an after-school job arranging shelves in order to get a look at the adult collection. Once a library employee and you had the freedom of the port, as it were! However, the old plan kept interest in grown-up books at fever heat: even through high-school years.

Never before have beautiful picture books been priced so low, which is to the advantage of the library's young readers, who are able to see gay and colorful picture books from many lands as well as those made in America.

One of the great needs of the library system is a Schools Department, as the 1630

The Puritans had one book—the Bible—on it they founded the Commonwealth

1930

The People of Massachusetts have access to 9,000,000 volumes on all subjects in 415 PUBLIC LIBRARIES and 275 BRANCH LIBRARIES. 4,585,000 Income—an average of over $19 per capita. Annual Circulation: 6 books per capita.

rian joins with the examining committee of the library and the staff of the Fine Arts and Technical Division in hoping that renovations may soon be made in these important departments of the library.

An interesting suggestion made by the examining committee is the removal of the catalogue and order departments from their present locations and the use of that space for the children's and teachers' rooms. Where the aforesaid departments will move to and what will be done with the present cramped quarters of the children's room is not explained. It is evident, though, that some time in the near future the central library will have to expand.

Bates Hall is now making use of a device which it is hoped will foil the chronic kickers who infest libraries. Attendants have been instructed to mark the time on the slips when received as well as the time when the book was delivered. Last year, 274,745 books from the stacks were used in Bates Hall. This does not represent all the books used in the Hall, as there are no means of recording the use of reference books taken from open shelves. During the academic season, practically every seat in the department is taken.

Much assistance in reference work has been given by the Periodical Department which, last year, made a consolidation of debate material in order that time might be saved for students and others interested in forensics. The newspaper clippings have been also extensively augmented. A file of material relating to New England in general was begun at the time of the Tercentenary Celebration by the Periodical Department, to which the general public proved so responsive that it has been continued. Students are increasingly realizing the value of magazine articles in their courses. This usually results in overcrowding of the rooms, which often has to take care of an overflow from the newspaper room.

Last year, the Fine Arts and Technology Divisions attained the highest circulation of books for home use ever recorded for the two divisions. There from the schools is rapidly becoming out-moded. Now the increasing demands are taking books that are needed on the shelves of the children's rooms, and the staffs of the branches must choose and prepare these deposits along with their other multitudinous duties. In other cities, according to the annual report, co-operation between the public library and public schools is most successful where the administration of all school work is assigned to a schools department.

There has been an enormous gain of circulation in the branches over last year. The Kirstein Branch, opened to the public in May, 1930, became instantly popular. Month by month a steady and persistent growth in circulation has been noted, proving beyond all doubt the value of a general branch in the business section of the city.

Kirstein Business Branch, also opened last year, met with the interested response of the business men and women of Boston. From the very beginning it has been more heavily used than any other similar institution, and has always held the attention of the very groups it was especially designed to serve. Many persons suffering from the unemployment situation have been making use of the branch by studying to prepare themselves for better work when a new job may open. The unexpectedly heavy use of this branch has held up the routine work and retarded the cataloging. The necessity of a larger staff here is very evident.

The Readers' Adviser has given up the practice of reserving books for patrons, having found it advisable to talk over and suggest books or make lists instead. In addition to individual assistance, a number of club programs were arranged and a series of radio talks on books provided by the Readers' Adviser.

Public Increases Its Reading,
Director of Library Reveals

1930 Circulation in Boston 4,133,459, Gain of More Than 200,000 Over 1929—Dickens and Thackeray Still Widely Read

By THE HERALD'S ROVING REPORTER

"In 1930 the Puritans had one book—the Bible; on it they founded this Commonwealth. In 1930 the people of Massachusetts had access to 9,000,000 volumes on all subjects, in 415 public libraries and 275 branch libraries." Such are the impressive figures contained in the preface of the 79th annual report of the trustees of the Boston Public Library, which was handed to the Roving Reporter by Charles F. D. Belden, the director.

More people than ever are reading books, the Rover learned. The circulation in 1930 in Greater Boston was 4,133,459 or a gain of more than 200,000 volumes over the previous year. On Dec. 31, 1930, a check-up revealed that there were 160,201 "live" library cards in this city or a gain of more than 6000 over 1929.

Each week Mr. Belden receives a great number of volumes from the publishers. These must be checked and the wheat separated from the chaff, no easy task. The library readers, who pass on those books, are given two report slips—a pale green for rejection, a white for acceptance.

At the head of the slip is a space for the name of the author, the title, publisher, and name of the reviewer. From then on the check system is used to determine the kind of book, its effect (cheerful, depressing, dull, stimulating, trashy, trivial, et cetera), then an estimate of its literary value, running from excellent to bad in five steps; its appeal, and finally for whom the book is intended.

The task of the reviewer is not ended at this point, for he must in one paragraph outline the plot and in another give the reasons for his decision. The examining committee numbers 24.

DICKENS STILL WIDELY READ The Rover wished to know about the old favorites, are they still read and by whom? Dickens and Thackeray, he found, are still widely read, especially the former, and the many copies of their works owned by the library are more often out than in. James Fenimore Cooper is still a ruling favorite among the younger generation while Anthony Trollope and Wilkie Collins remain popular with their elders. Scott is not as popular, perhaps, as his devotees would have him, although his "Kenilworth" is still extensively read. Also frequently absent from the shelves is Goldsmith's "She Stoops to Conquer." Among the greatest favorites are Conrad and O. Henry. The short stories of the latter have a tremendous popular appeal.

The gain in adult readers is echoed by a gain in circulation in the children's department. The direct significance of this appears to be that the library is retaining as readers the boys and girls who have graduated from the children's rooms. A deliberate and earnest effort is being made by the staff, the Rover learned, to bring general literature nearer boys and girls, to enable them to enjoy the good books earlier. Wherever possible, longer books which cannot be read overnight are being substituted for the easy children's books.

Among these new books which appeal to grownups as well as children are Byrd's "Little America," Fairbridge's "Amundsen" and "Daughter of the Seine" by Eaton.

AVIATION BOOKS POPULAR Books on aviation, both narrative and those containing technical directions for making and flying planes, are also in great demand. The reading of these above mentioned volumes by the youngsters slows up the general turnover somewhat but is of vastly more value to the children. Approximately 50,000 volumes were purchased last year by the library for its junior readers, and membership in one of the children's rooms in Greater Boston libraries is eagerly sought by the youngsters.

What is the life of a volume in the public library? This depends, of course, on the binding and the treatment which the book receives. The average on the original binding is from six to eight readings. After this the library bindery, which handled 50,000 books last year, rebinds it. Following this treatment it is not unusual for the book to last as many as 80 readings.

Do many people keep a book beyond the allotted time? The answer is conclusively demonstrated by a notation in the report of the library for last year which shows that $21,520 was taken in fines.

The public likes to pick and choose, and the "Open Shelves" are among the most popular rooms in the library. These are always crowded, especially at 2 and 4 in the afternoon on week days, the hours when the library serves more people than any other time.

Among the rare books acquired by the library last year is a copy of the Royal Primer, or "An easy guide to the art of reading, authorized by His Majesty King George II. to be used through His Majesty's Dominions." It is dated 1770. How well the "colonists" have carried out the instruction of their one-time King is witnessed by the fact that in 1930 the annual circulation of volumes totaled six to each man, woman and child in the Commonwealth.

August 28, 1931

GAZETTE, ROXBURY, MASS.

ROXBURY CROSSING BRANCH LIBRARY NOTES

The Roxbury Crossing Branch Library is displaying a window of art in Japanese handicraft to co-ordinate with the map of the Lindberghs' flying route. The art window contains samples of paper designs, dolls, and toys, wood carving, lacquer boxes and trays, a Satsuma bowl, an embroidered bag, a battle-dore, and books printed in Japanese.

This exhibit was loaned by the Children's Museum of Boston.

Some entertaining books for children in this connection are "Uncle Sam in Japan" by McDonald; Japanese fairy tales, by Oaki, Prince, Bantam, by Ward; The Japanese Empire, by Franck; Twin travellers in China and Japan, by Wade; and with Taro and Hana in Japan, by Sugimoto.

Adult Room in the New Mattapan Branch of the Boston Public Library

In the picture of the new Mattapan Branch library reading room, two people at the first table may be seen studying alluring travel booklets. A sign on the magazine case reads, "If you haven't planned your vacation, see the other side of this case." As Mattapan is quite a distance from the travel agencies, the back of this case will undoubtedly be one of the most popular sections in the library. The information on the travel booklets displayed covers the entire world. With these and the list of travel books worth reading, library patrons may either plan vacations or take trips in spirit, should the pocket book be weak.

The Kirstein Branch is likewise offering a travel information service that is interesting hundreds of busy men and women who pass the window at 70 City Hall Avenue. Travel posters and books are arranged about a small model of the Taj Mahal, which, even in miniature, does not look at all like a biscuit box, as Amanda Pryor of "Private Lives" feared it would.

One of the posters has a map of the hemispheres with place names which make one's eyes water with desire to see them—Hana, Hama de Malorou, Wao Sung and Miyaginia. The caption announces "The Route of the S.S. 'Read-a-book'." Around the World, Kirstein Branch Line. Another poster informs the passerby that the S.S. "Librarybook" sails from the third floor any time daily 9 A. M. to 6 P. M., Saturdays 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. In addition to a large and well-selected collection of books of travel, the branch offers for use booklets, folders and maps suggesting trips to all parts of the world. The printed invitation: "Plan your vacation here" is accepted by many people.

BOSTON TRAVELER.

SEPTEMBER 18, 1931

NUDITY NOT FOR LIBRARY TWINS

Parker Hill Citizens Demand Drapes for Boys Bearing Seal

The "Onium Lux Civium" twins, appearing in carved relief over the entrance of the Parker Hill branch of the public library, will no longer disappear in artistic nudity.

Mayor Curley, in response to a protest of residents, has directed the contractor to add a bit of habilitment in the way of a bit of ribbon or sash drapery.

The figures are similar to those over the entrance of the main library in Copley square but the objectors declare that the contractor has been a bit free in following or failing to follow the regular lines of the drawing.

And the two boys, bearing the city seal between them, are to be properly draped so that they will no longer offend Bostonian sensitiveness to the immodest.

Boston Transcript

FRIDAY, JUNE 26, 1931

Samuel A. B. Abbott

The passing of Samuel A. B. Abbott in Rome a few days ago is an impressive reminder of a civic obligation which should not be forgotten. It is so long since the completion of the Public Library Building in Copley square, and so many things have happened to disturb the even tenor of the way, that few of those actively interested in its administration, to say nothing of the world at large, realize that the just fame of the building and its high standing as an architectural landmark are due in a way as much to the steadfast purpose and intelligent direction as a trustee of Sam Abbott—so known among his friends—as to the vision of McKim, the architect, and his artistic associates.

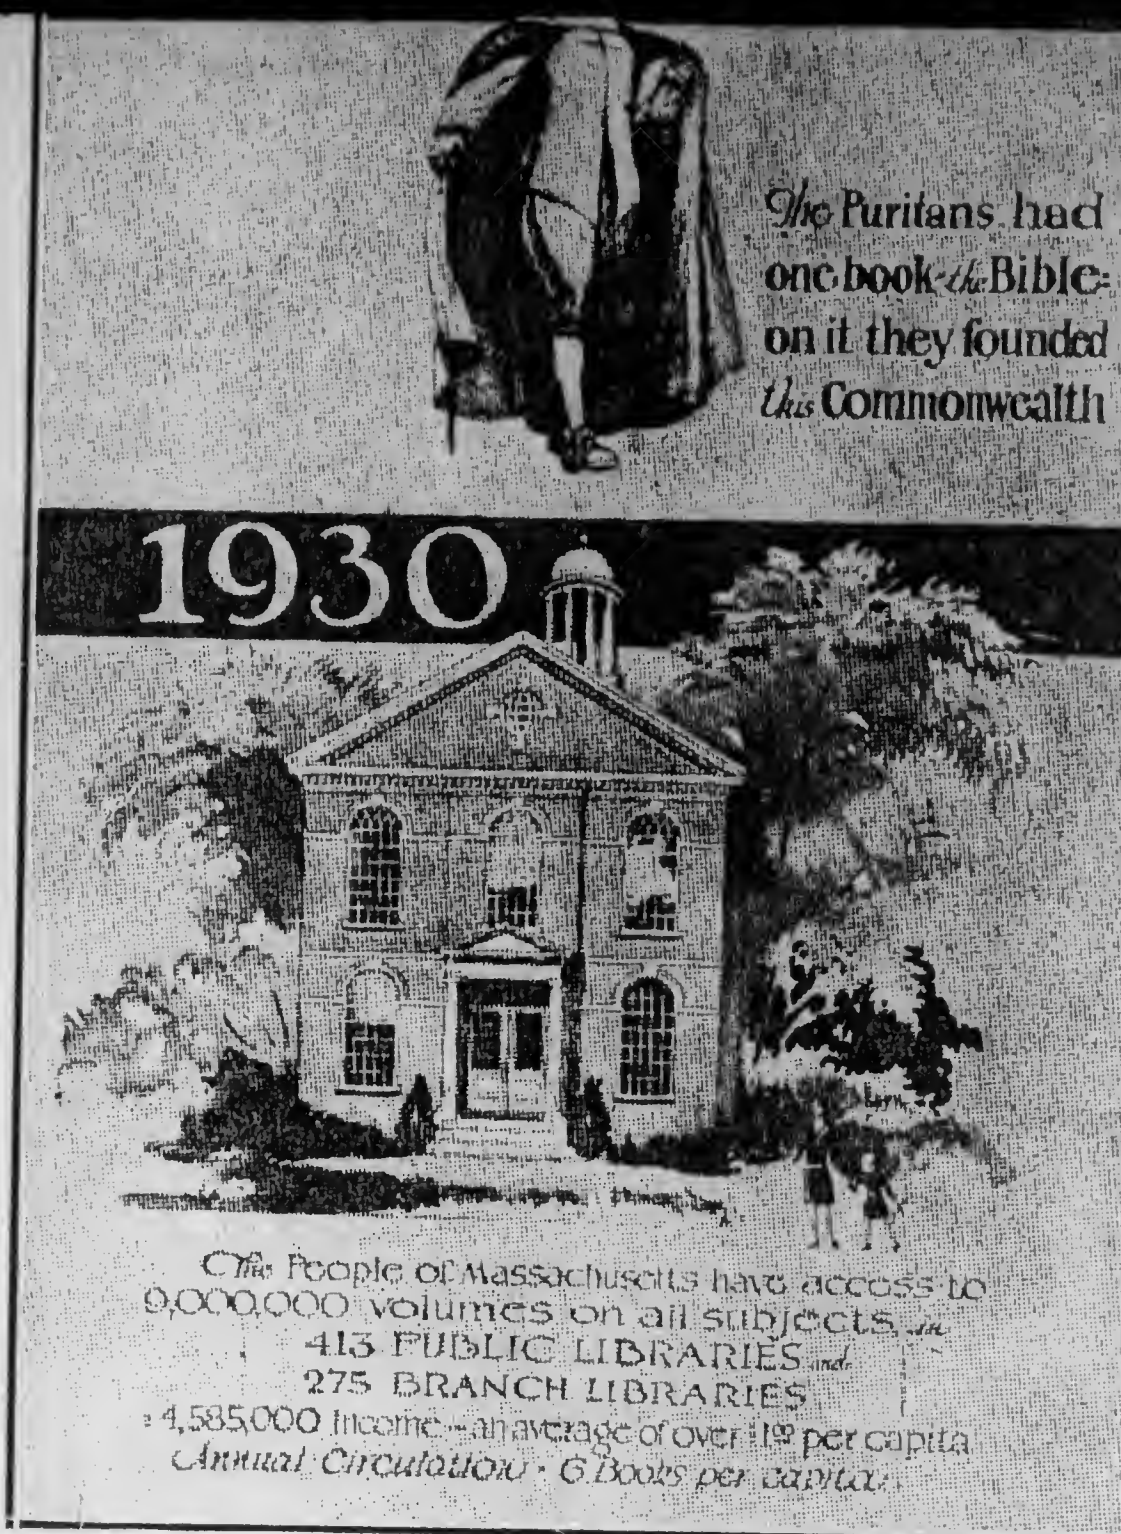

From the inception of the actual undertaking to its completion it was Abbott who was the guiding power and he not only cheerfully assumed uncalculated responsibilities but provided always an inviolable background in spite of much useless criticism.

To use a homely but expressive phrase, "he saw it through" and at a personal sacrifice such as is rarely seen.

This is not the opportunity to set down the details of the trials and complications of the years devoted to an ideal, the activities of which were undertaken as a duty to his city and to one of its time-honored and valued institutions. When the work was done as he saw it he retired from the field of action, willing to leave the final judgment to those whom he felt competent to pass on the results. But it is the hope of those who knew and appreciated what Abbott had done that in the depth of his heart he realized that in the end his labors would receive their just recognition. Faint coronant opus.

THOMAS A. FOX

The Puritans had one book of Bible on it they founded this Commonwealth

1930

The People of Massachusetts have access to 9,000,000 volumes on all subjects in 413 PUBLIC LIBRARIES and 275 BRANCH LIBRARIES. 4,585,000 Income - an average of over $19 per capita. Annual Circulation - 6 Books per capita.

plan joins with the examining committee of the library and the staff of the Fine Arts and Technical Division in hoping that renovations may soon be made in these important departments of the library.

An interesting suggestion made by the examining committee is the removal of the catalogue and order departments from their present locations and the use of that space for the children's and teachers' rooms. Where the aforementioned departments will move to and what will be done with the present cramped quarters of the children's room is not explained. It is evident, though, that some time in the near future the central library will have to expand.

Bates Hall is now making use of a device which it is hoped will toll the chronic klickers who infest libraries. Attendants have been instructed to mark the time on the slips when received as well as the time when the book was delivered. Last year, 274,745 books from the stacks were used in Bates Hall. This does not represent all the books used in the hall, as there are no means of recording the use of reference books taken from open shelves. During the academic season, practically every seat in the department is taken.

Much assistance in reference work has been given by the Periodical Department which, last year, made a consolidation of debate material in order that time might be saved for students and others interested in forensics. The newspaper clippings have been also extensively augmented. A file of material relating to the time of the Tercentenary Celebration by the Periodical Department, to which the general public proved so responsive that it has been continued. Students are increasingly realizing the value of magazine articles in their courses. This usually results in overcrowding of the rooms, which often has to take care of an overflow from the newspaper room.

Last year, the Fine Arts and Technology Divisions attained the highest circulation of books for home use ever recorded for the two divisions. There was also gain in circulation by the Music Division. The reorganization of the Fine Arts picture collection continues, with over four thousand pictures selected, classified and added to the mounted picture file and over three thousand to the school collection. The result is reflected in a satisfactory increase in circulation.

Though the Burton-Ticknor Division has occupied its new quarters for a little over a year, the space which seemed adequate then, has already become very limited, because of three collections recently acquired: Defoe material, the Washingtons, bequeathed by Walter U. Lovellson, and the Franciscan library of nearly three thousand volumes bought in France from the widow of Paul Sabatier, a Helong student of St. Francis.

Barton-Ticknor has enforced the excellent rule of forbidding the use of rare books to young students, consequently few undergraduates visit the division. Graduate students and professors are again attracted to the room in increasing numbers.

Statistical Department, which within the memory of the Librarian was a murky, uninviting place, is almost completely reorganized. It is now bright, businesslike and popular. The unusually small staff here manages, in some miraculous way, to get through an extraordinary amount of work. Last year, an accurate inventory of the book stock was completed, the shelflist revised, an up-to-date continuation list developed, a satisfactory classification for early American documents developed and the collection of books and material rounded out.

Children who use the Central Library and the branches are the most omnivorous and indiscriminating of all readers. Whenever possible, children's librarians are substituting longer stories for the busy books, which are taken home one day and returned the next. Though the turnover is less rapid, because of this maneuver, librarians have the satisfaction of caring for requests from the schools is rapidly becoming noted. Now the increasing demands are taking books that are needed on the shelves of the children's rooms, and the staffs of the branches must choose and prepare these deposits along with their other multitudinous duties. In other cities, according to the annual report, co-operation between the public library and public schools is most successful where the administration of all school work is assigned to a schools department.

There has been an enormous gain of circulation in the branches over last year. The Kirstein Branch, opened to the public in May, 1930, became instantly popular. Month by month a steady and persistent growth in circulation has been noted, proving beyond all doubt the value of a general branch in the business section of the city.

Kirstein Business Branch, also opened last year, met with the interested response of the business men and women of Boston. From the very beginning it has been more heavily used than any other similar institution, and has always held the attention of the very groups it was especially designed to serve. Many persons suffering from the unemployment situation have been making use of the branch by studying to prepare themselves for better work when a new job may open. The unexpectedly heavy use of this branch has held up the routine work and retarded the cataloging. The necessity of a larger staff here is very evident.

The Readers' Adviser has given up the practice of reserving books for patrons, having found it advisable to talk over and suggest books or make lists instead. In addition to individual assistance, a number of club programs were arranged and a series of radio talks on books provided by the Readers' Adviser.

In spite of the time which had to be spent on the publications issued in connection with the tercentenary celebration, the bindery department managed to take care of about 50,000 volumes for the branch libraries alone. Work has continued on repairing the binding on old and valuable books in the Library's special collections.

The Open Shelf Room, which has expanded considerably since the days when the Librarian used to work a slow way through the crush to the shelves, likewise reports a satisfactory increase over last year. The collection of four thousand books has had a complete turnover on an average of once a month. Obviously the Library is in need of a much larger open shelf collection.

Reproduced here is the striking tercentenary poster of the Library Department of the Massachusetts Department of Education, which serves as the frontispiece of the Boston Public Library's annual report.

These must be checked with the cards separated from the chair, no easy task. The library readers, who pass on these books, are given two report slips—a pale green for rejection, a white for acceptance.

At the head of the slip is a space for the name of the author, the title, publisher, and name of the reviewer. From then on the check system is used to determine the kind of book its effect (cheerful, depressing, dull, stimulating, trashy, trivial, et cetera), then an estimate of its literary value, running from excellent to bad in five steps; its appeal, and finally for whom the book is intended.

The task of the reviewer is not ended at this point, for he must in one paragraph outline the plot and in another give the reasons for his decision. The examining committee numbers 24.

DICKENS STILL WIDELY READ

The Rover wished to know about the old favorites; are they still read and by whom? Dickens and Thackeray, he found, are still widely read, especially the former, and the many copies of their works owned by the library are more often out than in. James Fenimore Cooper is still a ruling favorite among the younger generation while Anthony Trollope and Wilkie Collins remain popular with their elders. Scott is not as popular, perhaps, as his devotees would have him, although his "Kenilworth" is still extensively read. Also frequently absent from the shelves is Goldsmith's "She Sings to Conquer." Among the greatest favorites are Conrad and O. Henry. The short stories of the latter have a tremendous modern appeal.

The gain in adult readers is echoed above mentioned volumes by the youngsters slows up the general turnover somewhat but is of vastly more value to the children. Approximately 50,000 volumes were purchased last year by the library for its junior readers, and membership in one of the children's rooms in Greater Boston libraries is eagerly sought by the youngsters.

What is the life of a volume in the public library? This depends, of course, on the binding and the treatment which the book receives. The average on the original binding is from six to eight readings. After this the library bindery, which handled 50,000 books last year, rebinds it. Following this treatment it is not unusual for the book to last as many as 80 readings.

Do many people keep a book beyond the allotted time? The answer is conclusively demonstrated by a notation in the report of the library for last year which shows that $21,520 was taken in fines.

The public likes to pick and choose, and the "Open Shelves" are among the most popular rooms in the library. These are always crowded, especially at 2 and 4 in the afternoon on week days, the hours when the library serves more people than any other time.

Among the rare books acquired by the library last year is a copy of the Royal Primer, or "An easy guide to the art of reading, authorized by His Majesty King George II. to be used through His Majesty's Dominions." It is dated 1770. How well the "colonists" have carried out the instruction of their one-time King is witnessed by the fact that in 1930 the annual circulation of volumes totalled six to each man, woman and child in the commonwealth.

August 28, 1931

GAZETTE, ROXBURY, MASS.

ROXBURY CROSSING BRANCH LIBRARY NOTES

The Roxbury Crossing Branch Library is displaying a window of art in Japanese handicraft to co-ordinate with the map of the Lindberghs' flying route. The art window contains samples of paper designs, dolls, and toys, wood carving, lacquer boxes and trays, a Satsuma bowl, an embroidered bag, a bat-tledore, and books printed in Japanese.

This exhibit was loaned by the Children's Museum of Boston.

Some entertaining books for children in this connection are "Ume San in Japan," by McDonald; "Japanese fairy tales," by Osaki; "Prince Bantam," by Ward; "The Japanese Empire," by Franck; "Twin travelers in China and Japan," by Wade; and with Taro and Hana in Japan, by Sugimoto.

The forty-second annual meeting will be held at the Hotel Commodore, New York City, on September 11-12, 1935, with greetings from Mr. A. K. Kelly, president of the board of trustees of the Howe Library, and Mr. Samuel L. Goodrich, librarian of the New Memorial Library. Wednesday, Sept. 9, at eight o'clock, in Robbin Hall. A business session will be held at half past nine Thursday morning at Carpenter Hall when the scholar-ship report will be submitted to the association. The meeting will adjourn with a final business session, Friday morning, September 11.

So manifest is this attitude on the part of the library's patrons that Mrs. Dietrichson stated in her annual report that the remark is frequently made: "This branch meets a very great and definite need."

Indianapolis, Aug. 25.

_____

THE LIBRARIAN

NEW HAMPSHIRE is a pleasant place to visit at all times of the year, but particularly in the early fall. As the New Hampshire Library Association has selected Sept. 9, 10 and 11 for its meeting, the delegates are assured of delightful scenery and hospitality. The conference is to be held at Hanover and the association will enjoy the double privileges accorded the guest of two libraries. Official headquarters for the forty-second annual meeting will be at Carpenter Hall, where exhibit space has been arranged. Mr. Nathaniel L. Goodrich, librarian of the Baker Library of Dartmouth College, and Miss Grace E. Kingsland and the trustees of the Howe Library are making every preparation for the entertainment of the visitors.

Among the speakers at the meeting will be Mr. John Cronan, official story-teller of the Boston Public Library. Miss Clara E. Smith, president of the association, assures the delegates that there will be many other attractions, as well. One of the most charming is the prospect of Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs, a marionette play by the children's staff.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 26, 1931

"Business is not dull at the Kirstein branch, third floor. Many wise people are saying, 'Now is my opportunity to read.'"

This is the caption on a poster in the large show window of the Kirstein Memorial Branch at 29 City Hall avenue. There is more than a picture in the window, too, as the picture shows. The figures are not as real as they appear, but the conversation is from life. Says the woman, "Please remember to call at Kirstein branch for some good books."

Replies the man, "I went to the library."

The Kirstein Branch of the Boston Public Library Makes Use of Modern Publicity Methods of the Manchester City Library. There will also be a tour of Dartmouth College, comparable only to the A. L. A. tour of Yale in June.

Other speakers tentatively engaged for the conference are Mrs. Bertha V. Hart, zell, director of the Training Class, Boston Public Library and Mrs. Alice Van Leer Carrick, author of several charming books on antiques. Mrs. Carrick's "Next to Nothing House," described so engagingly in the volume of that title, will be open to the delegates one afternoon during the conference.

At least two commercial exhibitors will display books, the H. R. Hunting Company and the Library Book House, and possibly the Houghton Mifflin Company. Gaylord Brothers are expected to exhibit library supplies and a representative of the Library Bureau may be present. Mr. Donald Tuttle, executive secretary of the New Hampshire Development Commission, has kindly lent the New Hampshire views which formed the first salon of photography at the Historical Society in Concord this May, and the Library Commission will bring a Book Week exhibit.

The forty-second annual meeting will open with greeting from Mr. A. K. Hardy, president of the board of trustees of the Howe Library, and Mr. Nathaniel L. Goodrich, librarian of the Baker Memorial Library, Wednesday evening, Sept. 9, at eight o'clock, in Robinson Hall. A business session will be held at half past nine Thursday morning at Carpenter Hall when the scholarship report will be submitted to the association. The meeting will adjourn with a final business session, Friday morning, Sept. 11.

on the way to lunch and got books for all the family."

And there in a suitcase beside him is Mary Roberts Rinehart's "My Story," for the wife; "The Omnibus of Adventure," for himself; and "The Cat That Went to Heaven," for the ten-year-old member of the household.

Strewn about the floor of the window are favorite books of the past twenty years and also books published within a year—biographies, books of adventure, travel and fiction.

The caption on the poster is a text for a timely sermon of special interest to those who say "Business is dull," and they are frequently the ones who lament that they never have time to read.

If newspapers and magazines are telling the truth, the business men and women of America have now time as well as opportunity to become well-read, well-educated and contented with life, for he who has learned to read in a book knows a joy which no "lack of business" can take from him.

The supervisor of branch libraries assures the librarian that people are availing themselves of the opportunity to read to a marked degree. She states that the circulation of books from branch libraries in the past six months has increased 219,525 over the same period last year.

It is indeed heartening to hear this and to realize that people turn to their public libraries in times of stress for the mental stimulus which those institutions are so well equipped to give.

BOSTON POST, AUGUST 27, 1931
FIND KIRSTEIN LIBRARY IDEAL

Steadily Increasing Popularity Due to Convenience—Invaluable to Business Men Especially owning disappointment was to when I tried to buy reproductions of murals which I hoped would bring my eye had not caught. I had a full-sized post-card reproduction of the Abbey paintings in color. It was a set for $1.25 in which the reproduction of the murals was so small that the details were indistinguishable and the whole subordinated to the printed word which could be secured in any library.

These prices are beyond the means of the average tourist. In addition, these were not (except the two Saracenic cards) adequate reproductions. Outside the Public Library of Boston.

This indeed is in sad contrast to our European friends, who make of all their masterpieces reproductions at most reasonable prices to be secured anywhere. In no gallery of Europe have I paid as much as ten cents for a post-card reproduction of a painting except in Germany, where the card was exceptionally beautiful.

The Boston Library is the custodian of what I assume are the finest mural paintings in America and the finest murals by American artists in the world. No pains should be spared to show these to the best possible advantage. I admit a patriotic chagrin that the finest space in the library was given to the beautiful murals of a French artist. The Boston Library should recognize its educational responsibility in making reproductions of all these paintings available to the public at reasonable prices. Increase in the volume of business would, in my opinion, prevent financial loss. But the chief end would be to increase the number of persons who could study, appreciate and carry away excellent copies of the splendid work of American artists. It would add to the sense of gratitude and obligation that the average American traveler already has for the city of Boston.

Indianapolis, Aug. 25. MARGUERITE DICE

Increasing Popularity
Although the library has been in existence for many years, it is now becoming more popular than ever. This is due to the fact that the library is now open to the public on a more regular basis than in the past. The library is now open to the public on a more regular basis than in the past.

Ideally Located
The window displays, arranged by experienced window decorators, are so striking that hundreds, seeing them by passing, have paused and then stepped inside to find out more about the library which is primarily devoted to business. The visitors generally become steady patrons.

Another great factor in the popularity of the Kirstein Memorial is its convenient location. Business men, according to the librarians, frequently express their appreciation in the fact that they can secure the reading matter and reference works they desire within a few minutes of their offices, instead of having to journey to Copley square to the main library.

So manifest is this attitude on the part of the library's patrons that Mrs. Dietrichson stated in her annual report that the remark is frequently made: "This branch meets a very great and definite need."

Boston Transcript
SATURDAY, AUGUST 29, 1931

An Indiana Visitor to Our Public Library

To the Editor of the Transcript:

During the past month I paid my first visit to Boston and was charmed by its interesting buildings saturated with historical associations. My only disappointment was in connection with the Boston Library. Believing that this feeling may be shared with many travelers, especially school teachers and children (though I belong to neither class), may I voice it and offer a suggestion?

The Public Library of Boston, with its famous mural decorations, had long been of interest to me and I was eager to see it. Imagine my amazement when I was directed to a second-story hall stairway so poorly lighted that many of the figures of the murals could scarcely be distinguished and some not at all. The Abbey Room, which was my real goal, was so cluttered with desks and files that despite a fairly open space in the center, my attention was distracted constantly in an effort to avoid contacts with the furniture in trying to get a proper light on the paintings. This room was poorly lighted that they were owning disappointment was to when I tried to buy reproductions of murals which I hoped would bring my eye had not caught. I had a full-sized post-card reproduction of the Abbey paintings in color. It was a set for $1.25 in which the reproduction of the murals was so small that the details were indistinguishable and the whole subordinated to the printed word which could be secured in any library.

These prices are beyond the means of the average tourist. In addition, these were not (except the two Saracenic cards) adequate reproductions. Outside the Public Library of Boston.

This indeed is in sad contrast to our European friends, who make of all their masterpieces reproductions at most reasonable prices to be secured anywhere. In no gallery of Europe have I paid as much as ten cents for a post-card reproduction of a painting except in Germany, where the card was exceptionally beautiful.

The Boston Library is the custodian of what I assume are the finest mural paintings in America and the finest murals by American artists in the world. No pains should be spared to show these to the best possible advantage. I admit a patriotic chagrin that the finest space in the library was given to the beautiful murals of a French artist. The Boston Library should recognize its educational responsibility in making reproductions of all these paintings available to the public at reasonable prices. Increase in the volume of business would, in my opinion, prevent financial loss. But the chief end would be to increase the number of persons who could study, appreciate and carry away excellent copies of the splendid work of American artists. It would add to the sense of gratitude and obligation that the average American traveler already has for the city of Boston.

Indianapolis, Aug. 25. MARGUERITE DICE

Boston Transcript
THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1931

LIBRARY DAYS AND NIGHTS

To the Editor of the Transcript:

It is almost inconceivable that the "Indiana visitor to our Public Library," who writes to you, should not have become aware of the fact that the Delivery Room, (which she calls the "Abbey Room") and points out as "so cluttered with desks and files," is temporarily in this inconvenient condition because of the sweeping repairs that are in process. Bates Hall and the Card Catalogue room have been entirely in the hands of workmen since May; the files and desks were, perforce, removed to the Delivery Room; the Lecture Hall is utilized to do duty, as best it can, for Bates Hall, and readers and visitors must, perforce, share with the library staff in the very great inconveniences and limitations caused by the extensive repairing. Let us trust that the end will crown the work, and that when this noble library, a very treasure-house of learning and literature, shall again be restored and opened to the public, the advantages of its increased beauty and privileges will amply compensate for the summer's deprivation. While visitors during this interregnum share, for their brief stay, in the annoyances entailed by the repairs, they seem not to share in the patience and the serene endurance that characterize the library people themselves, to whom the summer has been a hardship beyond the realization of the casual dropper-in. With the same unvarying courtesy and unflinching aid to the reader and habitué, they proceed with an absence of complaint that might well be imitated. The lady from Indiana leaves us indebted to her for a large assortment of advice as to the directions that should be pursued by the library authorities. To take advantage of all these gratuitous suggestions would, one may fear, entail even more extended repairs and over-turnings than are going on at present. Also, it might be suggested in return that while the library is enriched by its magnificent array of mural paintings, yet it is not, primarily, a museum of art; that its immense collection of books, rendering it a library for specialists in science, art, medicine, music, history, economics, philosophy with its marvelous resources in all literature closed under belles lettres, have rendered it a Mecca for scholars, writers, researchers of any order, during the past half century. A library is not static; it expands as life itself expands; and to its distinguished director, Charles F. D. Belden, its eminent and accomplished curators and assistants, there is due a recognition that words are inadequate to express. The generous hospitality, the unlimited service and aid given by all who constitute its staff is one feature that can hardly be negligible in any reference to the Public Library of Boston.

Boston, Sept. 12. LILIAN WHITING

But the objectors informed the Mayor that the figures were out of proportion at the Mission Hill building, and after a personal inspection of the building being completed at Tremont street, next to the Mission Church, the Mayor was inclined to agree with them. Rather than take the plaque down, the Mayor directed the trustees of the library to have the contractor carve a ribbon in artistic fashion over the two youths to meet the storm of protest which has been started by Mission Hill residents.

That would cost an extra $1000, the library trustees were informed by the contractor, A. Pletto, who has been erecting the building under the plans drawn by Architect Ralph Adams Cram. In view of the fact that the contractor's stone mason failed to follow the regular lines in the drawing of the nude figures, the trustees contended that there should be no additional charge for the ribbon work. They agreed that the price of $1000 was too much and so referred to the Mayor.

To this the Mayor replied that the drapery should be set up without delay and the price settled afterwards.

The Boston Post
FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1931

LIBRARY STATUES TOO NUDE

Mayor Curley Orders Draping of Granite for Figures

HEEDS PROTEST OF MISSION HILL FOLK

Objected to Designs of Plaque Over Entrance

A granite ribbon will be draped over the nude statues above the main entrance of the new $100,000 Mission Hill Public Library, under orders of Mayor Curley, to satisfy the demands of Roxbury residents, it was learned last night.

CALL PLAQUE IMMODEST
The residents protested that the plaque over the library entrance was immodest. It was the regular insignia of the library department, a replica of the carving over the entrance of the main public library at Copley square, displaying two youths guarding the city's seal.

But the objectors informed the Mayor that the figures were out of proportion at the Mission Hill building, and after a personal inspection of the building being completed at Tremont street, next to the Mission Church, the Mayor was inclined to agree with them. Rather than take the plaque down, the Mayor directed the trustees of the library to have the contractor carve a ribbon in artistic fashion over the two youths to meet the storm of protest which has been started by Mission Hill residents.

That would cost an extra $1000, the library trustees were informed by the contractor, A. Pletto, who has been erecting the building under the plans drawn by Architect Ralph Adams Cram. In view of the fact that the contractor's stone mason failed to follow the regular lines in the drawing of the nude figures, the trustees contended that there should be no additional charge for the ribbon work. They agreed that the price of $1000 was too much and so referred to the Mayor.

To this the Mayor replied that the drapery should be set up without delay and the price settled afterwards.

MODEST MAY NOW LOOK.

This was denied today by Everett A. McCassey, general superintendent for the contractor, who declared that the plans and drawings were followed faithfully in every detail.

Draping of the nude youths in the novel mode will cost an additional $2000, the contracting company informed the library trustees, but the trustees contend it should be done without extra cost.

LIBRARY ART WILL DON RIBBONS

Boys Without Clothes - Still Pictured in Every Book; Roxbury in First Complaint

Pictures on Page 2
Fall modes for nude boys were in dispute today as the two stone youths over which the dispute is waging continued, unmoved, their vigil over the door of Roxbury's new public library.

In all the innocence with which they have gone unclad for years while guarding the city of Boston seal on all libraries and in all public library books, the sturdy boyish pair stood immobile and let the battle between the cohorts of modesty wage merrily.

MAY GET A FIG LEAF

Whether the nude boys will discover their nudity draped with a stone ribbon, as suggested by Mayor Curley in answer to complaints of Mission Hill residents, or whether the boys' new Fall dress will be in the nature of Adam's original leafy garb in the days of Eden—well, the boys seemingly cared not.

The nude figures, those of two boys about 10 years old, guard the city of Boston seal over the main entrance of the new $100,000 Mission Hill branch of the library—and the composite makes up the Boston Public Library seal.

Although this seal has appeared on library buildings and in library books for many years, and library books probably have been read by many of the complainants against the alleged immodesty, no previous complaint has ever been registered against the nude youths.

MAYOR ORDERS DRAPERY

Mayor Curley, following the complaints, viewed the plaque and then ordered that the figures be draped in some form—perhaps with a stone ribbon.

The stone masons who will drape the youngsters on the building beside the Mission Church, however, cannot go ahead with their hard-rock tailoring until the library trustees decide on one of six patterns suggested by the architect, Ralph Adams Cram.

In no matter what fashion the stone boys are shelled from the modest gazes and the approaching chill winds, it will be the first draped replica of the public library's official seal in history.

It was complained also to the Mayor that the figures of the boys are out of proportion and that the contractor, A. Pletto, and his stone masons, failed to follow the original lines of the drawing in carving them.

MODEST MAY NOW LOOK.

This was denied today by Everett A. McCassey, general superintendent for the contractor, who declared that the plans and drawings were followed faithfully in every detail.

Draping of the nude youths in the novel mode will cost an additional $2000, the contracting company informed the library trustees, but the trustees contend it should be done without extra cost.

Little Boys' Figures on Library to Stay Awhile

LIKE 'EM THIS WAY?

As long as it's necessary to be so frigidly modest about those two statues of—er—undressed boys at the Public Library, why not make 'em really proper by dressing them in bathing suits, as illustrated above? Of course, the bathing suits are a trifle abbreviated, and possibly someone may insist on making them knee-length. But this is a start in the right direction, isn't it? Or do you think they'd look better in long flannel underwear?

Protesting residents of Roxbury will be forced to pass for the next few weeks with downcast eyes the nude figures of two little boys carved over the entrance of the new $100,000 Mission Hill branch library building, despite the orders of Mayor Curley to clothe them with a stone ribbon.

Trustees, architects, sculptors and artists complained last night that it would require some time to carry out the Mayor's orders immediately without marring the beauty of the building which was designed by Ralph Adams Cross, eminent Boston architect.

Although the Mayor explained that the stone ribbon carved the 3-year-old boys out of proportion, representatives of the A. Patti Contracting Company insisted last night that their stone mason had constructed the plaque to the letter of the specifications and pointed out that the building had been formally accepted by the city from the contractors.

Treasurer Walter T. Patti insisted that the plaque was a perfect duplicate of that which has adorned the main entrance of the Central Public Library for years, the regular library inspectors, perceiving two nude youths guarding the city seal.

Experts who viewed the plaque yesterday expressed the conviction that the whole slab over the entrance would have to be removed and a new one installed at a cost of far more than $100. To determine a way of meeting the Mayor's demands, the trustees will hold a meeting next week.

Boston Transcript SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1931

Library Announces 100 Free Lectures

A program of 100 free lectures and concerts to be given during the coming winter season in the lecture hall at the Boston Public Library has been announced. The programs will be given on Sunday, Monday and Thursday evenings at eight o'clock and Sunday afternoons at 3:30 P. M. Thursday lectures are usually illustrated.

The complete program is as follows:
The Copley Club Singers and Entertainers present a program of songs with instrumental accompaniment by Miss Louise Dumas, teacher of dancing. Dolores Rodriguez and Lela H. Sweet, pianists. Under the direction of Pauline Hammond Clark. Gilbert Stuart his life and paintings. Mrs. Vanhorn Davenport. Illustrated: 3:30, Sunday, Oct. 4.

The Colorful Orient. Alice Maynard Field. Changing China. Sunday, Oct. 4. In costume. 8:00, Thursday, Oct. 8. The Care of the Human Body. George R. Alexander. 3:30, Sunday, Oct. 11. Concert. Jenny Lind Chorus. J. Fritz Hartz, director. Ethel Erickson, accompanist. 8:00, Sunday, Oct. 11.

Theremin Concert. Micha Tulin, artist; William A. Marr, pianist. Courtesy of M. Steinet. Literary Reformers of Europe. Robert Merrill Bartlett. 3:30, Sunday, Oct. 18. Voice Development. Silje Troll, Josephine Cimatta. Dramatic soprano, and assisting artists. 8:00, Sunday, Oct. 18.

Your Home—its beauty and peace. Burritt S. D. Martin. 8:00, Thursday, Oct. 22. Men and Women: a psychological study. Lily Braunmann-Honell. 3:30, Sunday, Oct. 25. King Lear, lecturer and pianist. Carolyn Baritone. Assisted by a violinist and cellist. 8:00, Sunday, Oct. 25.

The Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum. Walter Howland. 8:00, Thursday, Oct. 28. Beauties and History of Niagara Falls. Virginia Wallwright. Illustrated: 3:30, Sunday, Nov. 1.

Reclinal, groups of Italian and Old English songs. Ethel Sleeper. Russell. 8:00, Sunday, Nov. 1. Wonderland of the Far North: Alaska and the Yukon territory. Arthur H. Merritt. 8:00, Thursday, Nov. 5.

The English Theatre. Frank W. C. Hervey. (Drama League Course.) 3:30, Sunday, Nov. 8. Song Recital. Helen True, soprano. 8:00, Sunday, Nov. 8.

South America and some of its birds. Dr. Charles W. Townsend, author and ornithologist. (Brookline Bird Club Course.) 8:00, Monday, Nov. 9.

The Canadian Rockies, a natural art gallery. Rev. Charles W. Cason. (Field and Forest Club Course.) 8:00, Thursday, Nov. 12. Art in Industry. Grace Carleton Mansfield. 3:30, Sunday, Nov. 15.

Concert. String Quartet. Assisting artist, Olga Currier, pianist. 8:00, Sunday, Nov. 15. Everlasting Egypt. Walter W. Allerton. In costume. 8:00, Thursday, Nov. 19.

Lithuania, the Land of Amber. Mrs. Anthony Shalins. Assisted by the Inter-racial Citizens Committee of Massachusetts. Mrs.

William Lowell Putnam, chairman. 8:00, Monday, Nov. 16.

For Panell, the Jolly Bachelor. Martha A. S. Shannon. Illustrated: 3:30, Sunday, Nov. 22.

Spanish-American Song Recital. Mrs. Bertha Robert. In costume. 8:00, Sunday, Nov. 22. Germany Today. John George Bucher. P. R. G. S. Slides and films. 8:00, Monday, Nov. 23.

Chamber Concert. Jane Leland Clarke and assisting artists. 3:30, Sunday, Nov. 29. Violin Recital. Joseph Pulvino. 8:00, Sunday, Nov. 29.

A Trip to Lake Titicaca. Arthur L. Sweet. 8:00, Thursday, Dec. 3. "Enoch Arden": with musical accompaniment by Strauss. George J. D. Currie of the Faculty of the Curry School of Expression. 3:30, Sunday, Dec. 6.

Concert. The Lincoln Orchestra Association. Jacques Hoffmann, conductor. 8:00, Sunday, Dec. 6.

Germany, her Culture and Beauty. John A. Wolk. Ph.D. Illustrated. Songs by the male chorists of the German Educational Society. Ben jamin Guckenberger, director. Assisted by the Inter-racial Citizens Committee of Massachusetts. Mrs. William Lowell Putnam, chairman. 8:00, Monday, Dec. 7.

Practitioner: Tip of the Cape. Percy A. Brigham. (Field and Forest Club Course.) 8:00, Thursday, Dec. 10.

The Hittite Empire. Plays: A Decade's Record. Robert E. Rogers. A.M. (Drama League Course.) 3:30, Sunday, Dec. 13. and assisting artists. 8:00, Sunday, Dec. 13.

Italy's New Drama. Poetess, Harold Lord Varney. Assisted by the Massachusetts Historical Society. 8:00, Monday, Dec. 14.

Music Dream-Pictures. Margaret Anderson. Assisted by the musician. Illustrated. 8:00, Thursday, Dec. 17. Dickens' Christmas Carol. Edward F. Payne. (Frederick Boston Branch of the Dickens Fellowship. Illustrated: 3:30, Sunday, Dec. 20.

The Human Voice and its Adaptability. A lecture-recital. Alicia Starrett. 8:00, Sunday, Dec. 20.

Nassau and Mussolini, the Two Greatest Figures of Modern Italy. William A. Prayer. President. Bureau of University Travel. 3:30, Sunday, Dec. 27.

Concert. Boston String Quartet. 8:00, Sunday, Dec. 27.

Of the Beaten Path. Henry Warren Poor. A.M. 8:00, Thursday, Dec. 31.

Music in America by Americans. A program. "For Young People of All Ages." Performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. 3:30, Sunday, Jan. 3.

Recital. Roland E. Partridge, tenor; Lewis M. Stark, accompanist. 8:00, Sunday, Jan. 3. The London that Dickens Loved. Florence Smith. 8:00, Thursday, Jan. 7.

Some Phases of the Drama. Matthew T. Condit. (Drama League Course.) 3:30, Sunday, Jan. 10.

Concert. Meriminka Trio. 8:00, Sunday, Jan. 10.

Armenian Literature. Vahram Krikorian. Music. Hermine Vervant, pianist. Suzanne Al. Assisted by the Inter-racial Citizens Committee of Massachusetts. Mrs. William Lowell Putnam, chairman. 8:00, Monday, Jan. 11.

Climbing Mount Hona in Alaska. Performed by the Mount Hona Club. 8:00, Thursday, Jan. 14.

Readings from Contemporary Poetry with Comment. Katherine Brooke Norcross. 3:30, Sunday, Jan. 17.

Concert. Boston Jewish Choral Society. Prof. S. Braslavsky, conductor. 8:00, Sunday, Jan. 17. Costa Rica: its Jungles and Volcanoes. The experiences of a naturalist. W. Stephen Thomas. 8:00, Thursday, Jan. 21.

Song Recital. Lina and Alida Paget. 3:30, Sunday, Jan. 24.

Chamber Concert. South Mountain String Quartet. Courtesy of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge. 8:00, Sunday, Jan. 24.

Music of the Catholic Liturgy. Leonard S. Whalen. A.M. Illustrations by choir of men and boys. St. Paul's, Dorchester. 8:00, Thursday, Jan. 28.

Concert. Mendelssohn Singers. J. Fritz Hartz, director. Arville Anderson, accompanist. 3:30, Sunday, Jan. 31.

Songs and Legends of the Hebrews. Clara Shaw-Davis. Francis Murray, accompanist. 8:00, Sunday, Jan. 31.

The Eastern Mind and Spirit's Cultural Contributions. Rev. Abraham M. Ribbans. Syrian Music. (Assisted by the Inter-racial Citizens Committee of Massachusetts.) Mrs. William Lowell Putnam, chairman. 8:00, Monday, Feb. 1.

Readings from the Poems of Nancy Byrd Turner. With musical interpretations by Alice Marney Foster, contralto. Nancy Byrd Turner. 3:30, Sunday, Feb. 7.

Hebrew Songs to the Celtic Harp. Heloise Russell-Pearson. 8:00, Sunday, Feb. 7.

Painting and its Peoples. Captain H. Plunkett Woolgate. F.R.C.S. Illustrated: 8:00, Monday, Feb. 8.

Zinn, Bryce Canyon, Grand Canyon National Parks. Keith National Forests, and Cedar Breaks. Randall L. Jones. (Field and Forest Club Course.) 8:00, Thursday, Feb. 11.

George Washington, City Planner and Architect. Frank Chouteau Brown. 3:30, Sunday, Feb. 14.

Concert. Hoffmann String Quartet. 8:00, Sunday, Feb. 14.

An Authentic Portrait of Shakespeare. Frank G. de Heeman. 8:00, Thursday, Feb. 18.

The Intellectual Background of the Irish People. Sidney Gunn. 3:30, Sunday, Feb. 21.

Concert. Alexander Komarovsky, Roumanian violinist. 8:00, Sunday, Feb. 21.

Buss R's of the Orient. Hatavia, Bangkok and Bombay. John C. Howker. M.D. 8:00, Thursday, Feb. 25.

Viola Recital. Joseph Pulvino. 3:30, Sunday, Feb. 28.

Concert. Harvard University Orchestra. P. R. G. S. Wallace Woodworth, conductor. 8:00, Sunday, Feb. 28.

Three Centuries of New England Hospitality. Betty Bruce. In costume. 8:00, Thursday, March 3.

Eugene O'Neill: Playwright-Philosopher. Albert R. Lowrey, director of the Cambridge School of the Drama. (Drama League Course.) 3:30, Sunday, March 6.

Recital. Drama, Poetry and Music of Legend and Myth. Laura Hustache Porter. 8:00, March 8.

Some Adriatic Trails. Ralph De Lasa. (Field and Forest Club Course.) 8:00, March 10.

The Contemporary Spanish Drama. Samuel M. Waxman. 19:14. (Drama League Course.) 8:00, Sunday, March 15.

Concert. The Lincoln Orchestra Association. Jacques Hoffmann, conductor. 8:00, Sunday, March 15.

Some Ukrainian Contributions to World Culture. "Soli Revok." Folk dancing and folk music, under the direction of Rev. Joseph Zeleutsky. (Assisted by the Inter-racial Citizens Committee of Massachusetts.) Mrs. William Lowell Putnam, chairman. 8:00, Sunday, March 14.

Switzerland. Experiences in the Country and with its People. Harold M. Vanosch. 8:00, Thursday, March 17.

Crossing the Andes in a Motor Boat. Alta Howland Macomber. Illustrated: 3:30, Sunday, March 20.

Concert. Boston University Orchestra. Assisted by the Boston University Orchestra. 8:00, Thursday, March 24.

Renowned European Boyars. A historical experience. Mrs. James Frederick Hoskins. 8:00, Thursday, March 24.

Shakespeare's "Henry the Fourth, Part 1." Grover C. Shaw. 8:00, Sunday, March 27.

Concert. Choral Society of the Massachusetts Philharmonic. May Place Hoffman, man, president. George Sawyer Bushman, conductor. 8:00, Sunday, March 27.

Readings from "The Everlasting Road" by Stephen Zweig. A play for the new world of peace and brotherhood. Susan Bartlett. 3:30, Sunday, April 3.

Piano Recital. Elizabeth Sleight. 8:00, Sunday, April 3.

Citizenship. Baldwin W. Gause. 8:00, Thursday, April 7.

The Country of the Golden Dragon, an intimate story of Chinese life. Mary Parker Tuning. In native costume. 3:30, Sunday, April 10.

Concert. Boston Jewish Symphony Orchestra. Prof. S. Braslavsky, conductor. 8:00, Sunday, April 10.

Program of Imitations of Bird Songs and Calls. Charles Crawford Gert. Brookline Bird Club Course. 8:00, Sunday, April 11.

Along Beaten Paths in France. Mrs. Arthur Dullow Lopez. 8:00, Thursday, April 11.

Short Plays and Songs. Under the direction of Marie Ware Loughlin. 3:30, Sunday, April 17.

Concert. Boston Civic Symphony Orchestra. Joseph F. Wagner, conductor. 8:00, Sunday, April 17.

Love Stories from Charles Dickens. A lecture-recital. Esther L. Colver. A.D. R.I. 301. Illustrated: 8:00, Thursday, April 22.

Prohibition. Act of the Civic Library Adm. Illustrated: 3:30, Sunday, April 24.

Concert. Interludio Trio. 8:00, Sunday, April 24.

Glimpses of the Connecticut Valley. Little Squier Corbin. 8:00, Thursday, April 28.

THE BOSTON HUSKIN CLUB
The Huskin Club meets in the Lecture Hall, usually on the second and fourth Mondays of the month, at 2 o'clock P. M. These meetings are followed by free lectures at 3 o'clock. The following titles being announced subject to change.

Creating One's Life. L. H. Whiting. Oct. 5. What Every Woman Knows. J. M. Telfer. Dramatic Reading. Edith Byrnes Gray. Nov. 12. Direction of Miss. Laura Tost. Oct. 13.

The Influence of Poetry and original poems. Joelle Eldridge Southwick. R.I. 1. Nov. 9. Muscle Shoals and the South and West. Illustrated. Andrew Oliver. R.I. 2. Nov. 23.

To be announced, Dec. 7. Christmas Carols. Mrs. Laura Tost. Director of program. Graduate of the local conservatory of Music. Misses Lucy. Dec. 14.

Covered Bridges of New England. Illustrated. Amy Louise Woods. Jan. 11. Ruskin's Art Teaching. May Smith Dean. M.A.; Jan. 27.

John Ruskin's Birth Anniversary. Agnes Knox Black. 8:30, in memory of R. Charles Black. L.L.B. Late professor of English literature. Boston University. March. Director of Mrs. Laura Tost. Feb. 8.

Arthur. Dudley Rogers. President. Massachusetts Woman's Christian Temperance League. Illustrated. Feb. 29.

Birds As Poets. See them. Philip Willard. Formerly with the Smithsonian Institution. Washington, D.C. Illustrated. Dec. 14.

Violon and Violon. Mrs. Herbert J. Gurney. Former president of the Massachusetts Federation of Women's Clubs. March 28.

The Negro's Contribution to America. Matthew W. Hiles. A.D. L.I. 1. March 6.

A Trip Through the Caribbean Sea. Motion picture of Mrs. Laura Tost. March 11. Motion picture of the Hall-Twoel series. Motion picture of the Hall-Twoel series. March 11.

FOR GOODNESS' SAKE

MAYOR CURLEY ORDERS STONE RIBBONS ON LIBRARY FIGURES (NEWS ITEM)

WHY NOT DOUBLE BREASTED OVERCOATS AND DIVERS' HELMETS?

VIRTUE PRESERVED

THE BOSTON SEAL FLANKED BY BOSTON GARTERS

DEPRESSION WEAR FOR THE LITTLE BRATS

AFTER THIS—NO UNVEILING CEREMONIES

NEW INDUSTRY IN QUINCY GRANITE STEPPINS FOR PUBLIC STATUES

George Washington Bicentennial Committee of the City of Boston

Honorary Chairman

HON. JAMES M. CURLEY
MAYOR OF BOSTON

Honorary Vice-Chairmen

EDMUND L. DOLAN
DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC CELEBRATIONS

STANTON R. WHITE
ASSISTANT DIRECTOR

JOHN A. SCANGA
PRESIDENT

CITIZENS' PUBLIC CELEBRATIONS ASSOCIATION

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

THOMAS A. MULLEN
CHAIRMAN

EVERETT B. MERO
SECRETARY

J. C. S. ANDREW

HENRY F. BRENNAN

FRANK CHOUTEAU BROWN

JULIUS DANIELS

RALPH M. EASTMAN

BARTHOLOMEW F. GRIFFIN

MISS ELIZABETH M. HERLIHY

H. AINSLEY HIGHMAN

HON. FRANK LEVERONI

JOSEPH A. F. O'NEIL

MRS. WM. STANLEY PARKER

COL. CARROLL J. SWAN

MRS. EVA WHITING WHITE

Organized for the Purpose of Commemorating in 1932 the 200th Anniversary of the Birth of Washington

1732 :: 1932

ROOM 49, CITY HALL

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS

OCT 1 1931 TO
DEC 14 1934

Boston Transcript

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1931

Lay Cornerstone of Boylston Library

The corner stone of the Boylston branch library at 433 Center street, Jamaica Plain, was laid this noon at exercises attended by Mayor Curley, members of the board of trustees of the Boston Public Library and an audience of several hundred persons. The building of the structure, which will be completed in ninety days, will cost approximately $76,000. Besides Mayor Curley, the speakers included Charles Belden, librarian of the Boston Public Library, and Ellery Sedgwick a member of the board of trustees.

JAMAICA PLAIN ITEM

F. J. MacDONALD

Editor and Publisher

FRIDAY, OCT., 2, 1931

Branch Library Cornerstone Laid

About 300 persons attended the exercises at the new Boston branch library at 433 Centre street, Jamaica Plain, Wednesday, when the cornerstone was laid by Mayor Curley.

Charles Belden, secretary to the library trustees, presided at the affair. Ellery Sedgwick, one of the trustees, was the first speaker. He was followed by Mayor Curley, who spoke with regret that "one who had labored indefatigably for the branch library" was not at the exercises.

Boston Daily Globe

MONDAY, OCT 5, 1931

MUSIC AND HYGIENE COURSES PLANNED

Classes in "Appreciation of Symphonies" and "Mental Hygiene of Childhood and Adolescence" will start Thursday under the auspices of the university extension division of the State Department of Education.

The symphonies course is based on programs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Alfred H. Meyer, music critic and member of the faculty of the Boston Conservatory of Music and the Boston University College of Music, and Richard G. Appel of the music division of the Boston Public Library, are the instructors.

It will open at 5:15 p. m. in the Boston Public Library lecture hall with a lecture by Dean John Marshall of the Boston University College of Music.

The mental hygiene course is intended for all persons responsible for the development of children, including parents, teachers and social workers. It will open at 7:30 p. m. in Harvard Hall, Harvard University, and Harriet L. Parsons, instructor in psychiatric social work, Simmons College School of Social Work, will be the leader.

Among those who will lecture are Mrs. Tracy Mallory of the psychology department of Wellesley College, Sybil Foster and Ruth Faulkner, both of the educational department of the Massachusetts Society for Mental Hygiene.

TIME

October 5, 1931

Ribbons for Boston

Boston's Library Trustees' shield, designed in 1878 by the late Augustus Saint-Gaudens, has as supporters two nude children (male). On complaints from a group of citizens led by Rev. Michael A. Gearin, Mayor James Michael Curley requested last week that the supporters of the shield be removed from the facade of the Mission Hill Public Library should have their pudenda shrouded in granite ribbons. Whether all reproductions of the shield should be similarly ribboned then became a hot argument in Boston.

Boston's reputation for civic censorship is old and well established. It was Boston that forbade Mary Garden to appear in Richard Strauss's Salome. It was Boston that banned the sale of Theodore Dreiser's An American Tragedy. It was Boston that kept Scribner's Magazine off the stands for printing the final chapters of Ernest Hemingway's A Farewell to Arms. The list is endless, but Boston's tireless censorship is generally directed at the stage and the printed page. Not for many months has it bothered with sculpture and the fine arts.

Until recently Boston's shock troops were under two commands: the potent Watch & Ward Society, and the Licensing Division of the City of Boston. The Watch & Ward Society was originally an organization headed by clergymen who had the co-operation of booksellers in the suppression of erotica. It reached its greatest effectiveness under the leadership of indomitable Rev. Jason Franklin Chase. Reformer Chase died in 1926. The W. & W. received a serious blow when Bishop William Lawrence and several of its directors resigned as a result of the public exposure of the way the society's agents procureurs had persuaded the proprietor of Cambridge's famed Dunster House Bookshop to sell them a copy of D. H. Lawrence's Lady Chatterley's Lover. W. & W. is now in serious financial difficulties. Boston's forces of righteousness are at present headed by slim, white-haired, horn-spectacled John Michael Casey, chief of the city's Licensing Division. For 27 years City Censor Casey, who is on record as having said, "Don't you know that Eugene O'Neill never wrote on a decent theme in his life?" has passed on every theatrical offering of the Boston stage. He also licenses peddlers and newsboys.

Boston's Censor Casey

... since chorus ladies carried spears.

The guardian of Boston's theatrical morals started life as a trap drummer in burlesque houses in the days when chorus ladies carried spears. He became kettle-drummer for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but his career as a tympanist was cut short when he met with an accident and had to have his right arm amputated at the shoulder. Mr. Casey's father, an upholsterer, was one of the best friends of the then Mayor, Patrick Andrew Collins. Mayor Collins found Mr. Casey the job he still holds.

Boston Daily Globe

THURSDAY, OCT 8, 1931

MAYOR TO SPEAK IN BRIGHTON

Corner Stone to Be Laid for Library Tomorrow

The corner stone of the Faneuil Branch of the Boston Public Library will be laid tomorrow noon at Bigelow and Faneuil sts, Oak sq, Brighton.

Mayor James M. Curley will be the chief speaker, while clergymen and library officials will also take part in the initial step to replace the inadequate library, which now has its quarters on Brooks st. City Councillor Edward M. Gallagher of Ward 22, who has worked hard and long for this new building will preside.

Rev. Fr. James J. Murphy, pastor of Our Lady of the Presentation Church, will give the invocation; Rev. Andrew H. Mulnix, pastor of the Faneuil Congregational Church, will offer benediction. The speakers include Mrs. Thomas F. McMahon, representing the Better Homes' Association of Brighton; Charles F. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, and Frank Buxton of the library trustees. There will be a program of music at the exercises.

The new building will be of limestone and will give approximately twice as much room as the present wooden building on Brooks st. On the main floor there will be a children's room, adults' room, librarian's office, lecture room and workroom. In the basement there will be quarters for the help and a kitchen, and a room for storage of several thousand books.

Miss Gertrude L. Connell is the librarian of the present building and will continue in that capacity in the new. The building will be erected at an estimated cost of $100,000. There will be approximately 16,000 volumes in the various racks and shelves.

THE BOSTON HERALD

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1931

LAY CORNERSTONE OF LIBRARY TODAY

Mayor Curley Will Speak at Brighton Ceremonies

With fitting ceremonies the cornerstone of the Faneuil branch of the Boston Public Library at 419 Faneuil street, Oak Square, Brighton, will be laid at noon today. Mayor Curley will deliver the principal address.

The branch library, being erected at a cost of $54,475 will be completed by Jan. 15, 1932. The building of modern type will contain an adult reading room seating 60, a juvenile reading room seating 60, a lecture hall seating 168, public stacks, offices, workroom, staff lunch room, basement book storage and boiler room. It will have a shelf capacity of 16,500 books. The exterior will be of Indiana limestone.

City Councillor Edward M. Gallagher will preside at the cornerstone ceremonies. The Rev. James J. Murphy, pastor of the Church of Our Lady of the Presentation, will deliver the invocation. Frank W. Buxton will represent the library trustees. Mayor Curley will give the main address and Thomas McMann, local chairman of the better homes committee will speak. The Rev. Andrew H. Mulnix of the Faneuil Congregational Church will give the benediction. There will be music by the 101st infantry band.

CITY OF BOSTON

HONORABLE JAMES M. CURLEY, MAYOR

Laying of Corner Stone
of
Faneuil Branch Library

419 Faneuil Street, Oak Square, Brighton

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1931, AT 12 M.

INTRODUCTION. Presiding Officer, Edward M. Gallagher
Member of City Council from Brighton

INVOCATION. Rev. James J. Murphy
Pastor of Our Lady of the Presentation Church

ADDRESS. Mr. Frank W. Buxton
Member of Board of Trustees, Boston Public Library

ADDRESS. Mrs. Thomas F. McMahon
Chairman Better Homes Committee, Brighton District

BAND SELECTION.

LAYING OF CORNER STONE.

ADDRESS. Hon. James M. Curley, Mayor of Boston

BENEDICTION. Rev. Andrew H. Mulnix
Pastor, Faneuil Congregational Church

Music by 101st Veterans' Band
Architects, Kilham, Hopkins & Greeley, Boston
Builder, Boyer Construction Company, Boston

The Renovated
THE LIBRARY

YOU have beam on Blick, the main st Public Library, reopening to the Bates Hall. "It's been pre told the Librarit profile to better how visitors mal "A silly fuss," lowering his lam summer they we glance at our st "Our 'gorgeous Blick interpolates barely noticed u tering about get to look up their. "The lecture hi the ancestor bo pedias while th Hall," explained and attendants at been cleaned an statues had thei "Like when th year," Blick rei "you put a piece. "Many people ti put our picture i lip quivering sli "Well, anyway, Bates Hall is almost as beautiful as we are now," Blick put in, "or so people tell us." "But you know what silly things people say," laughed Blick, moving slightly so that the sun would light up his mane. "You must see Bates Hall," said Tony, dreamily but firmly dismissing the Librarian and leaning forward to transfix a group of awed tourists with a majestic stare. So the Librarian discreetly crept away and into Bates Hall. The lions were right. It is more dazzlingly beautiful than you would believe possible. The floor is now of stone, with a main aisle of marble in the reference room. The splendid ceiling has been cleaned and the warm gray tones of the stone have now come to light. The panels beneath the decorative congratulations on an unusual honor which has been bestowed upon him. The secretary of the British Library Association recently notified the Boston Librarian that he had been elected by the Council of the Association an honorary fellow of the British equivalent of the A. L. A. Librarians recall that following Dr. Belden's year as president of the American Library Association—that busy and exciting time when the association was celebrating its fiftieth anniversary—he was a delegate to the British Library Association when it held its half century celebration. This was held at Edinburgh in 1927. Since then, British librarians have visited Boston on every possible occasion. Dr. Belden's election is bound to strengthen the tie of friendliness between the two nations.

Boston Traveler

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1931

Harold F. Wheeler, Editor

Cornerstone Is Laid for Faneuil Branch Library

Mayor Curley laying the cornerstone of the Faneuil branch of the Boston Public Library, Oak square, Brighton, today.

2000 Attend Ceremonies at Which Mayor Curley Is the Principal Speaker—Frank W. Buxton Represents Library Trustees

About 2000 persons, including many schoolchildren, attended the cornerstone laying ceremonies today at the Faneuil branch of the Boston Public Library, being erected at 419 Faneuil street, Oak Square, Brighton.

CURLEY GIVES ADDRESS

Mayor Curley delivered the principal address before the crowd. City Councilman Edward M. Gallagher presided.

Frank W. Buxton, representing the library trustees, said that the branch was the fourth link of a chain of branch libraries which will be unequally in the world. He thanked the mayor for his interest and informed the gathering that the city had conceived the chain library idea and carried it out. The program opened with an invocation by the Rev. James J. Murphy, pastor of the Church of Our Lady of the Presentation.

Thomas McMann, local chairman of the better homes committee, and Charles Belden, library director, also spoke. Benediction was given by the Rev. Andrew H. Mulnix of the Faneuil Congregational Church. Eileen Sullivan, an eighth grade pupil in Our Lady of the Presentation parochial school, presented a bouquet of flowers to Mayor Curley. Music was furnished by the 101st Infantry band.

The new branch will be completed Jan. 15, 1932, at a cost of $54,475. The building will contain an adult reading room seating 60 persons and a juvenile room seating a similar number. There will be a lecture hall with a seating capacity of 100. The branch will have a shelf capacity for 16,500 books.

THE BOSTON HERALD

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1931

LAY CORNERSTONE OF BRANCH LIBRARY

City Officials Greeted by 2000
Brighton Square

The cornerstone of the Faneuil branch of the Boston Public Library was laid yesterday. The new structure, which will have a shelf capacity of 16,500 volumes, is to be erected at 419 Faneuil street, Oak square, Brighton.

The ceremonies were witnessed by more than 2000 persons, including a host of school children. Mayor Curley wielded the trowel and made the principal address of the occasion. City Councilman Edward M. Gallagher presided.

The Rev. James J. Murphy, pastor of the Church of Our Lady of the Presentation, uttered the invocation and the benediction was pronounced by the Rev. Andrew H. Mulnix of the Faneuil Congregational Church. Frank W. Buxton, representing the library trustees, said that the library branch is the fourth link in a chain that will be unequalled by any in the world. He credited Mayor Curley with the chain library idea.

Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, also spoke, as did Thomas McMann, local chairman of the better homes committee. The Faneuil branch will be completed about Jan. 15 next and will cost $54,475.

MAYOR LAYS CORNERSTONE OF FANEUIL BRANCH LIBRARY

Mr Curley Tells Gathering That in 11 Years Every Ward
Of Boston Will Have a Similar Building,
Each Costing $100,000

MAYOR CURLEY USING TROWEL TO SPREAD CEMENT ABOVE CORNERSTONE

Mayor Curley officiated at noon yesterday at the laying of the cornerstone of the Faneuil Branch of the Boston Public Library at Oak square, Brighton.

The new building which is to replace the old wooden structure on Brooks at 1st of limestones. It is one of a chain of 22 to be erected throughout the city in the next 11 years. The Mayor told the gathering that each year an appropriation of $200,000 will be made for two libraries until the end of the 11th year there will be a branch in each ward of the city.

City Councilor Edward M. Gallagher of Ward 22 presided at the exercises. Rev. James J. Murphy, pastor of Our Lady of the Presentation Church, Oak sq., offered the invocation. Fr. Murphy also paid a great tribute to the Mayor, holding him up as an example of one who has used and learned to love books. He said, "I rank you among the great professors of the Nation. You stand pre-eminent in rhetoric and oratory among the leaders of the Nation."

Fr. Murphy also paid tribute to City Councilor Gallagher, who was instrumental in securing the library for Brighton.

Gathered at the exercises were the pupils of Our Lady of the Presentation School and a large number of residents of the district. The fire apparatus of the Oak-st fire station was drawn out of the house by order of Diet Chief Cornelius O'Brien.

solace to be gained from communion with the great authors. He said, "We believe in athletics for developing the body; so will reading and literature develop the mind." Mr. Curley commented on the recent encyclical of the Pope concerning disarmament, and said that 84 percent of the money collected in taxes in this country is spent either in the payment of debts for past wars or preparation for those in the future. This he said left only 14 cents of every dollar collected by taxation for expenditure for other Government needs. He pointed out that this was the psychological time for universal disarmament, and that if the United States were allowed to dictate at this time all of the money spent for these purposes could be turned to a good use. Europe he said spent 92 cents of every dollar for war purposes.

Mayor Curley told the children that unless they used the library the money spent on it would be wasted. He complimented City Councilor Edward M. Gallagher, Miss Gertrude L. Connell, librarian, and Mrs. Thomas F. McMahon for their efforts to bring the library there. Miss Connell was presented a bouquet of flowers.

Charles F. D. Belden, director of the library; Frank W. Buxton, a library trustee, and Mrs. Thomas F. McMahon were the other speakers. Rev. Andrew H. Mulnix, pastor of the Faneuil Congregational Church, gave the benediction. A program was given before and after the speaking by the 101st Infantry Band.

The new building will be completed by the middle of January. It will have an adult reading room, a children's room, a lecture hall, office, workroom, staff lunchroom, book storage rooms, and will have a shelf capacity of 16,500 books. This will give double the accommodations of the present building.

(Transcript Photograph by Frank E. Colby)

The Renovated Bates Hall Reading Room of the Boston Public Library

THE LIBRARIAN

YOU have noticed the satisfied beam on the faces of Tony and Blick, the lions who guard the main staircase of the Boston Public Library. The cause of this is the reopening to the public of the renovated Bates Hall.

"It's been pretty hard on us," Blick told the Librarian, as he arranged his profile to better advantage, "you know how visitors make a fuss over us—"

"A silly fuss," broke in Tony, modestly lowering his lambent eyes, "but all this summer they went right by without a glance at our fluffy manes—"

"Our 'gorgeous' manes, as they say," Blick interpolated. "Well, I mean, they barely noticed us; just went past, muttering about getting to the lecture hall to look up their ancestors."

"The lecture hall is where they moved the ancestor books and the encyclopedias while they were fixing Bates Hall," explained Tony. "Now the books and attendants are back and everything's been cleaned and painted. Even the statues had their faces washed."

"Like when they gave us a bath last year," Blick reminded the Librarian, "you put a piece about it in the paper."

"Many people thought you should have put our picture in too," said Tony, his lip quivering slightly.

"Well, anyway, Bates Hall is almost as beautiful as we are now," Blick put in, "or so people tell us."

"But you know what silly things people say," laughed Blick, moving slightly so that the sun would light up his mane.

"You must see Bates Hall," said Tony, dreamily but firmly dismissing the Librarian and leaning forward to transfix a group of awed tourists with a majestic stare.

So the Librarian discreetly crept away and into Bates Hall. The lions were right. It is more dazzlingly beautiful than you would believe possible. The floor is now of stone, with a main aisle of marble in the reference room. The splendid ceiling has been cleaned and the warm gray tones of the stone have now come to light. The panels beneath the decorative rosettes of the ceiling have been freshly tinted green-blue as have been the wall panels.

The marble doorway near the Catalogue Room has been cleaned and polished so thoroughly that the pale green veining shows through the rich blackness of the stone. Perhaps the greatest triumph is the cleaning of the superb doorway in the center of the hall. It is now possible to see clearly all the breathtaking, flamboyant carving.

All woodwork throughout the department has been refinished and glows resplendent. Busts of Sir Walter Scott, Henry James and all the others have a glistening well-soaped look, as well. All the windows have been washed. Not that there is anything unusual about that, as they are given a scrubbing every six months. This process, however, did little to lessen the prevailing dinginess.

Library patrons must have been somewhat startled to find that the Bates Hall center desk has been moved from its place beneath the windows to a space just inside the center door. This may be in keeping with the latest decrees of library science but, to a casual observer, it appears that a less obtrusive arrangement might have been made. The Catalogue Room has likewise been refurbished. A stone floor has been laid here, also, and the catalogues moved closer to the wall to make room. The entire hall, in fact, has regained lightness and grace in addition to its regal magnificence.

Dr. Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, is receiving congratulations on an unusual honor which has been bestowed upon him. The secretary of the British Library Association recently notified the Boston Librarian that he had been elected by the Council of the Association an honorary fellow of the British equivalent of the A. L. A.

Librarians recall that following Dr. Belden's year as president of the American Library Association—that busy and exciting time when the association was celebrating its fiftieth anniversary—he was a delegate to the British Library Association when it held its half century celebration. This was held at Edinburgh in 1927. Since then, British librarians have visited Boston on every possible occasion. Dr. Belden's election is bound to strengthen the tie of friendliness between the two nations.

Boston Traveler

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1931

Harold F. Wheeler, Managing Editor

Cornerstone Is Laid for Faneuil Branch Library

of the y is purphy, ady of nan of and also by the Faneuil Sullivan Lady school, Mayor by the pleted. The reading juvenile There seating 11 have tor of resen- d the Rev. Con-

The cornerstone of the Faneuil branch of the Boston Public Library was laid yesterday. The new structure, which will have a shelf capacity of 16,500 volumes, is to be erected at 419 Faneuil street, Oak square, Brighton.

The ceremonies were witnessed by more than 2000 persons, including a host of school children. Mayor Curley wielded the trowel and made the principal address of the occasion. City Councilman Edward M. Gallagher presented the library trustees, said that the library branch is the fourth link in a chain that will be unequalled by any in the world. He credited Mayor Curley with the conception and execution of the chain library idea.

Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, also spoke, as did Thomas McMann, local chairman of the better homes committee. The Faneuil branch will be completed about Jan. 15 next and will cost $54,475.

MAYOR LAYS CORNERSTONE OF FANEUIL BRANCH LIBRARY

Mr Curley Tells Gathering That in 11 Years Every Ward Of Boston Will Have a Similar Building, Each Costing $100,000

MAYOR CURLEY USING TROWEL TO SPREAD CEMENT ABOVE CORNERSTONE

Mayor Curley officiated at noon yesterday at the laying of the cornerstone of the Faneuil Branch of the Boston Public Library at Oak sq., Brighton.

The new building which is to replace the old wooden structure on Brooks st. is of limestone. It is one of a chain of 22 to be erected throughout the city in the next 11 years. The Mayor told the gathering that each year an appropriation of $200,000 will be made for two libraries until the end of the 11th year there will be a branch in each ward of the city.

City Councilor Edward M. Gallagher of Ward 22 presided at the exercises. Rev. James J. Murphy, pastor of Our Lady of the Presentation Church, Oak sq., offered the invocation. Fr. Murphy also paid a great tribute to the Mayor, holding him up as an example of one who has used and learned to love books. He said, "I rank you among the great professors of the Nation. You stand pre-eminent in rhetoric and oratory among the leaders of the Nation."

Fr. Murphy also paid tribute to City Councilor Gallagher, who was instrumental in securing the library for Brighton.

Gathered at the exercises were the pupils of Our Lady of the Presentation School and a large number of residents of the district. The fire apparatus of the Oak-st fire station was drawn out of the house by order of Diet Chief Cornelius O'Brien.

In behalf of the school children Eileen Sullivan, eighth grade pupil, presented the Mayor a bouquet of flowers.

Mayor Curley told of the great solace to be gained from communion with the great authors.

He said, "We believe in athletics for developing the body; so will reading and literature develop the mind."

Mr. Curley commented on the recent encyclical of the Pope concerning disarmament, and said that 84 percent of the money collected in taxes in this country is spent either in the payment of debts for past wars or preparation for those in the future. This he said left only 14 cents of every dollar collected by taxation for expenditure for other Government needs. He pointed out that this was the psychological time for universal disarmament, and that if the United States were allowed to dictate at this time all of the money spent for these purposes could be turned to a good use. Europe he said spent 92 cents of every dollar for war purposes.

Mayor Curley told the children that unless they used the library the money spent on it would be wasted. He complimented City Councilor Edward M. Gallagher, Miss Gertrude L. Connell, librarian, and Mrs. Thomas F. McMahon for their efforts to bring the library there. Miss Connell was presented a bouquet of flowers.

Charles F. D. Belden, director of the library; Frank W. Buxton, a library trustee; and Mrs. Thomas F. McMahon were the other speakers. Rev. Andrew H. Mulnix, pastor of the Faneuil Congregational Church, gave the benediction. A program was given before and after the speaking by the 101st Infantry Band.

The new building will be completed by the middle of January. It will have an adult reading room, a children's room, a lecture hall, offices, workroom, staff lunchroom, book storage rooms, and will have a shelf capacity of 16,500 books. This will give double the accommodations of the present building.

Bad Sixpences:

"Our Ideas are for the most part like bad sixpences and we spend our lives in trying to pass them on one another." By Karl Schriftgiesser

Gold Standard

RESEARCH work, properly conducted, may be a pleasant occupation as well as a fruitful one, but one place to pursue it is not, I have learned to my intense sorrow, in a public library. Only this last week I have spent much time with the files of old magazines, delving, as they say, into the thoughts and interest of the past. It has been a fascinating plunge, for I have been diving into depths of forgotten wisdom in a sea of old architectural magazines which never had a wide or popular distribution even in the days before they became yellowed and dust-covered from disuse. But alas, what I have missed I cannot say, because the only place where these beloved files of mine could be found were in the Public Library of Boston. The truth which I learned marked Silence, is this—that the signs marked Silence which our great and generous city so plentifully supplies are, at least after the schools of Boston have turned their young hopefuls loose for the day, a mockery and a delusion.

If a professor in New York can say that whisperers are morons I can say as truthfully that the students of Boston who use the Public Library for a study hall are no gentlemen and no ladies. That is, some of them, too many of them. There are a few, oh hopeful sign, who evidently feel as I do about the library's whisperers and talkers. They gift their teeth and a fier in silence over their tomes while the titters and whispers go on around them. Either that, or the look of intense concentration on their faces is, in reality, a sign of sleep. Or, perhaps, having had experience, they came to the library (as I shall in the future) generously supplied with absorbent cotton to stuff into their assailed ears.

+

Some few years of newspaper work have taught me to concentrate. Amid the din of the teletypes and Morse keys and the hoarse grunts of a telegraph-news editor issuing his commands I can work with the best of them. In a roomful of reporters I can dash off my share of copy. But in a roomful of silly girls chattering and simpering in the Fine Arts section of the Public Library as they make their silly tracings from books of ancient anatomy and the like—good Lord deliver me! Sentence after sentence must be read and reread to snatch any meaning therefrom. And there is no relief from it. The best-delivered frown of disapproval merely brings giggles from the morons who think it silly for one to want to read in cloistered silence. Scrapping of the throat as a warning—even a mildly delivered curse—does no good. On they go, these so-called students, tracing their pictures and uttering their sotto-voice nonsense, chattering like so many monkeys in a zoo.

Nothing, of course, is done about it. And the reason why is plain. This, as every one knows, is the great American silly season; the World Series is on. And library employees, especially male blonde ones who wear pinch-nose glasses, are as interested in the progress of the "Cards" and the "Athletics" (sic) as any one. And so they stand behind the big black sign, which practically screams for silence, and discuss the game. Two or three of them together go into the intricacies of baseball here in this room dedicated to learning and lined with shelves containing the thoughts of the great minds of a universe. And male voices of young men of twenty are as irritating, when trying to be low and unnoticed, as the shrill simperings of alleged art students, sitting in groups, copying pictures which they will never be able to draw without tracing paper over good black originals to go by.

Something of course should be done about this but nothing of course will. The fat man with little to do will go on complaining in a loud and querulous voice that the particular magazine which he thinks he wants to read is missing from its accustomed place. The man grown grey in service to the public will tell the maiden lady at the desk just why he was unable to find a wanted volume in its regular place on the shelves. And the lady, unlistening, will tell him that it ought to be on that shelf, it always has been, the perfect library system says it should be there, and there it must be whether it is or not. A young man will push a squeaky, busy baby-carriage sort of affair loaded with books through the room with as much noise as a Ford car getting under way on a winter's morning. The pneumatic tubes in the adjoining room will clang and clatter in the middle of sentences as they always have done and probably always will do. Boy employees bringing huge tomes from the hidden recesses of the stacks will drop them flat on desks with a Bang! And the signs will say Silence! in mockery through the years as they have for generations, as they have ever since libraries began.

Complaints have been made ere this about Bates Hall being a study room only for the students of the colleges and the high schools and the so-called universities of the Back Bay. Letters have been written to editors. I believe the situation there is better than it was some few years back. Let the next campaign be conducted in the Fine Arts room and let it start with the employees and work gradually to the students so that some day those signs of "Silence" will not be the ghastly joke they are today.

The last day of my visit seeking mental nourishment from the thoughts of forgotten men. I was, as I have said, congenitally with certain architectural thinkers of another day. And it occurred to me then that perhaps the great monument of McKim, Mead & White's is not such a wonderful building after all.

A building should be designed and built to fit its function. Well, there is, I admit, room for seats and tables enough at Copley Square, there is room for tons of books, the light is fairly good (it could be better if a system of indirect lighting were installed so that those sitting with the windows on their right would not have to dodge the shadows of their own hands continually), and in many respects the interior is as beautiful as any in the world. But why did the architects have to build all the interior of stone? Why floors on which leathered feet resound like the whack of Harvard heels on a Cambridge sidewalk? Why rooms of stone from which echoes every whisper, every cough, every dropped fountain pen, every silly giggle, every comment of the great Grimes? These are questions beyond my answering.

Silence, it was once said, is golden. But at the Public Library this last week it would seem that, even as in the Bank of England, the gold standard has been abandoned for the nonce.

IN FANEUIL

Strangely enough, some communities seem to retain their neighborhood spirit, while others which have similar social, religious and racial elements, are losing it. There are sections of Boston where local pride, strong a generation or two ago, is hardly discernible. They were proud, self-conscious little centres, in other days. They may not have administered their own affairs, but the residents were cohesive, and their requests had impact. A mile or two away there may be another section which has refused to be absorbed by the encroaching metropolis. Church groups, women's organizations, men's clubs, boys' and girls' societies carry on in the same old way. The residents are usually first class citizens of the metropolis as a whole. They have two good loyalties, which do not conflict with each other.

The pocket of Boston known as Faneuil is an excellent example of a place which retains its old pride. When Mayor Curley laid the cornerstone of a branch library there a few days ago, 2000 of the residents gathered to take part and to exult in the new structure. They had even objected a few months ago to the preliminary plans of the library. They said that the assembly room should be made larger—and it was. The building will become the civic centre of Faneuil. It will tend to perpetuate and strengthen the wholesome community sense which is unfortunately lacking in many other districts.

The Boston Post

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1931

+

The young woman in charge of the business branch of the Boston Public Library, in City Hall avenue, says many people do not make the proper distinction between it and the "regular" library upstairs.

Patrons are frequently confused when they read that books of fiction, poetry or philosophy may be procured there, and they want to know why a "business library" should carry such works. The fact is, it does not.

The department that carries them is in the same building, but it is a different library branch.

Right now the window of the business branch of the Boston Public Library is attractively decorated with a variety of books covering philosophy, fiction, travel, art, poetry and other cultural subjects.

A card in the window announces that these books may be found on the third floor and may be taken out on the regular library card.

The business department of the City Hall avenue branch is on the first and second floors.

Speaking of the Public Library, I am told that the recent thorough cleansing of Bates Hall was given the first of the sort in 35 years. The task was not easy.

The vaulted ceiling is so high that an elaborate system of scaffolding was needed to reach it.

Now that the job has been done, the former dark atmosphere of the place has disappeared.

The foregoing reference to the high ceiling of the main reading room of Bates Hall calls to mind the still loftier ceiling in Symphony Hall.

Many a time I have gazed up at it and wondered just how "dead" electric light bulbs in the distant chandeliers were replaced with "live" ones, or how they were reached to be dusted off. I inquired, and got this information from an attendant at the hall:

The ceiling is about 45 feet high. The chandeliers, which suggest giant clusters of illuminated grapes, are attached to cables above the ceiling and are let down to the floor when it is desired to work on them. And that's all there is to it.

+

CHARLES F. D. BELDEN OF PUBLIC LIBRARY DIES

Also Director of Division of Public Libraries of This State—End Came at Pittsfield

PITTSFIELD, Oct. 24.—Charles F. D. Belden, librarian of the Boston Public Library, died at 2:20 this morning at the House of Mercy Hospital here after a brief sickness, which seized him while he was on a vacation in Lenox. Cerebral hemorrhage was given as the cause of death.

Mr. and Mrs. Belden went to Lenox about 10 days ago. Mr. Belden had been feeling poorly and was seeking rest. He was joined there for several days by Howard Blackwell, his brother-in-law. Last Monday he was taken sick and on Thursday evening he was hurried to the local hospital. Unconscious soon after arrival here, he remained in that condition until the end. Mrs. Belden and their son, Lawrence, were with him.

CHARLES F. D. BELDEN

CATALOGUING HARVARD LAW LIBRARY HIS FIRST TASK

Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, was recognized the world over as one of the foremost of living librarians. The Italian Government decorated him with the order of the Crown of Italy; Harvard gave him the honorary degree of master of arts; the Czechoslovak Library Association made him an honorary fellow, and the city of Ravenna awarded him the Dante medal.

Mr. Belden was born Oct. 5, 1871, at Syracuse, N. Y., and spent his boyhood at Niagara Falls, where his parents, Francis Crapo Belden and Mrs. Jennie Maude (Wright) Belden, moved when he was 5. As a boy he committed more than 20 miles daily to attend Buffalo High School, and it was then he learned the habit of early rising, and that it is possible to work well early in the morning.

He was graduated from Harvard in the class of '95, and then went to the Law School. While there, financial reverse of his parents set him unexpectedly on the path he has followed since. To earn his way through Law School he did tutoring work, until Dean Ames suggested that he make an attempt at cataloguing the Law School library. He started upon this work, and completed his Law School course, after which he passed his bar examinations in New York State and became an attorney.

Catalogued Harvard Law Library

Then the secretary of the Harvard law faculty resigned, and Dean Ames, remembering Mr. Belden's work at cataloguing, offered him the job. Here he set out on the enormous task of cataloguing nearly 100,000 volumes which had never before been listed. When the Law School library was first catalogued in 1826 there were only 1752 volumes. When the catalogue of 1834 appeared, prepared by Charles Sumner, the number had about doubled.

When Mr. Belden completed his catalogue in 1902 there had not been a catalogue for 56 years. The number of volumes had jumped from 12,000 in 1846 to 115,000. Mr. Belden and his staff made a card catalogue and issued a catalogue of this enormous mass of books. The job has always been regarded as perfectly completed.

He was assistant law librarian at Harvard for seven years, and for a year had charge of the Social Law Library at the Suffolk County Courthouse. Then for eight years more he was state librarian, in which time he also served as chairman of the State Board of Free Public Library Commissioners. In 1917, out of 20 candidates, he was chosen librarian of the Boston Public Library, and held that position until his death, along with that of director of the Public Library, which was given him a few years later and was renewed last year.

Sent Books to Army and Navy

Shortly after Mr. Belden's appointment, C. K. Bolton, librarian of the Boston Athenaeum, wrote in the Harvard Alumni Bulletin: "Mr. Belden seems particularly fitted by long and intimate experience with library affairs in Massachusetts to serve the public in a high administrative position."

Before Mr. Belden went to the Boston Public Library he had been engaged in special library work, and he was an honorary member of the Special Libraries Association. In the war he served on the executive board of the American Library Association, worked at the problem of sending books to the army and navy overseas. He was director for New England in the appeal of the association for gift books and two money campaigns.

In 1926 he was elected president of the American Library Association. This was the organization's 50th anniversary year. As years passed, he received the honorary degree from Harvard, the Italian decoration and medal and the Czechoslovak fellowship.

He wrote in his Harvard class report of 1925 that he had been recently appointed by the American Library Association a member of the "Commission on Adult Education and the Library," consisting of seven members, which sought to learn how libraries can increase their educational service to adults through closer contact with readers, through systematizing and promoting home study, and through giving better service to citizens in their solution of the problems inherent in our complex society."

His Family and His Clubs

On May 26, 1908, Mr. Belden married Miss Anna Marion Blackwell at Cambridge. They had four children, Miss Elizabeth Blackwell Belden, Lawrence Putnam Belden, Miss Alison Blackwell and Charles Hastings Belden. He made his home at 52 Elliot st., Jamaica Plain, and wrote in his Harvard class report, "Summer week-ends and vacations find me luxuriating with the family on Martha's Vineyard."

He was a member of the Boston Art Club, the Boston City Club, the American Library Association, the American Library Institute, the Free Public Library Commission, the Gay Head Improvement Association, the Immigrant Publication Society and the Massachusetts Library Club.

TRIBUTE OF WALTER B. BRIGGS, HARVARD LIBRARY

On hearing this morning of Mr. Belden's death, Walter B. Briggs, assistant librarian of the Harvard College Library, expressed a feeling of great personal loss, and said:

"His work as librarian of the Boston Public Library was outstanding. He was bringing that library back to a place of first importance among great city libraries. His leadership in the library world is shown by his election in 1926 as president of the American Library Association, and also by the honorary degree of master of arts awarded him by Harvard. He was not only an administrator of note, but was very approachable to those who wished his aid."

"GRAVE LOSS TO CITY AND STATE," SAYS GOV ELY

Gov. Joseph B. Ely paid the following tribute:

"The passing of Charles F. D. Belden is a grave loss, not only to the city and State educational agencies, which he so faithfully served, but also to the many citizens who have reaped the benefits of his untiring and inspired efforts. To no small degree was he responsible for building the Boston Public Library to its present outstanding position. My sincere sympathy goes to those who have been closest to him."

"GREAT SHOCK" GIVEN TO FREDERICK H. CURTIS

"The death of Charles Belden comes to me as a great shock," said Frederick H. Curtis, chairman of the Federal Reserve Bank and a member of the examining committee of the Boston Public Library.

"Nationally and internationally he was recognized as a bibliophile and a

The Evening Standard

Saturday, October 24, 1931

BOSTON LIBRARIAN, C. F. D. BELDEN DIES

Boston, Oct. 24 (AP).—Word was received here today of the death at Lenox of Charles F. D. Belden, librarian of the Boston Public Library and president of the American Library Association. He had been in poor health and death occurred while he was taking a vacation from his duties.

Mr. Belden was a frequent visitor at Chilmark, Martha's Vineyard, where his father-in-law, George W. Blackwell had a summer home.

Transcript Oct. 24, 1931

"A Scholar and an Ornament in Library Service"

On learning of the death of Mr. Belden, Ellery Sedgwick, trustee of the Boston Public Library and editor of the Atlantic Monthly, said:

"Mr. Belden's death is a great shock to me. He was recognized throughout America as a scholar and an ornament in library service. He has presided over the library with dignity and efficiency for many years, and the trustees will all miss him greatly."

C. F. D. Belden, Librarian, Dies in Pittsfield

Head of Copley Square Library Stricken Thursday Night and Taken to Hospital

Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, died suddenly early this morning at the Pittsfield Hospital in western Massachusetts.

Mr. Belden, who had been very tired of late, had been urged by his physician to go away for a rest, and last Thursday he and Mrs. Belden went to Lenox where they took quarters at the Village Inn. On Thursday night Mr. Belden was stricken with a sudden attack and was taken to the Pittsfield Hospital.

Mr. Belden had been head of the Boston Public Library since January, 1917, having succeeded the late Horace G. Wadlin. Before that he had been librarian at the Massachusetts State Library, the selection having been made by the late Governor Eben S. Draper. Mr. Belden at that time having been librarian of the State Law Library.

Mr. Belden was not a Massachusetts man by birth, although ever since he left college and graduate work he had lived here and made his fame here. He was born in Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 7, 1870, the son of Francis C. and Jennie Maude (Wright) Belden, but removed to Niagara Falls with his parents when he was five years old. He attended the Buffalo High School, "commuting" the twenty-two miles every day by train.

He entered and was graduated from Harvard with the class of 1895 and at once began study in the Harvard Law School. Soon afterward his father met with financial reversals and the difficult task of supporting himself through law school fell upon his shoulders. He managed it, however, by tutoring, and was even able to send some money home. Dean Ames of the law school then suggested to him that he make an attempt at cataloguing the law school library, an enormous task as it was developed. He started upon his work, earning money for it, and completing his education the while. Immediately upon being graduated from the school he returned to Niagara Falls, took his bar examinations, and was admitted to the courts of the State of New York, ready to settle down in general practice. But then came the suggestion that changed his whole life.

Library Director Dies Suddenly

Charles F. D. Belden (Photo by Bachrach)
Head of Boston Public Library. Had Been Honored Widely in Educational Circles and Had Been President of A. L. A.

Catalogued Harvard Law Library

The secretary to the law faculty at Harvard resigned and Dean Ames, undoubtedly remembering Mr. Belden's work with the catalogue, offered him the position. He accepted it once and held the position for three years, when he was made assistant librarian. Then began the greatest work of his early career, for he undertook to complete the catalogue he had started as a law student, and give the Harvard Law School, with the greatest law library in existence, its first card catalogue. It is astounding.

For seven years he held the position of assistant law librarian, and then for a year transferred to the Social Law Library in Boston, from which he was appointed State Librarian of Massachusetts, in which capacity he served for eight years. During this time he was also made chairman of the State Board of Free Public Library Commissioners.

In June, 1917, from twenty other candidates, he was appointed librarian of the Boston Public Library. Mr. Belden's fourteen years in Copley square were efficient years of organizing, extending and bettering the library's personnel conditions wherever betterment was needed.

Made Head of the A. L. A.

In February, 1925, Mr. Belden was nominated president of the American Library Association, and he was elected to this high office at the association's semi-centennial convention held in Seattle, Wash., in July of that year. This American Library Association has been an enormous factor in the library activities of the country, and especially during the late war did masterful work.

It assumed charge, by arrangement with the Government, of the distribution of books to soldiers. One million seven hundred thousand dollars was raised by subscription in 1917, and in 1918 the A. L. A. took part, with six other welfare organizations, in a combined campaign of whose proceeds its share was $2,885,000. By itself it built, equipped and operated here and overseas, supplied books and libraries for the Army and Navy, both magazines to the Y. M. C. A. and the Red Cross, and placed libraries on transports and Government cargo ships. It made available a huge volume of gift books from the public, bought educational and technical books to meet the Army demand, distributed vast quantities of magazines contributed by the public through the Post Office Department, and maintained library service in every ward of every military hospital. Chiefly through its efforts the United States Army became the greatest reading army that has ever been known, and the standard of reading was surprisingly high, the fiction average being less than 50 per cent. At the end of the war, 12 library buildings and equipment and a large part of the book stock were turned over to the War and Navy Departments and their use is now being continued with Government funds. In all these large works Mr. Belden took a leading part.

Honored in Many Ways

So high did Mr. Belden stand at Harvard that he was chosen secretary of the faculty of law, a position which he held from 1899 to 1902. He was assistant librarian of the Harvard Law Library from 1902 until 1908; was then made librarian of the Social Law Library, where he remained for one year, when he was made Massachusetts State Librarian in June, 1909.

Since 1909 Mr. Belden had also been chairman of the Free Public Library Commission of Massachusetts. He was a member of the New York Bar, the Massachusetts Bar Association, the Harvard Law School Association, the Harvard Education Society, the Boston City Club and Harvard Club of Boston, was president of the Massachusetts Library Club from 1911 to 1913 and vice president from 1910 to 1911.

Harvard University conferred upon him the honorary degree of Master of Arts in 1926, and the King of Italy later named him a cavaliere of the Order of the Crown. By the city of Ravenna he was awarded the Dante medal.

Some idea of his State-wide activities is given by his reports as State Librarian and chairman of the Library Commission. He had always taken a great interest in the usual forms of social intercourse outside his profession. He served as chairman of the committee on papers and essays of the New England and Historic Genealogical Society and had also been prominent in the Cambridge Dramatic Club. He lectured at Simmons College on Federal, State and municipal documents.

Mr. Belden married, on May 26, 1898, Miss Anna Marian Blackwell of East Orange, N. J. Mr. and Mrs. Belden lived at 52 Elliot street, Jamaica Plain. Their home at one time was in Cambridge. The surviving children are Elizabeth Blackwell Belden, who was graduated from Smith last June; Lawrence Putnam Belden, Allison Belden and Charles Hastings Belden.

Gov. Ely Pays His Tribute to Mr. Belden

Governor Joseph B. Ely said of Mr. Belden: "The passing of Charles F. D. Belden is a great loss not only to the city and State's educational agencies which he so faithfully served, but also to the many citizens who have reaped the benefits of his untiring and inspired efforts. To no small degree was he responsible for building the Boston Public Library to its present outstanding position. My sincere sympathy goes to those who have been closest to him."

Mayor Curley Says Death Is "an Irreparable Loss"

"The death of Charles Francis Borden Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, which office he assumed in June, 1917, and in which he made a national reputation as a man of letters, enlists my deepest sympathy and sorrow," said Mayor Curley, on learning of Mr. Belden's death.

"Mr. Belden, after receiving the degree of Bachelor of Laws from Harvard University Law School, and the honorary degree of Master of Arts from Harvard University, engaged in the most important character of library endeavor. He was secretary of the law faculty of Harvard Law School, assistant librarian of the Harvard Law Library, librarian of the Social Law Library and librarian of the Massachusetts State Library for a period of eight years prior to assuming the directorate of the Boston Public Library.

"In each of these important offices he served with ability, fidelity and rendered the highest character of library administration. As chairman of the Free Public Library of Massachusetts for twenty-two years, his service was of an exceptional character. A learned scholar, a man of deepest culture who gave the best years of his life to the interests of the Boston Public Library, he passed to the reward. The field of letters, scholarship and library administration in the United States has suffered an irreparable loss."

"Devoted to Welfare of Boston," Says Chas. K. Bolton

"His life was devoted to the welfare of Boston," said Charles K. Bolton of the Boston Athenaeum, in speaking of Mr. Belden's death. "Year in and year out he worked not only as a librarian but as a public minded citizen for those things which make Boston the place to live in."

"His death takes me back to a morning in 1909 when I first met him at the Social Law Library. The State Library was in need of a director. When I left Mr. Belden I called up Horace G. Wadlin of the Boston Public Library, and suggested Mr. Belden for the State position. Mr. Wadlin came at once to the Athenaeum, we visited Mr. Belden, and then he went to Governor Draper. In less than an hour from my first acquaintance with Mr. Belden he became State Librarian."

"My next contact with Mr. Belden, in whose ability and judgment I had the greatest faith, came when the librarianship of the Boston Public Library became vacant. The late Josiah H. Boston telephoned to me that he could not live very long, that he had left a large part of his estate to the Public Library, and he must have a librarian whom he could trust. He urged me to see his fellow trustees of the Public Library (especially Dr. Mann) at once in behalf of Mr. Belden. The appointment followed. On both these occasions Mr. Belden proved his fitness for the burdens placed upon him."

"He gave to the State and to the city the best that was in him. He became a national character in the library world, and on more than one occasion represented American librarians in Europe with distinction. The value of his work will last, and the memory of his personal charm and gracious bearing will be prized by his countless friends."

"Had Developed Great Library" Says Otto Fleischner

Otto Fleischner, formerly assistant librarian of the Boston Public Library but retired from that post for several years, on learning of the death of Mr. Belden spoke of his passing as a great loss both to the city and State and even to a larger circle where Mr. Belden was widely known.

"Mr. Belden," he said, "had developed a great library and had done much to popularize it; and he was constantly studying to see wherein it could be improved. As chairman of the library commission he had also performed a big task, and I had always found him a delightful person to work with."

Library Director "Gentleman and Scholar," Says Kirstein

Said Louis E. Kirstein, trustee of the Boston Public Library: "It is difficult for me to find words to express my sorrow in the sudden death of Mr. Belden. His loss is not only a severe personal one to me but a sad loss to Boston as a community. I can think of no better personification of the old expression, 'A gentleman and a scholar' than Charles Francis Belden."

"My long years' association with him in connection with the Boston Public Library have been a source of great satisfaction. With a thorough classical education surmounted by a legal training, service as the secretary of the faculty of the Harvard Law School, and as librarian of the Harvard Law Library, Mr. Belden brought to the Boston Public Library in 1917 a splendid equipment for his duties as director of that institution."

"As president of the board of trustees of the Boston Public Library and as an individual, I wish to add my tribute to those of the many friends and admirers of Mr. Belden and his work, and to congratulate his family on his rare record of intelligent, conscientious service to his community."

Mr. Belden's Death Loss to Other Libraries

George Parker Winship, assistant librarian of the Harvard Library, paid Mr. Belden this tribute:

"The death of Mr. Belden is almost as serious a loss to the other librarians of Boston as it is to the Public Library over which he presided with a highly developed skill and a remarkable understanding of its civic responsibilities."

"Under his lead the Public Library became the center of the library interests of the whole community. His readiness to co-operate, his anxiety to do whatever was for the greatest good of the community as a whole was shown most clearly when the Public Library and the Harvard Business School Library agreed to develop their respective fields for the mutual advantage of those who used these institutions, instead of each trying to rival the other."

"This outstanding achievement, the success of which was largely due to Mr. Belden, was typical of the spirit with which he was always endeavoring to bring together the resources of the entire community."

October 24, 1931

BOSTON TRAVELER, SATU

Burden of Duties at Library Fatal

CHARLES F. D. BELDEN

C. F. D. BELDEN, LIBRARIAN, DEAD

Boston Official Passes Away Suddenly at Pittsfield

Charles F. D. Belden, for many years librarian of the Boston Public Library, died at a hospital in Pittsfield, today.

Stricken while enjoying a vacation at the Village Inn, Lenox, with Mrs. Belden, he was taken to the hospital shortly before midnight. His death came at 2 A. M.

HEALTH WAS FAILING

Mr. Belden, one of the best known figures in library circles in the country, was 61 years of age. He had been failing in health for some time past, and had taken the vacation in the hope of regaining his strength. The exact cause of his death was not given out.

Mr. Belden was perhaps the best known librarian in the country. Taught to the limit by overwork within recent months, he was forced to leave his work and seek rest at Lenox. His relatives and friends stated, had been on edge for some time, but he continued his duties until two weeks ago. He was born in Syracuse 61 years ago, and moved to Buffalo at the age of five years, where he attended school. Following his graduation from high school he entered Harvard College, graduating in 1895.

His first library work was cataloguing the Harvard law school library. From there he became the librarian of the social law library in Boston. His next step upward was his appointment as state librarian of Massachusetts, a post he held until June, 1917, when out of 20 other candidates he was appointed librarian of Boston Public Library.

DECORATED BY KING

He was elected president of the American Library Association in 1925, giving him a pre-eminent position in American library associations.

He was decorated by King Victor Emmanuel of Italy and honored by many foreign governments for his attainments. He was honored by the Italian government because of his services through the library, with its 16,000 books in the Italian language, to the residents of Boston.

A graduate also of the Harvard law school, class of 1896, Mr. Belden was a member of the Massachusetts and New York bar associations. For a time he served as secretary of the law faculty at Harvard.

He was a member of the Massachusetts state library commission since 1909, acting as chairman of the board for many years. In connection with his work for state libraries he served as vice-president of the Massachusetts Library Club from 1916 to 1911, and as president from 1911 to 1913.

Mr. Belden lived with his family at 52 Elliot street, Jamaica Plain.

He is survived by his widow, the former Anna Marion Blackwell, and four children, Elizabeth Blackwell, Lawrence Putnam, Allison Blackwell, and Charles Hastings.

GOVERNOR'S STATEMENT

Gov. Ely, in expressing his sympathy over the loss of Mr. Belden, said:

"The passing of Charles F. D. Belden is a great loss, not only to the city, state and educational agencies which he so faithfully served, but also to the many citizens who have reaped the benefit of his untiring efforts. To no small degree was he responsible for building the Boston Public Library to its present outstanding position. My sincere sympathy goes to those who have been closest to him."

Louis E. Kirstein, chairman of the Library trustees, said:

"It is difficult for me to find words to express my sorrow in the sudden death of Mr. Belden. His loss is not only a severe personal loss to me, but a sad loss to Boston as a community. I can think of no better personification of the old expression, 'a gentleman and a scholar' than Charles Francis Belden."

"My long years' association with him in connection with the Boston Public Library have been a source of great satisfaction. With a thorough classical education, surmounted by a legal training, service as the secretary of the faculty of the Harvard Law School, and as librarian in the Harvard Law Library, Mr. Belden brought to the Boston Public Library in 1917 a splendid equipment for his duties as director of that institution."

"As president of the board of trustees of the Boston Public Library, and as an individual, I wish to add my tribute to those of the many friends and admirers of Mr. Belden and his work, and to congratulate his family on his rare record of intelligent, conscientious service to his community."

BOSTON AMERICAN OCTOBER 24, 1931

BELDEN, HEAD OF LIBRARY, DEAD

Picture on Page 5

Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library and former president of the American Library Association, died early this morning at the Pittsfield Hospital at Pittsfield.

He was advised by his physician early this week to go to Lenox for a rest. Three days ago he became suddenly ill and was taken to the hospital.

He was 61. His death is believed to have been due to heart trouble.

14 YEARS IN CHARGE

He had been director of the Boston Public Library since 1917. He lived in Elliot st., Jamaica Plain, and had a summer place at Martha's Vineyard.

His death was a shock to his associates, to many public officials, and to countless friends in Boston and throughout the country. He was widely known in his field.

He was a graduate of Harvard, 1895, and Harvard law school, 1898. He was decorated by King Victor of Italy with the grade of Knight of the Order of the Crown last year for his work in Italian arts and letters. He received the Dante medal from the city of Ravenna, Italy, several years ago.

Mr. Belden was born in Syracuse, N. Y. Prior to being made director of the Boston Public Library, he was successively secretary to the faculty of Harvard Law School, assistant librarian at the law school, librarian of the Social Law Library of Boston and librarian of the Massachusetts State Library.

He was a member of the Massachusetts Bar Association, Harvard Law School Association, Immigrant Educational Association, and the Harvard and University Clubs.

In 1926 Harvard awarded him the honorary degree of master of arts. His wife, who survives, was Anna Marian Blackwell of East Orange, N. J. Four children also survive.

Governor Ely said: "The passing of Charles F. D. Belden is a grave loss not only to the city and state educational agencies which he so faithfully served but also to the many citizens who reaped the benefits of his untiring and inspired efforts. In no small degree he is responsible for building up the Boston Public Library to its present imposing position. My sincere sympathy goes out to those who were closest to him."

Librarian Dies

Charles F. D. Belden, director of Boston Public Library, who died suddenly of a heart attack in Pittsfield today. He was 61 and one of the best known men in his field.

NEW YORK Herald Tribune

Sunday, October 25, 1931

C. F. D. Belden, Boston Library Director, Dead

President of American Library Association Honored by Several Governments

Headed State Institution

Also Served as Chairman of Massachusetts Commission

By The Associated Press

BOSTON, Oct. 24.—Word was received here today of the death at Lenox of Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library and president of the American Library Association. He was sixty-one years old.

Mr. Belden had been director of the Massachusetts Library Commission since 1909 and served both as vice-president and president of the Massachusetts Library Club.

Several governments recognized his accomplishments. Among his decorations was one from Italy, bestowed by the King for his compilation of 1,600 volumes in the Italian language. He was elected president of the American Library Association in 1925. Recently he had been in poor health and his burden of work forced him to take a vacation.

Served State Institution

Mr. Belden had been director of the Boston Public Library since 1917. On his graduation from the Harvard Law School he was secretary to the law faculty of the school for three years and afterward directed the Social Law Library at Harvard. He was then for eight years in charge of the Massachusetts State Library, which he left to go to the Boston institution.

Mr. Belden was born in Syracuse. He was chairman of the Free Public Library Commission of Massachusetts, a member of the State Bar Association, the Harvard Law School Association, the Immigrant Educational Association and the Harvard and University Clubs. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Anna Blackwell Belden, and four children, Elizabeth Blackwell, Lawrence Putnam, Allison Blackwell, and Charles Hastings Belden.

The Sunday Post
OCTOBER 25, 1931

PASSING OF BELDEN MOURNED

Was on His Annual Vacation in the Berkshires

CHARLES F. D. BELDEN
Director of the Boston Public Library, who died yesterday.

State and city officials, in public tribute last night, mourned the sudden loss of Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library for the past 14 years and scholar of international repute, who died unexpectedly yesterday at Pittsfield in his 61st year, while on his annual vacation in the Berkshires.

NEWS A SHOCK

Honored in life not only by his own people but by the Italian government and Czechoslovakia, Director Belden in death was eulogized last night on behalf of the Commonwealth and city which he served by Governor Ely, Mayor Curley and other officials with whom he was associated here.

News of his death at the House of Mercy Hospital at Pittsfield created a shock here, for it was only 10 days ago that he left the library with his wife and their son, Lawrence, following a year of strenuous work, to regain his strength in the Berkshire hills.

Last Monday at Lenox he was taken ill and Thursday he was transferred to the House of Mercy Hospital at Pittsfield, where death came early yesterday in the form of a cerebral hemorrhage.

Funeral From Home

Overcome with grief by the sudden shock, Mrs. Belden was unable to formulate plans for the funeral, which will be held from their home at 52 Elliot street, Jamaica Plain, early this week. The body of the noted librarian will be brought from Pittsfield to this city today, when the funeral arrangements will also be made public.

Besides his widow and his son, the late librarian leaves three other children, Miss Elizabeth Blackwell Belden, who was graduated from Smith College last June; Miss Allison Blackwell Belden and Charles Hastings Belden, all of this city.

A native of Syracuse, N. Y., it was here in Massachusetts that Director Belden performed his life work, which won world-wide recognition, and brought him high honors, following his graduation from Harvard College and his law school.

Won Many Honors

Not only was Director Belden honored with the leadership of the Massachusetts and the American Library associations, but he was awarded the honorary degree of master of arts by Harvard in 1926 and in the same year created an honorary fellow of the Czechoslovakian Library Association in tribute to his professional work.

For his work in making the fruits of Italian culture available to Americans here, he was awarded in 1925 the Dante medal by the city of Ravenna, Italy, and the following year upon him was bestowed the Casa di Dante medal by the Council of the Casa di Dante in recognition of his work in promoting the study of the great Italian poet.

The King of Italy only last year paid tribute to his interest in Italian art and letters by bestowing upon Director Belden the rank of Knight of the Order of the Crown of Italy, an honor held by few other Americans.

Turned From Law

Upon his graduation, however, he was appointed by Dean Ames to the position of secretary to the Harvard Law faculty and then assistant librarian of the Harvard Law School.

His work in creating the first card catalogue of the Harvard Law Library of 10,000 volumes attracted wide attention, and in 1898 he was induced to become librarian of the Suffolk Law Library, a position which he held for two years until the late Governor Elen S. Pranger appointed him librarian of the Massachusetts State Library. Finally in 1907 he was selected from a field of 20 candidates by the city board of library trustees to take charge of the Boston Public Library system to succeed Horace G. Wadlin.

His work in creating the first card catalogue of the Harvard Law Library of 10,000 volumes attracted wide attention, and in 1898 he was induced to become librarian of the Suffolk Law Library, a position which he held for two years until the late Governor Elen S. Pranger appointed him librarian of the Massachusetts State Library. Finally in 1907 he was selected from a field of 20 candidates by the city board of library trustees to take charge of the Boston Public Library system to succeed Horace G. Wadlin.

BRITISH HONOR ON DAY OF HIS DEATH

Official notification that the late Director Charles F. D. Belden of the Boston Public Library had been elected an honorary fellow of the British Library Association was received last night by library officials here. According to the letter from the secretary of the British association, Dr. Belden was elected Aug. 31 last, but the official announcement was delayed while the certificate of membership was being engraved.

BOSTON HERALD, SUNDAY
OCTOBER 25, 1931

CHARLES BELDEN DIES SUDDENLY

Cerebral Hemorrhage Fatal to Director of Boston Public Library

LEADERS OF STATE, CITY PAY TRIBUTE

The sudden death yesterday of Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, occasioned widespread mourning in Boston and throughout the state and moved officials of the city and state, as well as librarians generally, to lament his passing as a severe loss to the community and the whole field of library administration.

Mr. Belden died of cerebral hemorrhage at the House of Mercy Hospital, in Pittsfield. He was stricken just a few hours earlier at the Village Inn, Lenox, where with Mrs. Belden he had been taking a rest. Taxed by overwork, he had gone there on advice of his physician about a week previously, to seek improvement for impaired health and frayed nerves which resulted from a long period of strenuous application to his duties.

Mr. Belden, one of the best known figures in the library field in this country and recognized the world over as one of the foremost living librarians, was 61. He was born in Syracuse, N. Y., the son of Francis C., and Jennie M. Belden. When he was five, his parents moved to Niagara Falls, and while living there he attended public schools in Buffalo.

Following his graduation from high school he entered Harvard College, graduating in 1895.

His first library work was cataloging the Harvard law school library. From there he became the librarian of the social law library in Boston. His next step upward was his appointment as state librarian of Massachusetts, a post he held until June, 1917, when out of 20 candidates he was appointed librarian of Boston Public Library.

DECORATED BY KING

He was elected president of the American Library Association in 1925, giving him a pre-eminent position in American library associations.

He was decorated by King Victor Emmanuel of Italy and honored by many foreign governments for his attainments. He was honored by the Italian government because of his services through the library with its 16,000 books in the Italian language, to the residents of Boston.

A graduate also of the Harvard law school, class of 1895, Mr. Belden was a member of the Massachusetts and New York bar associations. For a time he served as secretary to the law faculty at Harvard.

He was a member of the Massachusetts free public library commission since 1903, acting as chairman of the board for many years. In connection with his work for state librarians he served as vice-president of the Massachusetts Library Club from 1911 to 1913, and as president from 1913 to 1915.

Mr. Belden lived with his family at 52 Elliot street, Jamaica Plain.

He is survived by his widow, the former Anna Marion Blackwell, and four children, Elizabeth Blackwell, Lawrence, Francis, and Charles Hastings Belden.

GOVERNOR'S STATEMENT

Gov. Ely in expressing his sympathy over the loss of Mr. Belden, said: "The passing of Charles F. D. Belden is a great loss, not only to the city, state and educational agencies, which he so faithfully served, but also to the many citizens who have reaped the benefit of his untiring efforts. To no small degree was he responsible for building the Boston Public Library to its present outstanding position. My sincere sympathy goes to those who have been closest to him."

Louis E. Kirstein, chairman of the library trustees, said:

"It is difficult for me to find words to express my sorrow in the sudden death of Mr. Belden. His loss is not only a severe personal loss to me, but a sad loss to Boston as a community. I can think of no better personification of the old expression, 'a gentleman and a scholar' than Charles Francis Belden."

My long years' association with him in connection with the Boston Public Library have been a source of great satisfaction. With a thorough classical education, surmounted by a legal training, service as the secretary of the faculty of the Harvard Law school, and as librarian in the Harvard Law library, Mr. Belden brought to the Boston Public Library in 1917 a splendid equipment for his duties as director of that institution.

As president of the board of trustees of the Boston Public Library, and as an individual, I wish to add my tribute to those of the many friends and admirers of Mr. Belden and his work, and to congratulate his family on his rare record of intelligent, conscientious service to his community.

In J. J. Curley issued the following statement:

The death of Charles Francis Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, in which office he has made a national reputation as a man of letters, evokes my deepest sympathy and sorrow.

In each of the important offices he held, he served with ability, fidelity, and unflinching character.

As chairman of the free public library commission of Massachusetts, of an exceptional character, a learned scholar, a man of deepest culture, who gave the best years of his life to the interests of the Boston Public Library, has passed to his reward.

The field of letters, scholarship and library administration in the United States has suffered an irreparable loss.

BOSTON GLOBE OCTOBER 25, 1931 CHARLES F. D. BELDEN DIES AT PITTSFIELD

Librarian Since 1917 of the
Boston Public Library

Special Dispatch to the Globe

PITTSFIELD, Oct. 24.—Charles F. D. Belden, librarian of the Boston Public Library, died early this morning at the House of Mercy Hospital here. The cause of his death is given as cerebral hemorrhage.

Mr. and Mrs. Belden went to Lenox about 10 days ago. Mr. Belden for a rest, because he had not been well recently. Last Thursday he was hurried to the local hospital. He became unconscious soon after arrival and remained in that condition until the end. Mrs. Belden and their son, Lawrence, were with him.

Charles F. D. Belden was made librarian of the Boston Public Library in 1917, chosen out of 20 candidates, and held that position until his death, as well as the position of director of the Public Library, which was given to him a few years later and was renewed last year.

Before going to the Boston Public Library he had been engaged in special library work.

Listed Harvard Books

Mr. Belden was born in Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 5, 1871, and spent his boyhood at Niagara Falls, where his parents, Francis Crapo Belden and Mrs. Jennie Maude (Wright) Belden, moved when he was 5. He came to Harvard from the Buffalo High School, was graduated with the class of '95 and afterwards attended Law School.

After completing his law course he passed the bar examinations in New York State and became an attorney. While at Law School he started the work of cataloging the law library. Later he was made secretary of the Harvard law faculty, upon the resignation of the previous incumbent, and again took up the task of cataloging nearly 100,000 volumes which had never before been listed.

When Mr. Belden completed his catalogue for 56 years. The number of volumes had jumped from 12,000 in 1846 to 115,000. Mr. Belden and his staff made a card catalogue and the job has always been considered as perfect.

Served as State Librarian

He was assistant law librarian at Harvard for seven years and for a year had charge of the Social Law Library at the Suffolk County Court-house. Then, for eleven years more, he was State Librarian, at the same time serving as chairman of the State Board of Free Public Library Commissioners.

During the World War he served on the executive board of the American Library Association and worked at the problem of sending books to the army and navy overseas.

He was an honorary member of the Special Libraries' Association. In 1926 was president of the American Library Association, and a member of the "Commission on Adult Education and the Library" of that body. He had been decorated by the Italian Government with the Order of the Crown of Italy, received the honorary degree of master of arts, from Harvard, was made an honorary fellow of the Czechoslovak Library Association and was awarded the Dante medal by the city of Ravenna.

He was a member of the Boston Art Club, the Boston City Club, the American Library Association, the American Library Institute, the Free Public Library Commission, the Gay Head Improvement Association, the Immigrant Publication Society and the Massachusetts Library Club.

He is survived by his wife, who was Anna Marion Blackwell of Cambridge, and four children, Miss Elizabeth Blackwell Belden, Lawrence Putnam Belden, Miss Allison Blackwell and Charles Hastings Belden, all of 52 Elliot st., Jamaica Plain.

NEW YORK TIMES,
OCTOBER 25, 1931.

C. F. D. BELDEN DIES; NOTED LIBRARIAN

Had Served as Director of the Boston Public Library for the Last 14 Years.

HONORED BY KING OF ITALY

Was Head of American Library Association 5 Years Ago—Lauded
by Harvard's President.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Oct. 24.—Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library since 1917, who was president of the American Library Association in 1925-26, died today in a hospital at Pittsfield, Mass., in his sixty-first year. Recently he took a vacation on account of ill health.

Mr. Belden graduated from Harvard College in 1895 and Harvard Law School in 1898. He was decorated by King Victor Emmanuel of Italy with the Knighthood of the Order of the Crown last year for his work in Italian arts and letters. He had received the Dante Medal from the city of Ravenna, Italy, several years ago.

He was born in Syracuse, N. Y. Before being made director of the Boston Public Library, he served successively, beginning in 1902, as secretary to the faculty of the Harvard Law School, assistant librarian at the law school, librarian of the social law library of Boston and librarian of the Massachusetts State Library, holding the last named position from 1909 to 1917.

He was a member of the Massachusetts Bar Association, Harvard Law School Association, Immigrant Educational Association, and the Harvard and University Clubs of Boston. In 1926 Harvard awarded to

SUNDAY ADVERTISER
—OCTOBER 25, 1931—

DEATH CALLS TO C. F. D. BELDEN

Book lovers, public officials and many friends last night mourned the death of Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library and former president of the American Library Association.

Director Belden died yesterday at Pittsfield Hospital after a hurried trip from Lenox where he had been sent for a rest. He was 61.

Belden suffered from heart trouble for some years but fought the ailment until three days ago when the bad turn came.

A graduate of Harvard in 1895 and Harvard Law School three years later, he entered the field of arts and letters that was to bring him many honors.

He became director of the Boston Public Library in 1917 and several years ago received the Dante medal from Ravenna, Italy, for his work in the book world.

Last year he achieved the grade of knight in the Order of the Crown of Italy, decorated by the King of Italy for his work in arts and letters.

He made his home on Elliot st., Jamaica Plain, and had a summer residence at Martha's Vineyard.

hi man honorary degree of Master of Arts.

Mr. Belden is survived by a widow, the former Anna Marion Blackwell of East Orange, N. J., and four children.

When President Lowell, at the Harvard commencement in 1926, awarded an honorary degree of Master of Arts to Mr. Belden he referred to him as "a librarian who has ably directed the Boston Public Library both for the advancement of learning and the benefit of the people."

THE BOSTON HERALD

MONDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1931

DOUBLE DUTY WELL DONE

The late C. F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, was doubly successful to an unusual degree. He had guided himself by two statements of the late Josiah H. Benton, who knew more about the administration of the library than any other trustee before or since. "The library system is of value only as it is worked," he said, and "Boston is bound in honor to keep alive its traditional hospitality toward scholarship. . . . It must recognize scholars. It must help scholars in their work. Only by doing this can it be worthy of its history and be of the greatest benefit to our city."

Mr. Belden worked the system tirelessly and skilfully. He put additional books within the reach of the public, made them more accessible, opened up the shelves liberally and greatly increased circulation. The library has become a much greater influence in the workaday life of the community than when he was appointed. He gave special and loving attention to the scholarly collection, which is one of the greatest in the United States. There have been some notable accessions in the last few years—the De Foe volumes, for example, are unmatched anywhere else in the world in number, variety and value. The prestige of the library among scholars increased during his directorship.

Mr. Belden's achievements as a librarian are fairly comparable with those of the most distinguished of his predecessors among them Justin Winsor and the present librarian of Congress, Herbert Putnam. His associates throughout the world recognized him as an outstanding figure. The degree which Harvard conferred on him testifies to his scholarly attainments and his skill as an administrator. He left the Boston library system better than he found it.

The Boston Post
MONDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1931

SERVICES FOR C. F. D. BELDEN

To Be Held at Jamaica
Plain Church Tomorrow

Funeral services for Charles F. D. Belden, late librarian of the Boston Public Library, will be held at noon tomorrow in the First Church Unitarian at Elliot and Centre streets, Jamaica Plain. The Rev. Frank O. Holmes, pastor, will officiate.

Mr. Belden's body was brought to his late residence, 52 Elliot street, Jamaica Plain, yesterday. He died early Saturday morning at a Pittsfield hospital. The late librarian, who was 61, was vacationing at Lenox when he was stricken and had to be removed to the hospital.

The body will be cremated at the Forest Hills crematory.

Jewish Advocate, Oct. 27, 1931 The Late Mr. Belden Served All Elements

As executive head of one of the largest Public Libraries in one of the largest cities of the United States, the late Charles F. D. Belden appreciated that his duties reached far beyond the Library walls. Possessing a keen realization that a Library must represent an educational influence and force, he studied the needs and interests of all the elements of Boston, concerning himself with their problems, and thus serving them with a true understanding of what would be the most effective mediums of assistance and co-operation.

A man at the head of an educational institution such as the Boston Public Library must be broad and open in his views. Of his attitude towards and his enthusiasm for Jewish works we can speak from first-hand knowledge. We need only cite his encouragement of a collection of Judaica as part of the Library's necessary equipment as well as his co-operation in the annual Jewish Book Week last May.

Louis E. Kirstein, the only Jewish trustee of the Boston Public Library, has paid such a splendid tribute to Mr. Belden, that we quote it here, because it expresses our feelings too:

"It is difficult for me to find words to express my sorrow in the sudden death of Mr. Belden. His loss is not only a severe personal one to me but a sad loss to Boston as a community. I can think of no better personification of the old expression, 'A gentleman and a scholar' than Charles Francis Belden."

"My long years of association with him in connection with the Boston Public Library have been a source of great satisfaction. With a thorough classical education surmounted by a legal training, service as the secretary of the faculty of the Harvard Law School, Mr. Belden brought to the Boston Public Library in 1917 a splendid equipment for his duties as director of that institution."

"As president of the board of trustees of the Boston Public Library, and as an individual, I wish to add my tribute to those of the many friends and admirers of Mr. Belden and his work, and to congratulate his family on his rare record of intelligent, conscientious service to his community."

Boston Traveler

MONDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1931

Charles F. D. Belden

THE Boston Public Library is noted throughout the world as a particularly complete institution which not only maintains the highest standards but which, as well, is extraordinarily useful to all the people. To achieve this dual distinction is a mark of both genius and human understanding.

Encouraged by consistently excellent boards of trustees, who saw in Charles F. D. Belden exactly the qualities necessary to the conduct of a great library for the people, the director of the library moulded this civic asset into a popular means of cultural advancement for all people.

Director Belden, fatigued by his willing application to work, was ordered to take a rest. The order came too late, for Mr. Belden died while on vacation.

Another will carry on his work, but whoever does will know full well that he is building upon a firm structure made by the man whom Boston today mourns.

BOSTON TRAVELER.
OCTOBER 27, 1931

LAST RITES FOR C. F. D. BELDEN

City Officials, Literary Leaders Pay Tribute
to Librarian

City officials, representatives of the literary world, delegates from the Massachusetts bar and many others today paid final tribute to Charles F. D. Belden, librarian for quarter of a century at the Boston Public Library, who died suddenly in Pittsfield, Saturday.

Services were held in the First Parish Unitarian Church, Jamaica Plain, The Rev. Frank O. Holmes, pastor of the church, officiated. The services included reading of the psalms and the singing by the church choir of "Souls of the Righteous" and "O Lord of Life." Benediction was said by the pastor.

Among those present were Mayor Curley, Judge Frank Leveroni, City Collector William M. McMorrow and Capt. Joseph Harriman (retired) of the Boston police department.

Honorary pall-bearers were: Louis E. Kirstein, chairman of the board of trustees, Boston Public Library; Frank W. Buxton, John L. Hall, Ellery Sedgwick, trustee; Gordon Abbott, Judge Michael Murray, former trustee; Edwin H. Redstone, librarian of the Massachusetts state library and member of the Massachusetts board of library commissioners; Payson Smith, state commissioner of education; F. W. Faxon, president of the Massachusetts Library Club; Charles K. Bolton, librarian of the Boston Athenaeum; Andrew Keogh, librarian of Yale University; Robert E. Blake, director of the Widener Library of Harvard University; Charles R. Green, director of the Jones Library, Amherst; Robert K. Shaw, librarian of the Worcester Public Library; John A. Lowe, librarian of the Brooklyn, N. Y., Public Library; Charles W. Blood.

The standing parish committee, of which Mr. Belden was a member, was represented by Charles P. Dillaby, Mrs. Charles H. Adams, Mrs. Franklin G. Balch and Edward H. Gleason.

The central and branch libraries of the city were closed from 11:30 to 1, during the funeral services.

Delegation from the Massachusetts Bar Association:

Frank W. Grinnell, secretary; Henry A. Wyman; Philip Nichols, Guy A. Holliday, Francis J. Murray.

The ushers were Henry S. Adams, Dr. Franklin O. Balch, Charles O. Dillaby, Horace Guild, Bert E. Holland, Henry H. Putnam, Thomas G. Rees, Robert B. Stone.

The body was cremated at Forest Hills.

Boston Daily Globe

WEDNESDAY, OCT 28, 1931

LAST TRIBUTE PAID CHARLES F. D. BELDEN

Funeral services for Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, who died at Pittsfield Saturday, were held yesterday in the First Church, Unitarian, Eliot and Center sts., Jamaica Plain. Rev. Frank O. Holmes officiated. There was a large attendance of friends and relatives.

Ushers were Charles P. Dillaby, Henry S. Adams, Franklin G. Balch, Henry H. Putnam, Thomas G. Rees, Robert B. Stone, Horace Guild and Judge Burke E. Holland.

Prominent among persons present were Mayor Curley, Louis E. Kirstein, chairman of the trustees of the Boston Public Library; Ellery Sedgwick, Frank W. Buxton and John L. Hall, trustees; Robert Shaw, director of the Worcester Library; Frank W. Faxon, president of the State Library Association; Edward H. Redstone of the state library; Dr. Payson Smith, Commissioner of Education; Charles R. Green of the Jones Library, Amherst; Charles K. Bolton of the Boston Athenaeum; and Robert P. Blake, director of the Widener Library, Cambridge.

The Massachusetts Bar Association was represented by Frank W. Grinnell, secretary; Henry A. Wyman, Philip Nichols, Guy A. Holliday, Harvard Law School, and Francis J. Murray.

After cremation at the Forest Hills Crematory, burial was in Chilmark, where Mr. Belden made his summer home.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1931

Library Closed During Belden Rites at Noon

Many Attend Funeral of Boston Public Library's Director

Many leaders in the field of library work joined with State and city officials today in attending the funeral services for Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, which were held at the First Church (Unitarian), Jamaica Plain. The Boston Public Library and the office of the State Division of Public Libraries were closed at noon during the hour of the services.

Rev. Frank O. Holmes, minister of the church, of which Mr. Belden was a member, officiated, and a musical program was given by the choir and Grant Drake, organist.

Mayor Curley was present at the services, as were 150 employees of the Boston Public Library. Delegations from other organizations included the Massachusetts Board of Free Public Library Commissioners and its staff; Miss Josephine Rathbone, president of the American Library Association; Alfred C. Potter, librarian of the Widener Library; Professors J. D. M. Ford, Charles B. Gullick and Walter E. Clark, representing the American Academy of Arts and Sciences; and Otto Fleischner, former assistant librarian of the Boston Public Library. Many other librarians and members of library organizations throughout the State were present.

Delegation from Bar Ass'n.

The Massachusetts Bar Association was represented by Frank W. Grinnell, Henry A. Wyman, Philip Nichols, Guy A. Holliday and Francis J. Murray.

Honorary bearers included Louis E. Kirstein, chairman board of trustees, Boston Public Library; Frank W. Buxton, trustee; John L. Hall, trustee; Ellery Sedgwick, trustee; Gordon Abbott and Judge Michael Murray, former trustees; Edward H. Redstone, librarian, Massachusetts State Library, member Massachusetts Board of Library Commissioners; Payson Smith, State Commissioner of Education; F. W. Faxon, president, Massachusetts Library Club; Charles K. Bolton, librarian of the Boston Athenaeum; Andrew Keogh, librarian of Yale University; Robert E. Blake, director of the Widener Library of Harvard University; Charles R. Green, director of the Jones Library, Amherst; Robert K. Shaw, librarian of the Worcester Public Library; John A. Lowe, librarian of the Brooklyn, N. Y., Public Library; Charles W. Blood.

The standing parish committee, of which Mr. Belden was a member, was represented by Charles P. Dillaby, Mrs. Charles H. Adams, Mrs. Franklin G. Balch and Edward H. Gleason.

The central and branch libraries of the city were closed from 11:30 to 1, during the funeral services.

The Boston Post

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1931

BELDEN'S ASHES IN CHILMARK

Burial of Librarian Follows Cremation

While the Boston Public Library was closed as a silent tribute, funeral services for Charles F. D. Belden, director of the library, were held yesterday at the First Church, Unitarian, Jamaica Plain, with many State, city and library dignitaries present.

Prominent persons present were Mayor Curley, Louis E. Kirstein, chairman of the trustees of the Boston Public Library; Ellery Sedgwick, Frank W. Buxton and John L. Hall, trustees; Robert Shaw, director of the State Library Association; Edward H. Redstone of the state library; Dr. Payson Smith, Commissioner of Education; Charles R. Green of the Jones Library, Amherst; Charles K. Bolton of the Boston Athenaeum; and Robert P. Blake, director of the Widener Library, Cambridge.

The Massachusetts Bar Association was represented by Frank W. Grinnell, secretary; Henry A. Wyman, Philip Nichols, Guy A. Holliday, Harvard Law School, and Francis J. Murray.

After cremation at the Forest Hills Crematory, burial was in Chilmark, where Mr. Belden made his summer home.

ton, librarian, Boston Athenaeum; Andrew Keogh, librarian, Yale University; Robert P. Blake, director, Widener Library of Harvard University; Charles R. Green, librarian, Jones Library, Amherst; Robert K. Shaw, librarian, Worcester Public Library; John A. Lowe, assistant librarian, Brooklyn Public Library; and Charles W. Blood.

Ushers at the services were Charles P. Dillaby, Henry S. Adams, Franklin G. Balch, Henry H. Putnam, Thomas G. Rees, Robert B. Stone, Horace Guild and B. E. Holland.

Following cremation at Forest Hills Crematory, burial will take place at Chilmark, Martha's Vineyard, where Mr. Belden made his summer home.

A Library Leader

Charles Belden, Boston's librarian, was a public servant of the first order. He had an abundant, constantly active desire to make this city's great library useful to the largest possible number of people. Loyal at all times to that purpose, he widened importantly the sphere of the library's influence. But he refused to admit that the roads to broad service all run down hill. He believed it vital that standards should not be degraded. He thought that they should be upheld, and never once yielded ground voluntarily when good standards were under attack. He could not understand the minds of men who, even though possessing collegiate degrees, think it unimportant that the public library should give time and devotion to works of scholarship. Mr. Belden's view, on the contrary, was that an institution which spends millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money for public education, should be ardent in the task of keeping itself highly educated, in order that it may in turn educate others well. The prestige of Boston, and of the Boston Public Library, could not be served, he thought, by mere pandering.

Consequently, when new publications of the Boston Public Library aroused high praise and scholarly appreciation, as they often have during recent years, in other leading public libraries throughout the United States and in Europe, Mr. Belden was thoroughly delighted by such achievement, and cared as much for it as he did for the steady increase of the library's direct service to Boston's readers which has been accomplished under his guidance. He believed in serving all the public well, and he gave his life to that end, gaining national as well as local fame for his work. The task of finding a successor who will make the fight as he made it, will be difficult indeed.

Boston Daily Globe

BACKWARD STATE IN MAP-MAKING

Now the Time to Make One, Librarians Told

Declaring that Massachusetts has become one of the backward States of the Union in the matter of map-making, and that she is in a class of only half a dozen which do not possess a modern geological map of its own territory, Dr. Alfred Coolidge Lane, librarian of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, last night told the members of Boston Chapter, Special Libraries Association, that one of its projects pressing for attention was that of an adequate and modern map of Massachusetts, and that now, during these days of unemployment and depression, was the time to undertake the work.

The meeting was held in the library of the Boston Directory publishers at 111 Summer st., and Charles W. Hawkes, manager, was the host.

Dr. Lane contrasted the early and modern methods of map-making. Until the airplane came to the aid of the map maker, chief features were secured by triangulation, and the interval was filled in by sketching.

For instance, he said, when by traversing it was found that a stream

Boston Daily Globe

TUESDAY, OCT 27, 1931

FINAL TRIBUTE IS PAID C. F. D. BELDEN

Largely Attended Services at Jamaica Plain

Funeral services for Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, who died at Pittsfield Saturday, were conducted in the First Church, Unitarian, Eliot and Center sts., Jamaica Plain, at noon today. Rev. Frank O. Holmes officiated. The edifice was filled with friends of Mr. Belden, including city, library, professional and literary representatives.

Prominent among persons present were Mayor James M. Curley, Louis E. Kirstein, chairman of the trustees of the Boston Public Library; Ellery Sedgwick, Frank W. Buxton and John L. Hall, trustees; Robert Shaw, director of the Worcester Library; Frank W. Faxon, president of the State Library Association; Edward H. Redstone of the State Library; Dr. Payson Smith, Commissioner of Education; Charles R. Green of the Jones Library, Amherst; Charles K. Bolton of the Boston Athenaeum, and Robert P. Blake, director of the Widener Library, Cambridge.

The Massachusetts Bar Association was represented by Frank W. Grinnell, secretary; Henry A. Wyman, Philip Nichols, Guy A. Holliday, Harvard Law School, and Francis J. Murray.

Among others present were Miss Josephine Rathbone, president of the American Library Association; Alfred C. Potter, librarian of the Widener Library; Prof. J. D. M. Ford, Charles B. Gullick and Walter E. Clark, representing the American Academy of Arts and Sciences; Otto Fleischner, former assistant librarian of the Boston Public Library; Gordon Abbott and Judge Michael J. Murray, former trustees; Andrew Keogh, librarian of Yale University; John A. Lowe, assistant librarian of the Brooklyn Public Library, and Charles W. Blood.

Ushers were Charles P. Dillaby, Henry S. Adams, Franklin G. Balch, Henry H. Putnam, Thomas G. Rees, Robert B. Stone, Horace Guild and Judge Burke E. Holland.

After cremation at the Forest Hills Crematory, burial was in Chilmark, where Mr. Belden made his summer home.

On the ground floor are the Periodical Department, with 25,000 indexed volumes for immediate reference; the Newspaper Room with current papers from every state in the Union and from most foreign countries; the Information Office, for the answering of inquiries; and the Open Shelf Room, where one may see the new books and choose something to read without going upstairs. From the courtyard one may enter the Statistical Department, with material on statistics and economics, and a remarkable collection of government documents; and the Patent Division, which has the best collection of patent reports and specifications in New England. The Ordering and Catalogue Departments are also located on the ground floor.

The upper floor of the Central Library is occupied by a series of "Special Libraries"—by the Fine Arts, Technology, Music, and Rare Book Divisions. The Fine Arts collections are especially rich, containing thousands of expensive folio volumes. The Music Division includes a crossed the road, and a little farther on again a stream crossed the road. It was often assumed to be the same stream, and the cartographer made the connection of the stream on the side with a wavy line, without knowing the exact location of the stream, except at the places of crossing the highway.

Citing the topographic map of Massachusetts, published between 1884 and 1890, Prof. Lane said that it was a good map at that time, in comparison with other maps of the period, but that it was deficient in many things, and was a product of the last century.

Dr. F. T. Persons of the Congressional Library pointed out that in one point the map-makers of 1888 had a stream in Northwestern Connecticut running over a hill 300 feet high.

Mr. Hawkes explained to the special librarians the many uses to which a directory may be put, and described the directory library, containing directories from every important city in the United States and Canada, which is open to the public.

Miss Loraine Sullivan of the fine arts division of the Boston Public Library presided. Before the meeting 40 members of the association met at a Summer-ate cafe for dinner.

A committee was appointed to prepare resolutions on the death of Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library. The committee consists of Edward H. Redstone, State librarian, who succeeded Mr. Belden both at the State library and the Social Law Library; Howard L. Stebbins of the Social Library, Mrs. Bertha V. Hartzell of the Boston Public Library and William Alcott, librarian of the Boston Globe, the three latter former presidents of Boston Chapter.

THE BOSTON HERALD

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1931

Vol. 25, No. 12

FINAL TRIBUTE PAID

CHARLES BELDEN

Dec. 5

December 5, 1931.
CITY RECORD.

2065

BOSTON'S PUBLIC LIBRARY AND ITS RELATIONSHIP AS WELL AS SERVICE TO THE CITIZENS ABLY DESCRIBED OVER CITY HALL RADIO BY ELLERY SEDGWICK, OF THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES—SERIES OF TALKS INAUGURATED BY MAYOR CURLEY FOR ENLIGHTENMENT OF PEOPLE ON BRANCHES OF GOVERNMENT.

In the regular weekly broadcast from City Hall, Ellery Sedgwick of the Boston Public Library spoke as follows:

It is with very deep regret that this brief account, written by the late Charles F. D. Belden, upon the library to which he gave such long and faithful service, must, owing to his lamented death, be read by a trustee.

The Public Library of the City of Boston, founded in 1852 and opened to the public in 1854, is the oldest of its kind in the world. Through its thirty-three branches, it was in 1895 that the library occupied its present magnificent home in Copley square, to which an annex was completed in 1918. This edifice, designed by the firm of McKim, Mead & White, was the first of the modern library buildings of the country, and is known throughout the world as one of the most beautiful structures in America. Its mural decorations by Sargent, Abbey, and Puvion de Lavallée, its sculpture by Saint-Gaudens, French, McMonnies, and Pratt, make it a Mecca for lovers of art; its stairway and its beautiful interior are among the finest creations of American architecture. Exclusive of the annex, it is about 225 feet square;

"Built by the people and dedicated to the advancement of learning," the library is at once a treasury and a workshop. In its famous Barton Library of Shakespeareana, the unique Prince Library of Americana, the Ticknor Collection of Spanish and American Literature, and other collections, it houses some of the rarest of books. "Free books for home use." At the end of 1930 it contained 1,526,951 volumes, of which 439,773 were housed in the branches. Its home circulation last year reached a total something over 4,000,000 volumes.

MAINFOLD IN SERVICE.

The forms of its service are manifold. Bates Hall, its great reading room, has a seating capacity for over three hundred persons, and during the busy hours of the season there is hardly a seat unoccupied. Thousands of reference books are kept here on open shelves. The Reference Department offers the use of its resources to students, scholars, and seekers of information, no matter where they live; it answers hundreds of letters and thousands of telephone calls on the greatest variety of subjects. The Children's Room, on the same floor, is one of the most attractive in the building. A weekly story-hour is held at the Central Library and at many of the branches. The Teachers' Reference Library, adjoining the Children's Room, is a great convenience to teachers and normal school students.

On the ground floor are the Periodical Department, with 25,000 indexed volumes for immediate reference; the Newspaper Room with current papers from every state in the Union and from most foreign countries; the Information Office, for the answering of inquiries; and the Open Shelf Room, where one may see the new books and choose something to read without going upstairs. From the courtyard one may enter the Statistical Department, with material on statistics and economics, and a remarkable collection of government documents; and the Patent Division, which has the best collection of patent reports and specifications in New England. The Ordering and Catalogue Departments are also located on the ground floor.

The upper floor of the Central Library is occupied by a series of "Special Libraries"—by the Fine Arts, Technology, Music, and Rare Book Divisions. The Fine Arts collections are especially rich, containing thousands of expensive folio volumes. The Music Division includes a valuable reference library of scores, most of which are the bequest of Allen A. Brown. But one of the chief distinctions of the library lies in its exceptional collections of rare books.

WORK OF LIBRARY OUTLINED.

The work of the library in acquiring material and making it ready for use is carried on by several busy departments which are not open to the public: Ordering, Catalogue, Shelf, Printing, and Binding. The library produces its own electricity and conducts a host of mechanical operations which are unguessed by the ordinary visitor.

The Branch System includes thirty-three smaller libraries in all parts of the city, through which about five-sixths of the home circulation is carried on. The great work of the library for children, which are not open to the public: Ordering, Catalogue, Shelf, Printing, and Binding. The library produces its own electricity and conducts a host of mechanical operations which are unguessed by the ordinary visitor.

The Branch System includes thirty-three smaller libraries in all parts of the city, through which about five-sixths of the home circulation is carried on. The great work of the library for children, which are not open to the public: Ordering, Catalogue, Shelf, Printing, and Binding. The library produces its own electricity and conducts a host of mechanical operations which are unguessed by the ordinary visitor.

The Branch System includes thirty-three smaller libraries in all parts of the city, through which about five-sixths of the home circulation is carried on. The great work of the library for children, which are not open to the public: Ordering, Catalogue, Shelf, Printing, and Binding. The library produces its own electricity and conducts a host of mechanical operations which are unguessed by the ordinary visitor.

The Branch System includes thirty-three smaller libraries in all parts of the city, through which about five-sixths of the home circulation is carried on. The great work of the library for children, which are not open to the public: Ordering, Catalogue, Shelf, Printing, and Binding. The library produces its own electricity and conducts a host of mechanical operations which are unguessed by the ordinary visitor.

The Branch System includes thirty-three smaller libraries in all parts of the city, through which about five-sixths of the home circulation is carried on. The great work of the library for children, which are not open to the public: Ordering, Catalogue, Shelf, Printing, and Binding. The library produces its own electricity and conducts a host of mechanical operations which are unguessed by the ordinary visitor.

The Branch System includes thirty-three smaller libraries in all parts of the city, through which about five-sixths of the home circulation is carried on. The great work of the library for children, which are not open to the public: Ordering, Catalogue, Shelf, Printing, and Binding. The library produces its own electricity and conducts a host of mechanical operations which are unguessed by the ordinary visitor.

The Branch System includes thirty-three smaller libraries in all parts of the city, through which about five-sixths of the home circulation is carried on. The great work of the library for children, which are not open to the public: Ordering, Catalogue, Shelf, Printing, and Binding. The library produces its own electricity and conducts a host of mechanical operations which are unguessed by the ordinary visitor.

The Branch System includes thirty-three smaller libraries in all parts of the city, through which about five-sixths of the home circulation is carried on. The great work of the library for children, which are not open to the public: Ordering, Catalogue, Shelf, Printing, and Binding. The library produces its own electricity and conducts a host of mechanical operations which are unguessed by the ordinary visitor.

Bulletin

DECEMBER, 1931

AMERICAN LIBRARY ASSOCIATION

December 5, 1931.
CITY RECORD.

2065

BOSTON'S PUBLIC LIBRARY AND ITS RELATIONSHIP AS WELL AS SERVICE TO THE CITIZENS ABLY DESCRIBED OVER CITY HALL RADIO BY ELLERY SEDGWICK, OF THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES—SERIES OF TALKS INAUGURATED BY MAYOR CURLEY FOR ENLIGHTENMENT OF PEOPLE ON BRANCHES OF GOVERNMENT.

In the regular weekly broadcast from City Hall, Ellery Sedgwick of the Boston Public Library spoke as follows:

It is with very deep regret that this brief account, written by the late Charles F. D. Belden, upon the library to which he gave such long and faithful service, must, owing to his lamented death, be read by a trustee.

The Public Library of the City of Boston, founded in 1852 and opened to the public in 1854, is the oldest of its kind in the world. Through its thirty-three branches, it was in 1895 that the library occupied its present magnificent home in Copley square, to which an annex was completed in 1918. This edifice, designed by the firm of McKim, Mead & White, was the first of the modern library buildings of the country, and is known throughout the world as one of the most beautiful structures in America. Its mural decorations by Sargent, Abbey, and Puvion de Lavallée, its sculpture by Saint-Gaudens, French, McMonnies, and Pratt, make it a Mecca for lovers of art; its stairway and its beautiful interior are among the finest creations of American architecture. Exclusive of the annex, it is about 225 feet square;

"Built by the people and dedicated to the advancement of learning," the library is at once a treasury and a workshop. In its famous Barton Library of Shakespeareana, the unique Prince Library of Americana, the Ticknor Collection of Spanish and American Literature, and other collections, it houses some of the rarest of books. "Free books for home use." At the end of 1930 it contained 1,526,951 volumes, of which 439,773 were housed in the branches. Its home circulation last year reached a total something over 4,000,000 volumes.

MAINFOLD IN SERVICE.

The forms of its service are manifold. Bates Hall, its great reading room, has a seating capacity for over three hundred persons, and during the busy hours of the season there is hardly a seat unoccupied. Thousands of reference books are kept here on open shelves. The Reference Department offers the use of its resources to students, scholars, and seekers of information, no matter where they live; it answers hundreds of letters and thousands of telephone calls on the greatest variety of subjects. The Children's Room, on the same floor, is one of the most attractive in the building. A weekly story-hour is held at the Central Library and at many of the branches. The Teachers' Reference Library, adjoining the Children's Room, is a great convenience to teachers and normal school students.

On the ground floor are the Periodical Department, with 25,000 indexed volumes for immediate reference; the Newspaper Room with current papers from every state in the Union and from most foreign countries; the Information Office, for the answering of inquiries; and the Open Shelf Room, where one may see the new books and choose something to read without going upstairs. From the courtyard one may enter the Statistical Department, with material on statistics and economics, and a remarkable collection of government documents; and the Patent Division, which has the best collection of patent reports and specifications in New England. The Ordering and Catalogue Departments are also located on the ground floor.

The upper floor of the Central Library is occupied by a series of "Special Libraries"—by the Fine Arts, Technology, Music, and Rare Book Divisions. The Fine Arts collections are especially rich, containing thousands of expensive folio volumes. The Music Division includes a valuable reference library of scores, most of which are the bequest of Allen A. Brown. But one of the chief distinctions of the library lies in its exceptional collections of rare books.

WORK OF LIBRARY OUTLINED.

The work of the library in acquiring material and making it ready for use is carried on by several busy departments which are not open to the public: Ordering, Catalogue, Shelf, Printing, and Binding. The library produces its own electricity and conducts a host of mechanical operations which are unguessed by the ordinary visitor.

The Branch System includes thirty-three smaller libraries in all parts of the city, through which about five-sixths of the home circulation is carried on. The great work of the library for children, which are not open to the public: Ordering, Catalogue, Shelf, Printing, and Binding. The library produces its own electricity and conducts a host of mechanical operations which are unguessed by the ordinary visitor.

The Branch System includes thirty-three smaller libraries in all parts of the city, through which about five-sixths of the home circulation is carried on. The great work of the library for children, which are not open to the public: Ordering, Catalogue, Shelf, Printing, and Binding. The library produces its own electricity and conducts a host of mechanical operations which are unguessed by the ordinary visitor.

The Branch System includes thirty-three smaller libraries in all parts of the city, through which about five-sixths of the home circulation is carried on. The great work of the library for children, which are not open to the public: Ordering, Catalogue, Shelf, Printing, and Binding. The library produces its own electricity and conducts a host of mechanical operations which are unguessed by the ordinary visitor.

The Branch System includes thirty-three smaller libraries in all parts of the city, through which about five-sixths of the home circulation is carried on. The great work of the library for children, which are not open to the public: Ordering, Catalogue, Shelf, Printing, and Binding. The library produces its own electricity and conducts a host of mechanical operations which are unguessed by the ordinary visitor.

The Branch System includes thirty-three smaller libraries in all parts of the city, through which about five-sixths of the home circulation is carried on. The great work of the library for children, which are not open to the public: Ordering, Catalogue, Shelf, Printing, and Binding. The library produces its own electricity and conducts a host of mechanical operations which are unguessed by the ordinary visitor.

The Branch System includes thirty-three smaller libraries in all parts of the city, through which about five-sixths of the home circulation is carried on. The great work of the library for children, which are not open to the public: Ordering, Catalogue, Shelf, Printing, and Binding. The library produces its own electricity and conducts a host of mechanical operations which are unguessed by the ordinary visitor.

The Branch System includes thirty-three smaller libraries in all parts of the city, through which about five-sixths of the home circulation is carried on. The great work of the library for children, which are not open to the public: Ordering, Catalogue, Shelf, Printing, and Binding. The library produces its own electricity and conducts a host of mechanical operations which are unguessed by the ordinary visitor.

AUTHORITY TO DO WORK.

The Mayor has approved the request of the Public Works Department for authority to do work as directed in Gallivan Boulevard, Dorchester, northerly side, easterly from Codman street for 270 feet, with department forces, without advertising, the estimated cost for labor and material being $1,000.

LAST RITES FOR C. F. D. BELDEN

City Officials,
Leaders Pay Tribute
to Librarian

City officials, representatives of the literary world, delegates from Massachusetts bar and many others yesterday paid final tribute to Charles F. D. Belden, librarian for quarter of a century at the Boston Public Library, who died suddenly in Pittsfield, last night.

Services were held in the Unitarian Church, Jamaica Plain, at 10 o'clock. The Rev. Frank O. Holmes, minister, officiated. The church choir sang "The Lord's Prayer" and "O God, the Father of the Mercies." The service was held in the presence of a large gathering of friends.

Among those present were Mayor Curley, Judge Frank Leverett, William M. McMorro, Joseph Harriman (retired), police department.

Honorary pall-bearers were: Louis E. Kirstein, chairman of the board of trustees, Boston Public Library; Frank W. Buxton, John L. Hall, Ellery Sedgwick, trustees; Gordon Abbot, Judge Michael Murray, former trustee; Edwin H. Redstone, librarian of the Massachusetts state library and member of the Massachusetts board of library commissioners; Payson Smith, state commissioner of education; president of the Massachusetts Club; Charles K. Bolton, the Boston Athenaeum; J. H. B. Belden, director of the W. of Harvard University; Green, librarian of J. Amherst; Robert K. Shaw, the Worcester Public Library; John A. Lowe, librarian of the Boston Public Library; Charles W. The standing parish, which Mr. Belden was a member, was represented by Charles F. Charles H. Adams, Mrs. Balch and Edward H. G. The central and branch the city were closed for during the funeral service.

Delegation from the Bar Association:

Frank W. Grinnell, ex officio; A. Wyman, Philip Nichols, Henry A. Wyman, Francis J. Murray, The ushers were Henry Franklin C. Balch, Charles Horace Guild, Bert E. Putnam, Thomas G. Stone.

The body was cremated at Forest Hills.

Boston Daily

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1931 LAST TRIBUTE CHARLES F. D.

Funeral services for Belden, director of the Library, who died at 6 p. day, were held yesterday at the Unitarian Church, Jamaica Plain, at 10 o'clock. The Rev. Frank O. Holmes, minister, officiated. The church choir sang "The Lord's Prayer" and "O God, the Father of the Mercies." The service was held in the presence of a large gathering of friends.

Ushers were Charles P. Adams, Franklin I. Putnam, Thomas G. Stone, Horace G. Burke E. Holland.

Prominent among those present were Mayor Curley, Lou chairman of the trustees Public Library; Edwin H. Redstone, librarian of the State Library; Dr. Payson Smith, state commissioner of education; president of the Massachusetts Club; Charles K. Bolton, the Boston Athenaeum; J. H. B. Belden, director of the W. of Harvard University; Green, librarian of J. Amherst; Robert K. Shaw, the Worcester Public Library; John A. Lowe, librarian of the Boston Public Library; Charles W. The standing parish, which Mr. Belden was a member, was represented by Charles F. Charles H. Adams, Mrs. Balch and Edward H. G. The central and branch the city were closed for during the funeral service.

Delegation from the Bar Association:

Frank W. Grinnell, ex officio; A. Wyman, Philip Nichols, Henry A. Wyman, Francis J. Murray, The ushers were Henry Franklin C. Balch, Charles Horace Guild, Bert E. Putnam, Thomas G. Stone.

The body was cremated at Forest Hills.

Library Closed

2066

LAND-TAKING IN BRIGHTON.

The Mayor has approved the order of the Board of Street Commissioners for the taking of land for a public improvement consisting of the laying out and construction of Wilson park, Brighton district, as a highway, from Commonwealth avenue to Cummings road, bounded and described as follows:

A highway named Wilson park is hereby laid out from Commonwealth avenue and ordered constructed.

For the making of the aforesaid improvement an easement for street purposes is hereby taken in the following described lands, exclusive of trees or structures standing upon or affixed thereto.

A parcel of land, owners unknown, being the private way known as Wilson park. Included in the aforesaid land (taken hereunder) is a part of a parcel of land registered in the Land Court, said parcel being shown on the plan heretofore referred to, and said part being the portion of said registered parcel which lies between the easterly line of Wilson park and the middle line of said street; the owner of said portion, the number of the certificate of title and the book and page where the same is registered are as follows:

Harold G. King, trustee Fisher Hill Realty Company, Cert. No. 11721, Book 69, page 124.

A parcel of land, supposed to belong to Peter G. Rice, bounded: Northerly by the southerly line of Wilson park, sixty-nine and 31-100 feet; northeasterly by the southerly line of Wilson park, twenty-seven and 46-100 feet on a curve of fifteen feet radius; easterly by the westerly line of Wilson park, twenty-six and 61-100 feet; southerly by the westerly line of Wilson park, twenty-one and 51-100 feet on a curve of fifteen feet radius; southerly by the northerly line of Wilson park, sixty-five and 49-100 feet; westerly by the northerly line of Wilson park, twenty-three and 55-100 feet on a curve of fifteen feet radius; westerly by the easterly line of Wilson park, sixteen and 59-100 feet; northeasterly by the southerly line of Wilson park, twenty-one and 43-100 feet on a curve of fifteen feet radius, containing forty-eight hundred eleven square feet, more or less.

Trees or structures standing upon or affixed to the aforesaid land shall be removed therefrom within sixty days following a notice of the city's intention to enter upon said land for the purpose of constructing said improvement.

Said Wilson park as hereby laid out, is bounded: Northerly by Commonwealth avenue, fifty-two and 21-100 feet; westerly by the westerly line of said Wilson park as hereby laid out, one hundred seventy-five feet; southerly by the southerly line of said Wilson park as hereby laid out, forty-seven and 10-100 feet on a curve of thirty feet radius; southerly by the southerly line of said Wilson park as hereby laid out, one hundred twelve and 70-100 feet; southeasterly by the southerly line of said Wilson park as hereby laid out, eighty-seven and 50-100 feet on a curve of sixty feet radius; easterly by the easterly line of said Wilson park as hereby laid out, sixty-six and 49-100 feet; northerly by the northerly line of said Wilson park as hereby laid out, one hundred twenty-one and 52-100 feet; northeasterly by the northerly line of said Wilson park as hereby laid out, twenty-one and 41-100 feet on a curve of twelve and 50-100 feet radius; again

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1931

ton, librarian, Boston Athenaeum; Andrew Keogh, librarian, Yale University; Robert P. Blake, director, Widener Library of Harvard University; Charles R. Green, James Library, Amherst; Robert

Boston Daily Globe

TUESDAY, OCT 27, 1931

FINAL TRIBUTE IS

CITY RECORD

Dec. 5

easterly by the easterly line of said Wilson park as hereby laid out, seventy-eight and 28-100 feet; and again southeasterly by the southeasterly line of said Wilson park as hereby laid out, nineteen and 38-100 feet on a curve of twelve and 50-100 feet radius.

References are to be assessed for the making of the aforesaid improvement.

Ordered, That this Board estimates that the abutting lots of land on all sides of Wilson park as it existed previous to this order, excluding the passageway situated on the westerly side of Wilson park, and including the parcel of land situated at the westerly end of said passageway, supposed to belong to Home Buyers Society, Incorporated, containing forty-four hundred and ninety-seven square feet, will receive benefit or advantage from the laying out and construction of said real estate in said city, from the improvement herein ordered; each of said lots to the amount hereinafter respectively set against them; said lots and the supposed owners thereof being shown on a plan marked "City of Boston, Wilson Park, Brighton, Assessment, Plan, April 30, 1931, William J. Sullivan, Chief Engineer, Street Laying-Out Department," and on file in the office of said department.

Lot	Owner	Amount
1	Harold G. King, trustee	$423.50
2	Frederick Harrington, Verne Harrington	241.85
3	Home Mutual Life Insurance Company	231.10
4	Almon E. Norris, trustee	300.00
5	Victoria P. Roberts	50.00
6	Sarah B. Saunders	50.00
7	Joseph Morris	50.00
8	Dora Goldblatt	50.00
9	Mary J. Sampson	256.75
10	Home Buyers Society, Inc.	134.91
11	James Cronin, Mary A. Cronin	224.85
12	Arthur T. Nelson	99.64
Total		$2,142.60

ADDED DAMAGES.

The Mayor has approved the following votes of the Board of Street Commissioners:

Ordered, That the order of the Street Commissioners and Mayor of March 5, 1931, determining that no person sustains damages by the making of the public improvement consisting of the laying out and construction of Westmont avenue (Pleasant street) be, and the same hereby is, amended, by striking out in the first and second lines of said order the words: "that no person sustains in his estate," and by striking out in the last line of said order the word: "no."

That said order be further amended by adding thereto Victor Muller and Rebecca Muller, $90. That the amount $90 be, and the same hereby is, awarded to Victor Muller and Rebecca Muller for the damages sustained by the making of the said improvement.

Ordered, That the order of the Street Commissioners and Mayor of March 16, 1931, determining that no person sustains damages by the making of the public improvement consisting of the laying out and construction of St. Peter street be, and the same hereby is, amended, by striking out in the first and second lines of said order the words: "that no person sustains in his estate," and by striking out in the last line of said order the word: "no."

That said order be further amended by adding thereto Mellicie Fallon, $175. That the amount $175 be, and the same hereby is, awarded to Mellicie Fallon for the damages sustained by the making of the said improvement.

111 Summer st., and Charles W. Hawkes, manager, was the host.

Dr. Lane contrasted the early and modern methods of map-making. Until the airplane came to the aid of the map maker, chief features were secured by triangulation, and the interval was filled in by sketching.

For instance, he said, when by traversing it was found that a stream

THE BOSTON HERALD

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1931

FINAL TRIBUTE PAID CHARLES BELDEN

City Officials at Rites for Librarian

City officials, representatives of the literary world, delegates from the Massachusetts bar and many others yesterday paid final tribute to Charles F. D. Belden, librarian for quarter of a century at the Boston Public Library, who died suddenly in Pittsfield Saturday.

Services were held in the First Parish Unitarian Church, Jamaica Plain, at 10 o'clock. The Rev. Frank O. Holmes, pastor of the church, officiated. The service included reading of the psalms and the singing by the church choir of "Souls of the Righteous" and "O Lord of Life." Benediction was said by the pastor.

Among those present were Mayor Curley, Judge Frank Leverett, City Collector William M. McMorro and Capt. Joseph Harriman (retired) of the Boston police department.

Honorary pall-bearers were: Louis E. Kirstein, chairman of the board of trustees, Boston Public Library; Frank W. Buxton, John L. Hall, Ellery Sedgwick, trustees; Gordon Abbot, Judge Michael Murray, former trustee; Edwin H. Redstone, librarian of the Massachusetts state library and member of the Massachusetts board of library commissioners; Payson Smith, state commissioner of education; F. W. Faxon, president of the Massachusetts Library Club; Charles K. Bolton, librarian of the Boston Athenaeum; Andrew Keogh, librarian of Yale University; Robert P. Blake, director of the Widener Library of Harvard University; Charles R. Green, librarian of Jones Library, Amherst; Robert K. Shaw, librarian of the Worcester Public Library; John A. Lowe, librarian of the Brooklyn, N. Y., Public Library; Charles W. Blood.

The standing parish committee, of which Mr. Belden was a member, was represented by Charles P. Dillaby, Mrs. Charles H. Adams, Mrs. Franklin G. Balch and Edward H. Gleason.

The central and branch libraries of the city were closed from 11:30 to 1, during the funeral services.

Delegation from the Massachusetts Bar Association:

Frank W. Grinnell, secretary; Henry A. Wyman, Philip Nichols, Guy A. Holliday, Francis J. Murray.

The ushers were Henry S. Adams, Dr. Franklin C. Balch, Charles Dillaby, Horace Guild, Bert E. Holland, Henry H. Putnam, Thomas G. Rees, Robert B. Stone.

The body was cremated at Forest Hills.

COLLECTING DEPARTMENT TO BE OPEN LATE FOR PUBLIC TO PAY TAXES.

Mayor Curley, on December 2, received the following letter from City Collector William M. McMorro:

HON. JAMES M. CURLEY,
Mayor of Boston.

My dear Mr. Mayor,—I desire to take this opportunity to direct your attention to the fact that the fifteenth of December is the last day of grace upon payments of taxes due the city, and any outstanding 1931 taxes remaining unpaid will be subject to interest at 8 per cent dating back to September 16.

It is my purpose to keep the Collecting Department office open for the payment of taxes daily from 9 a. m. to 5 p. m. from now until December 15, so that every person desirous of avoiding the 8 per cent rate of interest may be afforded an opportunity to pay their taxes and thereby avoid the payment of the additional penalty of interest.

WILLIAM M. McMORRO.

tea consists of Edward H. Redstone, State librarian, who succeeded Mr. Belden both at the State library and the Social Law Library; Howard L. Stebbins of the Social Library, Mrs. Bertha V. Hartzell of the Boston Public Library and William Alcott, librarian of the Boston Globe, the three latter former presidents of Boston Chapter.

Bulletin

DECEMBER, 1931

of the AMERICAN LIBRARY ASSOCIATION

Two Eminent Leaders Gone

Members of the American Library Association were shocked and saddened when two former presidents of the association, Charles F. D. Belden and Walter L. Brown, suddenly died within the same week. Neither man had been well, but no one had realized the serious condition of either.

Both Mr. Belden and Mr. Brown had been born in New York State, Mr. Belden at Syracuse, October 5, 1870; Mr. Brown at Buffalo, January 4, 1861. Mr. Belden, however, had spent most of his professional life in Massachusetts, following his graduation from the Harvard Law School. First, secretary of the Harvard Law School Faculty, he later became assistant librarian of the Harvard Law Library; librarian of the Social Law Library, Boston; librarian of the Massachusetts State Library; and finally—the positions he held at the time of his death—chairman of the Free Public Library Commission of Massachusetts and director of the Boston Public Library.

In addition to being a recognized leader within his state, he was one of the American Library Association's most distinguished and most cherished members. On the occasion of its fiftieth anniversary celebration, the association chose him as president and gave him the honor of presiding at a brilliant international conference attended by representatives of twenty-two countries.

Mr. Belden was a member of the commission which studied the adult education movement and reported its findings and recommendations in Libraries and adult education in 1926; he was also a member of the first Board on the Library and Adult Education. He served on the A. L. A. War Finance Committee and was influential in many important association activities. More than once he represented American library interests abroad, and his contributions to learning were recognized by honors from the King of Italy and the city of Ravenna, as well as from Harvard University.

His death on October 24 at the Pittsfield Hospital has been described by E. Kathleen Jones, general secretary of the Massachusetts Division of Public Libraries, as "an irreparable loss" to his immediate associates. "He was more than our director," Miss Jones writes; "he was a very dear friend—as one librarian put it, 'a man with the understanding heart.'"

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1931

THE LIBRARIAN

ANYONE so sensitive to atmosphere, entering the Boston Public Library on Saturday last, was instantly aware of the grief and shock which the attendants showed so plainly. The hushed voices and the general air of uncertainty were not so much because of the passing of the Director of a great library system, but for the loss of a dear friend. Aside from his scholarship and executive abilities, Charles F. D. Belden had that quality of easy friendliness which set the tone of the Boston Public Library and made it such an extraordinarily pleasant place to work in or visit.

That awe of "the big boss," prevalent in many places, was quite unknown at the B. P. L. The "office" door was always hospitably open and "the chief" ready to receive all comers with the same interested courtesy, whether they came with grievances or good news. Those of the staff summoned to discuss some project recall how the Director instantly proffered a comfortable chair, then strode to and fro, himself, trenchantly setting forth his point. Indoors, even when it was as magnificent as the Boston Public Library, always seemed too cramped for that tall, splendid person. You felt he should be striding along in the sun, facing the sea wind of his beloved Edgartown.

It was impossible not to feel instantly at ease with Mr. Belden. Visiting dignitaries and stock girls alike felt the charm of his manner, compounded of simplicity and kindness, shot through with humor. When the Director visited a library department, it was never the ordeal it is known to be elsewhere, for Mr. Belden was always dropping in informally, to select a book from the Open Shelf Room, look over the case of new fiction or glance through the latest exhibit in fine arts. He was quick to encourage and praise; and always hospitable to new ideas.

Most of the changes and improvements throughout the library building were due to the Director. Mr. Belden labored to make the book collections as accessible as possible to the public, and the surroundings worthy of the material they housed. That he succeeded is evidenced by the reorganization of Bates Hall, the Treasure Room and the West Gallery. The serene beauty of these places will remain as his most enduring monument.

Charles F. D. Belden

By Lilian Whiting

A BEAUTIFUL presence has gone from our midst in the passing on of Charles F. D. Belden, the director of the Boston Public Library. To an unusual degree Mr. Belden lived the "Life More Abundant" now and here; his radiant personality pervaded every nook and corner of Boston's great Library; and its innumerable habitués—students, readers, visitors—found in him the most courteous and charming companionship, counsel or wise and sympathetic direction. Like his great predecessor, Dr. Herbert Putnam, his one ardent and eager interest was the constant development of this noble institution. To increase the relations between the people and the treasures of learning and literature of which he was the chief custodian was his never-failing purpose.

It is particularly gratifying to recall one episode in Mr. Belden's experience—that of his presence as a delegate at the World Congress of Librarians in Rome—with interludes in Naples, Florence and Venice—in the June of 1929. Never shall I lose from memory one summer hour, after his return, when, in his private office in the Library, he told me something of the story.

That Rome should be chosen as the scenic setting of the first International Library Congress ever held was most gratifying to the Italian Government. The sympathies of Mussolini were especially enlisted by this convocation of the most eminent librarians of the world; and with him were united some of Italy's greatest scholars. The congress was opened by a dinner given by Senator Cipullo in Rome, at which the courtesies of the occasion were rendered with the peculiar grace and brilliancy of the Italian host and his notable colleagues—all extending the salutations of the Italian Government and the most cordial hospitalities of Rome.

The congress met the next day in the Senate chamber where they were received by Mussolini and his Cabinet: the governor of Rome, the vice president of the Senate, and the prefect, Signor Garzanti. Mussolini expressed his appreciation of the honor done Rome by selecting her as the seat of the first World Congress of Librarians and Bibliography. He felt it a tribute to Italy, "the cradle of three civilizations." Senator Cipullo (one of the great scholars of Italy) spoke of this special impetus given to the diffusion of books and culture; and Italy's pleasure that the guests would see, "with their own eyes, what she is accomplishing in the production and diffusion of books."

The sessions of the congress (after the opening in the Senate chamber) were held in the famous old Palazzo Corsini. Of unsurpassed interest was the reception of the congress by the Pope, in the magnificent Capella Sistina of the Palazzo Vaticano. With the benignant cordiality that so characterizes the Pontiff, His Holiness made the rounds of the guests, clasping the hand of each and later making a brief address. The king invited the congress to the Quirinal, and the hour in the royal palace, Queen Elena gracing it by her presence, was charming in its beauty and simple cordiality. Boston shares in the pride that Mr. Belden, the director of her renowned Public Library, was one among three who were honored by the king in being invested with the Order of Cavaliere della corona d'Italia, the third honor that the crown can bestow.

The visit of the congress to Naples was fairly a medieval romance. From the middle of the fifteenth century Naples has been a center of culture. Foreigners had thronged to the city, establishing presses that issued many famous works among which were the Formulario di epistole volgare of Landino, and the Dialoghi di San Gregorio. Dottore Gaetano Burgada, the custodian of the Naples Library, brought out manuscripts from Ariosto, Tasso, Leopardi; and in Venice Commissioner Ettore Zorzi "sketched the history of the Biblioteca Marciana from time of Petrarca who, in 1362, offered to the Venetian Republic books that were priceless." All these important exhibits reveal the value placed upon learning in the Middle Ages.

In Venice, in Florence, priceless treasures of untold value to letters were opened to the Congress. This episode was to Mr. Belden an illuminated chapter in his life; and the remembrance of his enjoyment and fine appreciation of the marvellous stores of learning unfolded to the members of this convocation, lends consolation to the innumerable number of friends who held him in such high esteem. "Blessed are those who go laden with love," says an old Spanish proverb; and no one ever passed on more bountifully "laden with love" than Charles F. D. Belden. He had a genius for friendship; for companionship; and by some miracle and magic of which he held the secret, he found time for these, even with the incessant demands of his important official life.

CHARLES F. D. BELDEN

DIRECTOR OF THE BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY
March 15, 1917—October 23, 1931

At a meeting of the Trustees of the Public Library of the City of Boston held on December 4, 1931, the following resolution was adopted to be spread upon the records:

It was given to Charles F. D. Belden to direct the Public Library of the City of Boston for fourteen years. Wisely and well he used the opportunity. Assuming office with a definite and proper conception of an institution whose privilege it is to bring knowledge and pleasure, recreation and stimulus to a great and expanding community, he was fortunate enough to watch the steady fulfilment of his hopes. Always in sympathy with scholarship, he systematically increased the treasures of the Library, and expanded the facilities for their use, but never lost sight of his fundamental purpose of providing for all the people the means of self-enlightenment and of enlarging self-respect. Nor did he take the narrow view of a professional educator, but understood that the needs of a community are infinite, that people require entertainment and distraction as well as information and knowledge. He realized that as it is the privilege of the people to go to the Library, so it is the duty of the Library to go to the people, and the inauguration of a policy of persistent building and maintaining in high efficiency branch libraries throughout the city met with his energetic support. We are grateful for the length of his service. We are proud of the loyalty which he inspired throughout the great body of Library employees, and we recall with satisfaction how far beyond the limits of his city he was able to extend the influence of his principles, and the contagion of his enthusiasm. Charles Belden was an ornament to his profession, and a faithful steward of his trust. We, the Trustees, who have watched the culmination of the work to which he gave his life, are willing witnesses to his happy and successful career, and desire to spread upon the permanent record of our Library's history this appreciation of a firm friend, a good citizen, and a great Librarian.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1931

LIBRARY DAYS AND NIGHTS

To the Editor of the Transcript:

It is almost inconceivable that the "Indiana visitor to our Public Library," who writes to you, should not have become aware of the fact that the Delivery Room, (which she calls the "Abbey Room," and points out as "so cluttered with desks and files," is temporarily in this inconvenient condition because of the sweeping repairs that are in process. Bates Hall and the Card Catalogue room have been entirely in the hands of workmen since May; the files and desks were, perforce, removed to the Delivery Room; the Lecture Hall is utilized to do duty, as best it can, for Bates Hall; and readers and visitors must, perforce, share with the library staff in the very great inconveniences and limitations caused by the extensive repainting. Let us trust that when this noble library, and that that house of learning and literature, shall be restored and opened to the public and privileges of its increased beauty for the summer's deprivation shall be repaid. Let us trust that the visitors during this interregnum shall, for their brief stay, in the annoyances not to share in the patience and the serene endurance that characterize the library people themselves, to whom the summer has been a hardship beyond the realization of the casual dropper-in. With the same unvarying courtesy and unfailing aid to the reader and unfailing proceed with an absence of complaint that might well be imitated. The lady from Indiana leaves us indebted to her for a large assortment of advice as to the directions that should be pursued by the library authorities. To take advantage of all these gratuitous suggestions would, one may fear, entail even more extended repairs and over-turnings than are going on at present. Also, it might be suggested in return that while the library is enriched by its magnificent array of mural paintings, yet it is not, primarily, a museum of art; that its immense collection of books, rendering it a library for specialists in science, art, medicine, music, history, economics, philosophy with its marvellous resources in all literature classed under belles lettres, have rendered it a Mecca for scholars, writers, researchers of any order, during the past half century. A library is not static; it expands as life itself expands; and to its distinguished director, Charles F. D. Belden; its eminent and accomplished curators and assistants, there is due a recognition that words are inadequate to express. The generous hospitalities, the unlimited service and aid given by all who constitute its staff is one feature that can hardly be negligible in any reference to the Public Library of Boston. Boston, Sept. 12. LILIAN WHITING

BULLETIN of The BUSINESS HISTORICAL SOCIETY

INCORPORATED

BAKER LIBRARY, SOLDIERS FIELD, BOSTON, MASS.

Volume I, No. 6

DECEMBER, 1931

Whole Number 34

In Memoriam

In October the Society suffered a very great loss in the death of three of its members: Roland W. Boyden, Charles F. D. Belden, and William O. Comstock.

Roland W. Boyden was not only a prominent Boston attorney but also a figure of international renown, receiving recognition from many European countries for his services in conferences upon European affairs. He was born in Beverly, Massachusetts, October 18, 1863, attended Salem High School, Phillips Exeter Academy, and Harvard University. Graduating from Harvard in 1885, he turned to law, receiving his LL.B. from the Harvard Law School in 1888. His first law experience was gained in association with the late Henry P. Moulton and Herman W. Chaplin, prominent attorneys of Salem and Boston respectively, and later he entered into partnership with Charles I. Giddings of Boston. After the death of the latter in 1893, he became a member of the firm of Ropes, Grey and Loring (now Ropes, Grey, Boyden and Perkins). In 1917 he was made a member of the legal staff of the U. S. Food Administration at Washington as director of prosecutions under the food laws, and was a member of Herbert Hoover's executive committee. At the close of the war, President Wilson appointed him representative of the United States on the Reparations Commission of the Paris Peace Conference, to which post he was subsequently reappointed by President Harding. Since then he has represented the United States at the World Finance Conference at Brussels, and for the past few years has been Chairman of the Mixed War Claims Commission, in which work he was deeply engrossed until the time of his death.

Charles F. D. Belden was recognized both here and in Europe as one of the foremost librarians of his day, and was in no small measure responsible for the present outstanding position of the Boston Public Library, of which he was librarian and director. He was born in Syracuse, New York, in 1871, spent his boyhood at Niagara Falls, attended the Buffalo High School and Harvard University, graduating from the latter in 1895. He then entered the Harvard Law School and while there earned his way by cataloging law books in its library. Soon after graduation he accepted the secretaryship of the Harvard Law Faculty and began at once the tremendous task of cataloging the whole law library of over 100,000 volumes, which work he completed in 1902. For seven years he was assistant law librarian at Harvard and for a year was in charge of the Social Law Library at Suffolk County Courthouse. He was also State Librarian for Massachusetts for eight years, and served as chairman of the State Board of Free Public Library Commissioners. In 1917 he became Librarian of the Boston Public Library, and a few years later Director of the Library as well, which positions he held at the time of his death. In 1926 he was elected president of the American Library Association. Harvard University bestowed upon him the honorary degree of Master of Arts; he was decorated for his achievements by Czechoslovakia, received the order of the Crown of Italy, and the Dante medal from the city of Ravenna.

William O. Comstock was an able engineer, an enthusiastic antiquarian, and a loyal friend of the Society. He was born in Boston, educated as a mining engineer at Washington University, St. Louis. Thirty years ago he retired and has since devoted himself almost entirely to historical study, particularly that of early America. He was a member of the Brookline Historical Society, the Society for the Preservation of New England Antiquities, the Boston chapter of the Sons of the Revolution and the Connecticut Society of the Cincinnati. His engineering interests were continued through membership in the Boston Engineering Society, and the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers. His home was in Brookline, Massachusetts.

The Lilies of Boston.

We are lilies fair,
The flowers of virgin light;
Nature held us forth, and said
"Lo, my thoughts of white."
—Leigh Hunt.

THE Lilies fair of Boston are at it again. With cheeks aflame, they have ordered granite ribbons placed upon the statues of two nude children in reproductions of the city seal that grace the stately portals of the Hill public library.

What balm to the harried soul it is to know that in sin-sodden, sex-soaked America there still stands such a citadel of purity as is Boston. A place where the gendarmes rush to arms when the American Mercury appears upon the hallowed common; where Casanova's memoirs are available in the library only to those who want to study; the illustrations and who promise not to even glance at the text; where no curtains are permitted to "rise" upon a Sunday stage performance, but they may be parted in the middle and drawn back; and where no volume that even questions the stork myth may repose upon any book-stall or library shelf.

And now, with one great convulsion of chastity, Boston bars naked children in granite. Let the fate of Sodom and Gomorrah be tempted by other cities, if they elect. But Boston is taking no chances.

Columbus

—BOSTON SUNDAY ADVERTISER—

—NOVEMBER 8, 1931—

Fiction Leads in Its Appeal to the Public

THE FOLLOWING works are included in the new books added to the Boston Public Library, the withdrawal number being given with each:

"Kitty Frew," by Jane L. D. Abbott (fiction) 53.309.
"Mad Marriage," by Laura Loe Brookman (fiction) 53.294.
"The Gleam in the North," by Dorothy K. Broster (fiction) 53.288.

"Maiden Fee," by Gerald Williams Bullett (fiction) 53.304.
"The Man Who Was Thursday," by Gilbert K. Chesterton (fiction) 48.677.
"The Craig Poisoning Mystery," by Archibald Fielding (fiction) 53.319.

"The Finger Points," by Guy Fowler (fiction) 53.315.
"A Murder of Some Importance," by Bruce Graeme (fiction) 53.307.
"Sun Up," by Will James (Tales of the Cow Camps) 2369.355.

"The Rum Row Murders," by Charles Reed Jones (fiction) 53.290.
"The Square Circle," by Dennis George MacKail (fiction) 53.277.
"Adam and Some Eves," by Concordia Merrell (fiction) 53.286.

"Found Drowned," by Eden Philpotts (fiction) 53.284.
"The Eoudor," by Milton M. Propper (fiction) 53.312.

"The Lively Lady," by Kenneth Lewis Roberts (fiction) 53.273.
"Stories of Love," by Rafael Sabatini (fiction) 53.313.
"An End to Mirth," by Ben Ames Williams (fiction) 53.281.
"That Royal Lover," by Percival Konrad (biography). Affairs of King Carol. 3689.273.
"Kelvin, His Amazing Life," by Herbert N. Casson (biography) 8201.9.

"Life of Charles G. Washburn," by George Henry Haynes (biography). This Massachusetts Congressman was a biographer of Senators Lodge and Weeks. 4345.379.

"Theodore N. Vail," by Albert B. Paine (biography) 4447.507.
"Pure Bred Dogs," by American Kennel Club (sport) 6098.217.
"Suzanne Lenglen," Her career, by Claude Anet (sport) 4099.537.

"Rockne of Notre Dame," by Delos W. Lovelace (sport) 4007.557.
"Manual for Club Women," by Anna Richardson Stearns, 5559.400.
"Between Ourselves," by Seymour Hicks (nocturnal personalities) 2246.155.

"Mississippi to the Sea," by Rear Admiral Robert E. Coontz. Life story of a United States Navy officer (naval) 4327.190.
"Riata and Spurs," by Charles A. Siringo. Life of a Cowboy (memoirs) 2369.348.

"Forecasting Security Prices," by L. L. B. Angus (business) HG4521.A45.
"Play the Game," by Mitchell V. Charnley, editor (sport for children) 730851.1.
"The Story of Athletics," by Marian King (sports for children) 2704.41.

"Economics," by Frank T. Carlton, 3330.2A36.
"Cutting Rural Boys and Girls," by Hatcher (educational) 3599.537.

The Chiels Open Their Notebooks

Young Years, Minds and Pens Rhyme of Concerts with Ernest Schelling

THE gayest collection of notebooks you ever saw is neatly arranged behind glass in the exhibition room of the Boston Public Library this week. These notebooks dance and sing and trumpet noisily about, notwithstanding the surrounding quiet and dignity, for they are the liveliest of the Schelling crop. And it's a lively audience at the Schelling concerts for children, whether the hall be Jordan Hall in Boston, Aeolian Hall in New York or Academy of Music in Philadelphia. That such an intriguing group of notebooks should come from the squirming, squiggling, craning mass of children who tumble into seats and aisles is really amazing. And yet, it's not entirely unexpected. For the alertness of the young audience is immediately apparent. The various recurrent commotions are the result of physical vigor and joyous excitement, not mischief. And such encouragement as these youngsters get to make their notebooks individual. The printed leaflet given to each child at each concert proposes four questions about the subject matter of the lecture and the playing. These are simply a giving back of facts, the usual routine of learning. But the fifth division is quite another matter. For here a child is invited—invited, mind you—to express his thoughts. The results are rewarding. In fact, they are so rewarding that parents might well profit by Uncle Schelling's example.

Offhand, one would decide that Gustave Kobbe, 24, of New York, is an altogether exceptional child. His thoughts are clear, vigorous, and—rhymed. He can express himself, and does:

MY THOUGHTS
Next week the work must all be in Good heavens! next week's here.
Four concerts now have gone and been
There's just one more, I fear.
Now how on earth can I expect
With one eye on the clock
My thoughts all calmly to collect
When grief of me makes mock.

My heart is wrong, my soul is sore
There's only just one concert more.
I cannot tell which lovely tune
I wish to hear again
I cannot prate of 3-4 time
Or why is a quartet.
It's useless, Mr. Schelling.
I'm afraid I quite forgot.

My heart is wrong, my soul is sore
There's only just one concert more.
O, Mr. Schelling, I implore,
Please give us more and more and MORE.

Nor is young Kobbe the only poet of these varied audiences. Once upon a morning Dorothy Gordon—a singer of children's songs—sang at one of the Boston concerts. Whereupon Almira Taylor felt inspired and poured forth this bit of verse:

Dorothy sang at Mr. Schelling's concert.
On the stage,
Really she was charming.
Off came her wig.
The wig was white.
Her hair was black.
Young she was.
Gaily she sang.
On the piano played Adele.
Rapidly she twirled.
Dancing also.
On her head was a black bow.
Nice she was.

One comment on Miss Gordon's singing is the thoroughly characteristic comment of a child. Tell your child the story of Goldilocks but once, and all the repetitions forever and ever after must be verbatim. Even the tiniest tot with the alert retentiveness of every normal child will correct his mother vigorously and with finality. So a French tune brought this forthright comment from ten-year-old Jane Cushman: . . . I can play one of the songs she sang on the piano but the words are different in my song. The name of her's is "Dip your bread, Marie" and mine is "Knead your bread, Marie." I liked the pretty costumes she wore when she sang.

Many of us have debated the influence of these concerts on the children who go to them. Admittedly there are always a number of little boys and girls who refuse to be impressed or amused. They simply endure. But they are in a minority. A lad of nine years named Peter, Wellington was deeply moved by Bach and Mozart—and what child is there who would not love them were they but presented naturally and simply and without apologies. Peter expresses himself in this fashion: "I liked so much the two pieces (sic) that you and your orchestra played for us of Bach and Mozart that when I came home I asked if I could have the Minuet of Mozart and the Minuet of Bach and I am playing them both now and I love them."

Somehow the little boys seem honest, or at least less conventional, than the little girls. But perhaps I am prejudiced. At the age of ten, Katharine Lyon Dunlop polished off this little item:

I'll tell you the reason
The concert this season
Are perfect as perfect can be.
There is sweet story telling.
By our dear Uncle Schelling
And pictures a pleasure to see.

Each man plays so sweetly
That we are completely
Delighted and filled full of joy
By their great orchestration
They are winning our nation—
How splendid for each girl and boy!

Fourteen-year-old Margaret Merriman says, pleasantly, but with just a wee trace of smugness:

This certainly was an interesting program
And I enjoyed it most immensely.
There was not a number played
That did not charm me greatly.

Meanwhile Priscilla St. George, being arrived at the ripe age of nine years and not yet cognizant of all the rules of spelling, writes about that most challenging and warlike instrument, the trumpet.

The trumpet speaks the Marshall mood
Of kings and queens it bears in mind,
Of trumpeters on champing steeds
And warriors doing noble deeds,
Of messengers hurrying through woods.
Here she blithely adds, as though the poem still went on:

Make a picture of the Marshall Trumpet.
Richard Bowman, all of thirteen, has an idea for the next series. He tells Mr. Schelling, "I think that you ought to devote next year to a study of different composers as you are of Wagner."

But not all the children's reactions are verbal. On the contrary, the first impression of this collection is one of colorfulness. Red, blue, gold and green flash out from behind the glass cases. One notebook boasts a reproduction of an old French book, wherein are the old four line staves and square notes. Another gives us pictures of the percussion instruments, the glockenspiel, cymbals, castanets, tambourine, triangle and xylophone—all in their relative sizes. (Thirteen-year-old Robert Wolf made these.) A not too bad pencil sketch of Wagner blinks out of one book. And then there is an amusing copy of a lady playing a theorb, which is certainly an armful. But most astonishing of all the drawings is a really impressive oil sketch made by one Peter Schellens when he was eight years old. After hearing a performance of Mendelssohn's "Fingal's Cave" Overture, the little boy visualized a great mounting, rocky cave, a deep brown against a burning blue sky, with waves beating themselves frantically into foam. (This isn't just an effusive moment. It's really there in the sketch.) Perhaps this little boy would have made that oil sketch anyway, but somehow I don't think it would have been quite so good. And if nothing more than Peter's little sketch came from all of Ernest Schelling's concerts for children, I would feel that they had been completely justified.

But much more does come. One child in New York is certainly looking ahead "Perhaps when we are grown," she ponders, "we too shall bring our children to the concerts and give them the splendid opportunities our parents have given us." So there you are, you gentlemen and ladies who lecture and talk to children, and think they're just children and are thinking only childlike thoughts. Your audience is so young that it dares to think old, sweet, honest thoughts. And heaven help you if you ever try to "talk down" to them because you think you're a grownup. CATHERINE BAILEY

Boston Transcript - Nov. 14, 1931.

Possible Choice for Librarian

Milton E. Lord, Harvard 1921 (Photo by Notman)

Director of the Library at the University of Iowa, Native of Lynn, Who Spent Several Years As Librarian At The American Academy in Rome, Acknowledged to Be Among the Candidates Under Consideration to Succeed the Late Charles F. D. Belden, Who for Years Was Librarian of the Boston Public Library

BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN

NOVEMBER 24, 1931

LORD TO HEAD PUBLIC LIBRARY

Milton E. Lord, 33, Harvard graduate and director of the University of Iowa library, will succeed the late Charles F. D. Belden as director of the Boston Public Library. It was learned from reliable sources today.

Public announcement of his appointment, which will be made today, makes him the youngest man ever to head the Boston Public Library, but despite his comparative youth, his reputation as a librarian is international.

Lord is a native of Lynn and was graduated with honors from the Lynn Classical high school in 1915. Following that he studied at Harvard, served in the World War, returned to Harvard and graduated in 1921. He worked in the Harvard library while a student and was made a staff member at his graduation.

Boston Daily Globe

TUESDAY, NOV 24, 1931

CONFIRMATION OF LORD'S APPOINTMENT

IOWA CITY, Ia., Nov. 23—The Daily Iowan, University of Iowa student newspaper, will say tomorrow that Milton E. Lord, director of University of Iowa libraries, has been appointed head of the Boston Public Library.

The student paper received a telegram from Mr. Lord tonight saying the announcement of his appointment will be made public late Tuesday morning.

THE BOSTON SUNDAY GLOBE
—NOVEMBER 22, 1931—

A LIBRARIAN BY ACCIDENT

33-Year-Old Director, Mentioned For Boston Place, Intended to Be an Engineer—But Things Have "Just Happened" To Shape His Career

MILTON LORD BELIEVES IN READING FOR PLEASURE

Special Dispatch to the Globe

IOWA CITY, Ia., Nov. 21—"It was only an accident," explained Milton E. Lord, youthful library director at the University of Iowa, "that made a librarian out of me when I was well on the road to becoming a salaried engineer."

The far-traveled Bay State man who is mentioned as successor to the late Charles F. D. Belden, director of the Boston Public Library, doesn't enjoy talking about himself, although he wants earnestly to oblige any who come to his desk with requests.

Mr. Lord speaks so matter of factly of the achievements and experiences which have crowded into his 33 years and extend from the plains of Iowa to more than a dozen European cities, that it is hard to believe that he is a "hiking fool" because of long tramps on which he set forth day or night, fair weather or rainy.

These hikes have become somewhat curtailed while he is serving in the tall corn State. Iowa's clay and black soil becomes sticky mud in rainy weather; hiking is a fair weather pastime only here.

Tennis and canoeing are also on his list. With a companion in France he canoed down the river from Orleans to Nantes, a distance of several hundred miles.

One of the monuments to Mr. Lord at the university here is a room designed purely for recreational reading, furnished with colorful over-stuffed furniture and stocked with novels as well as classics. Perhaps his lack of academic library training makes him a believer in reading for enjoyment first of all.

Mrs. Lord was Rosamund Lane. Their son Peter is 9 years old.

had ample opportunity to put his technical knowledge into practice. "It was then I realized I didn't care for a scientific career, and at the end of the war was resolved that the engineering profession was not for me," he relates.

Likes Books—and Outdoors

Mr. Lord completed his military service in March, 1919, and could not re-enter Harvard until the beginning of the Summer term. During the interim he accepted a position in the Harvard library, which he said appealed to him only indirectly because he liked books.

The appeal grew, however, and when William Coldidge Lane, Harvard librarian and Mr. Lord's father-in-law, suggested that he continue his library training along with his undergraduate studies he eagerly accepted. His later career was sketched in the Boston Globe Nov. 13.

As is attested by his complexion and rugged health, the librarian is a lover of the out-of-doors as well as books. While attending Harvard, he was dubbed by friends "the hiking fool" because of long tramps on which he set forth day or night, fair weather or rainy.

These hikes have become somewhat curtailed while he is serving in the tall corn State. Iowa's clay and black soil becomes sticky mud in rainy weather; hiking is a fair weather pastime only here.

Tennis and canoeing are also on his list. With a companion in France he canoed down the river from Orleans to Nantes, a distance of several hundred miles.

One of the monuments to Mr. Lord at the university here is a room designed purely for recreational reading, furnished with colorful over-stuffed furniture and stocked with novels as well as classics. Perhaps his lack of academic library training makes him a believer in reading for enjoyment first of all.

Mrs. Lord was Rosamund Lane. Their son Peter is 9 years old.

BOSTON LIBRARY HAS NEW CHIEF

Milton Edward Lord Chosen to Succeed the Late
C. F. Belden

AT 33, IS YOUNGEST EVER TO FILL POST

Milton Edward Lord, former Harvard student and present director of the University of Iowa library, has been chosen to succeed the late Charles F. D. Belden as director of the Boston Public Library.

The following statement on the appointment was issued last night by Louis E. Kirstein, president of the trustees of the library:

"With the approval of his honor the mayor, the trustees of the Boston Public Library have chosen Milton Edward Lord as director to succeed the late Charles F. D. Belden. The University of Iowa, where Mr. Lord is librarian, has released him at the request of the trustees, and he will take charge in January, at the end of the present semester.

Mr. Lord had been tentatively selected by the trustees and Mr. Belden as assistant librarian. The untimely death of Mr. Belden came just before the announcement of the appointment was to be made. Mr. Lord is 33. He is a native of Lynn, a graduate of Harvard and was a second lieutenant in the world war. He has had experience in library work both in this country and abroad where he did work at the American Academy and the Vatican library. He comes highly recommended. He was chosen after careful consideration of applications from many other candidates.

The Boston Library being one of the greatest in the world, the trustees were especially anxious to obtain somebody with a liberal education, practical knowledge of library administration, and wide experience. Mr. Lord seems to the trustees to have all these qualifications.

Lord is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William D. Lord of 35 Burrill street, Lynn. He prepared for Harvard at Lynn Classical where he was manager of the track team and valedictorian of the senior class.

Entering college in 1915, he found his course interrupted by the war. When he returned in 1919, he was given a job in the Harvard Library by William C. Lane, university librarian. After his graduation in 1921, this part time job became a full time and Lord remained until 1925. Part of that time he was librarian at the Harvard Union.

In 1928 Lord married Rosamond Lane, daughter of the late librarian. They have one son, Peter. It was the expected arrival of this child that brought the Lord's home from Italy, where the young librarian reorganized the library of the American Academy at Rome and assisted in the recataloguing of the Vatican library, following a year of study in the Sorbonne and the Ecole des Sciences Politiques at Paris. During their stay abroad, the Lord's traveled extensively, returning to this country that their boy might be born on American soil and also that they might be near Mr. Lane in his last illness.

In his brief experience at Iowa City, Lord has directed the various libraries of the State University, comprising over a quarter million volumes, and there has enhanced his reputation for executive capacity.

The appointment of Milton Lord as head of the Boston library at the age of 33 makes him the youngest man ever to direct this organization, which is second only to that of New York city in this country.

THE LIBRARIAN

ZOLTAN HARASZTI devotes the leading article of More Books, the bulletin of the Boston Public Library, to an obituary of Charles F. D. Belden, its beloved director. With uncanny skill the editor of the bulletin has caught the very flavor of Mr. Belden's personality. "There was," he writes, "an appealing quality in the man, the effect of which hardly any one who knew him could escape. Courteous and gentle to every one, he was shy and sensitive. His work required action, and no one was more conscientious in the duties of his office. Yet there remained in him a delicate touch, an elusive feeling, the softness of those to whom the material circumstances of life appear always a bit alien. One was aware in him of a fine spirit, of a rare distinction in his personality. It was this quality, above all else, inspired devotion and loyalty toward him."

A delightful appreciation of More Books, from a British library journal, The Librarian, is reprinted under Library Notes of the present issue of the Boston Public Library Bulletin. "I know nothing about Boston," the writer states, "except what I learn from Sinclair's novel on the Sacco-Vanzetti case, and the Boston bulletin gives me a new respect for that city. Its decorous sage-green cover gives a promise of its contents. One notices a long article on eighteenth century tracts with respect; one glances at a review of ten books, including Tawney's 'Equality' and Johnson's 'Jane Austen' with awe; and one fetches up against the long list of additions to a state of prostration. If this is an index to Boston's reading, I thought, then truly can Boston lay claim to be the most cultured city in the United States. Impelled by curiosity to know more about Boston, I looked up statistics. One hundred and fifty thousand people out of a population of three-quarters of a million are not really Boston. But how learned, how full of wisdom must be those 150,000."

The Treasure Room of the Boston Public Library now displays a comprehensive collection of the works of Edgar Allan Poe and books about him. He died eighty-two years ago in a Baltimore Hospital. In Sacheverell Sitwell's "All Summer in a Day," there is a curious account of Poe's death. October 6, 1849, the day before Poe's death, was a cold day for Baltimore. It seems, and Poe was set upon by a gang of toughs, beaten and dragged to the police at intervals all day that some local candidate might win an unimportant office. The story may be apocryphal, of course, but the idea of a great mind lost forever in order that some unimportant politician should win some trivial office is worthy of Poe's own fantastic pen.

The B. P. L. is rich in autograph letters and letters to Poe from the "literati" of the period. These letters are part of the collection of Rufus W. Griswold, Poe's first biographer, given to the library by his widow. Subsequent, and less bitter, biographers of the great critic and poet have used this material to good advantage.

At a sale of the Jerome Kern library two years ago a letter of Poe was sold for $19,500. The Boston Public Library has nineteen autograph letters of the poet. Some of these are brief, others occupy four closely written pages.

Most important from a bibliographical point of view is a large folio volume in brown covers, with the title-page English Notes, for extensive circulation by Quarles Quikens, Esq., Boston, Daily Mail Office, 1842. It is an answer to Charles Dickens's "American Notes," published in the same year, and is attributed to Poe. This pamphlet, sixteen pages in all, is extremely rare today. One may see the New York and London first editions of "Arthur Gordon Pym" (1838) and "Tales of the Grotesque and Arabesque" (Philadelphia, 1839). The library is not fortunate enough to possess a first edition of "Tamerlane," that rare first effort of Poe, published in Boston in 1827, of which only a few copies are extant. This little booklet, containing the poet's juvenile pieces, and printed by an obscure printer's apprentice, is one of the most expensive books in the English language. A reprint, with fac-similes of the outside pages, may be seen in the exhibit.

"The greater part of the Poems," Poe wrote in the Preface, "were written when the author had not completed his fourteenth year. He is conscious that in this there are many faults, but he has been too fond of his early productions to amend them in his old age. Poe was at that time eighteen years old. The earliest piece by Poe in the possession of the library, now on exhibition, is the poem, "First of May." Written in 1829, it was printed in the Atlantic Souvenir for 1830. Another fascinating item is the Broadway Journal, for Feb. 8, 1845, which contains the first printing of "The Raven."

Programs have already been arranged for the midwinter meeting of the Massachusetts Library Club to be held in Boston, January 15. Members will meet at the auditorium of the Boston Public Library for the morning session, which will begin with a business meeting at ten o'clock. At ten-fifteen there will be a discussion of adult books of the season. Richard G. Hensley, assistant to the director, Boston Public Library, will read a paper on the important new reference books. Noteworthy non-fiction will be described by Harland A. Carpenter, librarian of the Brockton Public Library. Ralf P. Emerson, in charge of the Salem Public Library will give his views on the same subject. At two-thirty, Charles S. Olcott will give an illustrated lecture on High Grade Reading for Children.

The evening session will be held at the University Club. During dinner, which begins at 6.30, Prof. Claude Moore Fuess of Phillips Academy, Andover, author of many important biographies, will discuss the trend of modern biography. Tickets for the dinner are $2 each. Reservations for the dinner should be made by check, money order or cash, must be made before noon of Jan. 9, to Louis Felix Ranlett, Boston Public Library. Tickets will be mailed out only if requested. Otherwise they will be held in the member's name. Checks and money orders should be made payable to the Massachusetts Library Club, Inc.

DAILY RECORD,
November 25, 1931

HARVARD GRAD NAMED TO HEAD HUB LIBRARY

The youngest man ever to head the Boston library system, Milton E. Lord, 33, was appointed yesterday by Mayor Curley to be director of the Public Library, filling the vacancy created by the death recently of Charles F. D. Belden. Lord is now head of Iowa University library, and spent years in Rome cataloguing the Vatican library.

Lord is a native of Lynn, graduate of Harvard, 1921, and a World War veteran. In Rome he served as librarian of the American Academy, an intellectual center for American scholars in Italy. He also served for a time in Harvard's library.

The new director is married and has a son. At Iowa City he has directed the several libraries of the State University, comprising some 300,000 volumes. He has a reputation for executive capacity, and has studied in several foreign universities.

Boston Daily Globe

WEDNESDAY, NOV 25, 1931

LORD NEW DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC LIBRARY

Harvard Graduate, Native of Lynn Appointed

Milton Edward Lord, 33, director of the University of Iowa Library, a native of Lynn and a graduate of Har-

MILTON E. LORD
Appointed Director of Boston Public Library

vard, has been appointed director of the Boston Public Library to succeed the late Charles F. D. Belden.

He is the youngest man ever to head the Boston Public Library, which is rated second only to the New York Library in this country.

Mayor Curley yesterday approved the appointment of Mr. Lord, which was made by the trustees of the library. For some time, the trustees considered Mr. Lord for the post of assistant director of the library, vacant since the death of Frank H. Chase, and when Mr. Belden died, the trustees had become so convinced that he was a real find that they immediately advanced him to consideration for the position of director. The Mayor concurred with them.

The new director was born in Lynn, June 12, 1898, and attended the schools of that city. He was graduated from Lynn Classical High with honors and he entered Harvard in 1914, fully resolved to be an engineer. During the World War he served as a 2d lieutenant in the artillery.

On his return from service in 1919, he secured a part time position in the Harvard Library under the late William C. Lane and, on his graduation in 1921, he was given a full-time position. A few years later he married Mr. Lane's daughter.

Worked in Rome

He travelled extensively and studied in foreign universities and in 1925 he was appointed to reorganize the library of the American Academy at Rome, recognized as the American center for the development of scholarship in the fine arts, archeology, history and classical studies. For a period, he was engaged in catalogue work at the Vatican Library.

Mr. Lord has many friends among the librarians of the world, including Herbert Putnam, distinguished librarian of the Library of Congress. He is enthusiastic about his work and, as he never went to a library school, stoutly declares that he "worked with men who represented the complete history of the present library system and it was invaluable experience to me."

Although he is a lover of books, Mr. Lord is a lover of outdoors as well. While attending Harvard he was dubbed by his friends as "the hiking fool" because of his long tramps on which he set forth day or night, fair weather or rain. Tennis and canoeing are also favorite athletic diversions.

Last night Pres Louis E. Kirstein of the board of trustees of the Boston Public Library issued the following statement:

Trustees' Statement

"With the approval of His Honor the Mayor, the trustees of the Boston Public Library have chosen Milton Edward Lord as director to succeed the late Charles F. D. Belden. The University of Iowa, where he is librarian, has released him at the urgent request of the trustees, and he will take charge in January, at the end of the present semester.

"Mr. Lord had been tentatively selected by the trustees and Mr. Belden as assistant librarian. The untimely death of Mr. Belden came just before the announcement of the appointment was to be made.

"Mr. Lord is 33. He is a native of Lynn, a graduate of Harvard, and was a second lieutenant in the World War. He has had experience in library work both in this country and abroad, where he did work at the American Academy and the Vatican library. He comes highly recommended. He was chosen after careful consideration of applications from many other candidates.

"The Boston Library being one of the greatest in the world, the trustees were especially anxious to obtain somebody with a liberal education, practical knowledge of library administration and wide experience. Mr. Lord seems to the trustees to have all these qualifications."

Mr. Lord's father and mother are Mr. and Mrs. William D. Lord, 35 Burrill st., Lynn. He has always considered this his permanent address.

HIGH TRIBUTE TO KIRSTEIN

Boston Post-Jau. 1-1932
Made Honorary Member of Zeta Beta Tau

Louis E. Kirstein, Boston merchant and philanthropist, was initiated into honorary membership of Zeta Beta Tau, oldest and largest Jewish college fraternity, at the final session of the organization's 33d annual convention, held yesterday afternoon, at the Hotel Statler.

The election of Mr. Kirstein to Zeta Beta Tau was sanctioned by the supreme council of the fraternity, headed by Judge William S. Evans, on his return as a national figure and one of America's greatest Jewish leaders. It is the first time in 15 years, since the initiation of the late Louis E. Marshall, that this honor has been awarded.

Mr. Kirstein will become a member of the New England Graduate Club and will be formally welcomed into the fraternity at a banquet to be held under the auspices of this chapter the latter part of January.

The convention came to a close with the annual New Year's Eve ball, held from 11 o'clock, last evening, until sunrise, this morning, in the Imperial Ball Room of the Hotel Statler.

The Boston Post

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 25, 1931

LORD NEW LIBRARY DIRECTOR

Harvard Graduate of 33 Gets Big Boston Job

MILTON E. LORD
Appointed director of the Boston Public Library.

Appointment of Milton E. Lord, 33-year-old Harvard graduate and former cataloguer of the Vatican Library at Rome, to succeed the late Charles F. D. Belden as director of the Boston Public Library at a salary of $7500 a year, was approved last night by Mayor Curley.

After signing the recommendation which was made by the library trustees, the Mayor complimented Lord as the youngest director to be selected for the important post here and the latter left immediately for the Middle West to take up his work as director of the University of Iowa library.

With his baby son and his wife, who was Miss Rosamond Lane, daughter of the late William C. Lane, director of the Harvard University library, Director Lord will return to Boston and take over his new duties without delay. Among the first to be notified of his formal appointment were his parents, Mr. and Mrs. William D. Lord of 35 Burrill street, Lynn, which he has maintained as his permanent mailing address in all his extensive travels.

Has Thorough Training

He was graduated from the Lynn Classical High School in 1915 and from Harvard in 1921, his college career at Cambridge having been interrupted by the war. Beginning in 1923 he spent a year in study at the Sorbonne and the Ecole des Sciences Politiques at Paris.

Returning to complete his college course at Harvard following the war, he first became interested in library work in 1923, when he applied to Charles A. Bolton, librarian of the Boston Athenaeum, for part-time service.

The latter referred him to Librarian Lane at Harvard's Widener Memorial Library, where commenced young Lord's wedding to library service as well as the Harvard librarian's daughter.

Filled Important Posts

For five years he served in the Harvard libraries, learning the intimate details of the work and winning the post of director of the Harvard Union Library.

After his year of study at the University of Paris, he went to Rome on an appointment as librarian of the American Academy, an intellectual center for American scholars in Italy. There he became intimate with the officials of the Rockefeller Foundation and the Vatican Library, and was selected to assist in recataloguing the famous Vatican Library.

He returned to Cambridge from Rome so that his son, Peter, might be born on American soil and also to be with him father-in-law in the last illness of the late Harvard librarian. Two years ago he was offered the post of director of the University of Iowa libraries, and following the death of Mr. Lane he accepted it. Distance has not prevented him from making several trips to visit Iowa City during the past year to visit relatives and friends here at Boston, Lynn and Cambridge.

Fully Qualified for Post

Louis M. Kirstein, president of the trustees of the library, issued a statement last night in which he disclosed that Lord had been tentatively selected by the trustees to be assistant librarian, prior to the death of Director Belden. This had Mr. Belden's approval, he said.

"The untimely death of Mr. Belden came just before the announcement of the appointment was to be made," Mr. Kirstein stated.

In commenting on Lord's appointment as director, Mr. Kirstein said: "The Boston Library being one of the greatest in the world, the trustees were especially anxious to obtain somebody with a liberal education, practical knowledge of library administration, and wide experience. Mr. Lord seems to the trustees to have all these qualifications."

Boston Transcript

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 3, 1931

Library Trustees Name Examining Committee

Trustees of the Boston Public Library have appointed an examining committee composed of the following named:

J. A. Lowell, Blake, Merle Colby, Arthur H. Cole, Mrs. Frank D. Comerford, Allen Curtis, Charles P. Curtis, Jr., Frederic H. Curtis, Carl Drayfus, Miss Susan J. Ginn, Henry Lewis Johnson, Rabbi Harry Levi, Melville D. Limine, James P. Logan, George R. Nuttall, Mrs. Edward L. Logan, Mrs. George O. Pengra, Mrs. Elizabeth W. Perkins, Mrs. Edward M. Pickman, Robert Proctor, Dr. David D. Scannell, Mrs. Arthur Shurcliff, Rev. William M. Stinson, S. J., Charles H. Thurber, Mrs. Fiske Warren, Mrs. Frederick Winslow and Mrs. Eva Whitling White.

THE BOSTON HERALD

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1931

ROSENBAACH AND B. P. L.

The remarkable collection of rare and beautiful books, both ancient and modern, which A. S. W. Rosenbach has just placed on exhibit at his galleries in Philadelphia, causes the loyal Bostonian to wonder whether his own library has anything to rival it. Dr. Rosenbach values his collection at $3,500,000, although he would hardly expect to obtain that amount at one fell swoop. Book values, like the securities on the stock exchange, are subject to many strange and intangible influences. But if the Boston Public Library should, for some highly regrettable reason, decide to liquidate suddenly, it could probably do as well as the Philadelphia connoisseur, if not a great deal better.

In the matter of the fifteenth century incunabula, Dr. Rosenbach has, to be honest, many more startling and costly items. For instance, he lists the Catholicon, printed by Johannes Gutenberg in 1460, and The Game and Plays of Chess, one of the first books printed by William Caxton. The Boston Library, although it has a good working collection of books done in the early days of the printing press and ample for the needs of the average student, owns nothing to match such extremely rare items. Nor has it any "block books," which were really picture books printed from wood cuts before the invention of movable and cast type.

But in regard to Americana, Shakesperiana, and early Spanish works, the Boston collection seems to have the edge. It possesses such highly valuable items as the Bay Psalm Book, printed at Cambridge in 1640 (there are ten copies of the first edition extant, of which the Boston Library has two and the British Museum has none); John Eliot's Indian Bible, printed in Cambridge in 1661-63 (Dr. Rosenbach's copy is perhaps slightly more valuable because it once belonged to Charles II); a complete set of Eliot's Indian tracts, eleven pamphlets printed in London between 1643 and 1673; Columbus's letter "About the Islands of India," printed in Rome in 1493; and John Winthrop's "The Humble Request," a farewell written aboard the Arbella and printed in London in 1630. These are some of the highlights in a solid collection of early Americana.

In the earliest publications of Shakespeare's plays, the Boston Library is notably strong. It owns a first folio of 1623, published seven years after the poet's death and containing all his plays, and also the other important folios of the seventeenth century. Besides these, it possesses forty-eight quartos, including the first editions of "Much Ado About Nothing," "Midsummer Night's Dream," "Othello," and "The Taming of the Shrew." Thanks to the enterprise of George Ticknor, who left his extraordinarily complete Spanish collection to the library, there are original editions of the first half of Cervantes's "Don Quixote," printed in Madrid in 1605, and of the second half, printed in 1615; also the entire manuscript of one of Lope de Vega's known plays, written in 1631.

Among the library's more recent and more modern accessions is a first edition (1719) of Defoe's Robinson Crusoe, and nineteen autographed letters of Edgar Allan Poe. Nearly all of Boston's most precious books were left or given by citizens who appreciated their increasing value and wished to make them available to scholars. A few it has been able to purchase out of its modest funds. But the library can hardly compete with collectors like Dr. Rosenbach who are able to pay many thousands for one item. The future standing of the institution in this field must therefore depend on the thoughtfulness and generosity of Boston bibliophiles.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, JANUARY 12, 1932

Appalachian Club Member to Give Public Library Lecture

The lecture on "Climbing Mt. Bona, Alaska," scheduled to be given by Perriss Moore on Thursday, in the Lecture Hall of the Boston Public Library, under the auspices of the Field and Forest Club has been cancelled.

In its place, "Up the Alps, on Foot and on Skis," will be given by Mirlant E. O'Brien, a member of the Appalachian Mountain Club.

THE BOSTON GLOBE—TUESDAY, DECEMBER 8, 1931

FIRST AMERICAN-BUILT PIANO AT PUBLIC LIBRARY

MISS KATHLEEN WOODWORTH AND THE FIRST PIANO BUILT IN AMERICA

Anybody who ever sat on a piano stool, counting and fumbling at the keys, his feet on a salt box because his legs were so short, and his eye on the clock to miss no second of escape at the end of practice hour, will get a reminiscent pang out of visiting an extremely important and interesting collection which has just been placed on exhibition in the music room of the Boston Public Library.

America is old enough now to have a history and to have real antiques. And the center of this exhibition is the first piano ever built in this country.

The exhibition has been arranged by Mrs. Anne Eagleston Kydd of Lexington and she has brought together a good many "firsts," all of them connected with old American "popular" music.

The cut shows Miss Kathleen Woodworth of the library staff at the piano—whose age is shown by the curious warping up of the end keys and whose quality is plainly demonstrated by the way the ivory has stayed on those

In Miss Woodworth's hand is one of the first songs printed by the firm of von Hagen, Boston's first regular song publisher. On the music desk, at the left, is a photostat of the first orchestral score published in the United States. It is "The Death Song of an Indian Chief," composed in 1791 by the Boston organist, Hans Gram. Interestingly enough it contains the first example of a composer's use of an Indian theme—the first recording for preservation of the music of the aborigines—a tom-tom motif. It has been a popular theme with composers ever since.

Beside the photostat is another interesting piece of music—the first copyrighted American song. It is "The Hunter's Horn," by T. Phillips, and is dated 1819.

"EVERY DAY MOVIES" By Denys Wortman

MOEY DICK AND THE DUKE
"It's the Art Museum, Duke, and I hear it's just as good a place to loaf as the library."

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT—DECEMBER 9, 1931

One of the longest forward steps in progress of government of, by, and for the people was taken in Washington last week by the President's "Conference on Home Building and Home Ownership." Such a government is only possible when the individuals of a nation become educated to think about what they want, why they want it and how it is to be obtained.

President Hoover's outstanding and impressive contribution to American democracy has been the introduction of the conference method of dealing with affairs vital to the welfare of the American people. His method has been, first, to state the problem, second, to send specialists to work gathering data on the subject it covers, and third, to call together representatives from different parts of the country to consider the results presented by these fact-finding committees.

The conference, December second to fifth, brought together thousands of people from every State in the Union to think together for three days on the subject of the house as a "home" not as a place where one stops to rest and to refresh.

Thirty-two "tentative" reports have been printed in pamphlet form. These reports, as librarians say, "have a popular appeal." Members of the general public will read, enjoy and understand them and as a result they will begin planning the building of new homes or the remodeling of old ones.

These pamphlets, probably the only complete set available for general use in Boston, may be seen at the Kistler Branch of the Boston Public Library. The subjects are as follows:

City planning and zoning, types of dwellings, construction of component, design, housing, and the community, subdivision layout, kitchens and other work centers, large scale operations, construction, Negro housing, organization programs, detached areas and shanty, house-build management, taxation, remodeling, remodeling and home, outdoor for home, home remodeling and decoration, industrial, decentralization and housing, landscape, planning, and planning, finance, farm and village housing, business and housing, home-making, housing and family life, farm and village housing, home ownership and housing, home information services, standards and objectives, technological development, location and administration, research, education and service.

The Library Column will cooperate with this conference by presenting from time to time lists of books of interest to prospective home owners, all of which may be borrowed from their local public libraries.

The annual Christmas exhibit of books of Jewish interest published during the current year will be held at the West End Branch Library, 131 Cambridge Street, Boston, from Dec. 1 to Dec. 18, 1931. The exhibit is cordially invited.

THE LIBRARY JOURNAL

January 1, 1932

Charles F. D. Belden

AT A MEETING of the Trustees of the Public Library of the City of Boston held on December 4, 1931, the following resolution was adopted to be spread upon the records:

It was given to Charles F. D. Belden to direct the Public Library of the City of Boston for fourteen years. Wisely and well he used the opportunity. Assuming office with a definite and proper conception of an institution whose privilege it is to bring knowledge and pleasure, recreation and stimulus to a great and expanding community, he was fortunate enough to watch the steady fulfillment of his hopes. Always in sympathy with scholarship, he systematically increased the treasures of the library, and expanded the facilities for their use, but never lost sight of his fundamental purpose of providing for all the people the means of self-enlightenment and of enlarging self-respect. Nor did he take the narrow view of a professional educator, but understood that the needs of a community are infinite, that people require entertainment and distraction as well as information and knowledge. He realized that as it is the privilege of the people to go to the library, so it is the duty of the library to go to the people, and the inauguration of a policy of persistent building and maintaining in high efficiency branch libraries throughout the city met with his energetic support. We are grateful for the length of his service. We are proud of the loyalty which he inspired throughout the great body of Library employees, and we recall with satisfaction how far beyond the limits of his city he was able to extend the influence of his principles, and the contagion of his enthusiasm. Charles Belden was an ornament to his profession, and a faithful steward of his trust. We, the Trustees, who have watched the culmination of the work to which he gave his life, are willing witnesses to his happy and successful career, and desire to spread upon the permanent record of our Library's history this appreciation of a firm friend, a good citizen, and a great Librarian.

THE RECENT choice of Milton E. Lord for the headship of the Boston Public Library was the outstanding event of the year in library appointments. Mr. Settle's vacant chair at Louisville was filled by the transfer of Harold F. Brigham from Nashville, his place in turn being taken by F. K. W. Drury, resigning from his post with A. L. A. headquarters. Charlotte Templeton, after excellent work at Greenville, South Carolina, went to Atlanta University. John A. Lowe, whose wide experience has been so useful in Brooklyn for the past twelve years as assistant librarian there, becomes librarian at Rochester and will have before him the interesting task of reorganization and a new library building, while Mr. Yust, instead of retiring from the profession, goes to the pleasant atmosphere of Winter Park in the less onerous post of librarian at Rollins College. Yale University has taken Charles Rush, who made his mark in Indianapolis and since then at Teachers College, to be its associate librarian with a great future opening before him. Elinor Witmer takes his place at Teachers College. Asa Don Dickinson retires from the University of Pennsylvania to become librarian of the new Brooklyn College. Frances Simpson of the University of Illinois Library School retired from the profession, to its loss. In England many changes are in prospect. The veteran L. Stanley Jast retired at the close of the year from the Manchester position, unfortunately before the building of the new library edifice which he has had in plan.

October 1931

MASSACHUSETTS LIBRARY CLUB BULLETIN

57

In Memory of

CHARLES FRANCIS DORR BELDEN

1870-1931

DIRECTOR, BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY, 1917-1931
LIBRARIAN, MASSACHUSETTS STATE LIBRARY, 1909-1917
LIBRARIAN, SOCIAL LAW LIBRARY, BOSTON, 1908-1909
ASSISTANT LIBRARIAN, HARVARD LAW LIBRARY, 1902-1908
SECRETARY OF THE LAW FACULTY, HARVARD LAW SCHOOL, 1899-1902
CHAIRMAN, MASS. BOARD OF FREE PUBLIC LIBRARY COMMISSIONERS, 1909-1931
PRESIDENT, AMERICAN LIBRARY ASSOCIATION, 1925-1926
PRESIDENT, MASSACHUSETTS LIBRARY CLUB, 1911-1913
VICE-PRESIDENT, MASSACHUSETTS LIBRARY ART CLUB
PRESIDENT, MASSACHUSETTS LIBRARY AID ASSOCIATION
AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE LIBRARY ASSOCIATION
CHINESE LIBRARY ASSOCIATION
CZECHO-SLOVAK LIBRARY ASSOCIATION
HONORARY FELLOW, THE LIBRARY ASSOCIATION (OF GREAT BRITAIN), 1931
SPECIAL LIBRARIES ASSOCIATION
SWISS LIBRARY ASSOCIATION
AMERICAN LIBRARY INSTITUTE
LECTURER IN SIMMONS COLLEGE SCHOOL OF LIBRARY SCIENCE, 1912-1918 MASSACHUSETTS BAR ASSOCIATION
BAR OF NEW YORK STATE
CAVALIERE OF THE ORDER OF THE CROWN OF ITALY
DANTE MEDAL: CITY OF RAVENNA, 1923; CASA DANTE, ROME, 1924
HARVARD UNIVERSITY, LL.B., A.M. (HON.)

A librarian who has ably directed the Boston Public Library both for the advancement of learning and the benefit of the people.—A. Lawrence Lowell, President of Harvard University, in presenting honorary degree of Master of Arts, June, 1926.

BOSTON UNIVERSITY, LITT.D. (HON.)

World famous librarian, Director of the Boston Public Library; recipient of foreign medals in recognition of service to learning; neighbor, with all the best connotations of the term, to Boston University.—Daniel Marsh, President of Boston University, in presenting honorary degree of Doctor of Letters, June, 1930.

He gave to the State and to the City the best that was in him. He became a national character in the library world, and on more than one occasion represented American librarians in Europe with distinction. The value of his work will last, and the memory of his personal charm and gracious bearing will be prized by his countless friends.—CHARLES K. BOLTON.

THE BOSTON HERALD

MONDAY, JANUARY 18, 1932

CITY SALARIES

This is no time for adjusting the real or fancied grievances of policemen, firemen or any other city employees who believe that they are underpaid. They are lucky to have jobs, and especially so to be on full time, with the protecting arm of civil service shielding them. They should regard themselves as favorites of fortune if their pay continues at the present levels.

The city is spending about $7,000,000 a year to relieve actual want. A group of citizens is to begin a campaign to collect $3,000,000 more. Business concerns, from the largest manufacturers and bankers, to the smallest shopkeepers, have reduced wages and salaries. It is not at all probable that the nation-wide storm of economy which is now raging will leave the public servants undisturbed indefinitely. They are ill-advised in not bending to the storm.

The members of the Boston city council will be the most likely victims of public vengeance if they vote to raise salaries at this time, or to allow the sliding scale arrangements to proceed as if the treasury were overflowing. The councilmen chance to stand pretty well with the public just now. On a referendum vote, they received an increase from $1500 to $2000 a short time ago. If they should vote to go ahead with the proposals outlined in The Herald yesterday, they will put the voters in a mood not only to oppose them for re-election, but to strip them of the additional $500.

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 30, 1931

THE LIBRARIAN

Announcement is made from the Boston Public Library that a special series of free information addresses and lectures relating to local aspects of the George Washington Bicentennial of the coming year will be given in the lecture hall of the central library, Copley square, Boston, on Monday evenings beginning the first week in January and continuing through April. This special service has been arranged by the city of Boston George Washington Bicentennial Committee. Each lecture will begin at eight o'clock. Doors will be open two hours earlier and will be closed if the seating capacity is reached before the starting time. No tickets are required. A complete list of the subjects, speakers and dates may be had by application to the information bureau of the central library or from the branch libraries, or by mail request to the Boston Bicentennial Committee at Room 46, City Hall.

The January events are as follows: Monday evening, Jan. 4, "George Washington as a Playgoer," by Frank Chouteau Brown, member of the Boston committee. Monday evening, Jan. 18, "Washington and the Constitution," by Thomas A. Mullen, chairman of the Boston committee, dealing especially with the important part of Massachusetts in the ratification of the first constitution of the nation. Monday evening, Jan. 25, "Music of Washington's Day," a specially arranged program provided by the New England Conservatory of Music. Wallace Goodrich, director, with a talk illustrated by vocal and instrument selections.

In February there will also be a regular library lecture on Sunday afternoon, the 14th, by Mr. Brown on "George Washington: City Planner and Architect." The Monday evening February subjects are to be "George Washington and the Men of Boston," by Professor Robert E. Rogers of Massachusetts Institute of Technology; "General Washington and Siege of Boston," by Professor John C. S. Andrew of Boston University. In March, on Monday evenings, the subjects and speakers will be "Washington and France," by Professor Andre Morize of Harvard University; "Historic Roxbury Houses," by Walter R. Meigs, president of Roxbury Historical Society. April subjects will deal with Washington in literature and art by John E. Pember of the Boston Sunday Herald, marking of historic sites by Judge Thomas H. Dowd, and women of Washington's time by Miss Lotta A. Clark. There will be also, on a date not yet announced, a special occasion devoted to the military career of Washington.

Boston Daily Globe

WEDNESDAY, JAN 20, 1932

MILTON E. LORD BECOMES LIBRARY DIRECTOR FEB 1

Milton E. Lord, appointed director of the Boston Public Library, succeeding Charles F. D. Belden, who died a few months ago, will assume his new duties Feb. 1.

At a meeting of the trustees of the library Mr. Lord's appointment was confirmed to become effective on Jan. 31 of this year. Mr. Lord was appointed early last month and has since remained at his post as director of the University Library of the University of Iowa, a place he has held since 1930, completing his duties preparatory to coming to Boston.

Mr. Lord was born in Lynn in 1868, and was graduated from Harvard in 1921.

The Boston Post

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 20, 1932

In the lecture hall of the Boston Public Library on Thursday evening at 8 o'clock, W. Stephens Thomas will speak on "Costa Rica; its jungles and volcanoes." The talk will be illustrated.

This lecture will be about the 14th, since the season began Oct. 1, dealing with visits to strange places. They are usually illustrated either by motion pictures or stereopticon views. Admission is free.

Sunday afternoon in the lecture hall of the library, Lisa and Alda Paget will give a song recital, and Sunday evening the South Mountain String Quartet will give a concert of chamber music. Both are free.

BOSTON GLOBE—DECEMBER 30, 1931

MAGINNIS' SCULPTURE TALK DRAWS CROWD

Architect Declares Examples of Art in Boston Are Among World's Finest—Cites Work of Ball, St Gaudens, Shaw and Others

Charles D. Maginnis, eminent architect, and chairman of the Boston Art Commission, gave an illustrated lecture last evening on "Boston Sculpture," as exemplified in the parks and public places of the city, in the Boston Architectural Club on Somerset st. last evening.

And whether it was due to the popularity of the speaker, or the subject, or both—the crowd was so great that it could not possibly be accommodated in the club. The lecture hall, the stairways and corridors were jammed with people and many could not gain admittance. It was free to the public. Mr. Maginnis said that Boston contains some of the finest examples of sculpture to be found in the United States and has also produced some of the foremost sculptors. He said the equestrian statue of Washington, by Thomas Ball, in the Public Garden, is one of the finest monuments of the kind in the world.

St Gaudens' Masterpiece

Another masterpiece is the monument to Robert Gould Shaw by Augustus St. Gaudens in front of the State House, on the edge of the Common. In fact, he believes that to be St. Gaudens' finest achievement.

Another monument which he considers Boston is very fortunate in having is the "Appeal to the Great Spirit" by Cyrus E. Dallin in front of the Museum of Fine Arts on Huntington av.

He considers Daniel Chester French's monument—"Death Staying the Hand of the Sculptor"—in Forest Hills Cemetery the foremost piece of mortuary sculpture in the country. He also ranked high the monument to John Boyle O'Reilly, by Daniel Chester French, in the Fenway.

Another fine monument by French is the "George White Memorial" on the Public Garden.

He considered the "Col. Cass" by Richard Brooks, on the Public Garden, the best single-figure statue in the city.

Another notable single-figure statue is that of Josiah Quincy, by Ball, in front of City Hall.

The monument to the "Soldiers and Sailors of the Civil War" by Martin Milmore on the Common he regarded as about the best that was done in the period after the Civil War. Another fine example of Milmore's work is the Civil War Monument on Winthrop sq., Charlestown.

Lauds "Minute Man"

Mr. Maginnis lauded the statue of Robert Burns by Henry Hudson Kilsen, in the Fenway; also his "Minute Man," at Lexington. Another fine single-figure statue he said was the Kosciuszko on the Public Garden by Mrs. Theo. Allen Ruggles Kilsen.

Others which he spoke favorably of were the "Bacchante" by MacMurrills in the Museum of Fine Arts and the "Sir Harry Vane" by the same sculptor in the entrance to the Boston Public Library. He also commented favorably on Ball's monument—"Lincoln and the Slave"—on Park sq. and the Col. Prescott statue by Greenough at Bunker Hill; also the statue to William Lloyd Garrison by Warner on Commonwealth av.

Mr. Maginnis traced the development of sculpture in the United States from the wood carvers of Colonial times. The first Boston sculptor of note was Horatio Greenough. Then came William Wetmore Story, Thomas Ball, Harriet Hosmer, Anne Whitney and Milmore. He regarded St. Gaudens as a Boston sculptor because of the interest the sculptor had in Boston. Cyrus E. Dallin has always—except for his boyhood in Utah—lived in Boston and worked here.

He believes Boston has a fine group of contemporary sculptors—both men and women—at the present time. And, although he has little sympathy with the work of the modernists as a whole, he believes that the movement will mean something of importance to sculpture—as it has to architecture.

THE LIBRARIAN

NEVER were Boston's branches more gayly and artistically decorated for the Christmas season than this year. Those who lack Christmas cheer at home will find it in the thirty-three branch libraries from Jeffries Point to Brighton, from Charlestown to West Roxbury. The Junior League has seen to it that each library has a tree, baskets of berries and everlasting flowers, and wreaths fragrant with the pungent odors of pine and fir forests.

The librarians and their assistants have constructed fireplaces containing real logs. Andirons are expensive, but a pair of Indian clubs painted black make an excellent substitute. The cribs are especially well set up. Mary, Joseph, the Babe, the oxen, the Wise Men and their camels, all are there, surrounded a good part of the time by hosts of adoring children.

At the City Point branch, where for many years until her death in 1929 Miss Alice Murphy, much beloved librarian, served the public, is a beautifully lettered poster bearing one of Miss Murphy's poems:

CHRISTMAS SPIRIT

Our hearts are waiting, Master dear!
The fires of love shine bright;
A world of sin-swept sanctuaries
Burns for Thee tonight!

Our hearts are aching, Master dear!
A hymn that angels know;
We see the glimmer of their wings
Amid the glistening snow!

Our hearts are waiting, Master dear!
No barred doors wilt Thou find;
Oh, we will hear Thy gentle knock
Above the winter's wind!

In the Mt. Pleasant Branch all the windows have candles made by children of the Samuel Mason School who consider it a rare privilege to serve the library in this way. The third grade pupils of the Albert Palmer School have also done their bit by making for the center of the room an old-fashioned lantern that Santa Claus himself might have been glad to have.

At the Parker Hill Branch, 1497 Tremont street, the Boys' Glee Club of the Mission Church High School, under the direction of Brother Dominic, will sing carols on the steps of the branch if the night is fine, in the lecture hall if it is stormy, at 8.30 on December 23.

The West End Branch has in the front yard two lighted Christmas trees. The interior of the fine old building is gay with ropes of green, bunches of holly and a fine large tree, in front of which is a plaster sketch of the Nativity, lent by John Evans. This piece was designed by Henry Vaughn for one of the niches in the pulpit for the Church of St. John the Divine.

If you have not already received one of the West End Branch's printed invitations, here is one for you.

You are cordially invited to visit at the foot of Beacon Hill corner of Cambridge and Lynde Streets
"CHRISTMAS EVE"
The branch will be specially decorated, and carols will be sung for an hour or more.

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1932

THE LIBRARIAN

Bibliophiles will welcome Mr. Zoltan Haraszti's eighth installment of the descriptive list of the incunabula in the Boston Library which serves as the leading article in More Books, the library bulletin. The fifteenth century books he describes have been placed on view in one of the show-cases in the Treasure Room, on the top floor of the Copley Square building.

Among the important volumes is Caesar's Commentaries (which high school students will not be able to contemplate without a shudder) printed by Antonius Zarusus at Milan in 1477. An interesting feature of the volume is that the pages are printed in solid block, without any indentation of paragraphs. At the beginning of each book space has been left for ornamental initials. Caesar's Commentaries—the word, as the military leader and historian used it means "memoirs." Mr. Haraszti explains—was first printed in Rome in 1469 by Pannartz and Sweynheym. The first Milan edition, to which the library's copy belongs, was the sixth edition of the work.

Also on display is a copy of Eusebius' "Chronicon," printed by Philippus de Lavagna, about 1476; two books on music by Gaffurius, "Theoricus musice," a second edition printed at Milan, in 1492, and the first edition of "Practica musice," printed at Milan in 1496. At the beginning of each of the four books which comprise the latter is a beautiful woodcut border. The title page is reproduced in More Books and the workmanship is skillful and lively. One may also see Mombrizio's "Sanctuarium seu vitae sanctorum." The printer of this is unknown and the book is believed to date from around 1479. Another important item is the works of Horace, printed by Antonio Miscomini, at Florence in 1482.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, JANUARY 23, 1932

Curley to Curtail City Phone Bills

Mayor Curley, in his campaign to cut down city expenditures, today moved to reduce the cost of telephone service incurred by city employees. The mayor sent to the police and other departments a letter announcing that from the beginning of the present year all city employees will be billed for telephone service "other than in city buildings."

The letter is as follows:

The telephone company has been notified to bill every individual in the employ of the city for telephone service other than in city buildings from Jan. 1, 1932, on.

Bills incurred for telephone service in the homes of city employees on and after Jan. 1, 1932, must be paid for by the individual using the same.

Respectfully,
JAMES M. CURLEY, Mayor

In the police department executive officers and others who have reason to be called on police business after business hours have had their additional telephone expenses paid by the city and the same has applied to other departments of the city service.

Boston Transcript

124 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

(Entered at the Post Office, Boston, Mass., as Second Class Mail Matter)

MONDAY, JANUARY 25, 1932

Familiar Beethoven With Rare D'Indy

SELDOM has a concert of chamber music been as profoundly satisfying as that presented in the Lecture Hall of the Boston Public Library last night. The quartet was assisted by Mr. Albert Sprague Coolidge, viola, and Miss Phyllis Kraeuter, cello. The program comprised the Beethoven quartet in A minor, Op. 132, and d'Indy's Sextet in B flat major, Op. 92, for two violins, two violas and two cellos.

Music lovers who crammed the lecture hall last night were again indebted to Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge for an hour of chamber music of a quality too infrequently heard in Boston. With all the resourcefulness at its command, the quartet invested this great Beethoven quartet with dignity and variety. Incisive rhythms, clean attacks and the well-built climaxes which have come to be associated with this group of players were again in evidence last night. Of the five movements, the "Canzona" revealed perhaps the greatest amount of musicianship, for in this movement, which is less obvious than the others, must the player draw a careful bow, lest the movement acquire an unpremeditated monotony.

Although the Beethoven was played in a manner to excite admiration, it is probably the d'Indy Sextet, played in memory of the composer (1851-1931) which will linger longest in the memory of those who heard it. In three movements, it is composed of surpassingly lovely thematic material, with the creative spark, seemingly, at white heat throughout. The first movement, "Entrée en Sonate," revealed the six musicians playing as one, with tones well matched, and individually completely submerged, except when the score demanded a solo instrument. The difficult "Divertissement" was played with disarming fleetness and finesse, yet one turns in retrospect to the truly superb "Theme, variations et finale" which was given an equally superb reading. With great effectiveness has the composer made use of muted strings; has set two violins and a viola playing cleverly devised figures against the figures allotted to the two cellos and a viola; has tossed about from one instrument to another the original theme in new and interesting guises. A theme and variation movement with never a dull moment. The performers were justly recalled by their enthusiastic audience. G. M. S.

To those who were looking for fresh experience, however, d'Indy's Sextet was the cynosure of attention and the principal source of delight. For this piece, Miss Phyllis Kraeuter and Mr. Albert Sprague Coolidge appeared as assisting musicians to complete the ensemble with an additional cello and viola, respectively. Through these musicians as interpreters, d'Indy then afforded one of the most pleasurable of recent experiences in the realm of chamber music. If formal beauty was desired, he disclosed it immediately in the opening movement. If delightful and infectious fancy, he deftly contrived it in the "Divertissement." If engrossing musical expression of infinite variety in instrumental color, of vital subject matter, compelling eloquence, characterful overtones, inexhaustible fertility in imaginative qualities, he wrote it into the entire closing movement. The six strings were, upon occasion, richly sonorous, but not one of them was unnecessary for the purpose desired, while each was put to individual and characteristic service after the modern manner; the cello, for example made characterful speech quite unlike that required of the classic string quartet; while more often than is commonly the case, the viola assumed a persuasive solo part. The entire work proffered variety in every division yet was homogeneous throughout. It gave much pleasure to the audience and inspired sincerely enthusiastic and prolonged applause. Such concerts as last evening make the general listener rejoice in the generosity of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge which makes them possible. N. M. J.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

MONDAY, JAN. 25, 1932

South Mountain Quartet

The South Mountain Quartet of Pittsfield—Messrs. Karl Kraeuter and Edwin Ideler, violins, Conrad Heid, viola, and William Willeke, cello—gave a concert in the Lecture Hall of the Boston Public Library last night. The quartet was assisted by Mr. Albert Sprague Coolidge, viola, and Miss Phyllis Kraeuter, cello. The program comprised the Beethoven quartet in A minor, Op. 132, and d'Indy's Sextet in B flat major, Op. 92, for two violins, two violas and two cellos.

Music lovers who crammed the lecture hall last night were again indebted to Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge for an hour of chamber music of a quality too infrequently heard in Boston. With all the resourcefulness at its command, the quartet invested this great Beethoven quartet with dignity and variety. Incisive rhythms, clean attacks and the well-built climaxes which have come to be associated with this group of players were again in evidence last night. Of the five movements, the "Canzona" revealed perhaps the greatest amount of musicianship, for in this movement, which is less obvious than the others, must the player draw a careful bow, lest the movement acquire an unpremeditated monotony.

Although the Beethoven was played in a manner to excite admiration, it is probably the d'Indy Sextet, played in memory of the composer (1851-1931) which will linger longest in the memory of those who heard it. In three movements, it is composed of surpassingly lovely thematic material, with the creative spark, seemingly, at white heat throughout. The first movement, "Entrée en Sonate," revealed the six musicians playing as one, with tones well matched, and individually completely submerged, except when the score demanded a solo instrument. The difficult "Divertissement" was played with disarming fleetness and finesse, yet one turns in retrospect to the truly superb "Theme, variations et finale" which was given an equally superb reading. With great effectiveness has the composer made use of muted strings; has set two violins and a viola playing cleverly devised figures against the figures allotted to the two cellos and a viola; has tossed about from one instrument to another the original theme in new and interesting guises. A theme and variation movement with never a dull moment. The performers were justly recalled by their enthusiastic audience. G. M. S.

Boston Transcript

THURSDAY, JANUARY 28, 1932

Rev. A. M. Rihbany to Talk on Syria

Rev. Abraham M. Rihbany, D. D., minister of the Church of the Disciples, is to give the fifth in a series of lectures in the Public Library Hall, Monday at 8 P. M., on "The Eastern Mind and Syria's Cultural Contribution."

The remaining lecture in the series, presented by the Inter-racial Citizens' Committee of Massachusetts, Mrs. William Lowell Putnam, chairman, will be: "Some Ukrainian Contributions to World Culture," by Emil Revuk with folk dances and folk songs, under the direction of Rev. Joseph Zefchivsky, on Monday, March 14 at 8 P. M.

Boston Sunday Globe

SUNDAY, JANUARY 17, 1932

BOOKS ON RELIGION AND BUGLE CALLS

Two Subjects Much in Demand at the Public Library—Music Another Quest

Napoleon's bugle calls, books about religion, and statistics of the cotton industry are now of absorbing interest to the persons who visit the Boston Public Library at Copley sq.

Since the beginning of the business depression, Richard G. Hensley, assistant to the director, says that religion has become the subject in which most people are interested. Hundreds of men and women come into the library for books which deal in a simple way with the history and problems of religions.

They ask, to an extent unusual in recent years, for biographies of churchmen. And one of the popular books is Gilbert Chesterton's, "Why I Am a Catholic."

Cotton Statistics Demanded

Another phase of the depression, as it affects the library, is the increased registration. People who bought books and borrowed them from lending libraries now turn to the free source and reconcile themselves to receiving best-sellers when the latter are no longer at the height of popularity.

Bugle calls and statistics are only two of the strange assortment of queries with which libraries are presented. The staff members of every department in the library spend a large part of their time searching for bits of information which people often want for the most trivial of reasons.

Men who would settle bets walk into the room of the Abbey paintings to verify their opinions. Contexts which are conducted by newspapers and business concerns and hordes running up the marble stairs for news that may result in a prize.

Furthermore, telephone calls are received at the information department for street addresses, names and occupations, and the members of classes at Harvard.

Musical Additions Daily

In the music room, where the Allen Brown collection is shelved, persons enter humming. They have heard a song on the radio the night before and, missing its title or composer, they gather a bar or two of the music to sing softly for identity's sake to R. G. Appel, head of the department, or his assistant.

Mr. Appel corks his head and listens as the applicant, abashed but determined, gives his audition. Sometimes he is able to place the tremolo notes and sends the person away with the score.

The music most in demand is still that of the older composers, particularly Bach and Beethoven. Perhaps the popularity of the works of these two men is due to the large number of students who come to the room.

The Italians, who are supposed to be overwhelmingly in favor of Puccini and other composers of their country, are of the younger generation and are as interested in the "Sacre du Printemps" as they are in "Carmen."

Milton E. Lord Assumes Charge as Library Head

Boston's New Director Youngest Ever to Take Important Post

BY HAROLD BENNISON
Meet the new director of Boston's library—a 33-year-old chap, whose blue eyes are keen, whose smile is infectious and who seems quite unconcerned about the fact that he is by far the youngest man ever appointed to such an important post.

There are few library posts in America whose importance is of the first water—Congressional Library, the New York Library, the Boston Library—and, well after, it becomes necessary to stop and think.

TAKES CHARGE

And this 33-year-old—who looks like your screen favorite—today took charge of the Boston library with its 1,500,000 volumes, and its long list of employees.

His name? Milton Edward Lord. Born in Lynn, educated in Lynn Classical high school, Harvard '19, Harvard graduate school (after he had been mustered out of service as a lieutenant of artillery) then to the Ecole des Sciences Politiques, in Paris.

He spent the first seven years of his working life in the Harvard library under the late William C. Lane. His mind was not exclusively on books, for while there he wooed and won the daughter of Librarian Lane.

Europe called him and he served as librarian of the American Academy of Rome, and was on the commission of five to recatalogue the Vatican library. Strangely enough, that entire commission was made up of non-Catholics.

Back to America—to become librarian at the University of Iowa. There he remained for more than a year—until the trustees of the Boston library, seeking a successor to the late Charles F. D. Belden, unanimously agreed upon him. Their selection, incidentally, took just about 45 seconds, for Lord stood out so conspicuously that the trustees practically had their choice made for them.

HAS WORD FOR "TRASH"

To him a library is a collection of books (quite obvious of course), so selected, and made available in such a way as to enrich and enliven human lives—which is not so obvious.

"In time of depression," he said, speaking of that subject today as he visited the Traveler office, "books take a person out of himself." He smiled happily as he spoke. He is looking forward to his new job.

As for the books often called trash, he believes that even such trash can take a person out of himself, too. It takes all kinds of books to suit all kinds of people. Some books, once considered trash have proved to have merit.

After all, the test of a book is its power to affect the reader. He made that remark quite casually. Not at all in a pedantic manner.

Censorship? In general he doesn't like book censorship. He finds that the books which might be subject to censorship represent such an infinitesimal percentage as to be negligible.

MILTON EDWARD LORD

It is a difficult problem to face—this matter of book censorship—but his experience is that such books should be taken off the public shelves. Not to protect the readers—hardly, that—but rather to protect the books. Such books do disappear.

"They do disappear," he said. "We all know that, so we take them from the shelves to save the books for those who have a real need for them."

His censorship belief is based entirely upon the protection of the books, which is a sane view.

HIKING ENTHUSIAST

His hobbies? Anything outdoors. Hiking? He loves it. He and his wife have hiked 25 or 30 miles in a day. When in Europe they did so often.

Such, in brief, is the man selected to conduct your library—and all its branches—for you. If you don't like the way he conducts the library, tell him so. You'd enjoy meeting him, and he'd be interested in your opinion. He is that sort.

New Public Library Director Takes Office

NEW PUBLIC LIBRARY DIRECTOR

Milton E. Lord, formerly connected with the Vatican library, who yesterday officially assumed his new duties as director of the Boston Public Library.

The day is coming, in the opinion of Milton E. Lord, new director of the Boston Public Library, when public libraries, especially their branches, will find themselves duty-bound to cater more attentively to the particular needs and wants of the individual as regards choice of books and subjects.

Director Lord arrived here yesterday to take over his new duties as director of the Boston Public Library in place of the late director, Charles F. D. Belden. He came here from the University of Iowa, where he was director of libraries. Director Lord spent most of yesterday paying courtesy calls on

Mayor Curley, the various library trustees and others.

"Public libraries," Director Lord told a Post reporter, "have been and are passing through certain periods of development. The first was the development of the organization of the libraries and the second was the development of the library as a place of great expansion and jump in circulation. Branch libraries were cropping up everywhere.

"The next major development, in my opinion, will be the humanization of the library. At the present time public libraries are mainly places where men, women and children come and call for books. The little care and attention, through the real fault of nobody in particular, of course, is paid the individuals."

pos:
to C TRAVELER, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1932

The New Librarian

BOSTON'S new librarian, Milton E. Lord, young, experienced and abreast of the times, takes up his duties with dignity. He makes no sweeping promise or glowing prophecy. He praises the work that has been done in the past and expresses a hope of giving increasingly popular service.

We like his attitude towards the whole people, an attitude quite in keeping with the established policy of the library trustees that the institution is for all the people and not for the select few.

Mr. Lord is not to be dominated by the will of connoisseurs. For them there will be available the usual supply of higher literature. The new librarian's chief thought is for those whom entertaining or instructive reading may benefit. The fact that a book is not "literature" does not prevent its being good reading.

A quite human side of the man is shown in Librarian Lord's remarks about "doubtful" books. They will be kept off the open shelves, not necessarily to protect the readers, but to protect the books. Folks steal them.

Again we congratulate the trustees on their choice of a successor to the late Mr. Belden.

Milton E. Lord Begins Duties As Director of Public Library

Youthful Executive Foresees Time When Treasured Manuscripts Will Be Preserved
On Motion Picture Film

By EDWARD ALLEN

The library of the future, with the treasured manuscripts of other nations copied and preserved for posterity on compact rolls of motion picture film, was discussed yesterday by Milton E. Lord, 33, in an interview on his first afternoon as director of the Boston Public Library.

He has already ascertained that a 50-page edition of the New York Times can be preserved on 3 cents' worth of motion picture film, although it would cost $86 to make full-size photostatic copies of the same issue.

Mr. Lord is the youngest man who has held the post left vacant by the death of Charles F. D. Belden, but he comes to Boston with a more intimate knowledge of the library technique in the great literary treasures of the world than any of his predecessors could have obtained from their more parochial experience.

KNOWS GREAT LIBRARIES

The library of the Vatican, the British Museum, foremost library of the world, the Bibliotheque Nationale in Paris, other great continental libraries, are familiar hunting grounds. He worked and studied in them all before returning to America to head the great University of Iowa library, his last post.

There is nothing of the pendant or the ponderous bibliophile in this extremely gracious young executive. Yesterday afternoon with remarkable address, he managed to meet the library trustees, pay a courtesy visit to Mayor Curley, interview the heads of the departments under him, and save enough time to chat with reporters. Some of the speakers he had to brusque, yet Mr. Lord got through his extremely busy afternoon without complaint—but without being able to tackle the correspondence on his desk.

His office is small, cozy, without spaciousness or pretense, in the best New England manner. Receiving congratulations on possessing such a pleasant place, he said, "Yes. You know, when the library was built, they found they had omitted a director's office. Mr. Putnam, now librarian of Congress, had this room fitted out.

The room is at the top of a small flight of stairs just beyond the second-floor desk, where tardy borrowers pay their fines. It occupies space obviously commandeered from the book-stacks. The ceiling is extremely low. It is just the place in which a modest, young stranger can meet subordinates much older than he who have spent their lives maintaining the Boston library's tradition as first and leader among the great free municipal libraries. It is still the second largest in the country.

Mr. Lord said that he expected eventually to see the readers in Bates hall consulting rare manuscripts stored in European museums by means of miniature copies individually projected on small motion picture screens. Already several American banks are preserving copies of all checks on films in order to save space. The tiny films are more compact than hefty tomes on dusty shelves.

In addition, there may be group "readings" at stated hours. Interesting or popular book-plays will be projected on larger screens in public halls. Newspapers can be permanently and compactly preserved on films.

COMPLIMENTS MUSEUM

Mr. Lord carefully avoided reference to new policies which he may plan to institute in the Boston library. After but one afternoon in harness he could scarcely be expected to comment on the local library situation.

Although generally opposed to book censorship—because so few books really require it—Mr. Lord is in favor of omitting the so-called "doubtful" books from the open shelves—not to protect the public—but to protect the books. Doubtful books do disappear, and should be guarded for those who are capable of using them properly.

DIRECTOR BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY MILTON E. LORD ASSUMES DUTIES AS

MILTON E. LORD
Library expert at his desk.

Milton E. Lord, 33-year-old library expert, yesterday assumed the duties of his new post as director of the Boston Public Library, as successor to the late Charles F. D. Belden. The new director, a native of Lynn, arrived in Boston last week from Iowa, where he was director of the libraries of the State University.

He spent his first day in office calling on the trustees of the Public Library, visiting with Mayor Curley and meeting the men and women who will be associated with him in his new post.

He did not want to say anything about his new position or about his plans for the future.

"A large library like this," he said, "is a complex organization, and I'm going to have plenty to do for some time to come finding out exactly how it functions."

Despite his youth Mr. Lord has had a crowded and varied career. He was graduated from Lynn Classical with honors in 1914 and entered Harvard, intent upon studying engineering.

War interrupted his college career, however, and he served as a second lieutenant in the artillery. On his return he was graduated from Harvard in 1921 and worked in Widener Library at Harvard with the late William C. Lane. A few years later he married Mr. Lane's daughter, Rosamond.

He has traveled extensively, studied abroad, reorganized the important American Academy Library in Rome and aided in the cataloging of the Vatican Library by a Carnegie Foundation commission. He went out to become director of the Iowa University libraries in 1930.

Mr. Lord said yesterday he had not yet made up his mind where he would live here. His wife and his nine-year-old son, Peter, will not come East for a month, and he hopes by that time to have picked out a suitable home for his family.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1932

Boston Transcript - Feb. 11 - 32

Boston's Youngest Librarian

ng been faithful Bings, Boston has at thirty-three over many. The n's great public the youngest who the history of the brarian Mr. Lord is "only an acci-is only an accident also, we can he Lynn Classical spent some two e he intended to engineer, when he to service in the a lieutenant of scientific training that he did not Still, he decided, rvard his under- end he needed found it as an ty's library. asis good prog- he record reports l. Mr. Lord was ber of the Car- four of America's enced librarians his Holiness, the try distinguished her height she displayed interpretive highest expectation that had been (Feb. 3 and Eva in "The Mistsinger" (Feb. 2)

The eminent singing actress from Vienna to appear for the first Times in Boston with the Chicago Company as Elsa in "Lohengrin" (New York Times) and responsible work of cataloging the books and especially the manuscript treasures of the Vatican Library. Of this call, for his part, the explanation given by Boston's new library director has been, "I happened to be in Rome at the time, and could speak Italian."

The facts have been reviewed before, but we wish to note, for our part, that there was a reason why Mr. Lord "happened to be in Rome at the time."

He was there as a graduate student in the American Academy of Classical Studies. If this was an accident also, we can only say that the new director has shown a remarkable talent for putting himself in the way of very good and constructive accidents. For this there is one evident, all-controlling reason, in our opinion. He has steadily sought and desired to make himself useful to society, whether as an artist, as an engineer, as an earnest undergraduate, or as a follower of the higher branches of classical learning. The young director, recently the librarian of the University of Iowa, will be of great use, we feel confident, to the development of Boston's library service and of this city's welfare in general. His record shows him a man of merit, a man of courage in following the calls of good command. That is the quality which Boston's library and the loyal and able staff of that library need to find in their leader, and we wish them, as we do the director, extremely well in the finding.

Milton E. Lord Assumes Charge as Library Head

Boston's New Director Youngest Ever to Take Important Post

BY HAROLD BENNETTSON
Meet the new director of Boston's library—a 33-year-old chap, whose blue eyes are keen, whose smile is infectious and who seems quite unconcerned about the fact that he is by far the youngest man ever appointed to such an important post.

There are few library posts in America whose importance is of the first water—Congressional Library, the New York Library, the Boston Library—and, well after, it becomes necessary to stop and think.

TAKES CHARGE

And this 33-year-oldster—who looks like your screen favorite—today took charge of the Boston Library with its 1,500,000 volumes, and its long list of employees.

His name? Milton Edward Lord. Born in Lynn, educated in Lynn Classical high school, Harvard, '19, Harvard graduate school (after he had been mustered out of service as a lieutenant of artillery) then to the Ecole des Sciences Politiques, in Paris.

He spent the first seven years of his working life in the Harvard library under the late William C. Lane. His mind was not exclusively on books, for while there he wooed and won the daughter of Librarian Lane.

Europe called him and he served as librarian of the American Academy of Rome, and was on the commission of five to recatalogue the Vatican library. Strangely enough, that entire commission was made up of non-Catholics.

Back to America—to become librarian at the University of Iowa. There he remained for more than a year—until the trustees of the Boston library, seeking a successor to the late Charles P. D. Belden, unanimously agreed upon him. Their selection, incidentally, took just about 45 seconds, for Lord stood out so conspicuously that the trustees practically had their choice made for them.

HAS WORD FOR "TRASH"

To him a library is a collection of books (quite obvious of course), so selected, and made available in such a way as to enrich and enliven human lives—which is not so obvious. "In time of depression," he said, speaking of that subject today as he visited the Traveler office, "books take a person out of himself." He smiled happily as he spoke. He is looking forward to his new job.

As for the books often called trash, he believes that even such trash can take a person out of himself, too. It takes all kinds of books to suit all kinds of people. Some books, once considered trash have proved to have merit. After all, the test of a book is its power to affect the reader. He made that remark quite casually. Not at all in a pedantic manner.

Censorship? In general he doesn't like book censorship. He finds that the books which might be subject to censorship represent such an infinitesimal percentage as to be negligible. It is a difficult problem to face—this matter of book censorship—but his experience is that such books should be taken off the public shelves. Not to protect the readers—hardly that—but rather to protect the books. Such books do disappear.

MILTON EDWARD LORD

"They do disappear," he said. "We all know that, so we take them from the shelves to save the books for those who have a real need for them."

HIKING ENTHUSIAST

His hobbies? Anything outdoors. Hiking? He loves it. He and his wife have hiked 25 or 30 miles in a day. When in Europe they did so often. Canoeing, too, and tennis.

Such, in brief, is the man selected to conduct your library—and all its branches—for you. If you don't like the way he conducts the library, tell him so. You'd enjoy meeting him, and he'd be interested in your opinion. He is that sort.

New Public Library Director Takes Office

NEW PUBLIC LIBRARY DIRECTOR

Milton E. Lord, formerly connected with the Vatican library, who yesterday officially assumed his new duties as director of the Boston Public Library.

The day is coming, in the opinion of Milton E. Lord, new director of the Boston Public Library, when public libraries, especially their branches, will find themselves duty-bound to cater more attentively to the particular needs and wants of the individual as regards choice of books and subjects.

Director Lord arrived here yesterday to take over his new duties as director of the Boston Public Library in place of the late director, Charles P. D. Belden. He came here from the University of Iowa, where he was director of libraries. Director Lord spent most of yesterday paying courtesy calls on

Mayor Curley, the various library trustees and others.

"Public libraries," Director Lord told a post reporter, "have been and are passing through certain periods of development. The first was the development of the organization of the libraries and the card indexes and catalogues. They came a period of great expansion and jump in circulation. Branch libraries were cropping up everywhere. The next major development, in my opinion, will be the humanization of books. At the present time public libraries are mainly places where men, women and children come and call for books. Too little care and attention, through the real fault of nobody in particular, of course, is paid the individuals."

pos: to c TRAVELER, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1932

The New Librarian

BOSTON'S new librarian, Milton E. Lord, young, experienced and abreast of the times, takes up his duties with dignity. He makes no sweeping promise or glowing prophecy. He praises the work that has been done in the past and expresses a hope of giving increasingly popular service.

We like his attitude towards the whole people, an attitude quite in keeping with the established policy of the library trustees that the institution is for all the people and not for the select few.

Mr. Lord is not to be dominated by the will of connoisseurs. For them there will be available the usual supply of higher literature. The new librarian's chief thought is for those whom entertaining or instructive reading may benefit. The fact that a book is not "literature" does not prevent its being good reading.

A quite human side of the man is shown in Librarian Lord's remarks about "doubtful" books. They will be kept off the open shelves, not necessarily to protect the readers, but to protect the books. Folks steal them.

Again we congratulate the trustees on their choice of a successor to the late Mr. Belden.

Milton E. Lord Begins Duties As Director of Public Library

Youthful Executive Foresees Time When Treasured Manuscripts Will Be Preserved On Motion Picture Film

By EDWARD ALLEN

The library of the future, with the treasured manuscripts of other nations copied and preserved for posterity on compact rolls of motion picture film was discussed yesterday by Milton E. Lord, 33, in an interview on his first afternoon as director of the Boston Public Library.

He has already ascertained that a 50-page edition of the New York Times can be preserved on 3 cents' worth of motion picture film, although it would cost $86 to make full-size photostatic copies of the same issue.

Mr. Lord is the youngest man who has held the post left vacant by the death of Charles P. D. Belden, but he comes to Boston with a more intimate knowledge of the library technique in the great library treasures of the world than any of his predecessors could have obtained from their more parochial experience.

KNOWS GREAT LIBRARIES

The great library of the Vatican, the British Museum, foremost library of the world, the Bibliotheque Nationale in Paris, other great continental libraries, are familiar hunting grounds. He worked and studied in them all before returning to America to head the great University of Iowa library, his last post.

There is nothing of the pendant or the ponderous bibliophile in this extremely gracious young executive. Yesterday afternoon with remarkable adroitness, he managed to meet the library trustees, pay a courtesy visit to Mayor Curley, interview the heads of the departments under him, and save enough time to chat with reporters. Few captains of the so-called heavy industries could be so efficient in budgeting their time without appearing brusque, yet Mr. Lord got through his extremely busy afternoon without commotion—but without being able to tackle the correspondence on his desk.

His office is small, cozy, without splendor or pretense, in the best New England manner. Receiving congratulations on possessing such a pleasant place, he said, "Yes. You know, when the library was built, they found they had omitted a directors' office. Mr. Putnam, now librarian of Congress, had this room fitted out."

The room is at the top of a small

flight of stairs just beyond the second-floor desk, where tardy borrowers pay their fines. It occupies space obviously commandeered from the book-stacks. The ceiling is extremely low. It is just the place in which a modest, young stranger can meet subordinates much older than he who have spent their lives maintaining the Boston library's tradition as first and leader among the great free municipal libraries. It is still the second largest in the country.

Mr. Lord said that he expected eventually to see the readers in Bates hall consulting rare manuscripts stored in European museums by means of miniature copies individually projected on small motion picture screens. Already several American banks are preserving copies of all checks on films in order to save space. The tiny films are more compact than hefty tomes on dusty shelves.

In addition, there may be group "readings" at stated hours. Interesting or popular book-plates will be projected on larger screens in public halls. Newspapers can be permanently and compactly preserved on films.

COMPLIMENTS MUSEUM

Mr. Lord carefully avoided reference to new policies which he may plan to institute in the Boston library. After but one afternoon in harness he could scarcely be expected to comment on the local library situation.

Although generally opposed to book censorship—because so few books really require it—Mr. Lord is in favor of omitting the so-called "doubtful" books from the open shelves—not to protect the public—but to protect the books. Such books do disappear, and should be guarded for those who are capable of using them properly.

DIRECTOR BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY MILTON E. LORD ASSUMES DUTIES AS

MILTON E. LORD
Library expert at his desk.

Milton E. Lord, 33-year-old library expert, yesterday assumed the duties of his new post as director of the Boston Public Library, as successor to the late Charles P. D. Belden. The new director, a native of Lynn, arrived in Boston last week from Iowa, where he was director of the libraries of the State University.

He spent his first day in office calling on the trustees of the Public Library, visiting with Mayor Curley and meeting the men and women who will be associated with him in his new post.

He did not want to say anything about his new position or about his plans for the future.

"A large library like this," he said, "is a complex organization, and I'm going to have plenty to do for some time to come finding out exactly how it functions."

Despite his youth Mr. Lord has had a crowded and varied career. He was graduated from Lynn Classical with honors in 1914 and entered Harvard, intent upon studying engineering.

War interrupted his college career, however, and he served as a second lieutenant in the artillery. On his return he was graduated from Harvard in 1921 and worked in Widener Library at Harvard with the late William C. Lane. A few years later he married Mr. Lane's daughter, Rosamond.

He has traveled extensively, studied abroad, reorganized the important American Academy Library in Rome and aided in the cataloguing of the Vatican Library by a Carnegie Foundation commission. He went out to become director of the Iowa University libraries in 1930.

Mr. Lord said yesterday he had not yet made up his mind where he would live here. His wife and his nine-year-old son, Peter, will not come East for a month, and he hopes by that time to have picked out a suitable home for his family.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1932

Boston Transcript - Feb. 11 '32

Boston's Youngest Librarian

Will Give Recital at Conservatory

(Bureau)

Vernice Coolidge Hudson, in Costume Designed and Sewed

treasures of the Vatican Library. Of this call, for his part, the explanation given by Boston's new library director has been, "It happened to be in Rome at the time, and could speak Italian."

The facts have been reviewed before, but we wish to note, for our part, that there was a reason why Mr. Lord "happened to be in Rome at the time." He was there as a graduate student in the American Academy of Classical Studies.

If this was an accident also, we can only say that the new director has shown a remarkable talent for putting himself in the way of very good and constructive accidents. For this there is one evident, all-controlling reason, in our opinion. He has steadily sought and desired to make himself useful to society, whether as an artilleryman, as an earnest undergraduate, or as a follower of the higher branches of classical learning. The young director, recently the librarian of the University of Iowa, will be of great use, we feel confident, to the development of Boston's library.

service and of this city's welfare in general. His record shows him a man of merit, a man of courage in following the calls of good command. That is the quality which Boston's library and the loyal and able staff of that library need to find in their leader, and we wish them, as we do the director, extremely well in the finding.

the manuscript.

BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN

BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1932

THIS IS LIFE

A FORTUNATE LIBRARIAN
CHOICE AND THE TASK
CONFRONTING HIM

By ROBERT E. ROGERS

CONGRATULATIONS AND HIGH HOPES to Milton E. Lord, who on Monday began what we hope will be a long life of service at the Boston Public Library. In Mr. Lord Boston has secured a young but experienced man, trained in many of the great libraries of the world, already a successful administrator of an important university library, a man of high professional attainments.

In the Boston Public Library Mr. Lord has been given one of the great libraries of the United States as the instrument for his ideas, one of the most beautiful, ranking near the top in the richness and value of its special collections, and possessing a tradition of great competence and faithfulness in its directors. The present librarian of the Library of Congress, Herbert Putnam, was director of the Boston Public Library. The two chief experts, who died within the past year, Librarian Charles F. D. Belden and his second in command, Frank Chase, were men of the highest qualifications, both in the technique of their work and their general scholarship. Mr. Lord is stepping into the shoes of no mean men.

Styles in Librarians Change

The interview which Mr. Lord gave on his first day of office was an illuminating one, showing to what an extent library work has become a science, and a complex and highly technical science at that. And where one must take for granted that the small libraries all over the state must progress slowly in this respect, we have a right to expect that the chief library of them all shall be as up to date as possible.

Massachusetts may well be proud of her library record, both as to number of years of service and number of institutions. Even as a boy, some 30 years ago, I remember that interesting old map wherein was drawn tiny sketches of all the library buildings in Massachusetts. It was very impressive even then; it would be more impressive today.

Even in the smaller towns the librarian's job has changed to some extent from that of the old-time librarian, the genteel and unmarried female of the school-ma'am type, who single-handed presided over the destinies of the small collection of books. She was her own janitor, her own repair and binding department, her own catalogue department, her own purchasing department—unless her trustees were particularly active—and, of course, her own circulation department.

She was seldom really illiterate, though often her views on literature were narrow and conventional and her knowledge of literature even more narrow. Her purchases often betrayed curious bias and curious ignorance. In the matter of issuing books to certain people, she was like St. Peter. Hers were the keys wherewith to bind and to loose.

Her influence still remains even in the great city libraries—even in the Boston Library, for instance, where, so far as the general public is concerned, the policies of book purchasing and of circulation are still pretty provincial and obscurantist.

Book Vandals Rampant

I agree with Mr. Lord entirely when he says that so-called "doubtful" books ought not to be put on the open shelves—"not to protect the public but to protect the books." Naturally! Every city librarian knows that he is dealing with a comparatively recent problem, that of a semi-educated proletariat, with some brains but no manners, no morals, no sense of honor and integrity. Those people consider anything publicly owned as their legitimate spoil. They will steal or mutilate a book as naturally as they draw breath. Our colleges swarm with them and the Harvard and Yale libraries are finding them a dreadful problem.

Anything to keep books from such people—even a few good jail sentences—is all to the good. But there are thousands of mature and honest students, many of them taking legitimate extension courses, who are greatly handicapped by the public library policy of restricting books, many of which form the backbone of courses in modern literature. And classic literature, as well! It is to be hoped that Mr. Lord will be able to liberalize the Boston Public Library in some essential and much needed points.

The new librarian's forecasts of scientific progress in library work are fascinating. The means by which the treasures of the great libraries of the world are being made available to scholars wherever they may be are rapidly increasing in number and ingenuity. The photostat, for instance, has made it possible to reproduce with absolute accuracy any book or manuscript on which its lens is trained. I suppose, though I am not certain, that any number of copies can be made from the original plate.

Preservation Library's Chief Duty

By this means a scholar in the University of Kansas may, in the quiet of his prairie, study collate manuscripts reposing in the Vatican, the Bibliotheque Nationale, the British Museum and even the Morgan and Huntington collections. He may collate them with absolute assurance that they are accurate. But photostat copies are bulky and expensive. Recently, says Mr. Lord, a means has been devised whereby documents, newspapers and books may be photographed on a few cents' worth of film, to be projected on a screen greatly enlarged and there to be studied at leisure. Cost and storage space both may thus be reduced to a minimum. An important part of the library of the future will be its film and projection department.

I suggest that this method be applied also to useful and important modern books that are not being reprinted. Many of the most interesting of the works of the past century are now out of print. The wear and tear on the existing library copies is terrific. Furthermore, many of them are printed on pulp paper that will not last the century. It is a sobering thought that the literary works of the Dark Ages and the Middle Ages will outlast ours, simply because our books will become dust in a few years. The New York Times and the American Mercury print a rag paper edition for libraries. Do any other periodicals?

Perhaps it is a good thing that most of our present literary output will inevitably and rapidly decay. But among them are books that are worth preserving. Put them on little rolls of film while yet there is time. More and more the job of the modern public library must be, not the circulation of ephemeral books and magazines in competition with the lending libraries and the news stands, but the permanent collections intended for the use of the scholar, the student and the serious reader. That will be Mr. Lord's most useful task.

Copyright 1932, by the Boston Evening American.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1932

New Director's Self-Imposed Job Is to "Humanize the Library"

Whole Approach, Says Milton E. Lord, Should Be in Atmosphere of Books, Not of Architecture—Opposes Censorship

By Karl Schriftgiesser

The New Librarian

(Photo by George Davis Studios)

THIS IS LIFE

A FORTUNATE LIBRARIAN
CHOICE AND THE TASK
CONFRONTING HIM

By ROBERT E. ROGERS

CONGRATULATIONS AND HIGH HOPES to Milton E. Lord, who on Monday began what we hope will be a long life of service at the Boston Public Library. In Mr. Lord Boston has secured a young but experienced man, trained in many of the great libraries of the world, already a successful administrator of an important university library, a man of high professional attainments.

In the Boston Public Library Mr. Lord has been given one of the great libraries of the United States as the instrument for his ideas, one of the most beautiful, ranking near the top in the richness and value of its special collections, and possessing a tradition of great competence and faithfulness in its directors. The present librarian of the Library of Congress, Herbert Putnam, was director of the Boston Public Library. The two chief experts, who died within the past year, Librarian Charles F. D. Belden and his second in command, Frank Chase, were men of the highest qualifications, both in the technique of their work and their general scholarship. Mr. Lord is stepping into the shoes of no mean men.

ROBERT E. ROGERS

Styles in Librarians Change

The interview which Mr. Lord gave on his first day of office was an illuminating one, showing to what an extent library work has become a science, and a complex and highly technical science at that. And where one must take for granted that the small libraries all over the state must progress slowly in this respect, we have a right to expect that the chief library of them all shall be as up to date as possible.

Massachusetts may well be proud of her library record, both as to number of years of service and number of institutions. Even as a boy, some 30 years ago, I remember that interesting old map wherein was drawn tiny sketches of all the library buildings in Massachusetts. It was very impressive even then; it would be more impressive today.

Even in the smaller towns the librarian's job has changed to some extent from that of the old-time librarian, the genteel and unmarried female of the school-ma'am type, who single-handedly presided over the destinies of the small collection of books. She was her own janitor, her own repair and binding department, her own catalogue department, her own purchasing department—unless her trustees were particularly active—and, of course, her own circulation department.

She was seldom really illiterate, though often her views on literature were narrow and conventional and her knowledge of literature even more narrow. Her purchases often betrayed curious bias and curious ignorance. In the matter of issuing books to certain people, she was like St. Peter. Hers were the keys wherewith to bind and to loose.

Her influence still remains even in the great city libraries—even in the Boston Library, for instance, where, so far as the general public is concerned, the policies of book purchasing and of circulation are still pretty provincial and obscurantist.

Book Vandals Rampant

I agree with Mr. Lord entirely when he says that so-called "doubtful" books ought not to be put on the open shelves—"not to protect the public but to protect the books." Naturally! Every city librarian knows that he is dealing with a comparatively recent problem, that of a semi-educated proletariat, with some brains but no manners, no morals, no sense of honor and integrity. Those people consider anything publicly owned as their legitimate spoil. They will steal or mutilate a book as naturally as they draw breath. Our colleges swarm with them and the Harvard and Yale libraries are finding them a dreadful problem.

Anything to keep books from such people—even a few good jail sentences—is all to the good. But there are thousands of mature and honest students, many of them taking legitimate extension courses, who are greatly handicapped by the public library policy of restricting books, many of which form the backbone of courses in modern literature. And classic literature, as well! It is to be hoped that Mr. Lord will be able to liberalize the Boston Public Library in some essential and much needed points.

The new librarian's forecasts of scientific progress in library work are fascinating. The means by which the treasures of the great libraries of the world are being made available to scholars wherever they may be are rapidly increasing in number and ingenuity. The photostat, for instance, has made it possible to reproduce with absolute accuracy any book or manuscript on which its lens is trained. I suppose, though I am not certain, that any number of copies can be made from the original plate.

Preservation Library's Chief Duty

By this means a scholar in the University of Kansas may, in the quiet of his prairie, study collate manuscripts reposing in the Vatican, the Bibliotheque Nationale, the British Museum and even the Morgan and Huntington collections. He may collate them with absolute assurance that they are accurate. But photostat copies are bulky and expensive. Recently, says Mr. Lord, a means has been devised whereby documents, newspapers and books may be photographed on a few cents' worth of film, to be projected on a screen greatly enlarged and there to be studied at leisure. Cost and storage space both may thus be reduced to a minimum. An important part of the library of the future will be its film and projection department.

I suggest that this method be applied also to useful and important modern books that are not being reprinted. Many of the most interesting of the works of the past century are now out of print. The wear and tear on the existing library copies is terrific. Furthermore, many of them are printed on pulp paper that will not last the century. It is a sobering thought that the literary works of the Dark Ages and the Middle Ages will outlast ours, simply because our books will become dust in a few years. The New York Times and the American Mercury print a rag paper edition for libraries. Do any other periodicals?

Perhaps it is a good thing that most of our present literary output will inevitably and rapidly decay. But among them are books that are worth preserving. Put them on little rolls of film while yet there is time. More and more the job of the modern public library must be, not the circulation of ephemeral books and magazines in competition with the lending libraries and the news stands, but the permanent collections intended for the use of the scholar, the student and the serious reader. That will be Mr. Lord's most useful task.

Copyright, 1932, by the Boston Evening American.

New Director's Self-Imposed Job Is to "Humanize the Library"

Whole Approach, Says Milton E. Lord, Should Be in Atmosphere
of Books, Not of Architecture—Opposes Censorship

By Karl Schriftgiesser

THE most important work that faces the new director of the Boston Public Library, in his opinion, is the humanizing of that great institution. And although the young man who has just assumed this important position has worked and studied in the Library of the Vatican, in the British Museum, in the Bibliotheque Nationale of Paris, and many of the world's other great libraries, he does not think he will turn to them for inspiration.

Milton E. Lord, who is only thirty years old, and who was the late C. F. D. Belden's own choice as his successor, sat on a divan in his little office in the famous building that with classical severity dominates Copley square, and talked in generalities about what he hopes to do.

It was during this interview that he intimated that the time has passed when the huge city libraries should be the models upon which the world's libraries—and indirectly Boston's—should be based. Instead he spoke with marked enthusiasm about the library at Dartmouth College, about the Athenaeum at Providence, and about the smaller and more intimate branches of the institution of which he took charge this week.

"It is hard for me to say exactly what I mean when I speak of 'humanizing' the library. In my own mind I know what I mean, but it is something which, thus early in my new position, I cannot speak of except in generalities. What I really have in mind is this: Almost all libraries need to have things done to make them far more human institutions. The whole approach to them should be an atmosphere of books, not of architecture or statuary, but of books easily accessible to the people in every walk of life."

Mr. Lord did not want to suggest that the Boston Library is not a friendly place. But he spoke of its entrance, and then of the entrance of the Providence Athenaeum. In the latter place as you enter the door the eye is greeted with rows of books as far as you can see and as high as the ceiling. You immediately feel that here you are among friends. That this is a library to use. The books are where you can reach them yourself. You don't have to fill out a questionnaire, pass it to the clerk, and sit and wait until someone brings it to you. Instead you go and take your book and read it.

Talking about this led to asking Mr. Lord if, at some time in the near future, he felt that he could arrange to have a smoking room at the Public Library's main building, a room where one could read and work and smoke. He smiled.

"I don't want to make any promises about what I will do or what I won't do, but that suggestion fits in with my general ideas on the humanizing of the library. You know that Dartmouth College has one of the finest of new libraries in the country. It was built as a library and designed from the utilitarian point of view. Up there the question of smoking came up. Certain rooms were set aside as rooms in which smoking would be permissible. But no signs were posted. Instead the managers of the library placed ash trays about in the rooms where smoking was allowed. By this subtle suggestion they solved the problem and it has worked up there very well."

The interviewer realized that this was a minor topic but it seemed to him to suggest the wisdom of the man who so sincerely believes that a library is more than a collection of books. He spoke of the necessity of making the library of the people comparable to one's own home, and not an uncomfortable place, dominated by red tape.

Mr. Lord, who is wrapped up in the subject of libraries and radiates his enthusiasm for them to all with whom he comes in contact, spoke of the library's need to be a place where the comfort, the convenience and the personal desires of all sorts of people should be met. But in New York and other places—was built, it would seem, primarily as a show place, he is aware of the difficulty of achieving the intimacy that he believes all libraries should have.

And then there is the huge problem, dictated partially by local conditions and needing much study, as to whether a library should be a house of reference or a place to read. Mr. Lord is not yet sure which a library should be, or both. But he is convinced that the ideal approach is one where each individual can volition the book he wants of his own seeking, because so many times a person, "And then," he said, "it is often the case that a person's whole life is changed by this chance contact with a book he was not looking for."

Thus he believes that perhaps we should borrow more from the small institution than from the big ones. The library of the small city, or the town, where anyone can individually find any book one wants has, he thinks, more to offer a reader than the large, impersonal institutions. But how to bring about such a change? Well, Mr. Lord felt that he had not been in Boston long enough to offer any concrete suggestions.

Here. But he spoke at this time of what he calls "the need for the integration of the cultural activity of the community." Behind that phrase lies an idea that is now under investigation of one of the endowed foundations which is expected to make a report soon.

This foundation has studied the various connections between schools and libraries and other institutions with the purpose of determining the meeting point of all cultural activities. Does the library work with the school, or against it? Does the school work with the museum, or is there no joining of the institutions? In Cleveland the cultural activities are excellently integrated, it has been found. The same is true in Detroit. But Boston? The report is not yet done, but from unofficial sources it is learned that this city does not stand high on the list.

Mr. Lord already has expressed himself as being interested in the work which the Museum of Fine Arts has been doing with its street-car advertising and publicity in the newspapers. This beneficial work of the library, if Mr. Lord is able to carry out some of the ideas already fermenting within him regarding "cultural integration."

In Chicago figures have been published about the use of the million books available for the citizens through that city's library system, Mr. Lord said. There, as he recalled the figures without verifying them, of one million books 60 per cent of the total circulation of the library came from 40,000 books available on the open shelves. This, he feels, is added evidence of the need for the humanizing of the library, making all books available for everybody.

The censorship of books is something with which Mr. Lord has no sympathy. And he has reached this conclusion not through any moral consideration of censorship. In general he does not think that censorship reaches the ends desired of it, but from the library point of view he looks upon the situation differently. He believes in keeping doubtful books from the open shelves, not because of the harm which they might do, not to protect the public, but to protect the books themselves.

This class of books, he said, is the one which is the most prone to disappear from the shelves. They should be kept, he thinks, where they would be readily accessible to anyone who has a legitimate purpose for consulting them, and this legitimate purpose, he feels, ought not to have to be explained. "I should be mad myself if I went to a library and were told I couldn't look at a certain book because it might ruin my morals. If I felt I had a legitimate reason for consulting that book, no matter what that reason might be, I should feel I had the right to see that book."

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1932

THE LIBRARIAN

Boston and Public, the lions who guard the great staircase of the library in Copley Square were quivering with excitement when the Librarian dropped in to see them last week. Tony—as Boston is known to his friends—actually beamed, which is most unusual for him, as he has very strong ideas about lions looking majestic. The Librarian's own countenance evidently expressed something of amazement, for Public, or rather Blic, as most people call him, said:

"Don't pay any attention to Tony. He's been like that ever since he met the new director."

"I like that," returned Tony. "Just as if you haven't been gurgling incoherently ever since he came down and introduced himself to us."

"Blick," Tony said, "The Librarian cried, for the two were glaring at each other most unlovingly, then curiosity getting the better of her, asked: 'How on earth did you come to meet Mr. Lord?'"

A smile once more trembled on Blic's expressive lips. "He wanted to get acquainted with everyone in the building, so he had all the heads of departments come up to his office, one by one, then their assistants. Among them was a great friend of ours, who happened to mention us, so, on his way out to lunch, Mr. Lord patted us both."

"I think we should have gone up to his office," Tony mused.

"Why, Tony, we couldn't do that," his companion exclaimed, shocked. "People don't like to have lions in offices."

"That man in the picture up in Fine Arts had one," Tony said, wistfully. "But he lived a long time ago," Blic told him. "He means St. Jerome," Blic explained. "Once they had an exhibit of Durer etchings in the Fine Arts, and Tony saw that lion, and he's never forgotten him." The two really have picked up rather an extraordinary article and literary background simply through prowling about the building after midnight.

"Maybe Mr. Lord would tell us about that place where the lions used to be," Tony went on, dreamily.

"Does he mean Africa?" the Librarian questioned. "I didn't know the new Librarian had been there."

"He means Rome," Blic replied, who certainly is an accomplished a mind reader as you'd wish to meet. Probably due to his proximity to the reference department, "Tony still thinks there are lions in the arena chewing up Christians."

"Blick and I never took a bite out of anyone," Tony announced proudly. "I guess it's all right. Why, he used to look things up in that before he was born. You know we're both older than Mr. Lord," Tony went on, proudly.

"Maybe we are," said Blic, "but he can speak French and Italian and we can't."

"Couldn't we go into the director's office for a little while," Tony pleaded. "I'm sure there are lots of things about the library we could tell him on account of our being here since it opened."

"Maybe some time later," Blic promised. "Just now Mr. Lord is having a pretty hard time wrestling with the budget."

A gleam of sympathetic intelligence lighted Tony's great sombre eyes. "Is a budget like a wolf at the door?" he inquired.

"It's the very same thing," Blic and the Librarian assured him.

Included in the Massachusetts Library Club Bulletin is an important compilation of American and English reference books arranged by Richard G. Hensley, assistant to the director of the Boston Public Library. The list is composed of books issued since the publication of the late Frank H. Chase's Recent Significant Reference Books, in the Bulletin of March, 1930. Mr. Hensley's list will prove of value to small and medium-sized libraries as well as great institutions. With few exceptions "Annals" and "revised editions" are omitted.

Now on view in the children's room of the Boston Public Library is a loan exhibition of old valentines, a distillation, as it were, of the sentiment of a hundred years. Nowadays we do not take our valentines as seriously as they did a century, or even half a century, ago. The tiny embossed affairs with envelopes to match received by great-grandpapa really amounted to proposals for her hand. That she treasured the tokens of those she did not accept as well as the ones from great-grandpapa is a proof of the undying coquetry of the feminine soul.

Helen's lips are drifting dust. Blum is consumed with rust.

but old valentines are treasured eternally. The oldest and one of the most beautiful in the Library collection of valentines is a genuine antique, for it dates back more than one hundred years. It hung for many years on the walls of a Cape Cod farmhouse and is still enclosed in a frame of dingy gilt. The edge of the token is of silvery paper, in the center of which is a bouquet of old-fashioned posies, arranged in a sort of basket-like effect that is most effective. Beneath the simple hope, "Life's fairest lot be thine," Surely life immediately became gay and glamorous for the young lady who received it. There is also one sent in 1836, but it is less the true valentine type than its predecessor, being a simple lithograph of a leech-like maiden whose hair is "plain," not ringlets, and who guides the waves of her snail over the keys of a pianoforte, oddly reminiscent of David Copperfield's child wife, Dora, and her adored Gyp. This has the name of the lithographer, "Strong, 38 Nassau St., New York." He was early, but his work is not very good, for the picture is blotchily tinted in magenta, blue and yellow.

Many of the oldest valentines are of embossed paper, with envelopes to match. One such, sent seventy years ago from a romantic young man, is decorated with a tiny golden dove and the words "Remember me." An even older one is dated Feb. 14, 1750, and signed, in fine Italian hand, "Horace Morlaunt."

Some of the most delightful ones have cut-outs pasted against net transparent circles, such as the silvery cupid with bird-cage against delicate pink. An odd blend of minarets, ships and pierced hearts has the somewhat supercilious inscription: "From your friend in the city." In refreshing contrast is a tiny lace affair on which is written:

Dear Child, thy Parent Sends with love, This little Token It to prove.

There are one or two comies, including a sprightly lithograph of eighty years ago, which shows a dainty Godey's Ladies' Book young woman who has lost her footing on the ice. The inscription reads:

The lady whose matters are particularly nice Should not avoid the treacherous ice. Since to fall and not show too much is a sign That she wishes the hand of some true valentine.

Another of this type is a sixty-year-old gibe at the farmer for being as "green" as his crops. This was printed by the Union Valentine Company, No. 134 William street, New York. Nor is the lachrymose sentiment, beloved by Victoria's contemporaries, absent from the collection. Read this and weep:

Hope points to brighter hours We wipe our tears away And think of those blest bowers Where friendships ever decay.

Sent by a stripling to a girl in her teens, like as not.

An interesting group are the foolscap sheets, with high-colored sentimental scenes and landscapes, on which one evidently wrote valentine messages. These were located in England by a Boston collector, who likewise lent two valentine poems of historical interest, one addressed from the White House to "dearest Mary Hayes" and signed "Old Zuck," the other, from Baltimore, to Miss Susan L. Hayes, at the White House, from "the Master oriole."

Several items have been contributed to the display from the Library's own collection. There are portfolios of samples of valentines from the Louis Pranz Co., with prices. Valentines of that period and that firm were tastefully colored and usually fringed. Included among the books on the subject are some illustrated by Kate Greenaway and Walter Crane as well as a valuable "Ladies' and Gentlemen's Valentine Writer," published at Clerkenwell, London, around the middle of last century and brimming over with effusions guaranteed to touch the most hard-hearted coquette.

Hiding modestly in a corner of a page of the Massachusetts Library Club Bulletin, the Librarian found these sprightly lines which she insists on sharing with her readers:

FREE VERSE—TAKE ONE This is to tell About the dumb-bell Who came into the library To get a book about baseball. And who went away With the second volume Of the encyclopedia Because it was marked On the back A T A - B O Y.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1932

Washington Room at Public Library

For those who may become especially interested in the life and times of George Washington, or in the arrangement of celebrations this year in honor of the 200th anniversary of his birth, the Boston Public Library is maintaining a special service. There is a collection of Washington material in the Statistical Department, on the second floor, easily available for consultation. About forty volumes on the life of the country's first President have been assembled, including the rather rare volume, "Recollections and Private Memoirs of Washington by his Adopted Son, George Washington Parke Curtis," published in 1860. This adopted son lived in the Washington home from infancy to his nineteenth year.

There is an abundance of material to help in the preparation of programs and pageants. There are programs from other cities, and a number of pamphlets issued by the United States George Washington Bicentennial Commission, edited by Professor Albert Bushnell Hart of Cambridge who is the historian both for the National and the Massachusetts commissions. These pamphlets are intended for use in the public schools and by organizations in planning Washington celebrations. They deal with the year's hero as a military man, as the first President, as a Colonial and National statesman, as a farmer, engineer—his master mind, his religion and many other phases of his life. There are speeches and magazine clippings and lists of books on Washington available in the children's room and in the branches of the library.

THE LEDYARD GIFT

The permanent funds of the New York Public Library continue to mount magnificently. Lewis Cass Ledyard, for many years the personal counsel of the elder J. Pierpont Morgan and for a time president of the library, died a fortnight ago, leaving $2,000,000 to the institution. Mr. Ledyard's great gift is but one of a series which have placed the New York institution in a commanding position among the public libraries of the country. Founded through a combination of the Astor and Lenox libraries and the Tilden Trust in 1895, it has become a favorite beneficiary of New York's men of culture and wealth. It has, as a consequence, been able to amplify continuously its services to the people of New York and the scholars of the world.

But for some reason—rather difficult to understand in a community that prides itself, or at least used to pride itself, on its intellectual interests—the Boston Public Library has not enjoyed such munificence. On Dec. 31, 1930, its endowment funds (not including the Josiah H. Benton bequest which has yet to be settled by the courts) amounted to $771,048.94. During 1931, gifts and bequests totalled hardly more than $2000. In the past, the Boston library has received many gifts, notably those of Joshua Bates and Robert C. Billings, which were large for their time, but in late years it seems to have been overlooked by well-to-do citizens. Louis E. Kirstein's gift of a business library is the single large donation in a number of years.

As the centre of a city's cultural life, a library must keep itself abreast of progress in all intellectual fields. It must be a never-failing storehouse of information for citizens of many interests. It must embrace the new without letting go of the past. This it becomes an ever-growing organism, needing larger and larger resources with which to carry on. Since, however, its services, while available to all, are utilized by only a part of the community, it is a question how far all citizens should be taxed for its support. Independent resources, provided through large benefactions, enable it to proceed with confidence and with completeness. The Boston library needs a Boston Ledyard!

Boston Herald Feb. 13, 1932

THE BOSTON HERALD

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 1932

THRILLERS WANING, SAYS NEW DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC LIBRARY

Milton Edward Lord, new director of Boston Public Library.

Lord Sees Distinct Trend Now to Stories of Romance; Era of Quality, Not Quantity, Here

By LOWELL AMES NORRIS Just where are the prevailing tastes in reading leading the American public?

Are readers in these days of current unrest and hectic excitement asking for lurid literature, or are they seeking as a solace books which have contrasting values?

What will be the ultimate fate of the so-called "debunker" of historic figures, and are radio and motion pictures influencing literature as a whole?

These other little realized phases of the part that literature is playing in the programs of present day life, with glimpses into the library of the future, were discussed by Milton E. Lord, eminent librarian who came to Boston recently to fill the position of director of the Boston Public Library, a post made vacant by the recent and untimely death of Charles F. D. Beiden.

NO MORE TRASH READ NOW THAN IN OTHER PERIODS

"The reading of sensational literature is not so widespread as many people seem to think," Mr. Lord said, "and there is probably no more reading of trash at the present time than there has been during other periods of world history. Of course, more books are being published, but in proportion to all that is printed the amount of worthwhile literature still holds its own."

"At the present time there seems to be a distinct trend away from the detective and mystery story. Although they are being sold in large numbers, and a real mystery or thrilling murder story will always find plenty of interested readers, the peak of their popularity passed a while ago. Now a distinct demand is being expressed for books of a religious nature, particularly those dealing with the fundamentals of religion in general. Biographies are also still popular."

"After the war readers thought they wanted realism, so for a number of years realism is what they have been given. Some writers used this as an excuse to commercialize and expose many of the seamy sides of life in all their unsavory aspects. But the sophisticated freedom of such books defeated the purpose of their authors by bringing about a trend for better things. Last summer, when Willa Cather published 'Shadows on the Rock' the story was so simple, so calm, and so much at variance with all that had previously been so popular that it hit an immediate responsive chord."

"The people are through with sensationalism as a whole. They are turning to stories of a more romantic type. Perhaps this romance will not be quite so sentimental as the idea expressed in 'Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall,' but nevertheless the preference for romance and ideals is likely to become more and more pronounced and will probably be expressed in stories reflecting the present and future, not the past. This tendency toward idealism may not be shown as a tangible positive idea, but notwithstanding it will be the underlying principle."

"During this depression people are not only spending considerable time studying but they are also reading the sort of material which will take them out of themselves and make them forget their own pressing problems. If a book is able to do this it deserves a place on a library shelf, for it has served its purpose."

According to Mr. Lord, public libraries stand on the threshold of a new and more useful era, entirely different from the two periods which they have already gone through. The epoch which ended a generation ago was one of great development and of assembling the tools with which to work, such as catalogues, indexes and the careful selection of personnel. Then came the second period—one of great importance and expansion, with the opening of many new branches brought about by the increase of population as well as the use of books in quantities never known before.

Now we are in the third period, where the library faces problems of quality rather than quantity. Mr. Lord says these new problems will not diminish the number of readers, but will give them a quality of service never known before, and will also bring about a more intelligent use of the library.

Mr. Lord does not believe in censorship, although he does feel that as a practical measure in library policy some books have to be removed from the shelves. This action is based, he says, not from the point of view of a censor, but from the viewpoint of protecting the books themselves and making them available for those who have a real need for such volumes.

Mr. Lord also has a kind word for "debunkers" of historic figures—that is, if the "debunking" is honestly done by writers who are not seeking notoriety, but have an earnest purpose in view. He feels people are too inclined to be sentimental and look at popular heroes with a vision that is both restricted and idealistic. There are some debunkers, who have gone to the extreme, but their works will not last, although their example may help future writers to keep in truthful and sane biographical channels. And this, says Mr. Lord, is as it should be. If posterity is to have accurate and impartial word pictures of the past.

Radio and motion pictures, properly used, are of great aid in stimulating appreciation of better literature. In the opinion of Boston's new library director, dramatization of popular and classic novels always brings an increase in library circulation figures, and in many instances in the middle West there are definite co-operative tie-ups between the theatres and the public libraries, just as there are between the libraries and the radio broadcasting stations.

The technique developed by the motion picture industry is likely to contribute its share to the library of the future as a means for reproduction in reduced form the remarkable documents and manuscripts of the past which, because of their rarity and expense, cannot be obtained in the original by all libraries. This same plan may also be used to preserve newspapers.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1932

Items of Interest

Washingtoniana at Museum

As a part of the nation-wide celebration in honor of George Washington, there will open at the Museum of Fine Arts on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 21, from one to five, an exhibition of Washingtoniana. Prints, portraits, certificates, and documents signed by Washington, together with various objects personally associated with him and his career are assembled in this collection has been assembled by the Copley Society of Boston with the co-operation of many institutions and patriotic societies, among them, the Society of the Cincinnati, the Massachusetts Historical Society, the Hollingsworth Collection, the Boston Athenaeum, the New England Historical Society, the Sons of the American Revolution, the Public Library, the Marblehead Historical Society, the Bostonian Society, the Old South Historical Society, Harvard University, and the Colonial Dames. The public is cordially invited to attend the opening Sunday afternoon. Since the Museum is closed on Monday, the exhibition will be on view from Feb. 23 until the last of March.

Boston Transcript

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1932

Change in Sunday Hours at Boston Public Library

Reduction in the budget of the Boston Public Library has made necessary a curtailment in hours of Sunday service. According to the new schedule that goes into effect on Sunday, Feb. 21, the Central Library at Copley Square will be open to the public from 2 to 9 on Sundays, as in the summer months. The Central Library will no longer be open for exhibition purposes on holidays, as has been the custom for some years. The branches that formerly were open from 2 to 9 P. M. will now open at 3 P. M. and close at 6 P. M. on Sundays, during the season from November through April. Retrenchment forces economies in all departments of the library. The trustees decided upon a revision of the Sunday hours of opening as a measure that would least effect the library's service to the public, for this will permit considerable saving at hours during which the public demand upon the library is at its lowest.

Boston Traveler, February 19, 1932

LIBRARY CHANGES SUNDAY HOURS

The Boston Public Library has announced a revision in its hours of Sunday service. The new schedule is to go into effect on Sunday, Feb. 21. The Central Library at Copley square will be open to the public from 2 to 9 P. M. as in the summer months. The branches that were formerly open from 2 to 9 P. M. will now open at 3 and close at 6 P. M. on Sundays.

BOSTON AMERICAN FEBRUARY 19, 1932 Library's Sunday Hours Changed

The Boston Public Library has revised its hours of Sunday service. The central library at Copley sq. will be open from 2 to 9 p. m., as in the summer. The branches, formerly open from 2 to 9 p. m., will now open at 3 and close at 6 p. m. on Sundays.

NEW BOSTON LIBRARIAN LEFT HIS MARK AT ROME

Book Circles Pleased at Recognition of Milton Lord, Who Assumes Duties Here

VILLA AURELIA, WHERE MR LORD LIVED

ROME—The name of Milton Lord, who became director of the Boston Public Library last week, is a familiar one in Rome book circles. His distinguished colleagues remember vividly the young librarian who not only modernized the library of the American Academy, but also did valuable work in connection with the enlargement and reorganization of the Vatican Library, under the auspices of the Carnegie Endowment Fund.

"The life of a librarian is not as a rule spectacular" (Gorham P. Stevens, director of the American Academy in Rome, is speaking), "but it is no exaggeration to say that Mr Lord was a brilliant member of the profession, of whom we are proud."

"His chief work during the four years of his stay in the Eternal City, from 1926-1930, consisted in the reorganization and the making of the card catalogue, partly with cards from the Library of Congress, the reorganization and completion of the card index for the new periodical room, the development of the collection of lantern slides, and last, not least, the instalment of the amplified catalogue in new cases, an exacting piece of work."

Task at the Academy

Mr Lord found the catalogue of the library of the American Academy in a condition which resembled that of many European libraries today and which was the condition of American libraries 40 years ago.

But, besides reforming the library in accordance with American ideas, he gave delightful talks to the students on the library itself, and extended his personal and active help of all kinds, even to the choosing of the books and their bindings.

During his term of office, from 1926 to 1930, the library was much increased as a result of the arrival of the collection of 1212 volumes from the library of Edwin Collins Frost, the academy library now has over 30,000 volumes.

Son Born in Rome

Mr and Mrs Lord, with their little son, born in Rome, lived in the characteristic librarian's residence of the academy, which, like the Villa Aurelia, is built into the very walls of Rome.

The apartment is situated over the porter's lodge of the Villa Aurelia, the historical building given by Mrs. Heyrand, which was formerly the seat of the academy and which, after the construction of the fine new porticoed building, became the attractive residence of Director and Mrs Gorham P. Stevens.

The Villa Aurelia, called after the Aurelian Walls, which the Emperor built against the barbarians, stands on the site of the historic Villa Savorilli. Garibaldi's last refuge after the heroic defense of the city against the French troops.

It was from here that he wrote to his wife, Anita, whose equestrian statue is soon to be raised on the Janiculum: "One hour of our life in Rome is worth a century of common existence."

His Home

The librarian's home is reached by a series of twisting, winding steps, and only a photograph from the air could reproduce all its quaint features.

The historical reminiscences of the Janiculum Hill, where the American Academy stands, are innumerable.

Besides being near the site of the famous "death angle" of the defense of 1849, which inspired the heroism that eventually made Rome splendid as the capital of Europe and rendered the temporal rule of the Pope henceforward impossible as a part of Italian life, the hill has early Roman memories of the first magnitude.

At the foot lie St Peter's and Vatican City, where Mr Lord was almost as busy as he was on the top of the hill, for in 1927 he was invited to assist in the great work of the cataloguing of the Vatican library, under the auspices of the Carnegie endowment fund.

At Vatican Library

Monsignor Tisserand, Prefect of the Vatican Library, expressed to me his gratification at the news of Mr Lord's appointment to Boston. "I have the most pleasant recollection of him as an able and amiable collaborator," said the prelate.

"He will be reminded of Rome in his new library, for the Boston Library is built on Renaissance lines. I visited it on my short journey to America, when in 40 days I saw over eighty libraries, and I have the most vivid recollections of the courtesy of the Librarian, Mr Belden."

Monsignor Tisserand was conducting me through the long new passage of the Vatican Library, fitted with its Smead stacks for incunabula and etchings, each stack with its time lamp and special lock. As I remarked on length of the passage, Monsignor Tisserand replied:

"It is probably the longest in the world, 110 meters. It was not finished when Mr Lord left. Among other improvements which he would be glad to see are the new window panes which have been inserted in the arched window frames of the magnificent front facing the cordon of the Belvedere."

"These arches seem to have been constructed with an eye to the future, for the modern American windows fill them handsomely," said the Monsignor, pointing to the opposite wall of the huge quadrangle, where the same arched window settings still have old-fashioned panes inserted into the brick wall.

"Mr Lord's interests were manifold and predominantly artistic, and it was chiefly works on art that he handled in this library. He combined to a very remarkable degree the chief qualities of the good librarian which, though he has mostly to do with books, must also include courtesy to their readers."

Lillian Gibson.

The Boston Post

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1932

CHANGE OF HOURS AT PUBLIC LIBRARY

Economies made necessary by the reduction of the budget of the Boston Public Library, yesterday caused the trustees to announce a new schedule of hours for Sundays, starting Feb. 21. The Central Library in Copley square will be open from 2 to 9 p. m. as during the summer months. Branches that were formerly open from 2 to 9 p. m. will now open at 2 and close at 6 p. m. on Sundays. Milton E. Lord, library director, who made the announcement, said the curtailments were made during periods when public demand for service at the library was at its lowest.

Boston Daily Globe

FRIDAY, FEB 19, 1932

BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY CHANGES SUNDAY HOURS

A change in the Sunday hours of the Boston Public Library, to take effect next Sunday, has been announced by Director Milton E. Lord on behalf of the trustees. The Central Library at Copley sq will be open from 2 to 9 p m and the branches, formerly open from 2 to 6 p m, will open at 2 and close at 6 p m Sundays.

The changes are made because of the retrenchment made necessary by the reduction of the budget of the Public Library for the present fiscal year.

Boston Transcript

THURSDAY, MARCH 3, 1932

Library Hours

To the Editor of the Transcript:

According to a new ruling, the hours at the local Public Library in Copley square have been cut three hours on Sunday. The library is now open from 2 P. M., to 9 P. M., on Sunday, instead of from noon to 10 P. M.

I daresay there is a reason for this curtailment due, no doubt, to a shrinking "budget" in these times of depression; but I know that many readers will miss the old schedule, especially during this period of unemployment when many unemployed take advantage of our home and hospitable library to spend many hours reading and studying, aside from perusing the newspapers and thus keeping abreast of the times.

The central library in Copley square is located in a large rooming-house district where people take full advantage of the many privileges of our Public Library; so I trust there will be no further curtailment in the hours, which would, indeed, mean considerable inconvenience to many readers.

A CONSTANT READER
Boston, March 2.

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1932

Driver Attacked and Truck Stolen

Police are investigating a mysterious attack on George Connors, twenty-one, of 48 Hampden street, Roxbury, a truck driver, who was struck over the head with a blackjack and robbed of his truck as he was delivering a supply of books at the Milmont street branch of the Boston Public Library today.

Connors had just entered the hallway of the branch library with his arms full of books when an unidentified man accosted him and struck him without warning. Edwin Bridgeman, of 5 Lamber Avenue, Roxbury, janitor of the library, received a blow from the blackjack when he went to the assistance of Connors. Their assailant then ran from the library, jumped into the truck and drove away. Connors and Bridgeman were treated at the City Hospital for head wounds.

The Librarian

SOME years ago, a business branch in a Western city figured out that it had saved $28,000 in time for business men during that year. This amount was based on the assumption that each patron saved a half hour by the convenient location of the branch and that an average salary of one dollar an hour for each patron was a conservative estimate. The average attendance of that branch was 190 persons a day. Hence, the total time saved for the year at $1 an hour was $28,000.

By ingenious reckoning like the above, the Kirshtein Business Branch of the excellent pamphlet file, the contents of which circulates also and is in constant demand. Pamphlet material may be taken out for three days.

If there were time for speculation at the business branch—but there isn't—the Librarian and her assistant might entertain themselves with definite calculations as to the value of the time they save patrons and the service they render them. Evidently the manager of a great Boston department store was not idly killing the time he spent looking up how much stores are justified in cutting prices because of a "cash and carry" system installed. Nor was it simply curiosity which led another to inquire what per cent of the entire rent should be charged to each floor or department in a store.

The library attendant hoped that the young man who went so painstakingly each month a list of the more important reference and circulating books added to the business library is mimeographed and distributed. More than five hundred copies of this list are taken by patrons each month. The business branch sends several copies of this list to some of the large firms which have librarians who distribute them among the departments.

It is interesting to note the highly diversified reading preferences of the patrons of the business branch, as the Librarian did by wandering about and peering over shoulders. Among the material being examined at 3 o'clock last Thursday afternoon was the following: Brown's letters, a magazine article on coconut oil, Sources of Investment Information; a commercial atlas, a copy of the Investigator, monthly price charts; looks on real estate law, credit bureau management, salesmanship (a boy of high school age was poring over this), real

(Transcript Photograph by Frank E. Colby)
Reference Room in the Kirshtein Business Branch of the Boston Public Library

Boston Public Library, may be said to have saved about $35,000 of time for its patrons during last year, for the average attendance per day is more than three times that of the other branch. Indeed, the Boston Business Branch has twice as many patrons as any other of its type in this country.

On Feb. 15, the business branch broke its own record for attendance, for 1144 people visited it. Several times since the first of January, the attendance has exceeded one thousand. Circulation is, of course, secondary in a library of this kind, but the increasing number of firm cards issued is evidence of the large use of business books and material for home and office.

Before the opening of this branch, special privilege cards were issued to individual business men who lived outside Boston. Some of these allowed the holder to take out books for two weeks, others for four weeks, and the number of books permitted to circulate on these cards differed. The Trustees have since modified the rule and Mrs. Mary W. Dietrichson, librarian of the business branch, worked out a system by which a card is issued to a firm on the signature of an officer or member on an application.

The card is retained at the business branch and all members and employees of the firm may draw books by signing their own name opposite the charge. Each of these may take out two books at a time. When a book is overdue, the individual is notified and the firm is not bothered except as a last resort. This, by the way, has not to date been necessary. Up to the end of December last, 286 firms had availed themselves of the privileges of the firm card.

In addition to the valuable, up-to-the-minute collection of books on the various aspects of business, the branch has an through their directory of Massachusetts manufacturers to select a likely prospect to apply for a position landed one even in these hard times, and that the caterer who copied a list of secretaries of clubs had a chance to serve some of their banquets.

Among the many who sought assistance from the business branch was an accountant who wanted to learn something of "secret reserves" in business finance; the editor of a Boston newspaper who, when President Hoover spoke of reviving the War Finance Corporation, investigated the provisions of the act establishing that body; a shipper who wanted the specifications as to corrugated paper containers; an exporter of electrical appliances wished to know voltage and type of current used in Norway.

Insurance salesmen read regularly the business branch's "Sesforth Service" for new ideas. The proprietor of a new modernistic restaurant came seeking assistance in finding a suitable name for his establishment. A large insurance company sought the Workman's Compensation Act of Quebec, Canada. A dealer in silks wished to use in his advertising facts about the present low price of raw silk—and had it ever been so low before in the history of prices?

Many questions are "repeaters"—answered many times in the course of a day. Among these are: Manufacturers of radio parts; officials of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company; price of Chesapeake & Ohio stock on March 1, 1913; the Straus bonds refund income taxes in Massachusetts; secretary of the Miami Beach Chamber of Commerce; list of market research laboratories; statistics of production of tin coil; material for a talk by young business men on why we should or should not reduce armaments; amount of imports of tungsten in the United States; credit rating of a Buffalo firm; public debt of the United States from 1915 to date; recent development of the nitrate industry in Chile; directions for making an organization chart.

estate trusts, investments and advertising. Three men at one of the tables were reading, respectively, about textiles, disarmament and the gift and art shop trade. Nearly a young man was studying the Reading With a Purpose Pamphlet on Foreign Relations. Although this particular time of the day is the quietest part, there were very few vacant chairs either on the first or second floors or in the balcony. During the rush hours, from eleven to two, every chair is occupied and each desk and bookcase has its fringe of intent readers.

The Librarian was astonished to find out how many people were still interested in the subject of investments. It is one of the most popular of all, it appears. Mrs. Dietrichson explained that on Mondays when the new investment services come in, they are in demand from early morning until the library closes at six o'clock.

The display window has been one of the business branch's most valuable methods of publicity. The display is changed every three weeks. The assistance of a professional window dresser loaned by Mr. Kirshtein has been of immense value. In many cases other organizations join with the business branch in preparing the display. Last year there were exhibits arranged by the branch and the following: The Boston Port Authority, the United States Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, the Boston City Industrial Bureau and several others.

Just at present "Your Tax Problems and Aids in Their Solution" is the subject of the window display at the business branch. Books, periodicals and Government documents are on view, as well as charts giving the governmental expenditures from 1890-1929 and the taxation and national income for the same period. There are also specimens of State and Federal income tax blanks. As the Librarian passed by a little group of people stood in a bitter wind staring at these blanks with a sort of fascinated horror.

NO PAY CUTS AT LIBRARY

Budget Reduced $100,000
by Various Economies

Only one-eighth of the cut in the Boston Public Library's new budget, made necessary by present-day conditions, is borne by the employees, it was learned today. The remainder will be saved by a multitude of carefully thought out economies scattered throughout the various departments and so arranged that the public service is hardly affected.

The one-eighth borne by the men and women who work in the library and its branches has not been taken out of their regular salaries but has come through a reduction in the amount of extra work done by many of them for the library outside their regular hours of employment.

The economy which the public knows most about is the reduction in the Sunday hours. The central library in Copley sq., which formerly was open from 12 noon to 10 p. m. Sundays is now open from 2 p. m. to 9 p. m., a reduction of three hours. The branch libraries formerly open Sundays from 2 p. m. to 9 p. m. are now open from 3 p. m. to 6 p. m.

Although generally referred to as a reduction in the change of hours amounts to putting the library and its branches on the regular Summer schedule for Sundays considerably in advance of the usual time.

Milton A. Lord, the newly-appointed librarian, said this morning that among the savings effected by this change of hours was a considerable electric light bill. So far as can be done without interfering with efficiency other economies regarding electric lights are being effected.

Librarian Approves Plans

Most of the economies by which the library has cut its budget approximately $100,000 or about 10 percent were planned before Mr. Lord took office but he approved them. According to many in touch with the situation the credit of the smoothness with which the changes are going into effect is largely due to him.

While it has been necessary to make a small cut in the appropriations for new books, patrons of the Boston Library are much better off in this respect than those of many large cities. Philadelphia, for example, made a 50 percent cut in its book appropriation and the unlucky Chicago hasn't bought a book for its library since June, and recently had to cancel its magazine subscriptions.

One economy which can be practiced for only a limited time is in the matter of repairs. Only if the repairs are immediately necessary and actual damage to the property would ensue if they were postponed is work to be undertaken this year. It has also been necessary to postpone the continuance of the work of modernizing the special libraries on the top floor of the central branch.

Boston Transcript

324 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

(Entered at the Post Office, Boston, Mass. as Second Class Mail Matter)

MONDAY, MARCH 7, 1932

Washington Lecture at Faneuil Branch Library

James M. Linehan will give an illustrated lecture on "Washington Lives Again" at the monthly meeting of the Faneuil Improvement Association at eight this evening at the Faneuil Branch Library, Brooks street. President Edward M. Gallagher of the Boston City Council will preside. This will be the last meeting of the association in the old Faneuil Library. With the completion next month of the new branch library building in Oak square the association will transfer its activities to more commodious quarters.

Boston Transcript

THE LIBRARIAN

WITHIN a few days the Faneuil branch of the Boston Public Library will occupy its beautiful new building in Oak square, opposite the site of the great oak under which John Eliot preached to Sachem Waban and his braves. A few steps to the east lies the large tract of tree-covered land formerly the Faneuil estate. In an imposing mansion several hundred feet from Faneuil street the famous Peter, donor of Faneuil Hall, was wont to spend his summers. Here it is said George Washington was entertained. The story is that as General Washington and some of his officers were riding past the Faneuil estate, Mr. Faneuil's daughter saw them and invited them to by wide granite steps and buttresses. The front vestibule is wainscoted with black Belgian marble and opens directly into public space opposite the highly-equipped delivery counter from which all the building activities are controlled. The public space is separated from the adults' and children's reading rooms by ornamental metal and glass screens.

Directly behind the delivery desk the walls take the form of a bay window with steel sash running from floor to ceiling, the lower casement sash opening into the main stack room, while the upper transoms open directly to the outer air; these, together with the large octagonal ceiling sash, amply light the central working space.

The adults' reading room is on the right of the delivery counter and is twenty-six feet by thirty feet and sixteen feet high. It has three large steel casement sash windows on Oak square and three more windows on Bigelow street above the bookcase. The walls are formed bands of silver, red and black ornamented with a silver geometrical pattern. The specially designed lighting fixtures in bronze and chromium further carry out the simple decorative lines of the finish.

The door at the right of the delivery desk leads to a small hall from which the office of the librarian, Miss Gertrude L. Connell, and the work room open. Miss Connell is secretary of the Faneuil Improvement Association and has held the office for about four terms.

The basement has an outside entrance on grade thus avoiding the usual trouble of the common area type. Near this entrance is the boiler room equipped with an automatic oil burning system. The staff room and the kitchenette, equipped with Frigidaire and other modern devices, which connects with it have the floors and are well lighted. There is a book storage room holding 5000 volumes.

Fearing it would be eventually smoothed by the thousands of mounted and come in and have some cherries, a fruit which that section of Brighton produces to perfection. The next day, so the legend goes, General Washington had dinner with the Faneuil family and while cherry pie is not mentioned, it was not lacking. We may be sure. The site of Peter Faneuil's famous old mansion is now occupied by the Florence Crittenton Hospital.

Interior of the New Faneuil Branch of the Boston Public Library

The site of the great oak under which Eliot preached has become the center of a little triangular park facing the new Faneuil Library Building.

On the walls of the librarian's office may be seen two pictures commemorating these historic events. One is a framed facsimile of a page of the Bible which Eliot translated into the language of the Natick tribes, the original of which is in the Boston Public Library, and the other a likeness of Peter Faneuil. The Faneuil Branch Library is built of Indiana limestone and after a simplified modern design, by the architects, Kilham, Hopkins and Greeley.

The main building has a frontage on Oak square of seventy feet and is thirty feet deep. An assembly hall extends along Bigelow street for fifty feet and in the rear of the main building a lower studded extension houses the offices and main book stacks which will hold 6500 books. The main entrance is in the center of the Oak square front approached formed by modern steel bookcases and special cabinets, providing space for 2500 books, set flush with the main walls to a height of seven feet.

The children's room is the same size as the adults' and is finished in much the same manner but with special children's fittings and has the additional attraction of a large open fireplace of black Belgian marble. The overmantel has a decorated panel, painted by Mr. O. R. Freeman of the architect's office who has given unstintingly of his time to the entire project. Approximately 2000 books are accommodated in this room. The floors of all these rooms are of rubber tile laid in a simple pattern of soft dark colors.

At the right of the delivery desk a door opens into a short corridor which leads to the assembly hall. This hall has its own entrance on Bigelow street and also an exit at the rear of the lot. The hall is twenty-four feet wide and thirty-seven feet long and will seat 168. It has a stage with a corridor across the rear connecting with the vestibule of the Bigelow street entrance and also the corridor to the main building.

The hall decorations are a soft gray with accents of Venetian red in the window reveals which are framed with a broad panel of aluminum edged with black. The flat surfaces of the cornice unmounted pictures donated to it, to public library commission of Concord N. H., sent out an appeal to libraries of the State to take some of the assortment. Classified lists of pictures, which the harassed secretary and her staff got together, were recently sent to sixty-one libraries maintaining picture collections. Last week the pictures were divided and sent on their way to those who had sent postage. One collection was presented to the Pembroke Sanitarium. The commission was compelled to take this measure of relieving the congestion at the State library, which had no facilities for circulating or storing the pictures.

Included in the list were collections of American history, animals, fish, insects, birds, butterflies, children, famous people, flowers, fruits, universal history, foreign scenes, New Hampshire subjects and a large variety of pictures of George Washington, which were much in demand on account of the Bicentennial.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, MARCH 12, 1932

Lecture on Ukrainians at Library on Monday

At the request of the Boston Public Library, the Inter-Racial Citizens' Committee of Massachusetts, of which Mrs. William Lowell Putnam is chairman, planned six lectures on the racial background of the races prominent in Massachusetts. "Ukrainian Contribution to World Culture," is the subject of the sixth lecture in the series. It will be presented on Monday evening at 8 P. M. in the lecture room of the library under the direction of Rev. J. Zelechivsky, chairman of the Ukrainian group.

The speaker will be Emil Revuk, editor-in-chief of the Ukrainian daily, Svoboda (Liberty) published in Jersey City, N. J., who has studied this subject from all its angles. Ukrainian folk dances will be presented. Rev. J. Zelechivsky is in charge of the chorus. Miss Anna Kucher the dancing, and the orchestra will be directed by Theodore Homkowsky.

THE BOSTON GLOBE

THURSDAY, MARCH 17, 1932

BOSTON MAN ON SURVEY OF FALL RIVER LIBRARY

FALL RIVER, March 16.—Assistant Librarian Theodore Money of the Boston Public Library today began a survey of the local Public Library at the request of the Board of Finance, whose members desire greater economy and efficiency.

This survey marks the third arranged by the Board of Finance, the other two departments being the Fire and Police Departments. Commissioner Wallace stated that the surveys will not mean a reduction in the personnel of the departments, but the board desires suggestions for more economy and efficiency. Mr. Money will submit a report concerning suggestions which will be revealed as the result of his investigation.

Boston Daily Globe

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 30, 1932

MILTON E. LORD TALKS ON VATICAN LIBRARY

Milton E. Lord, director of the Boston Public Library, told of some of the treasures of the Vatican Library, in his address this afternoon at the Hotel Vendome, before the Women's Italian Club. A program of music was contributed by Miss Theresa Finocchielli, Miss Amanda Fopplano and Miss Inez Arzillo, under the direction of Mrs. Charles McSweeney.

In the arrangements for the meeting Mrs. Frank Leveroni, president of the club, was assisted by Mrs. A. Lafranchi, Mrs. C. Nuttle, Mrs. W. di Marchi and Mrs. F. Sordillo.

Saturday, March 12, 1932.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT.

"As I Will, So I Bid"

Serge Koussevitzky

From a Bust Lately Made by Paul V. Winters. Now on Exhibition at the Public Library

THE LIBRARIAN

WEBSTER, "the Godlike Daniel," whose burning glance and magnificent voice brought so many Americans of last century under the spell of his rhetoric is honored by the Boston Public Library on the occasion of the 150th anniversary of his birth. Now on view in the Treasure Room are books, letters, pamphlets and original manuscripts of the orations, permitting forthright moderns to examine the curious blend of spread eagle oratory and practical common sense on which the great statesman's reputation was built.

The earliest item in the exhibit is a note ordering "three dozen Blank Writs" written from Boscawen, N. H., when the young lawyer was twenty-three. The most valuable object in the exhibit is the leather-bound volume containing the stenographic record of Webster's reply to General Hayne, together with the speech as written out by the stenographer, as well as Webster's own manuscript of the speech as he prepared it for the printing press. Then, too, there is the splendid silver vase, presented to Webster by citizens of Boston in 1835, which is permanently exhibited in the Treasure Room of the Library.

In the current issue of More Books, Zoltan Haraszti, the editor, writes of Webster and his career. Of the speech known as the Reply to Hayne, he says: "The circumstances which gave occasion for the address are little known to the general public. Even the name of General Hayne has been forgotten in the North. The ostensible cause of the debate was the question of restricting the sales of public lands in the West. Senator Foote of Connecticut introduced a resolution, the purpose of which was to limit the sales for a while. Senator Benton of Missouri opposed the resolution, and accused the East of hating the West. General Hayne of South Carolina, continued the attack in even more vehement terms. The New England States, he charged, try to retard the growth of the Western States in order to keep their population from emigrating there—a design that had been originated by the policy of the tariff. At the same time he emphasized that there existed a natural sympathy between the Southern and Western States. After a brief reply by Webster, he made a second speech in vindication of the doctrine of Nullification. The question of public lands was at once forgotten and the interest was centered on the real issue behind the scenes."

It was, of course, the question of States' rights as opposed to Federal power on which the debate hinged. "The proposition," declared Webster, "that, in case of a supposed violation of the Constitution by Congress, the States have a constitutional right to interfere and annul the law of Congress, is the proposition of the gentleman; I do not admit it. If the gentleman had intended no more than to assert the right of revolution, for justifiable cause, he would have said only what all agree to. But I cannot conceive that there can be a middle course between submission to the laws, when regularly pronounced constitutional, on the one hand, and open resistance, which is revolution, or rebellion on the other." A clear, straightforward explanation of Webster's stand. The quarrel, however, is still going on.

Even today there is mounting excitement in the conclusion of the speech. "When my eyes still be turned to behold, for the last time, the sun in heaven, may I not see him shining on the broken and disfigured fragments of a once glorious Union; on States dismembered, discordant, belligerent; on a land rent with civil feuds, or drenched, it may be, in fraternal blood! Let this last feeble and lingering glance, rather behold the gorgeous Ensign of the Republic, now known and honored through the earth."

If Mencklen considered the Gettysburg Address "unintelligible nonsense," what would be his opinion of this? Yet, issuing from the "mastiff mouth" of "that amorphous crag-like face," of Carlyle's description, the message might well have been irresistible.

In the stenographic version, the passage is less stately, Mr. Haraszti points out. Before printing it, Webster considerably rewrote his address. It seems, a close comparison of the stenographic record with the final text—the first taken by Joseph Gales, editor of the National Intelligencer, and the other written from the record by Webster himself—would be highly interesting for the student of rhetoric, is the opinion of the editor of More Books.

It was for his "defense of the Constitution during the crisis of Nullification" that the citizens of Boston presented Webster with the superb silver vase, or loving cup, now owned by the Library. Another arresting item in the exhibit is the last great oration, commonly known as "The Seventh of March Speech." It was the address, Mr. Haraszti reminds us, that "turned his most devoted admirers into rancorous enemies. Webster, the idol, was derided as a traitor, and even the gentle Whittier saw in him the personification of Ichabod."

According to Webster's speech, he acquiesced to the extension of slavery in Texas, although he had said two years before: "My opposition to the increase in slavery in this country, or to the increase of slave representation in Congress is general and universal." As a result, says Mr. Haraszti, a number of embittered people thought that his aspirations to the presidency influenced Webster in accepting the compromise. The present generation, he declares, is inclined to judge his attitude more justly. There is every reason to believe that Webster was genuinely frightened by the perils of secession. The dismemberment of the country, the specter of the Civil War, was constantly in Webster's mind while he spoke, and subsequent events certainly have justified him. And it cannot be doubted, concludes Mr. Haraszti, that by helping to forestall the Civil War for ten years he rendered an invaluable service to the Union.

One may also see, in this exhibition, a splendid daguerrotype picture of Webster, taken when he was sixty. And finally there is the manuscript of the Eulogy on Daniel Webster delivered by Rufus Choate, on July 27, 1853, at Dartmouth College. In the printed pamphlet which accompanies it, the text runs to one hundred pages. The writing, declares Mr. Haraszti, is as individual as any that one may see anywhere. How the printer was able to read it is a marvel. In Choate's address, Mr. Haraszti has discovered a sentence consisting of one thousand two hundred and eighty-three words, being the longest sentence in any recorded speech.

BOSTON POST, MARCH 30, 1932

Director Lord Tells of Pope's Visit to Library

An informal speech delivered by Milton E. Lord, recently appointed director of the Boston Public Library, featured the closing day of the Eastern regional convention of the Catholic Library Association which concluded a two-day meeting at Boston College yesterday. Mr. Lord, who spent some time in reclassifying the volumes of the Vatican Library in Rome, was an invited guest at the discussion and in response to requests spoke on his experiences while working at the Vatican.

At Public Library

With the Candid Camera

By CANDID CAMERA

I took a stroll to the Boston Public Library to show you folks around the building. There are so many books in the collections there that no one could ever read all of them, even if he lived to be 100 years old.

As you pass in the main door there is an information booth. People who do not know where to find books and information need only ask William Shapiro, the information clerk. He knows.

Vera Manello, of Dorchester, a Boston University student, finds the reference books very helpful. Here she is going through one of them.

And then there is the reading room, where one can read if he does not want to take the book out. We see busy girls scanning books.

Of course there must be law and order in the library. This matter is well taken care of by Officer Magnus T. Nelson of the force, whose duty it is to silence noise makers. (Staff Photo)

DUMMY TREES IN PUBLIC LIBRARY COURTYARD

Device Used by Landscape Architect to Ascertain Location and Size of the Real Thing

DUMMY TREES IN BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY COURTYARD

"What are those trees and what are they there for?"

That is the question which has been in the minds of a good many visitors to the Boston Public Library recently on seeing certain rather odd-looking trees standing in the corners of the library courtyard. One man who saw the trees when they were brought in commented on the fact that the roots had been cut off. These trees are merely dummy trees, it was learned from Arthur A. Shureliff, the landscape architect, who, with the cooperation of Frederic H. Curtiss of the examining committee of the library and the librarian, Milton E. Lord, is beautifying the courtyard. They are being used experimentally in order to ascertain the best possible location and size of tree for their purposes.

Several locations have been tried and the dummy trees are now in what will probably be the chosen place, in a corner of the courtyard where, in summer the green foliage will show beautifully against arches. The dummies, by the way, are real trees, not artificial ones, as at least one visitor supposed.

Mr. Shureliff says that trees picturesquely called "Trees of Heaven" will be used. These trees, he pointed out, will grow in deep shade and sour soil both of which are found in the courtyard. They do well in cities, as they are able to stand the smoke and dirt with which city air is laden. Many of them are already growing in Boston.

Mr. Shureliff said that this use of dummy trees is one of the modern ways of working out plans. He used it when he did the much larger courtyard of the Museum of Fine Arts. By their use it is possible to determine not only the best location, but the approximate size desired. Those for the library courtyard will be from 15 to 20 ft high.

Public Library Annual Party

J. P. Moores. Margaret Collins.

The Boston Public Library Employees' Benefit Association are holding their annual party at the Hotel Bradford tomorrow night, Easter Monday, March 28. Bridge, whist and dancing comprise the programme, with music being furnished by Roy Lamson's orchestra. Many beautiful prizes for both bridge and whist have been donated by the various branches and departments throughout the library system.

His Honor Mayor James M. Curley is expected to attend, as will all the library trustees and Director Milton E. Lord.

The following committee has been working for the success of the party: James P. Moores, Edith Von Schoppe, William E. Clegg, Gertrude E. Connell, Margaret Calnan, Mary McDonough, Pierce E. Buckley, Francis J. Hannigan, Joseph J. Crowley, Margaret Collins, Anna Manning, Beatrice Coleman, Emil Hoffman, Chester R. Walsh, William E. O'Hara, William B. Gallagher, Benjamin Rudd, bridge and whist; Robert F. Dixon, James J. Kelley, prizes; Russell Scully, Mary E. Curley, Kathleen Woodworth, Charles J. Gillis, William P. Hickey, publicity; Alice M. Gray, Helen Morrissey, favors.

LIBRARY GROUP PLANS ANNUAL PARTY MONDAY

The Boston Public Library Employees' Benefit Association will hold its annual party at the Hotel Bradford on Easter Monday evening, March 28. Bridge, whist and dancing comprise the program. Many prizes for both bridge and whist have been donated by the various branches and departments throughout the library system.

The association takes pride in that it celebrates its 30th anniversary in May and that the proceeds from the annual party this year will be used to help finance a banquet for all its members on this event. Mayor James M. Curley is expected to attend, as will all the library trustees and Milton E. Lord.

JAMES P. MOORES

The following committee is in charge: James P. Moores, chairman; Edith von Schoppe, secretary; William E. Clegg, treasurer; Gertrude E. Connell, Margaret Calnan, Mary McDonough, Pierce E. Buckley, Francis J. Hannigan, Joseph J. Crowley, reception; Margaret Collins, Anna Manning, Beatrice Coleman, Emil Hoffman, Chester R. Walsh, William E. O'Hara, William B. Gallagher, Benjamin Rudd, bridge and whist; Robert F. Dixon, James J. Kelley, prizes; Russell Scully, Mary E. Curley, Kathleen Woodworth, Charles J. Gillis, William P. Hickey, publicity; Alice M. Gray, Helen Morrissey, favors.

FANEUIL BRANCH OF BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY DEDICATED AT OAK SQ

BRANCH OF BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY AT FANEUIL

The Faneuil Branch Library, fourth of the proposed 22 branch libraries to provide for each ward of the city, was dedicated last night at Oak sq. More than 400 persons were present in the auditorium and Mayor James M. Curley appeared as the principal speaker. He spoke briefly on the subject of arousing and sustaining the interest of young people in education by means of libraries.

Pres Edward M. Gallagher of the Boston City Council presided. The other speakers were Milton E. Lord, director of the Public Library; Mrs.

Thomas F. McMahon, chairman of the Better Homes Association, and Miss Gertrude L. Connell, who will be librarian of the new branch.

THE BOSTON HERALD

MONDAY, MARCH 28, 1932

The trees that will do best in the deep shadows and sour soil of the Boston Public Library's courtyard are called "trees of heaven." The person who named them seems to have made an obvious mistake.

The Public Library of the City of Boston
Faneuil Branch Library

Gertrude L. Connell, Librarian

Dedication Exercises of the New Library Building

March 30, 1932 at 8 p.m.

CHAIRMAN

COUNCILOR EDWARD M. GALLAGHER
President of the Faneuil Improvement Association

SPEAKERS

HON. JAMES M. CURLEY
Mayor of the City of Boston

MR. MILTON E. LORD
Director of the Boston Public Library

MR. HENRY J. PARKER
President of the Women's City Club of Boston

Rev. JAMES J. CONNOLLY, S.J.
Rector of the Church of Our Lady of the Annunciation

Rev. JAMES MURPHY
Pastor of the Church of Our Lady of the Annunciation

Rev. ANDREW MURPHY
Pastor of the Church of Our Lady of the Annunciation

MRS. THOMAS McMAHON
Chairman of the Brighton Better Homes Committee

Music by Brighton High School Pupils

WOMEN'S CITY CLUB OF BOSTON

MILTON E. LORD
"EVERYDAY LIVING IN ITALY"

Clubhouse, Tuesday, April 5, 6.30 P.M.

WE are to have the pleasure of entertaining at dinner on April 5 the new Librarian of the Boston Public Library, Mr. Milton E. Lord.

Despite his youth, Mr. Lord may be said to have led an adventuresome career in the field of library work. He is familiar with all the great European libraries, as well as with our own Harvard Library, and his latest achievement was in helping to reorganize the Vatican Library, as a member of a commission of five American librarians appointed to carry out this work.

In addition to his work at the Vatican, Mr. Lord spent four years in Rome as Librarian of the American Academy. Thus it is as a resident of long standing in Italy that he has chosen to speak to us on "Everyday Living in Italy."

* See note on page 20.

Boston Daily Globe

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 30, 1932

CATHOLIC LIBRARIANS END BOSTON MEETING

Milton E. Lord Tells of Vatican Experiences

An informal talk by Milton E. Lord, director of the Boston Public Library, in which he told of his experiences in Rome while a member of the committee of five Americans who reorganized the Vatican Library, was the highlight yesterday of the final day of the Eastern Regional Conference of the Catholic Library Association at Boston College.

The second day of the convention opened with a mass, celebrated by Rev. William M. Stimson, S. J., president of the association and librarian of Boston College. During a business meeting Fr. Stimson said the aims of the association were to foster initiative and encourage any movement tending toward the progress of Catholic libraries. A tribute was paid to John M. O'Laughlin, editor of the Catholic Library World.

At noon the delegates were guests of Boston College at a luncheon. Rev. Patrick J. McHugh, dean of the college, presided in the absence of Rev. Louis J. Gallagher, S. J., president of the college.

In the afternoon Sister Joan Patricia, S. J., librarian at Regis College, Weston, Mass., spoke on the subject, "From Catholic Colleges Should Come Catholic Librarians."

The librarians voted in favor of approving the Catholic Library Index for 1931.

Among the speakers at the final session were Mother St. Jerome, S. H. J. C., librarian at Rosemont College, Rosemont, Penn.; Sister Mary Charles, librarian, Albertus Magnus College, New Haven, Conn.; and John M. O'Laughlin.

THE BOSTON HERALD

THURSDAY, MARCH 31, 1932

NEW PUBLIC LIBRARY OPENED IN BRIGHTON

The new Faneuil branch public library, at Faneuil and Bigelow streets, Brighton, was dedicated last night at exercises attended by more than 300 persons and presided over by Councilor Edward M. Gallagher, president of the Faneuil Improvement Association, Mayor James M. Curley and Milton E. Lord, director of the Boston Public Library, were among the speakers.

Mr. Lord said: "The real thing in libraries is represented by the more human approach to books made possible by this branch library." Mayor Curley emphasized the power of an attractive library to keep the boys and girls of any community off the streets and out of trouble.

The Boston Post

THURSDAY, MARCH 31, 1932

NEW LIBRARY IS DEDICATED

Mayor Speaker at the Faneuil Branch

Any appropriation which is used to develop the body or the mind is money well spent, Mayor Curley stated last night at the new Faneuil branch of the Public Library, in Oak square, Brighton, which was dedicated last night. About 600 people crowded the auditorium of the new building to attend the exercises.

The Mayor called attention to the large sums of money which are spent in welfare work, saying that the total of these funds amounted to $7,500,000 in 1931, and with $1,000,000 spent this month.

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 6, 1932

Library Head at Women's City Club

Milton E. Lord, newly appointed director of the Boston Public Library, was guest of honor at a dinner at the Women's City Club last evening and gave an informal talk on everyday life in Italy. Mr. Lord knows this at first hand for he was one of the group of American librarians who went to Rome to reorganize the Vatican Library. He had an interested, sympathetic eye for the manners and customs of Italy and an appreciation of the colorful medieval spectacles he witnessed during his stay. One of the most arresting was the procession of people from all parts of Italy and her colonies who came to pay homage to the Italian crown prince and the Belgian princess before their marriage.

The King and Queen of Italy, who have occupied a villa on the outskirts of Rome since the war, are lovers of books, Mr. Lord disclosed. The Queen collects volumes on Italian gardens and pottery. The King is a noted numismatist and has recently published his twentieth volume on that subject. Mussolini also is a great reader and once declared that one of the books which most impressed him was William James's "Pragmatism."

Mr. Lord told of his meeting with the Pope, who came, as a colleague, to meet the little group of American librarians, all non-believers, at the Vatican Library. Before his elevation to the papacy, his holiness was librarian of the Vatican and commuted to his former post, the Ambrosian Library at Milan. When he became Pope, he still had a return ticket to Milan.

Librarians, of whom there were many present, were interested to hear that the Pope decided to use steel bookshelves made by an American firm, although the bid was several thousand dollars higher than those of European competitors. American cataloguing schemes also were put into effect, as well as methods of lighting and air conditioning. The work is being carried on, Mr. Lord explained, through a grant from the Carnegie endowment, and is progressing rapidly.

BOSTON POST, APRIL 6, 1932

HONOR NEW LIBRARIAN

Milton E. Lord, newly appointed Librarian of the Boston Public Library, Mrs. Lord were honor guests at a dinner of the Women's City Club of Boston last night. Mrs. William Stanley Parker, president of the club, presided.

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 20, 1932

Music in The Land

Here in Boston

NOTABLE visitors are drawing near. By gift of the Coolidge Foundation, the Library of Congress is dispatching to Boston for two concerts the renowned Pro Arte Quartet of Brussels. There is no more distinguished string ensemble in Europe. It cultivates the newer music and excels in it. So, it does it visit the United States. It will be heard in Boston on Sunday, May 1—in the afternoon at 3.30 at the Matapan Branch of the Public Library; in the evening at eight in the Lecture Hall of the Central Library. The program for both concerts traverses Haydn's Quartet in G major (Op. 54, No. 1); Beethoven's Quartet in G minor; Debussy's Quartet in G minor. Mr. Harris is a young and boldly innovating American composer none of whose music has hitherto been heard in Boston. To both concerts admission will be free.

Boston Daily Globe

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 6, 1932

LORD SAYS ITALY'S KING NUMISMATIST

Boston Library Head Talks
at Woman's City Club

King Victor Emmanuel of Italy is a numismatist and has recently published a work of 12 volumes on that subject, according to the new director of the Boston Public Library, Milton E. Lord, who was a year ago one of a commission of five Americans which reorganized the Vatican Library in Rome.

Mr. Lord so stated last evening after dinner as a guest at the clubhouse of the Women's City Club, 40 Beacon st. He added that the King and Queen of Italy, and their daughter, take a real interest in books and in libraries.

Recalling his experiences at the Vatican, he told how the Pope, one Sunday morning, visited the five American commissioners in the Vatican Library to observe what changes were being made. He said His Holiness waited all customary ceremony and shook hands and conversed in friendly manner with the Americans, all of whom, as it happened, were Protestants.

The Pope even joked, it was said, over the prominent part which America was taking in his library, even to furnishing steel stacks and shelves, though at a higher cost than they could have been purchased in other countries.

Great care has to be taken in the Vatican Library, Mr. Lord stated, to preserve an equable temperature and condition of moisture in the atmosphere, as otherwise excessive dampness and dryness at different seasons in Rome would seriously affect the bindings of the books.

The speaker caused a laugh by telling of finding in the Pope's library a book published in New York, entitled "How to Become a Patrolman."

In reference to the catastrophe in a section of the Vatican Library some months ago, Mr. Lord said that little damage was done to books, other than that about 4000 must be rebound. Several lives were lost.

The cause of the accident, he declared, was the caving in of a tile roof of a wing of the building, due to the collapse of supporting beams which had been in use since 1888 and were being gradually replaced by steel beams at the time of the cave-in.

The gathering which heard the talk last evening was unusually large. Mrs. Stanley H. Parker, president of the club, introduced the speaker and directed the question period later.

THE BOSTON HERALD

SATURDAY, APRIL 9, 1932

BOOKS FOR SEAMEN

The plan of supplying merchant ships with small libraries originated during the war, when the American Library Association undertook the work. After the war, however, the association withdrew and Mrs. Henry Howard, head of the social service bureau of the recruiting service of the United States shipping board, undertook to form a separate organization, which eventually became the American Merchant Marine Library Association.

Since then the work has expanded steadily year by year, with more than 1000 American ships now regularly receiving A. M. M. L. A. libraries. Recently the service has been extended to isolated life-saving stations, light-houses and lightships. Letters from officers and seamen speak repeatedly of the enjoyment they obtain from their little libraries, and there is now no question that the work is thoroughly appreciated and well worthwhile. Next week, from April 11 to 16, the Boston dispatch office is making its annual collection of books. These may be left at the Boston Public Library or any of its branches, whence the books will be sent to men sailing the seas under the American flag.

THE LIBRARIAN

WITHIN a few weeks the Boylston Branch of the Boston Public Library will move to its new location, 433 Center street. In this move the library has followed the example of one of the earliest Boston families whose name is closely associated with the Jamaica Plain section of Boston. William Curtis came over on the ship Lion with his wife and her brother, John Elliot, in 1632. Mr. Cur-cial life of Boston during the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries. Dr. Zabdiel Boylston's successful fight in 1721-22 in favor of inoculation for small-pox, which prevailed against fierce public opposition and even against a city ordinance, is a world-known episode. Harvard College has been much indebted to at least two Boylstons. Nicholas, who was a wealthy merchant, came promptly and liberally to her aid after the burning of the college library in 1764, and his later (1771) bequeathed a fund for the endowment of the Boylston professorship of rhetoric and oratory. Ward Nicholas Boylston founded the Boylston Medical Library in 1806 and subsequently established two funds to provide prizes—one executed with great care. As one passes through the vestibule into the lobby, the fine oak woodwork, leaded glass, and antique plaster, give an immediate impression of richness and warmth.

The interior of the main portion of the building is one large room with low screens of wood and leaded glass around the lobby. In the center is the circulation counter which, according to the librarian, is completely satisfactory in every respect. These screens divide the remaining space into an adults' and a children's reading rooms.

Over all is a beautifully decorated ceiling of geometrically patterned plaster ribs and beams, with running bands of ornament, which has as a precedent a

Interior of the New Boylston (Roxbury) Branch of the Boston Public Library

He received permission from the governor to build a house "near Stony Brook" at the junction of what is now Paul Gore and Lamartine streets, almost directly opposite the 160 Lamartine Street Boylston Branch.

In 1722 Samuel Curtis, grandson of William, built the White hip-roofed house still standing at 429 Center street, next door to the new library building. This house is now occupied by his great-great-grandson. The editor of this column is moved to express a wish that some public-spirited friend of libraries may wish to preserve this beautiful example of early eighteenth century architecture by presenting it to the library as a children's house for uses similar to that of the children's house connected with the Toronto Public Library.

So many interested persons have asked why this section of the city is named Boylston that it may not be amiss to quote from the quarterly bulletin of the Boston Public Library, October, December, 1921, several paragraphs which relate to the Boylston family whose name the district perpetuates.

"The family has played a conspicuous part in the professional, industrial and for eloquence and one, for dissertations (two annually) on some medical, physiological or allied subject. The latter were competed for and won by such men as Oliver Wendell Holmes, David W. Cheever and B. Joy Jeffries."

The Boylston mansion was located at the corner of Boylston and Center streets, diagonally across the street from the new library.

The architects, Maginnis & Walsh, designed this beautiful little building in the Jacobean style, the details of which remind one of an old English manor. The two large bay windows on either side of the entrance on the street facade are like the windows of the great halls in these homes. The balustraded stairway and terraces lead up to a large arched entrance, framed with interesting details showing Renaissance influence.

The exterior walls are faced with Indiana limestone of two textures. The principal details and trim are of smooth facade stone and the areas are faced with rough sawn stone, giving a change of shade on the surface which as time and weather act will intensify in color. The leaded glass windows and side entrance to the building and to the lecture room were given careful study, and have been similarly patterned ceiling in the library of Rufford Abbey, Nottinghamshire, England, the county home of the Saviles, among whose descendants was Sir Henry Savile, one of the translators of the King James version of the Scriptures. Lighting fixtures of interesting design add to the attractiveness of the ceiling and provide ideal lighting. The reflecting globes of opal glass are provided with bands of hammered lead.

With the exception of tables and chairs, all equipment is flush with the walls. Newspaper racks, atlas and magazine cases, card and picture files are made part of the bookcases so that the entire floor space of the room is left free for the use of the reading public. At the rear of the lobby is an alcove, which will be used by "intermediate" students for reference work. From this reference alcove a door leads to a well-lighted and completely-equipped work room. To the right of the work room is the office of the librarian, Miss Margaret Calman. In the basement are the staff room, kitchen, book storage room and lecture hall, which has an outside entrance on the south side of the building. This room, which has a stage of ample dimensions, will seat two hundred people.

The wall colors throughout the building are of warm gray and light buff; the specially designed furniture and fittings, antique oak.

Boston Daily Globe

FRIDAY, MARCH 4, 1932

LIBRARY STAFF HONORS RETIRE POLICEMAN

Staff members at the Boston Public Library yesterday afternoon showed their appreciation of patrolman Willie Benjamin of the library police detail, presenting him with a smoking stand and a desk set.

WILLIE BENJAMIN

Patrolman Benjamin, who is 67, was retired last week from the police force after 43 years of service. He entered police service in 1889, as a patrolman attached to Station 15, in Charlestown. He was a member of the Charlestown Station for 10 years and was transferred to the Dudley-st Station in 1898, where he was on the roster for 12 years.

In 1910 he was injured while on duty and on his return to work was made a member of the library police detail attached to Station 16. When he was pensioned, last week, he had been a member of the library detail for more than 21 years.

Yesterday afternoon the members of the library force congregated in the staff room and Henry Frye made the presentation. Joseph Moxley headed the group in arranging the presentation.

Benjamin expressed his appreciation.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, APRIL 23, 1932

Boston Library Head Guest at Simmons

Milton E. Lord, librarian of the Boston Public Library, was guest of honor at a tea given by members of the Simmons library school faculty in the college lounge. Before the tea he gave an informal talk in which he described his work in the Vatican Library at Rome.

The meeting was arranged by June R. Donnelly, director of the Simmons school. Dorothy S. Evans, 32, Wallace, N. C., and Julia R. Armstrong of the graduate division, Rochester, N. Y., presided. Librarians from Boston, Cambridge and Brookline were also guests.

Mr. Lord to Speak Sunday

Milton E. Lord, director of the Boston Public Library, will be the guest speaker of the Jecomen Club at a meeting of the organization to be held Sunday afternoon.

Mr. Lord, internationally known for his work, is a former Lynnite and a graduate of Classical High School. He is the youngest man ever to head the Boston Public Library. His appointment as director was praised throughout the entire country.

Though Mr. Lord has been tendered a number of receptions in Boston since his appointment, his visit to the Jecomen Club will be the first appearance in his native city in his official capacity.

The Latest Branch Library

The Building, of Jacobean Architecture, Just Completed, at 433 Center Street, for the Roxbury Branch of the Boston Public Library

APRIL 28, 1932

Boston Evening Transcript

Visioning Eye

Roy Harris

Innovating American Composer Whose String-Quartet Will be Played for the First Time Hereabouts at the Public Library on Sunday

SATURDAY, APRIL 30, 1932

Paul Rosenfeld Introduces The Composer Descending
On Boston Tomorrow

BY grace of Mr. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Bostonians may hear on Sunday a first specimen of the music of Roy Harris, bepraised by some, undevilled by others, let alone by those who would like to think of him as an American composer. Out of California where he now dwells, comes this string quartet of 1929, to be played in the afternoon at the Branch Library in Mattapan, and at the Central Library in Copley Square. It is by the same Harris, the renowned Pro-Arte Quartet, Belgian masters of the newer music. There is propaganda for Harris too admiring to be plausible. There is also cold disregard that is a little right in its mood. And informing what lies through pages from Paul Rosenfield's "An Hour with American Music," published by the J. B. Lippincott Company of Philadelphia and London. With the courteous permission of all concerned they follow here-with.

Roy Harris, a veritable arrival on the musical horizon (his discovery being said to have resulted from one of Elley Ney's last forays into the West), constitutes one of the chief potentialities of American music; perhaps of modern music altogether. This eminence is principally due to the sweep and grandeur of his melodic writing; though the originality and exquisiteness of certain of his harmonic passages, principally in the piano sonata, is scarcely inferior to it. Harris's melodic line has an immense amount of variety, a principle coincident with the variety of his harmonic writing in the scherzo of the sextet and the alla cadenza passage of the scherzo of the piano sonata. It is sustained with exceptional ability, and careers, and dances, and keeps on leaping and renewing itself with a refreshing vigor. It is actually a series of leaps, and, as such, it constitutes his themes on notes and intervals and with accents quite different from those of which they were first conceived; preserving, none the less, their original characters. The continuity meanwhile is sustained by the pitch; for, as the melody leaps, it is constantly actually moving about ground-notes that remain implicit in spite of the fact that the melodies themselves never come quite to repose on them. This gives his melodic conduct a certain irregularity and looseness, makes it affect one like a series of leaps, and, as such, it is actually moving about ground-notes that remain implicit in spite of the fact that the melodies themselves never come quite to repose on them. This gives his melodic conduct a certain irregularity and looseness, makes it affect one like a series of leaps, and, as such, it is actually moving about ground-notes that remain implicit in spite of the fact that the melodies themselves never come quite to repose on them. This gives his melodic conduct a certain irregularity and looseness, makes it affect one like a series of leaps, and, as such, it is actually moving about ground-notes that remain implicit in spite of the fact that the melodies themselves never come quite to repose on them.

In Ensemble.—Sunday afternoon, in the Lecture-Hall of the Mattapan Branch of the Public Library at 3.30. Sunday evening at 8 in the Lecture-Hall of the Central Library, chamber-concert by the renowned Pro-Arte String Quartet of Brussels, now on tour in America by grace of the Coolidge Foundation (Haydn's Quartet in G major, Op. 54, No. 1; Quartet by Roy Harris, American composer; Debussy's Quartet in G minor). Admission free.

toward the close; in one spot dangerously reminiscent of one of Brahms's Intermezzi. On the whole, the typical Harris composition remains a curious sort of now-you-see-it-and-now-you-don't: the disarming appeal of speaking often makes wonderfully homely and even sentimental and sometimes slackly and a little inexpensively. Just why there should be this disparity between Harris's fast and Harris slow: between the scherzo and lento of his sextet, the finale and all the preceding movements, is simply a puzzle, the least, almost impossible to tell. Perhaps the cause lies in the circumstance that the fast tempo embody the more motory, and the slow the more lyrical aspects of his impulse; and that, so far, the typical American psyche is more the merely motory. The latter is more the meretricious condition of youthfulness? But the cause of the disparity is obscure, the fact of it is anything but so.

Add to this unevenness a certain inexperience and undeftness with the forms and mediums employed, and the present probationary status of this frequently starkly individual musician becomes comprehensible. Occasionally, as in the fugato of the two polyrhythms in the last movement of the sonata, Harris shows a masterly control of the piano for the pianoforte is invariably rich and idiomatic. Form, however, is not his forte, and his feeling for instruments other than the great solo one, is uncertain. He lately spoiled some very fine ideas, employed in the three choruses on verses of Whitman's, by some inept vocalization and treatment of the vocal body was urged to symphonic, etc. and the union between the piano and the voices anything but effective.

Still, very few American composers, indeed, very few composers throughout the world, give greater promise of growth than this awkward, serious young plainsman. His music is not "working" about him; he has put that aside. The melodic line of his, born right out of the experience of his race, to important uses, Harris's allegro movements have imitated. They are authentically grandiose; bare, naked and heroic. His range of motion is somewhat broader than that of some other of his coevals aesthetically his superiors; while his musical interest in point of architecture to the Aaron Copland of the "Piano Concerto" human experience; and while it is less lavishly intense than Carlos Chavez's, it traverses a greater variety of moods. Hassie's piano sonata carries the pathos of the "Piano Concerto" to the point where homey forms seem charged with the feeling of many struggling, patient, tragical existences on this continent: on the farms, in the homes, long ago, here now. And it is this that has made the expectancy for getting through with his experiences: his music has emotional progression and reaches round conclusions. And it is doubtful whether if he does not, he has drawn, any other American composer, original or traditional, will bulk larger than himself.

MONDAY, MAY 2, 1932

Music

Pro Arte Quartet

By gift of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation of the Library of Congress, a concert was given last night in the Lecture Hall of the Boston Public Library by the Pro Arte Quartet of Brussels (Messrs. M. A. Onnou, M. L. Halleux, M. G. Prévost and M. R. Maas). The program was made up of Haydn's Quartet in G major, op. 54, No. 1, and the Quartets by Mr. Roy Harris and by Debussy.

Mr. Harris is a native of Oklahoma, now resident in California. His Symphony has been played in Rochester, and his Sextet for clarinet, strings and piano in Paris. So far as can be discovered, this was the first time a work of his kind had been heard in Boston. In the usual four movements, with conventional labels, it is itself anything but usual or conventional. It is the 'work of a composer who, if he has not yet quite found himself, has something of his own to say.' Uneven in quality, it is perhaps not too fanciful to imagine that there is in it something of the flavor of the native soil that one finds in the plays of Mr. Lynn Riggs. Mr. Harris must be added to the list of American composers from whom something may be expected.

The Pro Arte Quartet not only gave an amazingly sympathetic performance to this indigenous music, but displayed a fine sense of style in the conveyance of the disparate items that accompanied it on the program. This group has grown in artistic grace since it was heard here six years ago. The vigor which then seemed a little exaggerated has been moderated. Delicacy has been added to the list of virtues then revealed. The playing last night in the Haydn and Debussy quartets was marked by the subtlety, flexibility and musicality we do not recall the like since the heyday of the Florenzleys. The large audience rewarded the players with such warm and prolonged applause that extra pieces were added to the program.

L. A. S.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 18, 1932

The Ron Jewish Book Week Committee, in co-operation with the Boston Public Library, will conduct an evening lecture series on Jewish literature in the main lecture hall of the Central Library at Copley Square, on Monday, May 21, and Sunday, May 22. It will sponsor a radio broadcast on the significance of Jewish Yiddish life and special programs devoted to scholarship, which will be featured in the city's leading newspapers in those sections of the city having entire perfect collections of manuscripts and early books will be exhibited in the Central Library and several of the branches. The special evening list of the books of Jewish literature during the Boston Public Library's Jewish Book Week will be supplemented by the Judaica bibliography published in 1931, and bring it up to date. On Thursday evening, May 24, at 8.15 P. M., Professor Joseph H. Hertz will speak at the Mattapan Branch Library. The Spirit of Yiddish Literature Survey in English with Readings from the Original.

MONDAY, MAY 2, 1932

The Surprise Of the Season At Its Close

The Noted Pro-Arte Quartet,
The New Music of Harris,
In Belated Hearing

EVENTS in our little world of concerts often can happen strangely. No one may have been aware of the end of the season; yet last evening a renowned string quartet played publicly for the first time in Belgium—the "Pro Arte" of Brussels. It was assembled at the end of the war. Messieurs Alphonse Germain and Laurent Halleux, violins; members. To them is married a Mademoiselle Maas, violoncello. Their reputation rose after they came home and in European capitals their playing of the most modern little chamber-pieces. Yet they excelled classics. Once before, if not twice, they have visited the city of St. Louis. Then they ventured no concert publicly in the Library. Now they were sent hither by the Library of Congress administering Mrs. Coolidge's "Fondation" for the encouragement of chamber-concerts.

Therefore the virtuosos from Brussels played on Sunday afternoon in the auditorium of the Branch Public Library at Matthews. On Sunday evening in the Lecture-Hall of the Central Library. Therefore again, admission to all the concerts was free. Nor was either adversity or the newspapers, except as they might make a kindly mention of it. Under these circumstances it was not more truly the former—Bostonian—consequence for chamber-concerts was lacking; with the name and fame of the Pro Arte Quartet and the little knowledge to the students in our music schools. A miscellaneous company heard the Beethoven four, interspersed with the American concertgoers who on every occasion and under all were quick to feel the faith. One and all were quick responsive to the rare quality of the consistent artist. It did not end, indeed, until informed from Brussels had added the numbers to the appointed program—an unheard without precedent in twenty-odd years of chamber-music in Boston.

In its choice, balanced fashion the Pro-Arts Quartet played the classic, a modern and a modernistic number, and also from an American composer of the new generation. The classic was a Quartet, a mature Haydn, in G major, Number 14, the Fifty-four. Frequenters and students of chamber-music may recall it for the light but not Haydn laid upon the opening Allegro and the final Presto; for the running figure which both sparkle. Between the quiet, first and the more remarkable first violins, sustained and modulated with the sensibility of a tone-poet; second, a full-voiced and large-outlined Minuet.

The Belgian masters deployed upon this music a tone so finely blended that ear and mind less heard four voices than one; while through that single voice played every subtlety of shading, transition, timbre, enfolded or implied by the composer. They played also with an extraordinary fluidity of movement. The profile of every theme, the outline of every phrase and period, ran clear. Figures, ornament, modulation, fell each into place in this composer's design. Yet from first measure to last all was in light plastic, beguiling motion.

They played, finally, with an instant and inextinguishable sensibility. Haydn was making his strokes of fine-tempered skill; releasing his graceful fancies; setting out what is nothing less than the lyric poetry of the Allegretto: winding from light brilliance to light brilliance, never so deftly accent and fleet of pace—and at every turn "The Pro-Arte" took perfect time. It was all as far from the home-spun Haydn of "the tradition" as are Mr. Toscanini's versions of his more artful symphonies. Indeed there is nothing else with which to compare it.

The modern quartet was Debussy's mid-classic, now nearly forty years old, while memories of the objection and reproach it called forth still linger amongst those who then listened with more delight in the music than patience for the debate. In those days we were all for iridescent, impressionistic, wholly atmospheric Debussy. He must be evanescent or he was nothing. We persisted in this narrow faith until we heard "Pelleas and Mélisande," when we found it rather outraged by the more strenuous passages in the later scenes. The symphonic sea-pieces also piled the rod of correction until we were ready to agree that Debussy could be composer of sustained vigor and outspaking power. Yet to this day "the tradition" of iridescence and evanescence hangs about the Quartet for Strings.

The virtuosos of Brussels discard the ancient notion. Within Beethoven's recollection a performance of Debussy's Quartet has not been sealed in so large a design as was carried with such sonorous voice. We that used to be enraptured by the "discreetness" discovered anew the richness of its texture. We who believed that we heard the rich misty veils, were reminded more than rhythm and propulsive vigor; agreed that atmosphere, are Debussy's equalities. The first movement and the more so the final finale have seldom sounded more impressively, if less impressionistically, than in the hands of the Belgian quart. To new — once merely "glamorous" — the slow movement; while the "Iridescence" of the slow section sparkled above an incisive rhythmic pattern. Debussy's of these nineteen-waxes large over the Debussy concert-hall, of the century; yet keeps the distinctive quality which enforces them with others to which impressionistic fashions then closed our ears.

The modernistic number was the Quartet of Roy Harris, originally prepared by the Belgians, originally prepared for the European festival of the Society of Composers, Music, seemingly continued in their new repertory, now meeting half American composers wish to encourage. None of Mr. Harris's performance. There were some stray song or piano-pieces it might have been heard in Boston. Elizabeth Cady Stanton for Strings, a Sonata for Piano, sundry choral pieces, even a Symphonic. He does not frequent the European musical milieu. He has before him a propaganda too fervent to let itself be persuaded, being willing or unwilling to let itself be persuaded, quite as unashamedly as another snobish composer, the fashionable. Actually, he comes from an Anglo-American stock; is now in his middle thirties; has spent his life in Oklahoma and California, save for brief, but studious, intervals in Europe. Though the present Quartet is dated 1923 those best acquainted with European music count it a relatively early work, attested by the maturer Sextet and

As now heard, with no opportunity for exact comparison, the Quartet leaves impressions behind. It is plainly the work of individual mind and spirit; as only brought to pass by a hand that might be better furnished, more expert and more sensitive than the executive present. It is distinguished in the first movement and in the scherzo by long-continued melodic invention that seems to renew itself. Mr. Harris's melody, less though it is, is only less inspired in the ear and touches the imagination the least. It continues in charming filly, in rebirth after rebirth into new and new and poise, until of his own he puts it by and passes to another more similarly capable of self-renewal, sustained and diversified. In this, the melodic substance, this variety of melodic line, he outstrips most of our living generation, inventing scrap-tons, then with travail conducting their thermore: Mr. Harris gives this mel-an harmonic dress and background seems born of it. He keeps it as well talizing rhythmic motion. Some of his sans trace its movement to the cow-songs of the West. Others find in intervals and accent a Scotch-Irish ty. To the casual hearer in the conhall, as last evening, it generates an individual and an eloquent music, a in impression, however complex in ture.

slow movement and in the finale, "Sostiso," there is like melodic abundance but lessened melodic individuality. The first is lumbered, then satiated with upswelling sonorities, rounded upon rounded curves, thick and of formal texture, slow and rather stalling motion. Before long, Mr. Harris has lost for the most part, the tang, the pitch-bend, the color of his movement and his scherzo. There are modernistic strokes; but the whole is a series of nineteen unexcitingly upholstered and nineteenth-century sentimentalized marchlike passages, too good for aspiration, elevation and grandeur. The elements of that sort of thing, Mr. Harris's music has, but not the music. Half of it betokens a highly intelligent and truly eloquent American composer, the other half a sentimentalism. The other half represents the tenacious heritage of solemn, earthy, unimpassioned fastidiousness, the unimpassioned fastidious, serious and sinuousness known—but also slackness and blunt-fingered. Perhaps the Sonata and the Scherzo and the Corrections are the Sonatas have yet to hear.

H. T. P.

THE BOSTON HERALD

WEDNESDAY, MAY 18, 1932

CAP'N DRURY'S BOOK

Were some historians required to state in few words the main reasons for the American success in the war of the revolution, he would not go far wrong if he replied, "The character of Gen. Washington, and the inefficiency of the British forces." Though it is not generally remembered or accorded adequate space in histories, these forces first became apparent, and were significant here at Boston, the original arena of the war. Burgoyne's campaign in the North has become synonymous with mismanagement. The winter at Valley Forge has caught the popular imagination as the time when Washington best displayed his majestic qualities. The battles of Lexington and Bunker Hill are graphically described in every text book. The equally important chapter of the siege of Boston is half forgotten.

It is in good time that the current issue of "More Books," the Public Library's publication, reminds us of the existence in its collection of the orderly book of a certain Capt. Drury, kept during the winter of 1775-6. From its pages it is possible to discover the extent of the difficulties with which the commander-in-chief had to contend. The militia could not be relied on, for it might march home whenever the service became irksome. The regular army was enlisted only until the first of January, pay was irregular, and a new army was enlisted without great difficulty. When finally the spring came, 11,000 Americans, dispersed and half frozen, were besieging a concentrated force of British of about equal strength.

It is the common impression that the revolutionary patriots were unexcelled as soldiers. They were courageous and self-sacrificing, but desertion, floggings and courts martial were frequent. To disguise the true state of the colonial forces is to underestimate the genius and courage of their commander.

When Howe evacuated Boston, Washington had succeeded in his almost superhuman task of welding a mass of raw and independent minded recruits into a disciplined army. And with it as a nucleus, he was able to succeed in his great work of liberating the colonies.

Boston Transcript

May 4, 1932.

Tuesday, May 10, the Boston Group of Cataloguers and Classifiers will hold a spring meeting at the Harvard Faculty Club, Quincy street, Cambridge. Dinner will be served at 6.15 in the upstairs dining-room and will be followed by three talks on cataloguing problems. T. F. Currier, Harvard College Library, will give an informal report on co-operative cataloguing. The small library and its catalog problems will be considered by Mary H. Davis, of the Medford Public Library. Milton E. Lord, director of the Boston Public Library, will speak from personal experience, on recataloguing the Vatican Library. The dinner charge is $1.25 and members are asked to send check or money order to Miss Ruth G. Heddon, at the State Library, Boston, before May 7.

Boston Transcript
May 18, 1932.

The Boston Jewish Book Week Committee, in co-operation with the Boston Public Library, will conduct an evening on the Jew in literature in the main lecture hall of the Central Library at Copley Square, on Monday, May 23. On Sunday, May 22, it will sponsor a radio broadcast on the significance of Jewish Book Week. Other programs devoted to Yiddish life and special phases of Jewish scholarship will be featured in the branch libraries in those sections of the city having Jewish constituencies. Throughout the entire period rare Hebrew manuscripts and early books will be exhibited at the Central Library and several of the branches will have special exhibits on Jewish life and current literature. A list of the books of Jewish interest added to the Boston Public Library during the past year will be issued to supplement the Judaica bibliography published in 1931, and bring it up to date. On Thursday evening, May 26, at 8.15 P. M., Professor A. A. Roback will speak at the Mattapan Branch Library on "The Spirit of Yiddish Literature: Survey in English with Readings from the Original."

Boston Transcript

124 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

(Entered at the Post Office, Boston, Mass., as Second Class Mail Matter)

SATURDAY, MAY 14, 1932

City Workers Fear Curley's Mystery Act

Searching for Voting List for Non-Residents Leads to Many Rumors

By Forrest P. Hull

Every department of the city is much excited today over Mayor Curley's mystery gesture in ordering the voting lists searched to determine the identity of non-residents on the payrolls. Rumors are flying about thick and fast. Is the move merely a routine matter, as the mayor has suggested, or does it have a particular bearing on the recent presidential primary when the mayor was signally defeated for a place on the list of Democratic delegates to the national convention?

Most of the city workers fear the outcome, particularly in the light of the rumors that the mayor has received a fairly accurate check on City Hall's lack of activity at the polls. There is no question that Mr. Curley expected loyal support for all departments were thoroughly canvassed and the sentiment in his favor was reported as close to 100 per cent as might be expected when the "front office" says the word. But the employees did not express their loyalty in any such proportion. According to the best advised reports, the mayor received less than half the support expected; furthermore, it is said that hundreds of employees received time off to vote and did not go near the polls.

Anyway, the mayor is giving hundreds of employees, and their superiors as well, many anxious hours. Perhaps there is greater anxiety in the departments today than there was in those rather hectic days of 1918 when Mayor Peters, finding an unhappy financial legacy as he assumed his duties, threatened to cut city salaries drastically unless the Legislature should grant him a $3 increase in the tax rate. Furthermore, Mayor Peters let it be known throughout the departments that he might abolish hundreds of positions and make a systematic slash in salaries. Nothing of the sort occurred, however, and after weeks of perturbation City Hall settled down to a very happy four years under the mayor.

Standing By Employees

Mayor Curley has shown no disposition to abolish positions or cut salaries since his present term, even with the pressure so strong upon him to do so for the benefit of the tax rate. He tells of a committee of bankers who conferred with him a few months ago on the question of Boston's temporary loans and of having flatfootedly told them that he would uphold the rights of the employees to the limit, unless the city faced the direct extremity which would require even greater sacrifices than could be foreseen. He did announce that he would refuse all increases, even with the regrading upward of positions, and fill no vacancies unless such action were absolutely essential for the interests of the public.

Soon afterward, the mayor called a meeting of his department heads and delivered an ultimatum that all must contribute one day's pay a month for the benefit of the Public Welfare Department, which at the time was dispensing money for unemployment and other forms of relief to the extent of $1,000,000 a month. Since then the figures have been running much higher and it is unlikely that the year will close with welfare expenditures less than $12,000,000. And there is also the Soldiers' Relief Department's aid to be reckoned with, applications increasing every day since the men began to be laid off on the Kenmore square subway extension project.

The relief situation is a severe one for the city, but there is an anchor to windward in legislative provision that the city may raise and appropriate for this purpose more than was allowed in the $18 tax limit measure. Even with such a provision, and the assurance that the city will receive its full share of the $3,000,000 pledged in public subscriptions, city employees feel that more demands will be made of them by summer, either in the form of increased subscriptions, abolition of positions or the imposition of the stagger system.

Certain department superiors are said to have expressed such sentiments, taking the position that with constant loss of employment in private business the public mind will strongly react against any such favored cleavage as those in city, state or national employ. The time is long past, it is asserted by the more experienced and hard-headed city superiors, when city, state or nation can juggle or use its funds in ways not open to private business and supply its needs by some manner of miraculous draught.

The situation resulting from the presidential primary is similar to that which resulted from Mayor Curley's defeat by Andrew J. Peters in the mayoral election of December, 1917. At that time he expected the wholehearted support of the city employees and months before the election made the bold announcement that the Street Cleaning and Sanitary Foremen's Association of the Public Works Department had sent him a letter in which the mayor's administration was approved and information given that every member of the association is instructed to work for your re-election. From that time forward group after group of city employees assured the mayor of their support and active work for him from that large source was patent to every voter. After the election, however, rumors spread that he might indulge in wholesale reprisals against those city employees who had been reported as having worked against him, but nothing of that sort was attempted.

But the city workers with still more active memories refer to that eventful day, Jan. 20, 1916, when Mayor Curley, in his first administration, ordered the removal of eighteen men who had been from ten to thirty-two years in the service of the city, the most important removal being that of Frank A. McInnes, division engineer in charge of the sewer and water service, and the next day announced that they were merely the first group of more than one hundred slated to go. He declared that his move was actuated by the spirit of economy, the Finance Commission having claimed that $1,000,000 could be saved in the Public Works Department. The rumor was that they had been discharged for political activity for the Storrow sale during the preceding campaign. Anyway, all of them got back in the city service by favorable decisions in the courts under the civil service regulations.

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 27, 1932

THE LIBRARIAN

THERE is one institution which, as a result of "General Depression's" activities, has increased to such an extent in business and in prestige that its progress is regarded as phenomenal. That institution is the Public Library. According to American Library Association figures, over eight million more books were read during 1931 than during 1930. The gain in the branch system of the Boston Public Library was a matter of 531,408 volumes. Special collections of non-fiction bearing on the problems of the hour have been placed

Brighton branch shows some telling examples, prepared by the Women's Municipal League, of good and bad roadside planting. Scattered over the library tables are a sufficient number of seed catalogues to assist enthusiastic garden lovers to make up their seed and plant lists. At Charlestown branch one of the book alcoves has been transformed into a model kitchen, installed by Jordan Marsh Company. City Point branch displays an exact and beautiful model of Mt. Vernon and grounds in contract with the model of a modern Colonial home. Codman Square Branch has obtained from the Women's Municipal League a model entitled "Health Centers in the Home." This exhibit, which includes kitchen, bedroom and bathroom, has been worked out in minute detail. No exhibit thing complete. Neponset Branch windows are rendered attractive by miniature garden exhibits. North End Branch has a very remarkable collection of photographs of homes in Italy, demonstrating how a feeling for line and form can produce beauty with the smallest possible outlay of money. Orient Heights Branch exhibits an attractively furnished dolls' house. Parker Hill Branch shows a model living room installed by Jordan Marsh Company, and a model kitchen planned and installed by Mrs. Elsie Chamberlain of the School of Everyday Art. Phillips Brooks and Roslindale Branches exhibit house models. Roxbury Crossing presents good and bad street conditions, prepared by the Emergency Planning and Research Bureau. South Boston Branch on display and the public has shown its appreciation by freely borrowing the books. During the past three months books on home building and home ownership which have been given a special section have circulated 3730 times.

One of the Model Houses Exhibited in Branch Libraries During Better Homes Week

All winter long the reading rooms of Boston's branch libraries were filled with readers seeking opportunities to fit themselves for better jobs when better times appear, or to forget for a few hours the hard times while they lost themselves in realms of fancy and assisted in building castles in the air or in plucking fruit in gardens of Hesperides. For the children, they have found ready light, warm rooms filled with books and presided over by assistants eager to help and guide them.

In addition to the individual patrons who use the libraries, community associations and clubs have come to depend more and more on the help and information furnished by their community libraries and they have found the lecture halls convenient meeting places in which to discuss plans for civic betterment and community relief.

When any national, State or city project is put before the people the library has its part to play. During the past year it has entered heartily into the plans for the unemployment drive, the White House Conference on Child Health and Protection and the President's Conference on Home Building and Home Ownership. During the week of April 24 to May 1, each of the thirty-three branches is co-operating with the Boston branch of "Better Homes in America." The Massachusetts Housing Association generously co-operated in helping to collect the exhibits.

At the Allston branch drawings of an attractive interior, executed by Mrs. Inger Fleming, are on display. Andrew square branch shows the model of a "fire trap" cellar to strike terror to the holder. His terror is lifted, however, when he turns his gaze toward the fire prevention devices, installed by the Boston Fire Protective Association. At Boylston branch in Jamaica Plain people are admiring the model of a small house with attractive grounds, just the kind one would like to own.

featuring interiors seems complete with-out a model of the kitchen of our forefathers compared with pictures showing modern kitchen interiors. Such a model with contrasting pictures may be seen at Dorchester Branch.

At the East Boston Branch a model girl's room has been arranged by the Home Makers Community Center, under the direction of Mrs. Bowers. This room, furnished by courtesy of Jackson Caldwell company, is located in the adult section. The exhibit in the children's room consists of a model boy's room, the furniture of which was made from boxes by the Boys' Club under the direction of Mr. Johnson of the Central Square Community Center.

Faneuil Branch exhibits the very attractive rest room and kitchen in its new library building in Oak square. Fellowes Athenaeum Branch is prepared, with posters and pamphlets, to give advice to young housekeepers interested in making budgets. The Book Shop for Boys and Girls has loaned to Hyde Park Branch its model library for teachers and parents. At Jamaica Plain Branch the Edison Electric Illuminating Company has installed a display illustrating model lighting. Jeffries Point Branch tells the story of clean and dirty street conditions in realistic posters.

Kirstein Branch has an exhibit prepared by Mr. Harland A. Perkins, showing the different activities brought into play when a house is built. Lower Mills Branch presents a small model of the perfect kitchen and Mattapan Branch recedes in a full-size living room installed by R. H. White Company. The Original Thread and Needle Shop has loaned for a case exhibit miniature models of rooms furnished with furniture of different periods.

The Massachusetts Housing Association has provided Memorial Branch with a startlingly realistic model portraying overcrowded conditions in tenement house sections. Mt. Bowdoin Branch has a special collection of books and posters on the training of children and an attractive case exhibit of craft work done by children. Mt. Pleasant Branch, through the courtesy of R. H. White Company, has a life-size child's room with every-shows back yard gardens. South End Branch shows models of playgrounds and parking places and Tyler Street Branch models of clean and dirty streets. Uphams Corner Branch has been furnished by financial houses in the district with an exhibit entitled "Ways to Save Money."

West End Branch exhibits miniature gardens made by members of the Beacon Hill Garden Club, racial and traditional dishes of racial groups, and as a project, a model boys' camp made by the West End House Boys' Club. West Roxbury Branch has on display a miniature model of a Cape Cod cottage, prepared by the Architects' Small House Service Bureau. Altogether Better Homes Week in the branches of the Boston Public Library may be looked upon as a profitable undertaking.

It is with great pleasure that the Librarian shares with readers this well-deserved tribute to the editor of More Books, the Bulletin of the Boston Public Library. It is from the annual edition of the Boston Medical Library, delivered by Dr. John P. Fulton.

To one properly equipped no part of bibliography holds more treasures than do books of the fifteenth century. It should be a source of great pride to the members of this library that, thanks to the foresight of the late William N. Ballard and the wisdom of the Director, we have here one of the best collections of medical incunabula in the country. But for ordinary people with little Latin, less Greek and no abbreviations, they present formidable obstacles. However, for Zoltan Haraszti of the Boston Public Library they hold no terrors; in a series of erudite, and at the same time most readable, articles published in More Books he has described the contents of the elder incunabula in the Boston collection, and I regard his papers as perhaps the most important contribution to incunabula literature of the last decade. Would that this library could secure his services for the fullard collection!"

12 May 31.32

The Boston Post

Entering the Kirstein business branch of the Boston Public Library, in City Hall avenue, one cannot help wondering how downtown business men ever got along without it.

The reference room on the first floor is usually crowded with clerks, accountants, stenographers, newspaper reporters, lawyers, and just readers. They consult the city directories from nearly every large community in the world.

They copy from books on economics, and politics, and trade in Latin America, and real estate appraisals. It is a very business-like place, and there is little space there for idlers.

***

One convenience the business branch of the library offers is that of looking up a person or a firm in, say, New York in both the street directory of that city and the telephone directory. Before the business branch came one had to wander around from hotel to hotel, hoping to find a place with a copy of a New York telephone directory on hand.

New Jeffries Point Library

Although Remodelled, This Building Is Practically New. It Is at 222-4 Webster Street—"Pukka Row" as It Once Was Called—and Will Be Occupied in a Few Weeks. About 1850, George Plummer, Grocer, and John A. G. MacFie, Pilot, Erected the Two Buildings, with a Party-Wall Between

STORY OF BAY STATE IN BANK HISTORIES

Interesting Collection on Exhibit at Mattapan

A. M. GLOBE MAY 29 1932

A collection of some fifty historical publications of Massachusetts banks is on exhibit at the Mattapan branch of the Boston Public Library, 8-10 Hazleton st. Many of these brochures are items worthy of a collector's attention from the point of typography, layout and illustrations.

Among the publications of especial interest to students of history are: That of the New Bedford Institution for Savings, "1825 to 1925." The cuts of old New Bedford, in sepia tones on antique finish paper, reproduce old-time sketches which have the atmosphere of Currier and Ives prints.

The Melrose Savings Bank tells its story in real literary style, beginning with the statement, "Fifty-four years ago, in the quiet village of Melrose, there lived a group of men with vision. There were not 4000 people in Melrose at the time, and, of course, there were neither house cars, telephones, nor suburban subdivisions. It is safe to say that no one then dreamed of the automobile, nor dared to picture Melrose as a metropolitan city. Not even this particular group of men could have foreseen the Melrose of half a century later, and yet it is quite apparent that they were men of more than ordinary foresight."

The Lynn Five Cents Savings Bank begins with the origin of savings institutions and presents a picture of the first savings bank, which it seems was established by a clergyman in Ruthwell, Scotland, a combination of idealism and thrift which one likes to feel is still present in savings bank administration.

"The Eighteen Fifties and the Five Cents Savings," being a brief account of School st, Province House and the Boston Five Cents Savings Bank, has most charming prints of early Boston and a chatty account of old School st which makes entertaining reading.

"One Hundred Years of Service," 1816-1916, tells the story of the Provident Institution for Savings. To James Savage, lawyer, scholar and philanthropist, the institution owes its existence. James Savage, by the way, edited from the original manuscripts John Winthrop's History of New England.

First Bank Incorporated

The Provident Institution bears the distinction of being the first savings bank to be incorporated in the United States on Dec. 13, 1816.

"On Feb. 11, 1865, Gov. John A. Andrew signed the act incorporating a savings bank, the Union Institution for Savings, in the city of Boston," the word union referring to the preservation tion of the Union as a result of the Civil War.

"The centenary of the Fall River Savings Bank in 1928 occasioned the publication of a charmingly illustrated book, with wood cuts, of early Fall River.

The Lynn Institution for Savings, in its book, "A Century of Service," tells the following story: "More than 30 years ago, a man giving the name of P— G—, deposited $2500. Five years later he withdrew $1100, taking in payment a check. This check was never cashed and P— G— was never heard from again. At various times the bank tried to get some trace of him. Many clues were followed up without result. His accounts in other banks had been likewise abandoned.

"At the end of 20 years the account was advertised as required by law in several papers. No claimants appeared who could prove ownership. Finally, in 1921, upon order of the court, this estate was placed in the hands of a receiver. The Lynn Institution for Savings did not expect to hear of it again.

"Imagine the surprise of the officers when one day recently the original pass book of 1891 and the check dated Dec. 19, 1896, were presented at the bank! Was the mystery of this estate, now amounting to more than $7000, about to be solved? "The apparent owner knew nothing of the long search for him by the bank and the courts. He said that years ago in order to avoid attachment during some domestic trouble he had deposited money under an assumed name. Then, relying on the safety of the banks, and being able to live on his earnings, he avoided all mention of the accounts. Only because now, in his old age he actually needed the money was the silence of years broken."

Salem 100 Years Ago

"1818-1918. The One Hundred Years of the Salem Savings Bank" is the title of a booklet which contains not only a sketch of the bank's history but a brief illustrated "survey of Old Salem as it appeared 100 years ago in those glorious days when its harbor was filled with shipping, its crooked old streets crowded with bronzed and hardy mariners, its warehouses overflowing with the rich treasures of the East, and when swift and handsome sailing-ships bore the name and fame of Salem into every sea and port upon the globe."

The Springfield Institution for Savings for some time issued a periodical called "The Spur." On its 40th anniversary, in 1927, the story of the bank was told in brief sentences which read like a financial fairy tale come true. In an article entitled "During Our 'Century of Service'" it reports that "about $217,000,000 have been deposited in the bank by over 340,000 depositors and no one has ever lost a cent."

"The Bank on a Colonial Highway" is packed with historical information about the trail over which Thomas Hooker traveled from Watertown to Connecticut. Incidentally the story of the Watertown Savings Bank, established in 1870, is told.

There are many other examples of sound banking and good book making in the collection.

SATURDAY, JUNE 11, 1932

COLLEGE STUDENTS DENY BOOK THEFT

Two Are Held for Hearing
June 14

Two college students were arraigned in municipal court today, charged with stealing 19 books from the Boston Public Library while they were employees of the library. They pleaded not guilty and the case was continued to June 14. Judge John Duff released them on their own recognizance.

The students, Nathan Myers of Wildwood street, Dorchester, and John B. Alcardi of Gallivan boulevard, Dorchester, police say, took books that were kept locked in a private cabinet at the library, to be used only by special permission of the library authorities.

Police further allege that Alcardi was compelled to leave college for a similar charge.

Boston Daily Globe

SATURDAY, JUNE 11, 1932

DORCHESTER YOUTHS HELD ON LIBRARY THEFT CHARGE

Nathan Myers of Wildwood st, Dorchester, and John B. Alcardi of Sullivan boulevard, Dorchester, were arraigned this morning by special officers Dodge and Collins of Police Headquarters on warrants charging them with larceny of 19 books from the Boston Public Library.

The youths were employed there as slip clerks.

The youths appeared before Judge John Duff in the municipal court, pleaded not guilty and the case was continued until Tuesday. H. Murray Fakuiski, assistant corporation counsel, appeared for the prosecution. The youths were allowed to go on their personal recognizance.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, JUNE 11, 1932

Charge Larceny of Books from Library

Charged with the larceny of nineteen books valued at $45, Nathan Myers of Wildwood street, Dorchester, and John B. Alcardi of Gallivan boulevard, Dorchester, employees of the Boston Public Library, pleaded not guilty before Judge John Duff in Municipal Court today. The case was continued for hearing Tuesday and the defendants were released on their own recognizance.

EVENING AMERICAN

SATURDAY, JUNE 11, 1932

2 ARE HELD FOR BOOK THEFTS

Two former collegians were in municipal court today charged with the theft of 19 "spicy" books from the Boston Public Library. Both have been employees of the library.

Nathan Myers, Wildwood st, Dorchester, was formerly a law school student. John B. Alcardi, Gallivan blvd., Dorchester, began an arts course in a local college.

They pleaded not guilty of the larceny and were ordered to appear for trial Tuesday.

Library officials explained the books were good literature, though a little hot for general reading, and were kept in a special vault.

They disappeared one by one over a period of weeks, they said Judge John Duff. The books are valued at $49.

Boston Transcript

124 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

(Entered at the Post Office, Boston, Mass., as Second Class Mail Matter)

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 8, 1932

The Librarian

Rambles Among the Bookstacks

TWENTY years of storytelling is a long time. The great writers have frequently done their best work, and sometimes all of it, in a single decade. O. Henry wrote nearly six hundred tales in less than a dozen years. Prolific novelists occasionally finish a hundred full-length stories—large sounding figures until one stops to remember that here in Boston we have a little group of story-tellers who have outrun them all. In twenty years their tales have mounted into thousands, while their "readers," in the fall of the hundred thousand, may be counted by the official children's story-tellers of the Boston Public Library are rounding out an even two decades of strenuously exciting work.

Thirty years ago Miss Marie Shedlock, a remarkable teller of stories for adults, came to Boston from England. One of her special interests was Hans Andersen. Now in 1902 Boston's great central library in Copley square was new, and the recently opened children's room a pioneer in a comparatively unexplored field. Miss Shedlock arrived with letters from the public-spirited philanthropist, Lady Henry Somerset. All through the summer she studied, in the fall wishing before her departure to show her gratitude for many kindnesses, Miss Shedlock offered to tell stories for the children of Boston. So on Thanksgiving Day the lecture hall in Copley square was thronged to overflowing with youngsters of all ages. For more than an hour they listened in wrapt attention to some of the old tales. Afterwards the newspaper devoted much space to a novel project.

Eight years passed, however, before Mrs. John J. Cronin, a kindergarten story-teller for the children of Boston. Through one season she volunteered her services in order to test an experiment both she and Miss Alice Jordan, the children's librarian believed practical. In 1911 being convinced by the marked rise in the numbers and quality of books circulating, the trustees continued the single story group, which met once a week in the old library building of the South End branch. Thirteen years later Miss Jordan was able to report a story hour in "every branch but one." In 1920 the Chamber of Commerce, as part of its post-war Americanization program, helped introduce story-telling into the schools. The innovation proving successful during a trial period of eight weeks in the Samuel Adams school in East Boston, it was gradually developed until by 1924 there were thirty schools using the story-tellers from two to sixteen times during the course of the school year.

In its working out of the story-hour plan Boston differs from the methods employed in most large cities. New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, all employ children's librarians to do the actual story-telling. Many of these young women have been trained especially in this phase of their work at Carnegie Institute, Northwestern University or the courses conducted by their own library. Here in Boston fourteen or fifteen of the thirty-one branches have children's librarians who tell stories informally. But their efforts are supplemented by the three official story-tellers. For today Mrs. Cronin is assisted by both her sister, Mrs. Powers, and her husband, who in 1929 left a position in a Boston banking house to devote all his time to story-telling. Boston children therefore reap the benefit of hearing their favorite tales told largely by folk for whom story-telling is a profession and life-work rather than just one more duty in a long and busy day's routine.

A single, well co-ordinated plan has now been worked out for the whole city. The story-tellers go first to those districts where population lays heavy demands upon cramped playgrounds and library facilities—say the North and South ends, Tyler street and Charlestown. Next, they visit the schools wherever special conditions make it impossible for the children to "come to the books." George Ross of Little, Brown & Company, for example, tells about one young chap who complained to him that he had to sell papers "before, after and during every meeting" in his section. And last night the story hour is carried into the more airy suburbs.

From October through the middle of May story groups run into large figures. A total average weekly audience throughout the city of more than 4000 children is no novelty. Frequently 200 gather at a single sitting, and when others continue to crowd in, they must find room in two halls seen 3381 children attend the Friday evening hour there. Those who have not to appreciate the intensity with which long, continued tales are absorbed week after week. Little ones of five or six share with the older "teen age children" a silence broken only two or three times regularly a course of an hour. One boy drags so the latter won't miss anything. And a strapping Italian boy of seventeen, still on his father's fishing vessel, which often goes out at midnight, which of the boys and girls of grammar school age come to the "little mothers" who give their own readings from "When We Were Very Young" or John Massie, Rachel Field and Elizabeth Coudreyworth. In the North End the boys upstair's perhaps listen to a dramatic rendering of "The White Seal" or "Captains Courageous" at the same moment that the girls downstairs are hearing about Hitty, the doll. Then patrolman Prince strolling in the hall, is torn between such conflicting emotions, because once a story-hour fan himself, he likes to keep an eye on the two young offspring who have taken his place. But not infrequently other gradations and occasionally stray authors, like quiet, timid creator of "Doctor Doolittle," wander in to renew old acquaintance or merely help spin an unexpected yarn.

Little Goldie illustrates why story-tellers must be wide readers. For three years she has attended the group meeting in the basement of the West End branch. In that time she has filled twelve books with the titles of between four and five hundred tales she has read. Few of these have failed to color her bright, eager mind. In Charlestown the Saturdays and the library on Mondays. It has been found large numbers of the audience "repeat" over the weekend, and the fact also true at Lincoln House and South End group organized their own story hour, conducting it all one summer on a roof. But an extensive repertoire is also necessary because the aim is to give the children the "best of the old, the story-tellers no longer find it necessary to clear the shelves of good books remaining idle. On the contrary, they are forced to spread the demand out thinly over a wide area. Imagine a librarian's perplexity when seventy-six readers ask for "The Song of Roland" on one day. It actually happened once, and in 1920 the children of the Samuel Adams school wrote to Mayor Andrew J. Peters, asking for more books and more duplicate copies in the East Boston branch.

The practical results of story-telling are many. Children not ordinarily "bitten" by the library become regular patrons. The others gather round the occasional repetition of their favorite stories a back-ground of imaginative ideas that stays the regular story hours, and when the librarians gather a group about them, some of the children become their own story-tellers. Again, teachers have found story-telling quickens the child's attention as well as his imagination. Many of the little foreigners pick up words to words when spoken, which they find difficult on paper. The boys and girls seem to know the "thousand" as story-telling has been extended in the schools, they have stated in their appealing little notes, that "hearing the spelling" and "seeing the scenes" help them with spelling, grammar, English, history and even, according to one tiny girl, in drawing. One group of Little, Brown & Company, usually started writing stories of their own. Because of Boston's cosmopolitan population there occur two other very tangible results of lasting importance. In their tales about foreign lands the story-tellers are frequently "helped" by children who bring added details through their own grandparents. Again, Italian, Greek, Jew and children from many other races gain from the hero tales that are part of their own blood, a self-reliance that breaks down the feeling of inferiority in a strange land, and carries them on to a race tolerance which is perhaps the greatest gift the bright new world has to offer.

Although story hours are informal, they always live up to the children's strong story, one funny or sad one, and some poetry. Sometimes all three of the story-tellers combine to give one problem, while on other occasions one of them fills the whole hour alone. Choosing their stories carefully to suit individual selections on the presence among their hearers of one boy or girl. Because he will often give "The Big Drum" or "The Scissors Man," while Mrs. Cronin will give their own readings from "When We Were Very Young" or John Massie, Rachel Field and Elizabeth Coudreyworth. In the North End the boys upstair's perhaps listen to a dramatic rendering of "The White Seal" or "Captains Courageous" at the same moment that the girls downstairs are hearing about Hitty, the doll. Then patrolman Prince strolling in the hall, is torn between such conflicting emotions, because once a story-hour fan himself, he likes to keep an eye on the two young offspring who have taken his place. But not infrequently other gradations and occasionally stray authors, like quiet, timid creator of "Doctor Doolittle," wander in to renew old acquaintance or merely help spin an unexpected yarn.

Recently in connection with the Watson Public Library, Boston's three official story-tellers undertook a definite project to see exactly what tangible results might be expected from a special program. Fifteen hundred students in the high schools, fourteen groups in the fourth, fifth and sixth grades took part. At the end of five months the net circulation of books had increased 672, and the story hours had increased 672, and the demand for crime stories had almost disappeared. Several teachers who considered story-telling merely a form of entertainment, changed their minds and called for books and the formation of story-lovers' clubs.

Twenty years of story-telling is a long time. The practical experiments in Boston have shown that it is spontaneously told out loud, that holds the children, drive them away from great literature or writer. When it first learned of the here in Boston, the English Nation commented that a sensitive response to words represents an imaginative response to words. We forget that the Athenians sitting before the plays of Aeschylus and even Shakespeare's groundlings were those sprung from highly cultured parents, possess this same sensibility. Therefore, in cultivating again the ancient art and fifteen children's librarians are helping the city's boys and girls to recapture a long lost birthright.

2 YOUTHS ACQUITTED IN THEFT OF BOOKS

Nineteen Were Taken From Boston Public Library

Judge Michael J. Murray this morning in the Municipal Court made his finding in the alleged theft of 19 books from the Boston Public Library. He found John B. Icardi, a former student at Boston College and Nathan Miers, a former student at Suffolk Law School not guilty and discharged them.

The trial took place Tuesday and occupied about three hours. Judge Murray reserved his decision until this morning.

Judge Murray said that he had no doubt the youths who were employed at the library as runners took the books, but whether it was with intent to commit larceny, he was unable to say.

He said because of the character of the books they might have taken them out of curiosity, and the books might have been returned if it were not for the fact the library officials and the police were making a thorough investigation. The youths knew they were suspected, the court said.

None of the books has been recovered, and it might possibly be that the youths, if they did take the books, destroyed them, said the court.

It was special officers Collins and Dodge who obtained the warrants and made the arrests.

At the trial Director Lord said the books were kept in stack 5, which is a reserved section, that he is the only person that has a key to the section, and when a person calls for one of the books, he must read it in his private office and in his presence.

BOSTON DAILY RECORD

Friday, June 17, 1932

LIBRARY RUNNERS FOUND NOT GUILTY

John B. Icardi, of Dorchester, and Nathan Miers, of Roxbury, employed as runners at the Boston Public Library, tried in Municipal court Saturday for larceny of $19 books from the library, were found not guilty in a decision by Judge Michael J. Murray yesterday.

BOSTON TRAVELER.

THURSDAY, JUNE 16, 1932

LAW STUDENTS FOUND NOT GUILTY

Judge Michael J. Murray in the municipal court today found John B. Icardi, former Boston College student, and Nathan Miers, former Suffolk law school student, employed as runners at the Boston Public Library, not guilty on charge of stealing books from the library.

The judge said, "I have no doubt they took the books, but I am not satisfied they had any intent to steal; I am of opinion they may have taken out of curiosity and would have returned but for the activity of the library authorities and the police, and think the men may have destroyed them."

OUT OF JOBS STUDYING IN LIBRARIES

Seek Books Pointing Out New Lines of Industry

With the Boston Public Library and its branches swamped today by the greatest army of readers in its history, a sharp increase is being noted daily in the number of unemployed visiting the libraries in search of vocational guidance books which will lead them to city and State jobs.

GET READY FOR JOBS

Hundreds of unemployed are availing themselves of the library reference departments in search of books dealing with subjects covered by civil service examinations. One middle-aged man, who said he was at one time a blacksmith, asked for a book on ironwork, saying he intended taking an examination for a blacksmith's job.

The business branch of the library downtown is besieged daily with scores seeking books pointing out new lines of industry, and possible ways and methods to improve old industries.

Milton E. Lord, head librarian of the city's libraries, pointed out last night that many of the unemployed seek the libraries for light reading to forget their troubles, but an even larger number are using the library branches daily now seeking to better equip themselves for positions when business is rapidly on the mend.

"Irrespective of the so-called depression the characteristics of Boston people do not change much," he declared. "In this section, New England, we have the reputation of not talking too much. We have a sort of innate feeling that personal matters are one's own business, and despite the lack of real good business we cling to this feeling."

Boston Daily Globe

TUESDAY, JUNE 28, 1932

DIRECTOR LORD INSPECTS LIBRARY ON COMMON

Milton Lord, director at the Boston Public Library in Copley sq., paid his first visit to the Foss Open-Air Library on Boston Common yesterday.

After Mr. Lord had looked about the outdoor library examining the book shelves and the manner in which they were kept, he turned and said to Mrs. John Carroll who is in charge of the library, "Everybody seems to be happy."

Mr. Lord himself seemed to enjoy his visit and successfully ducked cameramen who tried to snap his picture.

'The Jew In Literature' Theme At Library

Jewish Advocate, May 27-32
In Connection With Jewish Book Week — Dr. Ehrenfried Presides.

"The Jew in Literature," was the subject of the program at the Boston Public Library on Monday evening, May 23rd. These exercises were held in observance of Jewish Book Week, celebrated throughout the country under the auspices of the Boston Jewish Book Week Committee. Dr. Albert Ehrenfried, well known surgeon and author, chairman of the Boston committee in charge of Jewish Book Week, presided.

Selma Pelonsky, guest artist of the evening, and well known radio and concert performer, played several brilliant piano selections. Dr. Ehrenfried opened his program by a tribute to the late Dr. Charles F. D. Belden whose sympathy and understanding were of such inestimable help in instituting Jewish Book Week in Boston.

Dr. Ehrenfried told of the great demand from all parts of America and Europe for copies of "Judaica," a list of books of Jewish interest, by Miss Fanny Goldstein, published by the Boston Public Library for Book Week last year. A supplementary list of "Recent Judaica" has been published this year.

The first speaker of the evening was Mr. Milton E. Lord, director of the Boston Public Library. Mr. Lord, distinguished scholar and well known librarian, is the youngest man ever to attain a library position of such responsibility. In his address, "The Public Library and National Literatures," Mr. Lord explained that, whereas formerly only in scholars' libraries could be found foreign literature in foreign languages, today public libraries contained such collections. Some thirty different literatures in their original tongues were represented in the Boston Library. These national collections primarily planned for the recent immigrant who can read easily only his native tongue must give the reader of that language his native literature, and also books that will acquaint him with his new adopted land. Mr. Lord urged his audience to read always the greatest contributions in American and Jewish literature.

The next speaker was Judge Jacob J. Kaplan, special justice of the Dorchester Municipal Court, one of the leading figures in Boston Jewry, who spoke on "The Companionship of the Jew and the Book," explaining that it is the close association of the Jewish people with their books that has helped them endure and transmit from generation to generation their traditions and learning. Realizing the importance of the book to the Jew, Talmudic leaders urged their people to own and lend books. Devotion to books became a part of Jewish religious observance. Judge Kaplan quoted from the quaint will of a Jew in the twelfth century who thus bequeathed his library to his son: "Take good care of thy books. Guard them well. Examine thy Hebrew books once a month. Arrange them all in good order. When thou lendest a book record its title. Restore all borrowed books." This respect for books has characterized Jews throughout the ages.

Miss Fanny Goldstein, secretary of the Boston Committee for Jewish Book Week, librarian of the West End Branch of the Boston Public Library, well known as lecturer and author, was the next speaker, on "Jewish Keynotes in Current Literature." She brought to her audience many fascinating facts regarding Jewish literature at the present time. Miss Goldstein contrasted the ancient Jewish respect for the book with the modern carelessness regarding our multitude of new publications. In other times throughout the ages, every Jewish home had its precious well loved books. Today our modern civilization has made printing so regrettably easy that we own and lose and forget countless carelessly read books. We have certainly many Jewish writers and books today, but there are few of real importance. These few, however, are well worthy of study. Miss Goldstein sketched briefly the more important Jewish books of the past year, and suggested to her audience those that they would find most informative and useful to them. In closing Miss Goldstein paid tribute to great works of Jewish scholarship of current interest. She mentioned the publication of the Zohar in English for the first time since its original appearance in the 13th century in Spain, and the new Jewish Encyclopedia. She particularly noted the work of Professor Harry A. Wolfson of Harvard whose scholarly research in Jewish literature is of the greatest importance. Miss Goldstein concluded with a message for these days of depression: "Remember, if we haven't money in the bank, we have books in the library."

The next speaker of the evening was Rabbi Harry Levi, distinguished speaker and author, who has done more perhaps than any other rabbi in New England to break down racial prejudices and misunderstandings. In discussing "Wanted—Jewish Books," Rabbi Levi specially noted the marvelous collection of Judaica owned by a prominent Boston lawyer, Mr. Lee Friedman, one of the most valuable and scholarly collections in the country. Rabbi Levi said that Jews should know who they are, what they are, why they are, and whence they come. And this they can find in Jewish books. There is a need he said, for Jewish books, not Hebrew books necessarily, for Yiddish books contain much that is not Jewish in character, but books written in English by Jews about Jews, written well and written in a popular vein which can reach the people. Such books are needed to tell about Jewish background and history, about Jewish literary attainments, about the Jew's faith and religion. There is a need for good English drama on the subject of Jews and worthwhile Jewish fiction. Yet, said Rabbi Levi, there cannot be Jewish books until we have a Jewish audience to read them. Our first task is to create this audience.

books. Guard them well. Examine thy Hebrew books once a month. Arrange them all in good order. When thou lendest a book record its title. Restore all borrowed books." This respect for books has characterized Jews throughout the ages.

Miss Fanny Goldstein, secretary of the Boston Committee for Jewish Book Week, librarian of the West End Branch of the Boston Public Library, well known as lecturer and author, was the next speaker, on "Jewish Keynotes in Current Literature." She brought to her audience many fascinating facts regarding Jewish literature at the present time. Miss Goldstein contrasted the ancient Jewish respect for the book with the modern carelessness regarding our multitude of new publications. In other times throughout the ages, every Jewish home had its precious well loved books. Today our modern civilization has made printing so regrettably easy that we own and lose and forget countless carelessly read books. We have certainly many Jewish writers and books today, but there are few of real importance. These few, however, are well worthy of study. Miss Goldstein sketched briefly the more important Jewish books of the past year, and suggested to her audience those that they would find most informative and useful to them. In closing Miss Goldstein paid tribute to great works of Jewish scholarship of current interest. She mentioned the publication of the Zohar in English for the first time since its original appearance in the 13th century in Spain, and the new Jewish Encyclopedia. She particularly noted the work of Professor Harry A. Wolfson of Harvard whose scholarly research in Jewish literature is of the greatest importance. Miss Goldstein concluded with a message for these days of depression: "Remember, if we haven't money in the bank, we have books in the library."

The next speaker of the evening was Rabbi Harry Levi, distinguished speaker and author, who has done more perhaps than any other rabbi in New England to break down racial prejudices and misunderstandings. In discussing "Wanted—Jewish Books," Rabbi Levi specially noted the marvelous collection of Judaica owned by a prominent Boston lawyer, Mr. Lee Friedman, one of the most valuable and scholarly collections in the country. Rabbi Levi said that Jews should know who they are, what they are, why they are, and whence they come. And this they can find in Jewish books. There is a need he said, for Jewish books, not Hebrew books necessarily, for Yiddish books contain much that is not Jewish in character, but books written in English by Jews about Jews, written well and written in a popular vein which can reach the people. Such books are needed to tell about Jewish background and history, about Jewish literary attainments, about the Jew's faith and religion. There is a need for good English drama on the subject of Jews and worthwhile Jewish fiction. Yet, said Rabbi Levi, there cannot be Jewish books until we have a Jewish audience to read them. Our first task is to create this audience.

The next speaker of the evening was Rabbi Harry Levi, distinguished speaker and author, who has done more perhaps than any other rabbi in New England to break down racial prejudices and misunderstandings. In discussing "Wanted—Jewish Books," Rabbi Levi specially noted the marvelous collection of Judaica owned by a prominent Boston lawyer, Mr. Lee Friedman, one of the most valuable and scholarly collections in the country. Rabbi Levi said that Jews should know who they are, what they are, why they are, and whence they come. And this they can find in Jewish books. There is a need he said, for Jewish books, not Hebrew books necessarily, for Yiddish books contain much that is not Jewish in character, but books written in English by Jews about Jews, written well and written in a popular vein which can reach the people. Such books are needed to tell about Jewish background and history, about Jewish literary attainments, about the Jew's faith and religion. There is a need for good English drama on the subject of Jews and worthwhile Jewish fiction. Yet, said Rabbi Levi, there cannot be Jewish books until we have a Jewish audience to read them. Our first task is to create this audience.

The next speaker of the evening was Rabbi Harry Levi, distinguished speaker and author, who has done more perhaps than any other rabbi in New England to break down racial prejudices and misunderstandings. In discussing "Wanted—Jewish Books," Rabbi Levi specially noted the marvelous collection of Judaica owned by a prominent Boston lawyer, Mr. Lee Friedman, one of the most valuable and scholarly collections in the country. Rabbi Levi said that Jews should know who they are, what they are, why they are, and whence they come. And this they can find in Jewish books. There is a need he said, for Jewish books, not Hebrew books necessarily, for Yiddish books contain much that is not Jewish in character, but books written in English by Jews about Jews, written well and written in a popular vein which can reach the people. Such books are needed to tell about Jewish background and history, about Jewish literary attainments, about the Jew's faith and religion. There is a need for good English drama on the subject of Jews and worthwhile Jewish fiction. Yet, said Rabbi Levi, there cannot be Jewish books until we have a Jewish audience to read them. Our first task is to create this audience.

The next speaker of the evening was Rabbi Harry Levi, distinguished speaker and author, who has done more perhaps than any other rabbi in New England to break down racial prejudices and misunderstandings. In discussing "Wanted—Jewish Books," Rabbi Levi specially noted the marvelous collection of Judaica owned by a prominent Boston lawyer, Mr. Lee Friedman, one of the most valuable and scholarly collections in the country. Rabbi Levi said that Jews should know who they are, what they are, why they are, and whence they come. And this they can find in Jewish books. There is a need he said, for Jewish books, not Hebrew books necessarily, for Yiddish books contain much that is not Jewish in character, but books written in English by Jews about Jews, written well and written in a popular vein which can reach the people. Such books are needed to tell about Jewish background and history, about Jewish literary attainments, about the Jew's faith and religion. There is a need for good English drama on the subject of Jews and worthwhile Jewish fiction. Yet, said Rabbi Levi, there cannot be Jewish books until we have a Jewish audience to read them. Our first task is to create this audience.

The next speaker of the evening was Rabbi Harry Levi, distinguished speaker and author, who has done more perhaps than any other rabbi in New England to break down racial prejudices and misunderstandings. In discussing "Wanted—Jewish Books," Rabbi Levi specially noted the marvelous collection of Judaica owned by a prominent Boston lawyer, Mr. Lee Friedman, one of the most valuable and scholarly collections in the country. Rabbi Levi said that Jews should know who they are, what they are, why they are, and whence they come. And this they can find in Jewish books. There is a need he said, for Jewish books, not Hebrew books necessarily, for Yiddish books contain much that is not Jewish in character, but books written in English by Jews about Jews, written well and written in a popular vein which can reach the people. Such books are needed to tell about Jewish background and history, about Jewish literary attainments, about the Jew's faith and religion. There is a need for good English drama on the subject of Jews and worthwhile Jewish fiction. Yet, said Rabbi Levi, there cannot be Jewish books until we have a Jewish audience to read them. Our first task is to create this audience.

Curley Threatens the Payroll Flock

Mayor Curley has called for the names of all persons on the city and county payroll who are unwilling to subscribe to the plan advanced in June for the benefit of the public welfare department, so that it may be in a position to take such steps as may be deemed advisable to prevent any impediment of the program determined upon.

In other words, the mayor is determined that his relief plan, which means the contribution of a day's pay by all employees receiving less than $1600 a year, two days' pay for all receiving $1600 to $3000, and three days' pay from $3000 a year upward, shall be carried out. It is possible for him to separate the unwilling employees from the payroll by abolishing their positions.

Clerk Francis A. Campbell of the Superior Civil Court, who recently won a jury verdict against the city in his fight to secure the return of a day's pay from his envelope, says that he and all of his office force are willing to contribute if it becomes necessary, but insists that the contributions shall be voluntary.

Boston Transcript

224 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

THURSDAY, JULY 7, 1932

Boston Gets Gift from Sister City

Mayor Accepts Volume from Bishop of Lincoln at Library Ceremony

At an informal ceremony this forenoon in the Abbey Room of the Boston Public Library, Mayor Curley received from Walter R. Whiting, a history of Old Boston in England, presented by the Bishop of Lincoln in appreciation of the interest of citizens of Boston, Mass., in contributing funds for the restoration of "the Old Stump," the church tower in the English sister city. Under the leadership of Allan Forbes, president of the State Street Trust Company, $56,000 was raised here and presented to the Bishop of Lincoln, whose diocese includes Boston, England, by Mr. Whiting, as representative of the citizens of this city.

In receiving the volume from Mr. Whiting, the mayor recalled the friendship between the two cities and told of the visit here of the lord mayor of Boston during the Tercentenary celebration as well as of the hospitality of the English city when he visited it last year. The reception of the citizens of Boston, England, was almost as gratifying as the one he received on his return from Chicago, Mayor Curley announced. In turning over the book to Ellery Sedgwick, president of the board of trustees of the library, he declared that it represented an association based on mutual respect and affection that has grown with the years. Mr. Sedgwick replied that he regarded the gift of the Bishop of Lincoln as an expression of family affection and accepted it, in behalf of the Boston Public Library, in a cordial spirit.

George Bailey Beak, consul general of Great Britain, was present but was unable to speak, as he was suffering from laryngitis. The brief ceremony took place immediately in front of the railing which was once part of the dock in the Guild Hall of Boston, Lincolnshire, at which stood at trial, in 1607, some of the Pilgrim Fathers.

BOOK FROM BOSTON, ENG, GIVEN TO PUBLIC LIBRARY

BOOK FROM BOSTON, ENG. PRESENTED TO THE BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY. LEFT TO RIGHT—MAYOR CURLEY, MILTON C. LORD, WALTER R. WHITNEY AND GEORGE B. BEAK.

The two Bostons, of England and Massachusetts, were linked together more firmly today when in the hands of Walter R. Whiting, Bishop of Lincoln in England, presented by the Bishop of Lincoln in appreciation of the interest of citizens of Boston, Mass., in contributing funds for the restoration of "the Old Stump," the church tower in the English sister city. Under the leadership of Allan Forbes, president of the State Street Trust Company, $56,000 was raised here and presented to the Bishop of Lincoln, whose diocese includes Boston, England, by Mr. Whiting, as representative of the citizens of this city.

In receiving the volume from Mr. Whiting, the mayor recalled the friendship between the two cities and told of the visit here of the lord mayor of Boston during the Tercentenary celebration as well as of the hospitality of the English city when he visited it last year. The reception of the citizens of Boston, England, was almost as gratifying as the one he received on his return from Chicago, Mayor Curley announced. In turning over the book to Ellery Sedgwick, president of the board of trustees of the library, he declared that it represented an association based on mutual respect and affection that has grown with the years. Mr. Sedgwick replied that he regarded the gift of the Bishop of Lincoln as an expression of family affection and accepted it, in behalf of the Boston Public Library, in a cordial spirit.

George Bailey Beak, consul general of Great Britain, was present but was unable to speak, as he was suffering from laryngitis. The brief ceremony took place immediately in front of the railing which was once part of the dock in the Guild Hall of Boston, Lincolnshire, at which stood at trial, in 1607, some of the Pilgrim Fathers.

The volume was finally passed to hands of Milton C. Lord, director of the Boston Public Library, in whose custody the gift will remain. Several hundred members of the staff of the library crowded into the

of good will between the people of Boston, Eng., and the people of Boston, Mass.

He told of his visit to the mother city of Boston last year and said that his reception there at that time was "almost as gratifying to me as the reception accorded me on my return recently to Boston from Chicago."

He then turned the volume over to the president of the trustees of the library, Ellery Sedgwick. "There are gifts and gifts," Mr. Sedgwick declared, "but among these pleasant exchanges books convey a message which no other present can bestow. They alone offer the peculiar evidence of friendship, for they which the giver wishes to share with the receiver. I regard this book, given by Boston to Boston, as the expression of a family affection, and on behalf of the Boston Public Library I accept it with cordially appreciation."

The volume was finally passed to hands of Milton C. Lord, director of the Boston Public Library, in whose custody the gift will remain. Several hundred members of the staff of the library crowded into the

Boston Daily Globe

FRIDAY, JULY 8, 1932

CURLEY ACCEPTS VOLUME FROM BOSTON, ENG FOLK

Boston, Eng., and Boston, Mass., were linked more firmly yesterday when Mayor Curley acknowledged the gift of a volume of history from the English city to the citizens of this city. Acceptance was made in the Abbey room of the Boston Public Library, before several hundred members of the staff of the library.

The history volume was presented to Walter R. Whiting a year ago when he traveled to Boston, Eng., to give the Archbishop of Canterbury the sum of $11,451 contributed by Boston, Mass., citizens to restore the famous tower of St Botolph's Church. At that time the Bishop of Lincoln presented Mr. Whiting a copy of Pleshey Thompson's "History of Boston (Eng.)," to carry back to this city.

The late director of the Public Library, Charles F. D. Belden, had made plans for ceremonies marking the transfer of the gift, but his death postponed them until yesterday.

EDISON SERVICE NEWS

NEW BRANCH LIBRARY OCCUPIES HISTORICAL BUILDING

Pilots Row was once known as the exclusive residential section of old Boston. It was so called because Boston at that time was chiefly a maritime center and its wealthy residents were closely associated with shipping in some capacity. This section was occupied mostly by captains and, as the name implies, by pilots. Today Pilots Row is known as Webster street, East Boston, and many of those old houses have disappeared. One of the most pretentious still remains. It is over eighty years old. In the early days it was the home of two prominent residents, one a captain, the other a doctor. A brick wall divided the house in two sections, with each family owning one.

The adults' reading room retains much of the early Colonial influence of the building

A view of the children's room showing the fireplace with the original black marble mantel

The building is situated on a hill overlooking the harbor where the water is deep enough to permit modern freighters to dock quite close to shore. Residents of East Boston will continue to enjoy this building for many years. After extensive alterations, it was opened several weeks ago as the Jeffries Point Branch Library.

The two stories of brick framework have been kept practically intact but the interior has been completely changed. Steel girders were used to strengthen the building after the party wall was removed, and this made possible two large reading rooms; the adults' room is on the ground floor and the children's room above.

Colonial fittings, especially the wainscoting and doorways, have been preserved wherever possible. On the first floor the woodwork is white, with the walls a medium gray. Upstairs an apple green finish has been used for walls and shelves. A decorative feature of the children's room is the fireplace which has the original black marble mantel used in one of the old rooms.

The lighting fixtures are simple yet distinctive in design and fit in nicely with the architectural details. They are luminous glass bowls hung from chromium suspension rods. Diffused lighting is provided for both rooms; reading is therefore both restful and pleasurable.

All details of renovating the building were handled by the architect, Thomas Williams, 42 South Russell street. The electrical work was done by MacFarlane & Abbott of Boston, and the special lighting fixtures furnished by Kantack & Co. of New York.

Boston, England, Book Is Presented to Hub

Mayor Curley, on behalf of the city of Boston, receiving the volume containing the history of Old Boston, England, in the Abbey room of the Boston Public Library today. Left to right are, Ellery Sedgwick, Mayor Curley, Milton E. Lord, Walter R. Whiting and George B. Beak, British consul.

Given in Appreciation of Funds to Restore Church Tower

A large volume dealing with the history of Boston, England, was given to the City of Boston today in appreciation of the interest of the citizens of this city in contributing funds for the restoration of the tower of the church in Old Boston a year ago.

CEREMONY IN LIBRARY

The ceremony took place in the Abbey room of the Public Library. Walter R. Whiting brought the volume from England and presented it to Mayor Curley. The mayor spoke briefly on the significance of the occasion and turned the book over to Ellery Sedgwick, president of the trustees of the Public Library.

Last year a committee of Boston citizens, headed by Allen Forbes, president of the State Street Trust Company, raised a sum of money here as a good-will offering to old Boston to aid in the work of restoring the tower of the old church here. Whiting presented the money on behalf of the citizens of this city.

The bishop of Lincoln, England, thereupon gave Whiting a copy of "The History and Antiquities of Boston, England," by Pilsney Thompson, from his library. Whiting brought the volume to this city.

Boston Herald
July 12, 1932

DEMANDS WOMEN CITY EMPLOYEES LIVE HERE

A revision of city ordinances which will compel all women employees of the city to be residents of Boston was proposed to the city council yesterday by Councilman David M. Brackman of Roxbury.

He also sponsored an order demanding the submission by Mayor Curley to the council of names of approximately 1000 municipal workers who live outside of Boston and suggested a change in an ordinance which will make it an offense punishable by a fine of $25 for any person to allow rubbish or garbage to be strewn around premises after the expiration of a warning period of 48 hours.

City Employees Must Live Here

By unanimous vote, the City Council decreed at yesterday's session that all employees of the city must live in Boston. Councilman David M. Brackman, who introduced the order, stated that more than 1000 of them live in adjoining cities and towns, a condition which he termed as "grossly unfair" to the unemployed residents as well as to the tax-paying business interests of Boston.

It was decided that a meeting of the ordinance committee be called soon to tighten up the regulations so that none but "citizen voters, male or female, can be employed in any capacity in the city service." If the Legislature decides to hold a special session the Council will seek an amendment to the civil service laws so that city employees may not be allowed to move from Boston after receiving their appointments.

On motion of Councilman Brackman, the Council voted to petition the Legislature to suspend the laws which require cities and towns to purchase prison-made goods, "so that they can take advantage of the lower prices in the open market and provide continued employment for men who are not in prison."

The Council blocked the proposal to grant time off to city employees who contribute from one to three days' pay each month to the unemployment relief fund. The fight for days off was led by Councilman Francis E. Kelly of Dorchester.

Kelly took occasion to denounce the welcome home demonstration extended to Mayor Curley upon the latter's return from the Democratic national convention and called upon the Finance Commission to scrutinize the July 4 celebration bills to determine whether any of the municipal funds went to the Roosevelt "victory parade."

To Observe "Post Office Day" Here

Program Tuesday Will Include Meeting at Franklin Statue, City Hall

Acting on a request from the United States George Washington Bicentennial Commission, at Washington, the city of Boston committee for the Bicentennial, Thomas A. Mullen, chairman, has arranged a program for an observance of Post Office Day, next Tuesday, July 26. This will be the 175th anniversary of the establishment of the postal service by action of the Continental Congress in 1775, at which time Benjamin Franklin was named as the first postmaster general.

The Boston celebration will be a combined effort by the city's committee, the Boston post office, the Chamber of Commerce committee on postal facilities and the Public Library. The program will be simple. The main feature will be a short public meeting at 12.15 P. M. at the statue of Franklin in front of City Hall, when references will be made to the history, growth and importance of the postal service and its significance in symbolizing one of the great purposes of George Washington, namely, the fostering of mutual understanding of people and sections through better communication.

A special plaque will be placed at Franklin's statue calling attention to him as the first postmaster general. Attention will be called to the fact that the first post office in the American colonies was established in Boston, the site being near the present Globe Building on Washington street. This was in 1689 by the action of the General Court of the Bay Colony. Chairman Thomas A. Mullen of the Boston Bicentennial Committee will preside. Postmaster Hurley will speak in behalf of the postal service, and Mayor Curley will speak for the city. Representatives of the Chamber of Commerce will attend.

At the Public Library, Copley square, there will be a special exhibit in the main lobby, arranged by Director Milton E. Lord, showing a colored colonial poster of the period of the founding of the postal service, another poster of the air mail, thus indicating progress. Post office arrangements are made by Postmaster Hurley. Superintendent of Mails Thomas P. Feeley and Superintendent of Delivery John H. Cleary, Chamber of Commerce representatives include Roger Preston, chairman, and Theodore G. Holcombe, secretary, of the committee on postal facilities. Bicentennial committee representatives are Chairman Mullen, Secretary E. B. Mero, Henry F. Brennan, Frank Chouteau Brown, Professor John C. S. Andrew, Mrs. Eva Whiting White.

A general feature that will include Boston is the airplane flight in which Major James H. Doolittle, under sanction of the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce, will drop mail at various points, covering in a few hours the route which Washington required several weeks to traverse by coach and horseback. The start is scheduled to be at Kittery, Me., on Monday, provided weather permits, otherwise, on Tuesday. Boston post office officials will pick up the mail dropped on the plane at Boston Airport, and then distribute it to the officials to whom it is addressed. Similar plans apply to Portsmouth, Providence, New Haven, New York and other cities.

SUNDAY POST
AUGUST 7.

Portuguese Exhibition at Public Library

At the Boston Public Library from Aug. 8 to Aug. 17, there will be held a Bibliographical exhibition, commemorating the discovery of the Azores by the Portuguese in 1482.

In connection with this historical event, and in order to bring about the celebration of the Portuguese people in New England of the first century of the "skeleton in armor" in Massachusetts in 1832, Sir Alvaro Gil de Almeida, a member of the exhibition committee, a former representative in Boston, for Brazil, Portugal, and social representative for other nations in past celebrations, has now become actively engaged in disclosing the true story connected with the skeleton in armor, the supposed warrior and sea rover who came to America many centuries before.

Alvaro G. de Almeida

Alvaro G. de Almeida, a member of the exhibition committee, a former representative in Boston, for Brazil, Portugal, and social representative for other nations in past celebrations, has now become actively engaged in disclosing the true story connected with the skeleton in armor, the supposed warrior and sea rover who came to America many centuries before.

Boston Transcript

224 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

(Entered at the Post Office, Boston, Mass., as Second Class Mail Matter)

MONDAY, AUGUST 8, 1932

Fifth Centennial of the Azores

Portuguese People of Boston Plan Celebration on August 15

Portuguese residents of Greater Boston, of whom there are about 12,000, will take official notice of the quinqucentennial of the Azores, because it was Portuguese navigators who discovered and began the settlement of the Azores 500 years ago. The date when Goncalo Velho Cabral landed his expedition on the island of Santa Maria was August 15, 1482, and next Monday evening the Portuguese in Greater Boston will unite in a celebration that will take the form of a parade, with floats, and a public meeting in the State armory on Massachusetts avenue, Cambridge. As there are nine Azores islands, the Occidental, Central and Oriental groups, there will be at least nine floats in the parade, representative of the several islands. The procession will move from Inman square to the State armory where the first quinqucentennial celebration will be held, under the auspices of the Portuguese Civic League. Dr. John M. Tavares of Cambridge, who is chairman of the celebration committee, will preside. There will be two speakers, Dr. John Camoesas and assistant district attorney, William Andrew. On the following Sunday, Aug. 21, the Portuguese people will have an outing to Silver Lake in honor of the great discovery.

As a special feature of the anniversary observance the committee has arranged for an exhibit at the Boston Public Library, which was opened to the public this morning. There is a collection of material from the islands, such as costumes, pictures, lace, embroideries, minerals, novelties, books and other products of the arts and crafts expressive of the life and culture of the islanders. Two Portuguese brothers, Alvaro and August Acostas, well known artists in Boston, are showing several pictures. The members of the committee having charge of the quinqucentennial celebration here are Dr. John M. Tavares, Athol Branco, acting consul for Portugal; Alvaro Gil de Almeida, Joseph S. Rezendes, Manuel Desousa and Antonio S. Lemos and Mrs. Mary Goulart.

Boston Daily Globe

MONDAY, AUG 8, 1932

AZORES EXHIBITION AT PUBLIC LIBRARY

Arts and Crafts Display Fifth Centennial Feature

The Azores are specially brought to attention of Bostonians this week through a display of its arts and crafts which opened yesterday in Exhibition Hall, at the Boston Public Library, as a feature of the fifth centennial of their discovery. The Portuguese people of Boston are making the exhibit through the Portuguese Civic League. Of principal interest is the exhibition of pictures in pastels, oils, water colors, pen and ink drawings of historic places in Fayal by Augusto Acostas, who came to this city from his native land 45 years ago, and pastels by his brother, Alvaro Acostas. Other exhibits include photographs of Azores scenes and people, many of them in color; a chart showing voyages and discoveries made by pioneer Portuguese navigators in the 15th and 17th centuries, loaned by Dr. J. M. Tavares; wooden shoes worn by peasant women of St. Michael, by courtesy of Mrs. Philomena Arruda; and Mrs. Maria Branco; a collection of stamps, a rag-woven native mantle, by courtesy of Mrs. Maria Branco; a hand-made quilt of Mrs. Maria Branco, loaned by Mrs. Sousa Pereira; a large collection of old and rare books relating to the history of the Azores, tapestry, shawls and a variety of picturesque articles of feminine wear, peculiar to the natives.

ALVARO GIL DE ALMEIDA

The display held the interested attention of large crowds all day yesterday. The committee in charge of the exhibition includes Acting Portuguese Consul Athol Branco, Dr. John Tavares, Joseph S. Rezendes, Ex-Consul Alvaro Gil de Almeida, Manuel Desousa Jr. and Antonio S. Lemos.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, AUGUST 20, 1932

Guards Become Gardeners at West End Public Library Branch

At first they had guards, but they found that guards weren't needed, so now the guards have turned to gardening.

They aren't doing it just now, for August is the time when even the conscientious gardener finds little to do, and may instead go swimming in the Frog Pond or stroll down the Esplanade, but when school reopens in four weeks or so the old folks will get busy again.

There's quite a story (so far unpublished) behind the Friends of the Library Garden of the West End branch of the Public Library on Cambridge street. Last spring the good ladies of the well-known Beacon Hill Garden Club decided to augment the library garden's three lilacs, hawthornes, Sargent crabs, ramblers, roses, honeysuckle, wisteria, a bit of euonymus and two handsome perennial flower beds to edge the walk.

Miss Eleanor Raymond drew up the plans and a burst of bloom resulted. It doesn't last into late summer, but plain green is plenty good enough for August, anyway. A George Washington Bicentennial linden was planted at the same time, during an afternoon of appropriate exercises.

Then the Boy Scouts were called into play. Fearing that passersby might be too tempted by the beauty within the iron fence, they started patrolling, in relays of twos, but pretty soon found that marauding, at least on Cambridge street, seized the kitchen forks. These they use for cultivating, and even perform the horrid chore of weeding. Their instructors are the janitor, who carries on permanently, and Mrs. John B. Potter, chairman of the Beacon Hill Club's gift committee, who got them off to a good start.

The Friends of the Library Garden (name copied after the Friends of the Louvre) have a log but no officers, and during working months the girls, foregather Tuesday afternoons, and the boys on Thursdays. The children's librarians at this branch (like many other organizations, libraries don't like names to be published) is their head; she claims a will, and rate it must be more fun to dig than to patrol, and rather nice, too, to know that you don't have to.

G. K.

WORKER IN BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY FOR 55 YEARS RETIRES

Presentation and Luncheon For Miss Florence E. Richards, Assistant in Catalogue Department

FLORENCE E. RICHARDS, FOR 55 YEARS A LIBRARY EMPLOYEE, AND SAMUEL A. CHEVALIER, CHIEF OF CATALOG ROOM

A distinguished record of library service, which is likely to stand for some time, was made this noon, when Miss Florence E. Richards retired as assistant in the catalogue and shelf departments of the Boston Public Library, Copley sq. She has served the city in its library service for 55 years and 8 months, and her only regret is that she is not allowed to finish out the year, or to serve longer.

She reached the age of 70 on Aug. 8, and according to the rules can serve only to the end of the same month. This noon, therefore, her service for the city of Boston terminated, amid a glow of gladness and roses, with presentations and receptions and honorary lunches and other marks of esteem, in which she is held by her fellow employees and others outside the library organization.

In the absence of Mr. Lord, director of the Boston Public Library, S. A. Chevalier, chief of the catalogue and shelf departments, was chosen to make the formal presentation this noon of a sum of money contributed by the other employees, all of it in new bills with the exception of one gold piece for luck.

This presentation was made at noon in the lunch room of the library, where afterward Miss Richards was guest of honor at a luncheon for the employees only, and served by them, with the tables gaily decorated. It was entirely informal, however, without speaking.

Miss Richards also received many personal gifts from the other employees of the library, as well as an album containing greeting cards and other expressions of good wishes. A feature of this album was the first paper she signed as an employee of the library. Letters were received from Mayor Curley, Ellery Sedgwick for the trustees of the library and from its director, Mr. Lord.

Miss Richards' record of 55 years and eight months is likely to stand for a long time as a library service record, as there is no one now in the service who entered it young enough to compete with her. She was only a little over 14 when she began work in the Boston Public Library when it was on Boylston st., about where the Colonial Theatre is now. She began as a "runner," bringing the books from the stacks to the counters as requested by the public.

Since then she has worked in several departments, in three library buildings, ending as assistant at Copley sq. to Michael McCarthy, chief classifier. In this position, most of the new books entering the library passed through her hands.

Her official record is that of having begun work on Nov. 14, 1876, of entering her present department on Aug. 14, 1914, and of retiring today. During her long service she has met many celebrities in connection with her library work, and has many pleasant memories.

She has no immediate plans for the future, she says, and feels somewhat bewildered by the abrupt ending of her life work. She has expressed the wish that she might have finished out the year to November, and she neither looks nor feels her age nor the necessity of retirement.

ENDS 56 YEARS WITH CITY PUBLIC LIBRARY

Florence E. Richards Is Retired at 70

Miss Florence E. Richards, who has been an employee of the Boston Public Library since Aug. 14, 1876, was retired on pension yesterday owing to mandatory operation of the law when an employee has reached 70. She would have liked to remain longer in the service.

Her coworkers in the library gave her beautiful floral tributes, a reception and luncheon in the library lunch room.

Samuel A. Chevalier, chief of the catalog and shelf departments, to both of which Miss Richards has belonged for years, made formal presentation to her on behalf of the entire library staff a substantial sum of money as a testimonial of their good will.

Miss Richards was complimented by letters of congratulation from Mayor Curley and Library Director Lord, who was away from the city, also from Ellery Sedgwick of the board of trustees.

Miss Richards entered the second Public Library Building, on the site of the present Colonial Theatre, at the age of 14 as a "runner," procuring from the shelves books wanted by patrons.

She worked successfully in various departments before becoming assistant cataloger. She stated yesterday that she had no plans for the immediate future.

"Fine" Moratorium Brings Back Library Book Out 29 Years

A MIDDLE-AGED gentleman appeared this morning in the children's room of the Public Library. He brought with him a large volume, with eagle and stars and stripes decoration on its blue cover; a copy of "The Naval History of the United States," by William J. Abbot.

"I read in the papers about the fine cancellation week," he said, "and I thought this would be a good opportunity to clear my conscience. This book has been in my house, and earlier in my parents' home, for twenty-nine years. It belongs to the library, borrowed it myself, or a friend of mine did. But I am very glad that I can return it now."

The volume is in excellent condition, except that its title-page is torn out.

The man was expansive on the subject of library books. In the town where he lives—ten miles from Boston—there is an excellent public library, he boasted. His children—four of them—all use it, taking home books for study.

In consideration of the long time which elapsed since he borrowed the book, the visitor was asked whether he had read it.

"I must have read it once, but I do not recall its contents," he answered.

THE LIBRARY'S "HEAVY READING"

To the Editor of the Transcript:

May I plead for greater liberty in the circulation of the more scholarly books in the Boston Library? It is an impediment to research to have only a two-weeks' borrowing privilege on a book which may not have been called for during a period of five years. There is also a too liberal use of the starred calling which bars from circulation a number which has been from circulation.

Newark librarian once called ours the mausoleum. In a city renowned for intellectual life, do we want that?

If by subscription or appropriation we could attain the Providence, R. I., system of four weeks' borrowing period with two weeks' renewal, I believe that theft would be reduced. Meanwhile, may not the ban be lifted on "heavy reading"?

LUCY M. CHURCH

Boston, Oct. 10.

LIBRARY TO CONTINUE CANCELING ALL FINES IF NO BOOKS ARE OUT

Boston Public Library authorities said last night that although fine cancellation week has ended, borrowers who allowed their library privileges to lapse because of non-payment of fines only, may receive their new borrowers' cards, fines cancelled, at any time.

Those persons, however, who held library books and failed to return them during the fine cancellation week, have lost the privilege of having their fines canceled. These persons, too, may receive cards, but only after they return the books and pay their fines.

"Fine Cancellation Week" Not to be an Annual Affair

THE director of the Boston Public Library would like to have it understood that "Fine Cancellation Week" is not to be an annual occurrence. In yesterday's scramble to take advantage of the less returns of overdue books, 7419 cards were restored to delinquents. There are still more than 70,000 cards withheld for nonpayment of fines, with 20,750 unrecovered books still in the hands of the public, and the director intimated today that this week is the last chance for "no questions asked" returns.

Noted Bostonians Inspired By Books Calvin Coolidge Loved

BY LEO RABBETTE

"The Books of My Boyhood," that's the collection of books Calvin Coolidge loves best, and for them he has reserved a favored shelf in the library built into his newly remodeled house in Vermont, according to his own pleasant and interesting story in the latest Cosmopolitan Magazine.

Therein he tells how he liked history and biography best. "The first real book I can remember was 'The Rangers, or The Tory's Daughter.' The story dealt with the outbreak of the Revolution in Vermont, the Westminster Massacre, and the Battle of Bennington. My Grandmother Coolidge read most of it aloud during the long winter evenings at the farm, while the hired man and I listened."

These are the books he listed. How many of them have you read? "The Rangers, or The Tory's Daughter"; "The Green Mountain Boy"; "Washington and His Generals"; "Men of Our Times"; Biography of President Garfield; "Livingston Lost and Found"; "Hillard's Sixth Reader"; "Choice Poems and Lyrics"; "Captain John Brown"; "History of the Indian Wars"; "Young People's Bible History"; "The New Testament"; "Life and State Papers of President Lincoln"; "Orations of Cicero."

What do well-known Bostonians think of this list, and what did they read when they were young? Here are a few preferences as expressed for Boston Sunday Post readers:

David Livingstone, the explorer, and his great adventures in Africa held the excited and admiring attention of Milton Edward Lord, head of the Boston Public Library, when he was a boy. "I wanted very much then to follow his trail from the Cape to Cairo—from top to bottom of Africa."

"Just as Kipling sang," I suggested, "I want to go to Rio, go rolling down to Rio, some day before I'm old."

The Lure of Action

"That's it. I haven't gone yet, though I would still like to, even if now, by rail and boat, it has lost much of its romance and mystery. I remember, too, I liked 'Ben Hur.' I went to see it several times when it came to Boston in dramatic form. 'The Lure of the Labrador Wild,' by Dillon Wallace, was another of my favorites, as a boy. Of course I read the Alger and the Henry books. I had a certain love for books of travel and adventure; anything with physical activity."

"Had you any thought of going into library work when you were a boy?" I asked.

"No," smiled our new librarian; "but it was curious, in a way. Whenever we started a club in a barn or built a shack in the woods, I always saw it was supplied with books, and was appointed to have charge of them. I did have a great love for books, always."

Have You a Library Book?

ARE you holding a library book because you cannot afford to pay the fine due?

Milton E. Lord, director of the Boston Public Library, is practical as well as erudite. He has set aside next week, from Oct. 17 to 22, as fineless week at the Boston Public Library and all its branches.

"These are emergency depression measures only," says Librarian Lord, "to help the many individuals who, owing to the depression, are unable to pay fines for overdue books and as a result have lost their library privileges. Such individuals should go during fine-cancellation week to their library and ask to have their library cards cleared and given back to them."

Here is a sporting offer for everybody to start with a clean slate. It is a suggestion honestly made. It contains no trickery. Even stolen books will be accepted without prosecution during this week of grace.

It would be meanness not to meet Director Lord's offer. To keep books is to put the taxpayer to expense. To keep books is to deprive others of their use. Fineless week throughout the library system should bring thousands of books back to the people.

Conscience-Week

Now comes the Boston Public Library's special week for remission of sins. From Monday, Oct. 17, through Saturday, Oct. 22, all persons having in their possession overdue books may return them without payment of fines. The charges will be cancelled, and the delinquent cardholders will be restored to full privileges, if only they will bring in the books so that others may use them, and thus "clear their library slate," as the director, Milton E. Lord, has urged. In fact, the promised indulgence goes farther. Any persons who by intent or mistake have removed books from the library without having them properly charged may return them next week and find "no questions asked."

This plan—known in Washington, D. C., as a "Fine Truce" and in Newark, N. J., as "Forgiveness Week"—has been tried in numerous American cities with quite remarkable results. In Washington more than a thousand overdue books a day were turned in during the week, and the "conscience box" installed in the central library building was filled to overflowing by the return of volumes which had not been properly charged. In Newark, among the children using the library the opportunity to restore books without payment of fines proved quite a blessing both in the recovery of many volumes and in giving the youthful holders a chance to square their records. Quite often children keep books beyond the permitted time, simply from the force of their interest in them, and then find the ten or twenty-cent fine due a mint of money which they see no way to coin.

The ethics of the matter are quite complicated, but the controlling philosophy is simple. Public libraries do not impose fines as a means of making money. Indeed, in Boston the library is not allowed to keep such revenue for its own uses, but passes it on to the city. Fines are set as a means of inducing people to return books promptly, so that they may continue available for the use of others. If the accumulation of such charges defeats its own purpose, so that people hold books out instead of bringing them in, then it seems a good practical plan to reverse the process, at least for one week, as the Boston library now will. In any event, the value of the books returned is bound to be greater than that of the fines cancelled. And conditions since 1929 give a special justification for trying the system just now. Reports from libraries in all parts of the country show that the number of books unreturned, with fines out against them, has greatly increased since the depression began. Now comes a chance to "clear the slate," and Bostonians will await with interest the local results.

The Boston Post RETURN 3637 LIBRARY BOOKS

Result of "Moratorium" Week Announced

The Public Library's "moratorium week," which came to an end Saturday, resulted in the return of 3637 books which had been entered in the lists as lost, and in the restoration of borrowing privileges to 30,215 people. It was revealed yesterday by Director Milton Edward Lord.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1932

Library Book, Lent 29 Years Ago, Returned

A middle-aged gentleman appeared today in the children's room of the Boston Public Library. He brought with him a large volume, with eagle and stars and stripes decoration on its blue cover, a copy of "The Naval History of the United States," by Willis J. Abbot.

"I have read in the papers about the fine cancellation week," he said, "and I thought this would be a good opportunity to clear my conscience. This book has been in my house, and earlier in my parents' home, for 29 years. It belongs to the library. I do not remember now whether I borrowed it myself or a friend of mine did. But I am very glad that I can return it now."

The volume is in excellent condition, except that its title page is torn out.

The man was expansive on the subject of library books. In the town where he lives—10 miles from Boston—there is an excellent public library, he boasted. His children—four of them—all use it, taking home books for study.

In consideration of the long time which elapsed since he borrowed the book, the visitor was asked whether he read it.

"I must have read it once, but I do not recall now its contents," he answered with frankness.

But he assured library employees he is still very fond of good reading.

Boston Transcript

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1932

AN APPRECIATION OF THE LIBRARY

To the Editor of the Transcript:

People seem to appreciate liberal justice in the administration of city institutions, for the benefit of both the city and the people.

The foresight of the Boston Public Library officials in inviting overdue books to be returned without fines, and the very excellent response obtained in securing "lost" books, is a tribute to the administration of the library and to the interest of Boston citizens in regaining and extending their reading habits.

Boston, Oct. 18.

F. L. C. Jr.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1932

Library Examining Committee Named

The trustees of the Boston Public Library have appointed the following named as members of the examining committee for 1932:

George Bramwell Baker, J. A. Lowell Blake, Arthur H. Cole, Allen Curtis, Frederic H. Curtis, William J. Davidson, Miss Susan J. Cinn, Henry Lewis Johnson, Mait B. Jones, James Ernest King, Mrs. Edward L. Logan, Babo Harry Levi, George R. Nutter, James P. Parmenter, Charles O. Pongro, Mrs. Elizabeth W. Perkins, Mrs. Edward M. Pickman, Waiworth Pierce, Robert Proctor, Dr. David D. Scannell, Mrs. Arthur A. Shurcliff, Rev. William M. Stinson, S. J. Joseph P. Tove, Mrs. Frederick Winslow, and Ellery Seligwick, president of the board of trustees.

THE BOSTON HERALD

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1932

ABSOLUTELY NONE

PEOPLE WHO RETURN BOOKS TO THE PUBLIC LIBRARY NEXT WEEK WILL NOT HAVE TO PAY FINES. (NEWS ITEM)

—AND MAY WE MAKE A NOISE?

GUilty - BUT NO FINES THIS WEEK -

PSSST - DO ROTARIANS WHO CALL EACH OTHER "WHISTERS" HAVE TO PAY FINES THIS WEEK?

WITH NO OTHER TRIBUTE DUE - IT SHOULD BE A GOOD WEEK FOR A POPPY DRIVE.

I DON'T SEE WHY I SHOULD PAY A FINE ON THOSE BOOKS ANYWAY. I DON'T READ 'EM. I JUST USE 'EM TO PROP WINDOWS OPEN -

NO FINES THIS WEEK -

By Dahl

Busy Days for Boston's Many Libraries

Just a Glimpse of One of the Thirty-Three Branches

QUIETLY, wholeheartedly, cheerfully, the library workers of the Boston Public Library and its 33 branches are helping to lighten the load of depression which saps the courage of thousands of men and women. The branch libraries are so well placed strategically that there are comparatively few residents who are not within a half-mile radius of a library.

The recently built libraries invite readers by the attractiveness of their buildings as well as by the well-planned grounds surrounding them, while many of the older buildings have large show windows, and great ingenuity is often manifested in the arrangement of exhibitions advertising books dealing with a wide variety of subjects. "Although we have assisted the unemployed by means of technical and vocational books," remarked an assistant, "we have not forgotten the need of the people for mental and spiritual encouragement. One of our present exhibits consists of a collection of books chosen with the idea of enabling people to see how others have courageously met crises and conquered difficulties. Advertising this display is a poster with the caption: 'Do You Need Encouragement?'"

From reports written by branch librarians on the topic, "How Unemployment Increases Business in the Branch Libraries," the following paragraphs have been selected as illustrations of the libraries' wide range of usefulness:

Scores of human interest stories are daily writing themselves in the libraries, but these are rarely told to the casual visitor. In the words of one librarian, "Mentioning specific cases of people who have been benefited by the library is something we do with reticence. We like people to feel that they may talk to us without fear that we will betray any confidence they may repose in us and you would be surprised to hear how many do repose such confidences."

A "Little Girl" Comes "Trippon" Occasionally an incident is related such as that of an old Scandinavian seaman who came to the library every morning, read the papers and for the rest of the more than forty years of sea travel he was content to spend his leisure among books. Through the efforts of one of the library's patrons a "Seaman's Snug Harbor" was found which was willing to receive him. He writes:

"A few lines to let you know I am alright but I only there is no little girl smile here is only angust mariners and a thousand thanks for all you did for my never forget you and also my best thanks respect to every von in the House if I cud right as good as you I

Thousands of Temporarily Idle Are Storing Knowledge for Better Times Ahead, and Librarians Are Aiding Them

See a k butt you got to read the best you can an guess the rest."

This "angust mariner" is only one of many who appropriate the libraries. The reports go on:

"Miss C—, who has turned his leisure to the raising of pigs, has used all our books on the subject. He is also interested in fishing and has been getting books on commercialized bait."

"Miss C—, who is interested in technical, read our books, then took a course. This reading and course have been of great value to her in a position which she has recently acquired."

"Mr. A— and his son, both unemployed, are careful readers of 'How to Make Old-Time Ship Models.' They have already completed three models."

"Mr. R—, who is unemployed, is using the library for material dealing with the motion-picture industry, which is his occupation when he works. His wife has taken two children to board and care. She began by reading fiction only, and is now reading more advanced non-fiction."

"Mr. L—, who has a large family, prepared during the winter for his garden and made a scientific study of vegetables. He read all the books we could give him on the subject of hockey. This led to his being chosen to play with a team which toured Europe."

"We have in this district an amicable mixture of the most un-American races—Syrian, Chinese, Greek, Armenian, Italian, African, Turkish, Austrian, Jewish, Russian, Irish and, as the guides say to New York sightseers, a few Americans. Because of the unresponsive room charges there are many elderly men here who are receiving old-age pensions. They are interested in the newspapers, the magazine, the city directory. One man, after several hours in the company of the directory, said, 'This is one of the best books you have. Plenty of characters, plenty of characters, but no plot.'

"Pop" is a very attractive, white-haired man of about seventy, who comes here regularly. He is very deaf and writes us notes, such as 'Did you know that the door of the clock is open?' His father was a policeman and he and the police officer stationed here carry on a correspondence on the backs of envelopes about the old days. He reads the Bible, poetry, and books on politics.

"Miss N— reads garden books eagerly. Upon being asked about her garden, she replied, 'Yes, I have a large garden, about forty pots.'

Autographed Volume Results "A Syrian from Lebanon who was engaged in painting panels for the East Boston Immigration Station spent much time here studying pictures of old ships in order to paint an ancient Phoenician vessel."

"During Children's Book Week 1930, this branch had an exhibit of the original drawings from children's books of the year. A young artist who had been out of work for some time became interested in this exhibit and took home illustrated book jackets to study. Some months later she brought a manuscript which she had written and illustrated and asked if the librarian knew of someone who could type the manuscript inexpensively. One of the assistants at the branch was glad to do this in her spare time. The author then went to New York and succeeded in placing her manuscript with a well-known publishing house. The branch now owns an autographed copy of the book."

Thousands upon thousands of men, women and children are turning to the warm well-lighted libraries provided for their use by the city of Boston. Students whose rooms are ill-lit and cold; lonely men and women living in rooming houses; children who have no place at home in which to study; business and professional men and workers in industrial plants who cannot afford to buy for themselves the expensive technical books freely provided by the library; musicians, artists, housewives, laborers, and would-be authors seek public libraries not only for the printed words but for the friendly smiles, the cordial greetings they know they will receive from those on duty.

This is the library's golden opportunity for helping to keep up the morale of our citizens by providing books which will stand by a man in his hour of need, depression, which will help him to fit himself for a better job when business conditions improve and which will encourage him to think constructively about such matters as better education and better living conditions for everyone.

Money spent on the Boston Public Library system is one of the most profitable investments that the city of Boston can make.

The Librarian

Rambles Among the Bookstacks

GRAY storm clouds scudded across the sky and a chill wind drove the dead leaves in swirling shrouds before it as the adventurous columnist fared forth on an Odyssey among the branches of the Boston Public Library on the opening day of "Fine Cancellation Week."

The first stop was at the West End Branch Library, formerly the old West Church where Revs. Jonathan Mayhew, Charles Lowell and Cyrus Augustus Bartol for many years preached highly intellectual sermons to highly intellectual congregations. "Angels and former ministers of grace defend us," cried the adventurer as he breasted a crowd of several hundred children emerging with cheers from the library's doorway.

Within the dignified interior a mob held sway. "My card! My card! and my Tony's, my Angela's, my Giovanni's and my Romeo's card," cried the children. Escaping with the aid of a friendly police officer, the adventurer was whisked along dingy alleys, over a bridge, past a prison, up and up to Hunker Hill Monument. Toward the library opposite the shaft children were hastening on scooters, on roller skates and on their own running feet. Inside, three times round the reading room went the lines and, "How much did 'yer owe?" "What book 'yer gone ter take?" and "I been in this line two hours," were some of the comments heard.

The undaunted librarian and her assistants were calm and smiling, and what seemed to the uninitiated observer a veritable jungle of children.

On through the nether parts of Charles town, where great piles of weather-worn lumber wait for a building boom, on over the bridge where dismantled wooden hulks remind one of the days of Donald Mackay, on to the East Boston Branch. It was no traffic officer who held up the traffic before the library, but a nine-year-old lad who leaped across the street in the pathway of trucks, taxicabs and touring cars, vaulted the iron fence surrounding the pocket handkerchief front yard and sailed through a window to the workers of a hundred yards line coiled round and around the issue desk.

In little Jeffries Point Branch, round the corner from the Airport, the librarian was standing behind a door with a ham sandwich in one hand and a bottle of milk in the other. "Just snatched a bite of lunch," she said. "Been on my feet since noon and don't expect to get home till near midnight. Isn't it wonderful?"

At the far east end of the island stands the Orient Heights Branch. All lights were blazing and even the smallest children were helping to keep order. "Aren't they wonderful," commented the librarian.

A quick dash to Maverick square, a long wait at the ferry and the adventurer embarked on a boat bound for the North End of Boston where almost under the shadow of the old North Church is located the North End Branch library.

At the left of the entrance is a reading room for adults. This was crowded with men. The assistant called attention to an old man reading the Bible in the Italian language. "He reads it for several hours every day," she said. From a niche at the far end of the room, a marble bust of Dante looked down upon his countrymen, "who, in the midway of this mortal life, were quite lost in the pleasant land of books."

Upstairs in the children's reading room a grand march, in which some five hundred children participated, wove in and out and round about the issue desk, the children with sparkling eyes clutching their "clean cards." Over in the fairy tale corner the shelves were as bare as Mother Hubbard's cupboard and plaintive voices were heard exclaiming, "Teacher, I got my card, but there aren't any books."

From the North End a quick dash through the empty canyons (it being now 6.30) of the business district along the edge of Chinatown and into little Syria brought the adventurer to a prison-like structure known as the "Muni-stipple" building. In the left-hand corner thereof is the Tyler street branch of the Boston Public Library. "There are no nicer children nor more interesting grown people anywhere," declared the Librarian, speaking over the heads of a crowd of Syrian, Armenian, Greek and Chinese children. "No, the grown people don't ask for their cards. They don't take books home. In fact," she added, "you might call this their home."

At the South End branch in the cellar of another huge "Muni-stipple" building the story was the same.

Roxbury Crossing branch is in what was formerly "Nuff Ced" McGreevy's saloon. The bar fittings are gone, but the mahogany beams still adorn the ceiling and if one lifts the doormat he will see the words, "Nuff Ced" laid in small bits of mosaic—words frequently used by Mr. McGreevy when the frequenters of his saloon became too noisy.

Old and young colored ladies and gentlemen and little children were emerging from the "Nuff Ced" doorway with new cards, somewhat worn books and smiling faces. "Seems as if everyone with a fine had been here," laughed the librarian, "excepting the gypsies and I don't believe they are back yet."

"Gypsies?" commented the Adventurer. "Yes," she explained, "quite a colony of them live in vacant stores about here during the winter."

The adventurer looked at his watch. "Seventy-three," said he, "time to call it a day."

On Tuesday as the car drew up beside the South Boston Savings Bank the adventurer gave a start of dismay. "Don't tell me there's a run on the bank," "Oh, no," said the driver, "that's the 'finest book week' line." The adventurer breathed a sigh of relief and prepared to open siege, but warlike tactics were unnecessary. "Pass the gentleman along," yelled the children and so he was passed along and up a flight of stairs with an orderly crowd moving, ever moving in long, slow lines toward the Registration Desk where new cards, cleared of all charges were being issued as rapidly as the workers could write names, addresses and identifying numbers on them.

At City Point Branch a kindly police officer kept the long lines moving, occasionally booming in a deep voice, "Stand back, folks, stand back, and give the chargers air." The chargers, by the way, were not horses, but very hard-working young women charging books at about the rate of one every two seconds.

From North, South, East and West crowds bore down on Andrew Square. Shades of Jadwiga, Sobieski and Pulaski, how proud you would be, thought the adventurer, to see the orderly manner in which your young countrymen avail themselves of library privileges and not so many of them had fines either. Indeed, one jolly individual was heard to remark, "Sorry, I haven't a big fine on my card. I'd like the thrill of getting it cancelled."

Along the Southern Artery, across the marshes, with the harbor to the left sped the adventurer to little Neponset Branch where the library operates in a mere tearoom of a place. You'd be surprised to see how many young married couples have claimed their cards in order that they may spend their time reading together, said the smiling librarian.

At the Fields Corner branch a small boy named "Smith" was holding up a line of several hundred young folks while the following dialogue was carried on: "What is your father's first name?" from the harassed assistant who had something under one hundred "Smiths" in her file.

"What right have you to ask that?" replied the small boy. "It says on your poster, fines cancelled and no questions asked."

The Uphams Corner children's room is unique among children's rooms, as it is located in a waterless swimming tank. If numbers tell any tale, finless curds are certainly good bait. Upstairs in the adult's room things were at a standstill as "some lady" in depositing her books surreptitiously in the "Conscience Box" had thrown her purse in with them and insisted on having it removed at once from the company of the "conscienceless" books.

At the Mt. Pleasant and Memorial branches children were saying, "Please take the depression off my card."

In the beautiful reading room at Pel-lows Athenaeum men and women who had been so unfortunate as to acquire fines which they could not afford to pay were happily reading in the brightly lighted room, forgetting for the time that such a thing as "the depression" existed.

On Wednesday there was rain, buckets, barrels, floods of it—rattling like hail on the top of the limousine, and wind, roaring and erratic wind, which turned umbrellas inside out and made it necessary to make shelterless dashes from limousine to library and from library back to limousine. The adventurer repeated the names of the branches yet to visit—Mt. Bowdoin by the bridge, Codman square, right in the middle of the square, Mattapan on the road to great Blue Hill, Lower Mills round the corner from the Baker chocolate factory, Phillips Brooks, the little Readville building next door to the chapel in which the good bishop preached the last afternoon sermon of his life, Hyde Park branch in the center of the town which resented so much being annexed to Boston that many citizens show their displeasure by refusing to patronize the library.

From Hyde Park to West Roxbury the adventurer had the experience of driving through the Stony Brook Reservation. To the city dweller, homesick for the real woods he heartily recommends the drive, particularly on a rainy evening in the fall of the year when the lights of the car will bring out the gleaming beauty of rain-drenched red, yellow, crimson and brown foliage interspersed with the brilliant green of pines and threaded with the slender white stems of birches.

Emerging from the Reservation, one after another, eight branches were visited. Staid West Roxbury, Roslindale, always crowded, whether or not a "bargain sale is on," Jamaica Plain, where house plants and rainbow fishes in tanks flourish to the joy alike of children and grown-ups; Boylston, proud of its new Georgian building with bright blue door; Parker Hill, yet prouder of the Gothic perfection of its recently-erected library; Allston, Brighton and little Faneuil, proudest of all of its gay, modern interior, the only fly in the ointment the fact that it cannot accommodate half the persons who wish to use it.

The Kirstein Memorial Branch, the beautiful gift of Mr. Louis Kirstein in memory of his father, was the only library not visited, as the librarian had already telephoned that her people showed appreciation of their library by promptly paying their fines so there was no crowd to see.

Noisy, but happy, the adventurer completed the Odyssey at nine P. M. and announced to his family as he shook his drenched hat over the open fire, "The heart of Boston is in the right place. I've grumbled a lot about the slow service at the Boston Public Library, but inasmuch as the authorities of that institution have forgiven the debts of over 20,000 persons, it behooves every book-loving person to forgive the library its small debt of failing to deliver the desired book the minute it is asked for. As for the forgiven debtors—if you could have seen them departing from the doorways of thirty-three branch libraries with books hugged to their bosoms, you would have recognized that the love of reading is a very real heritage of the fathers and mothers and children of our city. "More power to the arms of the chargers," say I, "and many more assistants to carry on the work. A glass of ginger ale, please, so I can make it a real toast."

While not neglecting the interest of the specialists, these articles were written primarily for the public. Those formidable tomes of polemics or knowledge that excited the world ages ago become modern and present in consequence of this treatment. In the process of humanization, the personalities of the authors and printers and others involved are made to emerge again as something alive and interesting.

THE books mentioned in this installment are of a theological or religious task, chiefly, although a few other subjects did penetrate the printing area of the

Notes on Rare Books

By PHILIP BROOKS

TO the lay reader, the average collector and most bookmen, the subject of incunabula means something dull, flat and unprofitable. Its name is intimately associated with ponderous works of theological doctrine, heavy with rhetoric, logic or the exact sciences. Their texts are in the dead languages and their authors have long since been forgotten. Except for the masterpieces of Gutenberg, Fust and Schoeffer, Sutenhyn and Pannartz, Jensen and a few others, they are not even memorable as examples of good printing. All this is to a certain extent true. No wonder the field of study has been restricted to a small number of scholars and librarians and members of the bookselling profession. Their enthusiasm for what they have found in these incunabula has been a continual source of bewilderment to the uninitiated. Conscious attempts to dissipate the popular indifference toward this great branch of book collecting have not been wanting. In this country the influence of such essays as George Parker Winship's "Gutenberg to Plantin," Miss Miriam Lane's "Some Noteworthy Firsts in Europe during the Fifteenth Century," and Miss Margaret B. Stillwell's "Incunabula and Americana," is not to be denied. But the number of such attempts to educate the public is not large. The richly annotated catalogues of Lathrop C. Harper, our most famous dealer in incunabula, have illuminated the subject importantly for many book lovers. Librarians of public institutions have occasionally written sympathetically of the "fifteeners."

A PART from the Harper brochures, the most consistent propaganda in America in the interests of incunabula is that which emanates from More Books, the monthly bulletin of the Boston Public Library. The tenth installment of a descriptive list of fifteenth-century books in the library, by Zoltán Haraszti, appears in the October issue. These articles, which have occurred intermittently since they first started nearly three years ago, included three devoted to German incunabula and the remaining six to Italian. In this number books printed in Switzerland, that is, in Basle, and in France, specifically Paris and Lyons, are described. Subsequent installments will treat works that were printed in the Netherlands, Spain and England. Mr. Haraszti observes that the task of compiling such a record was begun with some hesitation as to the advisability of giving it space in a bulletin designed for the use of the general public. But the response of readers has given convincing evidence of a genuine demand for knowledge on this subject, which when handled informally, can be made highly entertaining. A mere check-list, he observes, is not enough. References to authorities, collations of sheets and measurements of pages and texts, no matter how accurately made, cannot arouse curiosity.

But every book has a history; it is a part of the life around it, of the past from which it grew and of the future which it influenced. And life is always interesting, even when encased in obscure Latin. Whatever lived once lives always; and to call attention to that living thing is a grateful task.

While not neglecting the interest of the specialists, these articles were written primarily for the public. Those formidable tomes of polemics or knowledge that excited the world ages ago become modern and present in consequence of this treatment. In the process of humanization, the personalities of the authors and printers and others involved are made to emerge again as something alive and interesting.

THE books mentioned in this installment are of a theological or religious task, chiefly, although a few other subjects did penetrate the printing area of the period. A notable exception here is the "Opera" of Vergil, printed at Paris in 1500 by Kerver, Thielman Kerver, who was famous for the beauty of his Books of Hours. The account tells of his coming to Paris from Coblenz and includes such details as his marriage to Yolande Bonhomme, which probably helped him in his quick French naturalization. It also mentions Jean Petit the publisher, and takes pains to point out that, while he published and sold books, like Vêlard or Vostre, he was not a printer. He gave work to no less than twenty printers, one of whom called him "bibliopolamur optimus," the prince of booksellers.

Another secular work referred to is the "Epistolae" of Franciscus Philiphus, printed at Basle without any date by Amerbach. This Fileto, "the typical humanist of his age," according to Symonds, was perhaps the most erudite Greek scholar of his time in Italy. In 1420, at the age of 22, when already Professor of Philosophy at Venice, he was sent to the court of John Paleologus as secretary to the Venetian Consul. He married a relative of the Byzantine Emperor, a noble but poor girl. When he returned to Italy he was given the highest recognition for his classical learning. But for all his brilliance he was a conceited puppy. "All men love and honor me, and praise me to the skies," he wrote to a friend. But five years later he left Florence precipitately because he was involved in intrigues against the Medici, and his life was in danger. Mr. Haraszti pictures him in this fashion:

He thought—and took no trouble to hide his opinion—that he surpassed Vergil because he was an orator, and Cicero, because he was also a poet. His pretensions soon got him into violent quarrels with his fellow-humanists—men who were only too human when their interests, financial as well as spiritual, were concerned. Fileto's feud with Poggio is especially memorable for the brutality of the accusations and the violence of language displayed on both sides.

THIS is but one of many vignettes which add zest and a human background to the descriptive list. There is another humanist here, Girolamo Balbo, represented by a copy of his "Dialogus de eloquentia" by an unknown printer of Paris. He was a Venetian who went to Paris in 1484 to teach at the university. "Soon he became widely known for both his learning and licentious living." His story parallels that of Fileto somewhat. Like him, Balbo became involved in violent controversies. His attack upon the grammarian, Tardif, resulted in his being banished from Italy, the ostensible reason being his scandalous way of living. There is much food for thought in the other pieces described, too. In the "Malleus maleficarum" of Sprenger and Krämer, by an unknown printer of Basle about 1490, Mr. Haraszti devotes no little space to the Rev. Montague Summers, who made an excellent translation of the original 1489 edition four years ago. It is Mr. Summers' introduction, explaining the nature of the book, which he challenges. Mr. Summers professes to be a believer in witchcraft, and looks upon the "Malleus maleficarum," to most people one of the cruelest and cruellest documents of the Middle Ages, as an almost divinely inspired book. By some process of reason he links the medieval heretics and the present-day Communists together. "Witches were the bane of all social order. . . . Any other save the most thorough measures [against them] must have been unavailing." Mr. Haraszti comments: "It sounds like a perverse pose—if it is not, as one occasionally hopes, the cloak of a Swiftian satire."

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 1932

Cardinal Named Library Trustee

Mayor Appoints Him in Place of Mgr. Connolly, Who Long Has Been Ill

Cardinal O'Connell has accepted an appointment to the board of trustees of the Boston Public Library, tendered by the mayor. He will take the place vacated by Mgr. Arthur T. Connolly, who was forced to resign on account of illness.

In announcing the appointment today, the mayor made public a letter he had sent to Mgr. Connolly, who had served on the board since June 15, 1916. The letter read:

"It is a source of profound regret to learn that your continuing illness renders it necessary for you to discontinue the exceptional services which you have been rendering to the city of Boston as trustee of the Boston Public Library.

"The splendid service which you have so graciously and generously given without recompense has been of great value to the people of Boston and in their name I beg you will accept of their sincere appreciation and gratitude."

Boston Globe
Wednesday, November 9, 1932

MAYOR NAMES CARDINAL PUBLIC LIBRARY TRUSTEE

Mayor Curley yesterday appointed Cardinal O'Connell a trustee of the Boston Public Library to succeed Rt. Rev. Mgr. Arthur T. Connolly, who was forced by illness to decline a reappointment.

In a letter to Mgr. Connolly the Mayor said:

"The splendid services which you have so graciously and generously given without recompense has been of great value to the people of Boston and in their name I beg you will accept of their sincere appreciation and gratitude."

THE BOSTON HERALD

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1932

A CARDINAL TRUSTEE

Cardinal O'Connell is the most distinguished but not the first ecclesiastic to be appointed Trustee of the Boston Public Library. The list contains the names of Rev. George Putnam, D.D., 1868-1877; James Freeman Clarke, D.D., 1879-1888; Rev. James D'Nevers, D.D., 1895-1908; Dr. Alexander Mann, 1908-1923; and Mgr. Arthur T. Connolly, 1916 to 1932. The Cardinal succeeds Father Connolly. Kindly, scholarly and cultured, for years a student of Americana, the venerable and loved pastor of Jamaica Plain has felt constrained to resign because of the pressure of other duties. He has served as president twice, and the Library is far better because of what he has done for it.

Mayor Curley has made an admirable choice, which will receive the warm and immediate commendation of the Cardinal's flock and all others. This apparently is the first public office which he has ever accepted—and His Eminence will be 73 next month. This breaking of a lifelong precedent carries its own implications. We may see in it the value which he sets on a great free library system now one of the foremost in the world; the spirit of public service; willingness of an extraordinarily busy man to take on a new burden for the good of the community. And incidentally it may be said that this appointment dignifies public office and will add greatly to the prestige of the Public Library.

Boston Evening Transcript
Tuesday, November 8, 1932

Patty Gray to Sing Sunday at Boston Public Library

Miss Katherine Cunningham Gray, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Cunningham Gray of 261 Beacon street, and who sang the role of Lady Ella in "Patience," at the Hollis Street Theater, last week, has been asked to give a recital the coming Sunday evening, Nov. 13, at the Boston Public Library, at eight o'clock. The singer, known to her intimates as Patty Gray, will make up her program from Verdi, Schumann, Wolf and other composers. The concert at the library are free to all lovers of music and no tickets are required.

BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN
TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 1932

Cardinal Named to Public Library Board

Mayor Curley today appointed Cardinal O'Connell a trustee of the Boston public library, succeeding Mgr. Arthur T. Connolly, who resigned on account of illness. The mayor sent a letter to Mgr. Connolly expressing regret that he could no longer serve and extending the gratitude of the city of Boston for the exceptional service he has so graciously rendered in the past.

BOSTON TRAVELER
TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 1932

CARDINAL ON LIBRARY BOARD

Named Trustee by Mayor Curley in Place of Mgr. Connolly

Cardinal O'Connell was named today by Mayor Curley to be a trustee of the Boston Public Library, in place of the Rt. Rev. Arthur T. Connolly of Jamaica Plain, who resigned because of illness. In a letter to Mgr. Connolly, the mayor says: "It is a source of profound regret to learn that your continuing illness renders it necessary for you to discontinue exceptional services which you have been rendering to the city of Boston as a trustee of the Boston Public Library. The splendid services which you have so graciously and generously given without recompense have been of great value to the people of Boston, and in their name I beg you will accept their sincere appreciation and gratitude."

Boston Daily Globe

TUESDAY, NOV 8, 1932

CARDINAL O'CONNELL NAMED AS TRUSTEE

Succeeds Mgr Connolly as Library Official

William Cardinal O'Connell was today appointed by Mayor Curley a trustee of the Boston Public Library, to succeed Rt. Rev. Mgr. Arthur T. Connolly, former trustee of the library. To Mgr. Connolly, the Mayor sent the following letter:

"Reverend Monsignor: "It is a source of profound regret to learn that your continuing illness renders it necessary for you to discontinue the exceptional services which you have been rendering to the city of Boston as trustee of the Boston Public Library."

"The splendid services which you have so graciously and generously given without recompense have been of great value to the people of Boston and in their name I beg you will accept of their sincere appreciation and gratitude."

THE BOSTON HERALD
NOVEMBER 9, 1932

CARDINAL IS NAMED TO LIBRARY BOARD

Cardinal O'Connell was named yesterday by Mayor Curley to be a trustee of the Boston Public Library, in place of the Rt. Rev. Arthur T. Connolly of Jamaica Plain, who resigned because of illness.

In a letter to Mgr. Connolly, the mayor said:

"It is a source of profound regret to learn that your continuing illness renders it necessary for you to discontinue exceptional services which you have been rendering to the city of Boston as a trustee of the Boston Public Library."

"The splendid services which you have so graciously and generously given without recompense have been of great value to the people of Boston, and in their name I beg you will accept their sincere appreciation and gratitude."

The Boston Post
Established 1831

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1932

CARDINAL IS TRUSTEE OF LIBRARY

Takes Place of Mgr. Connolly, Who Has Resigned

Cardinal O'Connell was appointed yesterday by Mayor Curley to serve the city as trustee of the Boston Public Library in place of Mgr. Arthur T. Connolly, who resigned because of age and failing health.

MAYOR LAUDS FR. CONNOLLY

Attending Mgr. Connolly's golden anniversary of his ordination to the priesthood, four years ago, the cardinal extolled the 72-year-old dean of the Jamaica Plain clergy, as "a priest of God who has faithfully and loyally served Almighty God first, of course, but the public also."

Yesterday in accepting Mgr. Connolly's resignation, Mayor Curley, who appointed him to the library board for the first time 16 years ago, expressed his keen regret at his decision to retire from the post, and paid high tribute to his service to the public. The Mayor said:

"It is a source of profound regret to learn that your continuing illness renders it necessary for you to discontinue the exceptional service which you have been rendering to the city of Boston as trustee of the Boston Public Library."

"The splendid service which you have so graciously and generously given without recompense has been of great value to the people of Boston and in their name I beg you will accept of their sincere appreciation and gratitude."

Trustee for 16 Years

Mgr. Connolly has been in poor health for nearly three years. He has long been pastor of the Church of the Blessed Sacrament on Centre street, Jamaica Plain. In his 16 years of service as a library trustee, Mgr. Connolly has brought to the board his expert knowledge as a connoisseur of old American historical prints and a recognized authority on first editions of American historical volumes.

He has been intimately interested in art and literary treasures and has a collection that represents years of discriminating research. The monsignor's personal library contains more than 200 rare books, beautiful objects in sculpture and many paintings by the old masters.

Many of the famous paintings hang in his church, which is considered one of the most beautiful churches in the archdiocese of Boston.

The Boston Post

NOVEMBER 10, 1932

THE NEW TRUSTEE

In naming Cardinal O'Connell trustee of the Boston Public Library the Mayor has chosen with a rare sense of distinction in every way. His Eminence knows books; his literary ability is very great; he has a wide learning that would make him most valuable in helping guide the destinies of any library—all the more when that institution is the pride of his own beloved city.

Mgr. Connolly, of Jamaica Plain, whom the Cardinal succeeds, has had a long and helpful term in the office, and only the pressure of age suggests his retirement. May the new incumbent, still hale and hearty, remain for years the most eminent ecclesiastic ever to occupy the position in this city.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1932

Cardinal Happy to Serve the Library

Though Mayor Curley appointed Cardinal O'Connell as member of the board of trustees of the Boston Public Library only after receiving his assent, the cardinal today officially accepted the appointment in writing as follows:

Your Honor: I am most happy to accept the appointment as a member of the Board of Trustees of the Boston Public Library.

I am always glad to be of service to the people of our beloved city and am particularly pleased at this opportunity of rendering public service, because it enables me, together with my associates on the board, to do something to promote the welfare of the Public Library, an institution in which I have ever been vitally interested.

I thank you most cordially for this appointment. With every best wish, I am Very sincerely yours
W. Card. O'Connell
Abp. Boston.

Boston Traveler

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1932

CARDINAL ACCEPTS LIBRARY POSITION

Welcomes Chance to Serve Citizens as Trustee

Cardinal O'Connell in a letter to Mayor Curley today accepted appointment as a member of the board of trustees of the Boston Public Library.

He wrote: "I am most happy to accept the appointment as a member of the board of trustees of the Boston Public Library."

"I am always glad to be of service to the people of our beloved city and am particularly pleased at this opportunity of rendering public service, because it enables me, together with my associates on the board, to do something to promote the welfare of the public library, an institution in which I have ever been vitally interested."

"I thank you most cordially for the appointment."

Boston Transcript

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1932

Cardinal and Trustee

What a striking chain of causation and consequence has led to Cardinal O'Connell's acceptance of secular office as a trustee of the Boston Public Library! From 1907 to 1914 the priest whose given name was Achille Ratti served as prefect of the Ambrosiana Library in Milan. Always a devoted scholar he became so passionately interested in the work there in progress, that even when called to be prefect of the Vatican Library, he could not bring himself to give it up, and for two years divided his time between Rome and Milan. In 1922 Monsignor Ratti became His Holiness, Pius XI, the first man of a career quite like his in modern history. A librarian being now the supreme pontiff, a reorganization and reconstruction of the Vatican Library was carried out, which for centuries had been needed, the Carnegie Foundation gladly accepting a share in the work at the Pope's invitation.

Meanwhile, a young native of Salem, Milton E. Lord by name, had become interested in librarianship as a profession, and was among those called to assist in the reorganization of the Vatican Library's treasures. This year Mr. Lord, after service as librarian of the University of Iowa, has become director of the Boston Public Library. Thus was forged a definite link between the professional advance stimulated by the Vatican and the professional competence of the librarian now at the service of the city of Boston. But it remained for Mayor Curley to complete the sequence by his appointment of Cardinal O'Connell as a trustee of the board. Still more impressive is the cardinal's willingness to accept the post, a liberal departure from precedent which one cannot believe would have been possible had it not been for the interest and the progressive sponsorship given to libraries and librarianship by Pius XI. Boston appreciates the high value of this result, and the city will gain much from it.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1932

Lecture by Mayor Curley Nov. 21 at Public Library

The seventh Washington Bicentennial lecture in the Public Library series arranged by the Boston committee will be given by Mayor Curley on Monday evening, Nov. 21. The mayor will summarize the activities in Boston during the year in honoring Washington.

Boston Traveler

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1932

Cardinal a Library Trustee

CARDINAL O'CONNELL has accepted an invitation to become a member of the board of trustees of the Boston Public Library. The cardinal succeeds a clergyman, the Rt. Rev. Arthur T. Connolly, who resigns because of illness.

The appointment of an ecclesiastic to the library board of trustees is by no means unusual. Among the cardinal's predecessors were the Rev. George Putnam, D.D., James Freeman Clarke, D.D., the Rev. James DeNormandie, D.D., who was president of the board in 1908, and Dr. Alexander Mann, D.D., president of the board for three years.

Cardinal O'Connell's literary taste is well known. Keenly appreciative of the finer things, he finds much merit in contemporary works, many of which he has recommended to friends who have been pleasantly surprised at the advice.

The appointment of the cardinal to the board is in harmony with the general excellence and usefulness of our library. We are confident that his advice will enhance the already high value of that institution to the public.

BOSTON POST,
NOVEMBER 15, 1932

CARDINAL TO ACCEPT POST

Will Serve on Board of Library Trustees

Acceptance of the appointment to serve the city as a member of the board of trustees of the Boston Public Library was received yesterday by Mayor Curley from Cardinal O'Connell, archbishop of Boston.

Cardinal O'Connell will fill the vacancy caused by the retirement of the Right Rev. Mgr. Arthur T. Connolly, pastor of the Church of the Blessed Sacrament, Jamaica Plain, who had been a member of the board for 16 years.

The Cardinal will serve with Louis E. Kirstein, Ellery Sedgwick, Frank W. Buxton and Attorney John L. Hall, present members of the unpaid board.

Temple Israel
Boston, Mass.

November 16, 1932

The Boston Public Library

The rapidly growing JUDAICA collection at the Boston Public Library has never a certain important books that are now out of print and hence hard to obtain. Possibly some readers of Temple Israel may have one or more of the books in their own libraries and may care to present them to the Boston Public Library, whose Director, Milton E. Lord, will be most grateful. Books now particularly needed are:

Charles P. Daly, "Settlement of the Jews in North America."
Madison C. Peters, "Jews in America."
Solomon Schindler, "Israelites in Boston."
Israel Zangwill, "The Mantle of Elijah."
"The History of the Jews in New England." Published by the Jewish Chronicle Publishing Co., Boston, 1892.

TAKE BOOKS BACK, FINES CANCELLED

All Overdue May Be Returned to Library
Next Week

An opportunity for borrowers of books from the public library and its branches to return overdue books without the payment of a single cent in fines will be afforded next week, Milton E. Lord, director of the Boston Public Library, announced last night when he proclaimed a fine cancellation week Oct. 17-22.

START CLEAN SLATE

Individual borrowers with unpaid fines may apply at the central library or any branch libraries during the week to obtain the cancellation. There may also be returned during the period, without explanation or fines any book that has been charged or that has been inadvertently borrowed without charging at any time.

"These are emergency depression measures only," Mr. Lord said in a statement issued last night, "to help the many individuals who owing to the depression are unable to pay fines for overdue books and as a result have lost their library privileges. Such individuals should during fine cancellation week go to their library and ask to have their library cards cleared and given back to them."

"Everybody should be told how much the library needs all of its books because of the increased demand for them at the present time. Everyone is asked to look at some for library books and carry them back to the library. This is the time for everyone to start afresh with a clear slate at the library."

Boston Daily Globe

FRIDAY, OCT 14, 1932

LIBRARY WILL CANCEL ALL FINES FOR FOLK WHO APPLY NEXT WEEK

The trustees of the Boston Public Library, in order to assist those who have failed or have been unable to pay their book fines, have instituted at the main library in Copley sq and at all branches a "Fine Cancellation Week," beginning Monday, Oct. 17. During that week the library will cancel all fines for overdue books, no matter when the fines were incurred.

To obtain the benefits of the cancellation plan, borrowers with unpaid fines should apply at the central library or at any of the branch libraries.

The trustees indicate that this is an emergency measure, to help individuals who because of the depression have been unable to pay fines for overdue books and have lost their library privileges. These persons should, during the week, go to their library and ask to have their library cards cleared and returned to them.

The trustees also urge all past and present borrowers to look around their homes for Public Library books that may have been forgotten. Children are asked to search their desks and school lockers for mislaid library books.

An opportunity is offered to return, without explanation or fine, books that have been charged or inadvertently borrowed without charging.

One of the underlying ideas of fine cancellation week is the increased demand for books at the present time. The privileges thus offered by the trustees will be in force only during the week beginning Oct. 17.

THE BOSTON HERALD

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1932

Public Library to Cancel All Fines Next Week, Forgive Book 'Borrowers'

Debt cancellation, long a subject of international discussion, was localized yesterday when the Boston Public Library named the week beginning Monday as "fine cancellation week" in which all fines for overdue books will be set aside and forgotten.

The reprieve extends still further and all books that have been stolen, or in the more delicate phrase of the library announcement, "inadvertently borrowed," can be returned during this week of general amnesty and, says the announcement, "no questions will be asked."

It was estimated last night by library officials that while $22,000 in fines is collected yearly, approximately $66,000 more would be collected if every one paid his fines. About 15,000 volumes annually disappear from public library shelves.

The library expects to do a land office business since no matter what the sins of omission or commission perpetrated by members of the public all will be forgiven if they will only return books long absent from the library shelves. Not only will they be forgiven but they will be restored to good standing with all library privileges.

Milton E. Lord, director of the library, said last night that most of the missing books were the result of young readers becoming so enamored with the adventures of Robin Hood, David Copperfield, Long John Silver and other fictional worthies that the books were unwittingly retained until they were long overdue. Then it was impossible to return them without payment of a fine beyond the reach of many juvenile pockets.

"These are emergency depression measures only, to help the many individuals who owing to the depression are unable to pay fines for overdue books," the announcement read, "and as a result have lost library privileges. Such individuals should during fine cancellation week go to their library and ask to have their library cards cleared and given back to them. This is the time for every one to start afresh with a clear slate at the library."

The Boston Post

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1932

The Boston Public Library's announcement that owing to the depression it will permit persons with overdue books to return them without paying a fine, with special reference to the "borrower" who no one is looking, again suggests the method employed in New York but never tolerated by our library officials. That is, to permit no one to enter the section where books are kept with any kind of container in his hand—anything in which a book might be concealed.

There is check-room at the Boston Public Library, but one is not obliged to leave his brief case there.

The Boston Post

OCTOBER 14, 1932

The Boston Public Library's announcement that owing to the depression it will permit persons with overdue books to return them without paying a fine, with special reference to the "borrower" who no one is looking, again suggests the method employed in New York but never tolerated by our library officials. That is, to permit no one to enter the section where books are kept with any kind of container in his hand—anything in which a book might be concealed.

There is check-room at the Boston Public Library, but one is not obliged to leave his brief case there.

Boston Daily Globe

SATURDAY, OCT 15, 1932

A GENTLE REMINDER

A DECISION of practical wisdom has led the Boston Public Library to announce that, next week, anyone who has a library book which is overdue, no matter how long, has but to bring it to any one of the branches or to the Central Library at Copley Square to take advantage of a six-day armistice on fines. With the return of such books the overdue charges will be canceled, the book borrower's card will be restored to full privilege. Not only that: this plan for a "conscience week" on returning library books is to extend also to those who possess volumes "inadvertently borrowed without charging." These, too, will be welcomed without any questioning or penalties of any kind.

Because of the depression a large number of library books have been kept, particularly by children, and it is difficult to accumulate the money needed to pay the fines or who, because of a natural and keen interest in a particular volume, forget to return it. Many adults, too, no doubt, if they rummage their bookshelves, may come upon a volume taken out long since and utterly forgotten.

The armistice week on fines and "inadvertent borrowings" will run from Monday until Saturday next. It offers an opportunity for all those who use the library, or who would like to use it, but face difficulties because of fines they feel unable to pay to restore themselves to good standing and, incidentally, to perform an act of good sportsmanship. For the return of lost books to the library will enable others to read them. It will be of immense help to the library authorities who, in these times of economy, need the cooperation of the community in keeping the lending resources of one of Boston's finest institutions at the highest possible level.

OCTOBER 15, 1932.

CITY RECORD.

PUBLIC LIBRARY STARTS FINE CANCELLATION WEEK. OCTOBER 17-22.

Beginning next Monday, October 17, and for one week thereafter, the Public Library and all of its branches will cancel all fines for overdue books, no matter when they were incurred. Individual borrowers with unpaid fines should apply at the Central Library or at any of the branch libraries to obtain this cancellation.

There may also be returned during this week without explanation or fines any book that has been charged or that has been inadvertently borrowed without charging at any time.

These are emergency depression measures only, to help the many individuals who owing to the depression are unable to pay fines for overdue books and as a result have lost their library privileges. Such individuals should during Fine Cancellation Week go to their library and ask to have their library cards cleared and given back to them.

Everyone should be told how much the library needs all of its books because of the increased demand for them at the present time. Everyone is asked to look at home for library books and carry them back to the library. Children should search their desks and lockers at school for library books and return them to the library.

This is the time for everyone to start afresh with a clear slate at the library. It must be remembered that this will be possible only beginning next Monday, October 17, and extending through the following Saturday, October 22.

Oct. 29, 1932

CITY RECORD.

1183

BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY AND ITS WORK AS WELL AS EXTENT OF ITS SERVICE TO CITIZENS OUTLINED BY MILTON E. LORD, LIBRARIAN, IN REGULAR WEEKLY BROADCAST FROM CITY HALL STATION ON MONDAY, OCTOBER 24.

In the regular weekly broadcast from City Hall Station, Milton E. Lord, Librarian, Public Library, spoke as follows:

During the past week nearly every man, woman and child in Boston has heard mentioned the name of the Boston Public Library. Its trustees wanted this to be so, particularly since they were offering, through "Fine Cancellation Week," an opportunity for every one to start afresh at the Boston Public Library. Every one was given the chance to bring back to the library, without fines and without questions, any book that happened to be in his possession overdue or borrowed inadvertently without charging. Three thousand six hundred and thirty-seven such books came back. But even more striking was the number of individuals who, having been deprived of their borrowers' cards because of unpaid fines, applied to have their fines canceled and their library cards restored to them for use. During the six days of "Fine Cancellation Week" thirty-one thousand men, women and children had their library cards given back to them.

Forty-seven thousand more might have had their cards restored as well last week if they had applied for them. This they may still do, since all fines incurred on books returned before the end of "Fine Cancellation Week" are now considered canceled as of that date. The crowds at the libraries were frequently so great during the week that many of these individuals may perhaps not have been able to obtain their cards. They should now go to their library and ask for their library cards, for their fines have been canceled and the cards are theirs for the asking.

The trustees of the Public Library instituted "Fine Cancellation Week" entirely as an emergency depression measure. Their purpose was to remove as nearly as possible all obstacles that were standing in the way of the use of books today when to so many individuals books may be a solace as well as an encouraging aid in facing the unusually difficult period in which every one is living. It is now their hope that the privilege of the use of the library will be sufficiently appreciated that once regained it will now be jealously guarded and not easily lost once more through inability to observe the terms on which the library and its books are available free to all.

LIBRARY BOSTON'S PRIDE.

Boston has long been proud of its Public Library. It is one of the great library systems of the country. In telling about the working of a great system of this sort, there must first be explained what the system is, particularly as a physical thing. In real property the library consists of thirty-four pieces of land and buildings or parts of buildings in different sections of the city. There is the great Central Library building in Copley square. The city owns also twelve other pieces of real estate occupied either wholly or in part for library purposes, while the other buildings or parts of buildings put to library uses are leased at annual rentals. Some of these buildings are among the chief ornaments of the city. The great Central Library building is a beautiful architectural monument which has given distinction to Boston, and attracts visitors from every part of the world. The five new branch library buildings erected during the past two years at the instance of his Honor the Mayor are striking buildings, adorning the districts in which they are located.

From the point of view of personal property, the library is primarily a collection of slightly more than 1,500,000 books. Of these 1,000,000 are in the Central Library, and the remainder are in the thirty-three branches throughout the city. The larger branches are considerable libraries in themselves, fully a third of them averaging something over 20,000 volumes each. In the Central Library there are also some 35,000 separate manuscripts, not to mention atlases, maps, photographs, prints, engravings, lantern slides and newspapers in the thousands.

The aggregate commercial value of all this real and personal property devoted to free public library purposes in the City of Boston is at the least considerably in excess of $10,000,000.

Such is the property and plant of the library system. But it is of value only as it is worked. The books, manuscripts and other material are useless except when they are being read and examined. And the Public Library plant, like every other, should be worked, if it is worth working at all, as nearly as possible to the limit of its capacity. The problem in working the Public Library is to bring its books and other material into the most general and extensive public use within the limit of the amount of money which the taxpayers are willing to pay for that use.

PURPOSE OF LIBRARY.

The taxpayer, then, quite rightly wishes to know what the purpose of his free public library is. The primary purpose of a free public library, supported by taxation, is to give the use of good books and other educational library material to persons who might not otherwise enjoy such use. But it is also of great public importance that a library should within the means at its command afford opportunity for study and research by scholars and students. In doing this the library supplements the work of our public schools and of the university. It places the highest special knowledge at the service of all our citizens without charge and without unnecessary detail or formality. It touches the elementary and common need, and begins with the child who has just learned to read and asks him in school. To most of the graduates of our grammar schools who pass at once into active life the library stands in place of the high school and of the college. It is to them also the university. In the aggregate of all its services, the Boston Public Library should be, and I believe it is, a system of education for all and free for all.

The distinguishing characteristic of the education given by a public library is that it is not imposed upon the person who has it. Everything that is done by the library is done in response to requests from individuals who ask for that which they each want most. Every one of the 5,000,000 volumes issued by the Boston Public Library for direct home use during the year 1932 to date has been issued because some particular person has wanted that book. Every book that has been consulted on the premises of the library, be it at the Central Library or at some one of the 33 branches, every newspaper consulted, every manuscript, every picture for use has been furnished because some particular person has asked for it, presumably because he has had some need for it.

What have been some of these needs? They speak for themselves. Civil service examinations are to be held to fill vacancies for stenographers. Immediately that the examinations are announced there come to the library requests for books treating of the specifications for stenographing from a dozen men, from 25, from even 50. A man who is nervously prostrated comes to the library to comb books that will afford suggestions for a new occupation for himself. A newly established dressmaker inquires for material on the etiquette of mourning. A young mother inquires for books besides stories for her reading—is there anything on the training of children? There comes a request for a medical book for a young man studying to become an undertaker. A high school student has to write a composition dealing with the treatment of the Indians by the United States Government. The manager of a large department store turns to our Business Branch for data indicating how far stores may be justified in cutting prices because of the installation of a "cash-and-carry" system. A young student of psychology is interested in scientific magazine articles treating of the effect of colors on human conduct. While many individuals pursue, week after week, definite courses of study by themselves in such directions as the history of the Irish and their settlement in America, the origin of the tales, the love of nature in the poetry of Robert Burns and William Wordsworth, the life and work of Leonardo da Vinci, and many others, not to mention particularly the interest during this bicentennial year of 1932 in the life of George Washington.

SERVICE TO CITIZENS.

In these ways the Boston Public Library serves its primary purpose as a free public

TAKE BOOKS BACK, FINE CANCEL

All Overdue Books
Returned to Library
Next Week

An opportunity for borrowers from the public library branches to return overdue books without the payment of a fine will be afforded at the Milton E. Lord, director of the Boston Public Library, announced last night when he proclaimed cancellation week Oct. 17-22.

START CLEAN SLATE

Individual borrowers who have not returned books to the library may apply at the central or any branch libraries during the week to obtain the cancellation. Also, books returned during the week without explanation or fine that has been charged or been inadvertently borrowed during any time.

"These are emergency measures only," Mr. Lord stated last night. "The many individuals who are unable to pay fines for overdue books and as a result lost their library privileges, should during this week go to their libraries to have their library cards given back to them."

"Everybody should be told the library needs all of its books at the present time. I asked to look at some for the library and carry them back to it. This is the time for everyone to refresh with a clear slate library."

Boston

FRIDAY

LIBRARY WILL FOR FOLK

The trustees of the Boston Public Library, in order to assist those who have failed or have been unable to pay their book fines, have instituted at the main library, Copley square, and at all branch libraries, a "Fine Cancellation Week," beginning Monday, Oct. 17. During this week the library will cancel fines for overdue books, no matter how large, when the borrower returns the book. To obtain the benefits of this cancellation plan, borrowers will pay fines should apply at the library or at any of the branch libraries.

The trustees indicate that this is an emergency measure, to help individuals who because of depression have been unable to pay fines for overdue books and lost their library privileges. These measures will be in effect during Oct. 17.

1184

CITY RECORD.

Oct. 29

library supported by taxation in giving good books to those who would not otherwise have them, and in affording instruction by the intelligent use of books to those who would not otherwise have it. But the Boston Public Library has another purpose not less important to the welfare of the people, though less in the public view, and not so obvious to the public at large. It is a scholar's library, and it is of public importance that it be maintained as such. It is only by the scholar's work that the primary purpose of a public library can be accomplished. Good books do not come by chance. They come only by the work of scholars. To cite only one instance, the scholar writes the text-book that the child studies.

The scholar's work is in few other places more important than in our own City of Boston, which has long been pre-eminent in the work of education. Nearly 100,000 students are this year pursuing their studies either within immediate reach or within easy access of the Central Library building. The teachers in their institutions are scholars, many of them, not only teaching students directly, but working in the preparation of books for students. The work covers language, art, literature, economics, the natural sciences, music, sculpture, the social sciences, applied mechanics, and every other form of intellectual instruction. These institutions of learning not only give dignity and importance to our city, they also aid its material prosperity, and in this respect they are in their way as important as factories and warehouses, railroad and steamship lines, or wharves and docks. Not the least among them is the Boston Public Library, itself quite as valuable a business asset of the city as any of them.

In this sense the library is even something more than an important means of popular education. It provides also material for the work of the scholar without whose work popular education and instruction could not go on. The roll call of its special collections tells the story of ample provision in the past for the scholar. To these great collections the city cannot afford now to show indifference, or even inactive respect. The collections must be kept up, cared for, extended, made more perfect, so that people will continue to come to our city for the purpose of using them. It is good for Boston that men should come to it as they go to Washington, or New York, or Rome, or London, or Paris, that they may find the great books of the world and use them. Boston is bound in honor to keep alive its traditional hospitality towards scholarship. Books for scholars, as well as books for children and books for the people, must be continually acquired. The money spent for such books may be well spent if it brings scholars to Boston for those books and saves them a journey half around the world to find them and use them. It may even lead such scholars, as is often the case, to make this city their home, because they can here best find help in research and study.

The challenge that all this thrusts upon the City of Boston is great. And it is a challenge that has been growing steadily greater through these years of economic depression. Last year the use of the Public Library increased 13 per cent over the preceding year. During 1932 it has to date increased 15 per cent over last year. And now to the great body of its users it has just added the 31,000 individuals to whom it restored borrowing cards last week through the cancellation of outstanding fines. This is undoubtedly the greatest impetus to its use in its entire history. To meet this increased demand it will do its best, even though its resources are already greatly strained through reduced appropriations. Upon the willingness of the taxpayers to give the library adequate appropriations depends in large part how well the library can meet the increased use that the taxpayers are making of it. To its task the library moves gladly, however, in full realization of what the Public Library and its work means to the people of Boston.

[In the writing of the above there has been generous borrowing from the admirable brochure on "The Working of the Boston Public Library," published in 1914 by Mr. Josiah H. Benton, then President of the Trustees of the Public Library. — MILTON E. LORD, Librarian.]

LAND-TAKING IN DORCHESTER.

The Mayor has approved the order of the Board of Street Commissioners for the taking of land for a public improvement, consisting of the laying out and construction of Gene street, Dorchester district, as a highway, from Humphreys street to Holden street, bounded and described as follows:

A highway named Gene street is hereby laid out, from Humphreys street to Holden street, and ordered constructed.

Said highway and the land, exclusive of trees or structures standing upon or affixed thereto, in which an easement for street purposes is hereby taken, is bounded and described as follows:

Westerly by Humphreys street, thirty and 8-100 feet; northerly by the northerly line of said Gene street as hereby laid out, by five measurements, two hundred eleven and 79-100 feet, seven and 38-100 feet on a curve of twenty feet radius, twenty-five and 52-100 feet, twenty-four and 6-100 feet on a curve of fifty-two feet radius and forty-nine and 80-100 feet; easterly by Holden street, thirty feet; and southerly by the southerly line of said Gene street as hereby laid out, by five measurements, fifty and 22-100 feet, ten and 18-100 feet on a curve of twenty-two feet radius, twenty-five and 52-100 feet, eighteen and 46-100 feet on a curve of fifty feet radius and two hundred thirteen and 86-100 feet.

Trees or structures standing upon or affixed to the aforesaid land shall be removed therefrom within sixty days following a notice of the city's intention to enter upon said land for the purpose of constructing said improvement.

Settlements are to be assessed for the making of the aforesaid improvement.

Ordered, That this Board estimates that the abutting lots on both sides of Gene street as laid out under this order, from Humphreys street to Holden street, will receive benefit or advantage, beyond the general advantage to all real estate in said city, from the improvement herein ordered, each of said lots to the amount hereinafter respectively set against it, said lots and the supposed owners thereof being shown on a plan marked "City of Boston, Gene Street, Dorchester, Assessment Plan, July 21, 1932, William J. Sullivan, Chief Engineer, Street Laying-Out Department," and on file in the office of said department.

Lot.	Amount.
1. Louisa Colombo	$111 15
2. Louisa Colombo	151 20
3. Mary F. Walsh	135 40
4. Louisa Colombo	160 2
5. Louisa Colombo	150 60
6. Louisa Colombo	27 06
7. John T. Finn, Nora E. Finn	105 32
8. Louisa Colombo	175 35
9. Cornelius E. Sullivan, Anne M. Sullivan	161 35
10. Alice M. Gaffey	165 30
11. Virginia E. Muscadelli	190 40
12. Andrew Toretta, Adolph Toretta	77 91
	$1,929 24

Voted, That this Board determines that no person sustains damages in his estate by the making of the public improvement, consisting of the laying out and construction of Gene street, Dorchester district, as a highway, from Humphreys street to Holden street, under the order of the Board and awards no damages therefor.

MAYOR SEEKS FUNDS FOR SOLDIERS' RELIEF DEPARTMENT.

Mayor Curley, on October 24, sent the following order to the City Council:

I am advised by the Soldiers' Relief Commissioner that the budget appropriation for relief disbursements of his department will be exhausted at the close of this month and that, on the basis of present expenditures, an additional appropriation of at least $150,000 will be required for the balance of the year.

In determining the budget allotments for the Soldiers' Relief Department for the year, I was influenced by the possibility that the acceptance of the legislative act providing for the construction of the Huntington Avenue Subway would afford opportunities for work to many of the veterans on the rolls of the Soldiers' Relief Department and would, therefore, result in a material reduction in the relief expenditures of the department. Unfortunately, opposition has developed to the construction of the subway, thus removing the possibility of relief through employment and making it necessary for the city to care for unemployed veterans under the provisions of the Soldiers' Relief Act.

During the month of September of the current year 2,279 veterans were aided by the Soldiers' Relief Department, representing a total of 7,763 individuals benefited through the relief disbursements of this department. The total amount of aid disbursed for the month was $75,408.94, which, when combined with the expenditures of the first eight months, represents $637,958.13.

While it appears that the amount requested by the commissioner, namely, $150,000, will be required for the relief activities of the department for the balance of the year, nevertheless I am unable at the present time to make this entire amount available. The Public Works Commissioner has reported to me savings totaling $70,000, which he feels it will be possible to effect within the budgets of his various divisions.

I submit herewith an order providing for the transfer of $70,000 from the appropriations of the Public Works Department to the relief item of the Soldiers' Relief Department and I recommend adoption of this order by your honorable body.

Respectfully,
JAMES M. CURLEY, Mayor.

Library.

This is the time for everyone to start afresh with a clear slate at the library.

It must be remembered that this will be possible only beginning next Monday, October 17, and extending through the following Saturday, October 22.

THE BOSTON HERALD

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1932

'Bargain Week' at Public Library

Fines Cancelled if Overdue Books Returned Now, Says Director Lord

By DANA TIVERTON
It is bargain week at the Boston Public Library.

The shops are full of bargains, the restaurants placard their windows with them, and even in the courts there are bargain days when the docket is purged of multitudes of offenders by the simple expedient of reducing the amounts of fines. So Boston's leading institution of public information is following suit.

It has launched a "Take-Back-That-Book-Week" which will begin tomorrow, and now is the time to glance through your bookcases to ascertain if through negligence you have become a biblioklept, if we may add to the language.

Now is the time, for it is bargain week, and all will be forgiven. The fine? Forget it, old man! And in case your conscience troubles you badly—so badly that you'd rather not face the person at the receiving desk—that's arranged for, too. At the entrance of the main building at Copley square and before each of the 32 other branches there will be boxes. You may sally forth on a dark and moonless night, if you prefer, slink silently past the box, and drop therein your contraband erudition.

The formal announcement of Director Milton E. Lord puts it this way:

Beginning next Monday, October 17th, and for one week thereafter, the Public Library and all its branches will cancel all fines for overdue books, no matter when they were incurred. Individual borrowers with unpaid fines should apply at the Central Library or at any of the branch libraries to obtain this cancellation.

There may also be returned during this week without explanation or fines any book that has been charged or that has been inadvertently borrowed without charging at any time.

These are emergency depression measures only, to help the many individuals who owing to the depression are unable to pay fines for overdue books and as a result have lost their library privileges. Such individuals should, during fine cancellation week, go to their library and ask to have their library cards cleared and given back to them.

For the depression, it seems, has hit the library business, although it is averse ratio to its effect upon other activities. No work, nothing to do, nothing to do, read a book. So the phase that keeps prosperity cooling its heels around the corner has boomed the library turnover.

"During the last three years," Mr. Lord told the reporter, "there has been a steady increase of 12 per cent. in our circulation. At the same time the number of outstanding fines has increased. According to our system, those who owe fines are not allowed to take out books until the fines are paid. The cards of these people are withheld.

Milton Edward Lord, director of Boston Public Library.

"There are now 75,000 borrowers who may not take out books because of outstanding fines. It is obvious that those who find it difficult to pay small fines are often those who are hardest hit by present conditions, those who are out of work and need most the recreation and consolation to be found in a good book.

"We are now extending to all these people an invitation to bring back their books and start with a clean slate. Furthermore, every one should be told how much the library needs all of its books because of the increased demand at the present time. Every one is asked to look at home for library books and carry them back to the library. Parents should ask their children to search their desks and lockers at school for library books."

A large number of the 75,000 whose privilege has been suspended are children. Mr. Lord estimates. A child takes a book, keeps it over the prescribed time limit, and incurs a fine. He asks his mother for a dime, and there is no dime, thus the child is deprived of one of his main sources of supplementary education.

Mr. Lord states that he would like to eliminate fines entirely, but does not see how it can be done at present. He wishes to stress the fact that the fine is not levied for purposes of revenue, but rather to encourage prompt return of books so that they will be available to other users. In an ordinary year the fines come to a total of about $22,000. Notices are sent to those who have kept their books over the time limit, and if there is no response a messenger is sent to the home of the borrower. If he is not successful in locating the borrower, he calls upon the person whose name has been used as a recommendation.

Most missing books, it has been found, are retained through carelessness, that is, in an ordinary year, Larceny is not a big problem, and as for rare volumes, the Boston Public Library is considered to be in a very safe position. To illustrate the cooperation which prevails in such matters, Mr. Lord told of the arrest in Washington recently of a man who had in his possession a large number of rare books for which he could not account.

A list of the books was sent to the Boston Public Library, for it was suspected that the man had stolen them and removed marks of ownership. It was quickly discovered that they were not the property of the Boston institution, and Mr. Lord sent a copy of the list to all the leading libraries of the East. It would be difficult indeed, for many really rare books to be taken and disposed of without detection.

The fine cancellation week which will start tomorrow is not a wholly new idea. It was tried successfully in Newark last April, and the Washington, D. C., Public Library applied the idea in June, with the result that thousands of volumes were returned to circulation.

Boston Daily Globe

TUESDAY, OCT 18, 1932

CHILDREN RETURNING BOOKS AT WEST END PUBLIC LIBRARY

RUSH WITH BOOKS ON FINE CANCELLATION

Branch Libraries Swamped With 25,000 Applicants

Talk about taking opportunity by the forelock—to say nothing of easing the conscience and saving money at the same time! Director Milton E. Lord's scheme for a Fine Cancellation Week at the Boston Public Library and its branches swept 25,000 borrowers through the library portals yesterday on the first day of the plan, seeking confiscated cards, returning overdue books, saving money.

Distracted branch library attaches—especially at the North End, Uphams Corner, West End and Mattapan—almost went down before the onrush of children, 1500 to 2000 at each place. No questions were asked; the books poured over the counter and the cards went back to their owners, while the lines grew deeper and deeper. A dozen of the branches had to close their doors at 6 p. m. because of the rush to take advantage of the unprecedented cancellation idea.

Struggle to Get In

Men, women and children—but mostly children—pushed and struggled to get into the libraries. Clerks crouched about their lunch hours or anything else in the commotion. Their fingers flew over the index files, checking off the dilatory names, issuing cards.

Some of the opportunists slunk into the halls with sly, guilty faces. Their first greeting came from the signs: "No questions asked. This is the time to start with a clean slate." And how the public did avail itself of the first day of this opportunity!

Nearly 8000 cards went back into circulation yesterday, not free to their owners after waiting patiently for weeks and often for months to be retrieved. Not so many books were returned, because the borrowers, upon finding themselves with an overdue book, usually return the book and leave the card with the library until the fine can be paid. A total of 504 overdue books were brought back, of which 39 came from the Aulston branch. The high point in return of cards was reached by the Andrew-ry, South Boston, branch, where 271 cards were returned without payment.

One Book Out 29 Years

The applications poured in so hot and heavy that the various staffs could not handle the necessary clerical work and many had to be turned away. At 5 p. m. the West End branch had to close its doors to children, after more than 2000 children had applied for their borrowers' cards and received them. The crowd got so packed in this branch that police of Station 3 had to come over and straighten out the traffic. Additional clerks had to be rushed here to handle the rush of the youngsters.

Traffic officers had to be called out in East Boston, for the streets about the branch library were closed tight by the after-school rush of children. The main library at Copley sq. to the rush and every spare attendant was in constant service.

One man, apparently, had waited 29 years for such a chance. Back in 1903, this man or a member of his family—Abbot's "The Naval History of the United States." That was the last the Boston Public Library saw of this book until yesterday, when the man marched into the Copley-sq. receiving room and plunked the tome into the desk. "I read in the paper about cancellations and I thought this would be a good chance to ease my conscience."

Fine cancellation week lasts until Saturday night—if the library clerks can stand up under fire for so long a period. Today, Mr. Lord expects, will be even more busy than yesterday, for there are still over 70,000 cards being held for nonpayment of fines.

And remember: "No questions asked."

The Boston Post

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 18, 1932

OVER 500 MISSING BOOKS RETURNED

Children Storm Public Libraries on First Day of Moratorium---6400 Cards Restored

BRINGING BACK THE BOOKS

